This ambition, however, runs counter to the interests of the peoples in the area and has naturally met with strong opposition from the Kampuchean people and all justice-holding nations in the world. To persist in the ambition, Hanoi will only further isolate itself internationally.

RENMIN RIBAO ON ISRAEL'S 'NEW MARSHALL PLAN'

HK281531 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 26 Apr 86 p 6

["Jottings" column by Meng Kui: "Pretending To Be Philanthropic"]

[Text] While the Middle East peace process is stagnating, the Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres recently put forward a "New Marshall Plan" which suggests Western Europe, Japan and other developed counties provide development funds worth several billion U.S. dollars to the economically backward Arab countries so as to realize peace and stability in the Middle East. Israel, which had always been hostile to the Arab countries, seemed very "philanthropic" this time.

However, if people think about it carefully, they will find that the Arab-Israeli confict which has lasted for decades, and the several Middle East wars stirred up by the conflict, were not caused by the poverty of the Arab countries, but by Israel's policy of aggression and expansion. Peres clearly knows that so long as Israel returns its occupied Palestinian and Arab territory,and wholly restores the national rights including the right of self-determination and the right to establish a country to the Palestinian people, peace and stability in the Middle East will be guaranteed. "Whoever starts the trouble should end it." So in fact, Peres should not have issued a call to the developed countries.

Israel, as one of the main parties in the Arab-Israeli conflict, has neither responded to the peace proposal put forward by the Arab countries nor helped to push forward with the peace process in the Middle East, but has instead, obstructed it. While Israel still refuses to return occupied Arab land and resources, it seems that Peres is pretending to be philanthropic in talking about the development and stability of the Arab countries. Without lasting peace, how can you talk about development and stability? So, it was no surprise that as soon as Peres' "New Marshall Plan" came out, it was denounced by the Arab countries.

YAR DELEGATION ARRIVES 29 APR; GIVEN BANQUET

[Text] Beijing, April 30 (XINHUA) -- Zheng Tuobin, minister of foreign economic relations and trade, gave a banquet for a trade delegation from the government of the Yemen Arab Republic led by minister for supply and trade Fu'ad Qayd Muhammad, here this evening.

Zheng said that the Chinese government and people very much treasure the sincere friendship and cooperation between the two countries, and desire to continue their efforts to further promote bilateral relations under the principles of equality, mutual benefit and common development.

Fu'ad said, since Arab Yemen and China established friendly relations nearly 30 years ago great progress has been made in bilateral trade and other areas. He expressed the hope for further development of such relations.

The delegation arrived here yesterday at the invitation of minister Zheng. This morning the two ministers held talks.

LEADERS, EDITORIAL MARK MAY DAY IN NATION

Zhao Ziyang, Li Peng in Hubei

[Text] Wuhan, 30 Apr (XINHUA) -- This evening Zhao Ziyang, member of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and premier of the State Council; Li Peng, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and vice premier of the State Council; and Wang Renzhong, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, joined model workers, cadres, and other people from Yichang Prefecture, Yichang City, and the Gezhouba Engineering Bureau to Celebrate 1 May, International Labor Day, in Yichang City, Hubei Province.

Premier Zhao Ziyang and others arrived in Yichang after inspecting mountain areas between Hubei and Sichuan. After their arrival in Yichang on the eve of May Day, they zestfully visited the key Gezhouba water control project and called on hydropower workers there. This evening, Premier Zhao Ziyang, Vice Premier Li Peng, and Vice Chairman Wang Renzhong met with representatives of model and advanced workers, engineers, technicians and teachers from Yichang Prefecture, Yichang City, and the Gezhouba Engineering Bureau, held a discussion with them, and extended festival greetings to them.

At the discussion, Zhao Ziyang said: Our country's Sixth 5-Year Plan was successfully fulfilled, and we started the Seventh 5-Year Plan this year. We have successfully fulfilled the Sixth 5-Year Plan mainly because we carried out reforms. Whether the Seventh 5-Year Plan can be successfully carried out hinges mainly on reform. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, priority should be given to reform. How the reform will be carried out during this period will affect not only the Seventh 5-Year Plan but also the Eighth and Ninth 5-Year Plans and also the next century. Therefore, the Seventh 5-Year Plan is a critical period for reform. Reform will lead to the development of production and economic prosperity, from which workers, peasants, intellectuals, and other people of all nationalities will benefit. Then the situation in various aspects of our country will further improve.

Zhao Ziyang added: Reform is quite complicated, and we will encounter many difficulties in the course of reform. We should be prepared to cope with and overcome temporary difficulties and carry our reforms firmly and effectively. Reform is the key to successfully implementing the Seventh 5-Year Plan, and the success of reform depends on support from the broad masses of people. He hoped that people of all nationalities throughout the country would participate in the great cause of reform and that members of the working class would vigorously carry out reforms.

Comrades Li Peng and Wang Renzhong also spoke at the discussion. Comrade Li Peng pointed out: To carry out reforms, it is necessary to have qualified people, and education is the foundation for training such people. He hoped that everyone would make efforts to do a good job in education.

Following the meeting, Zhao Ziyang, Li Peng, and Wang Renzhong attended a local soiree marking May Day.

Beijing Celebrations

OW010838 Beijing XINHUA in English 0824 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 1 (XINHUA) -- Party and state leaders joined more than 100,000 people from all walks of life and foreign friends in celebrations here to mark the centennial of May 1 today.

It was bright and sunny today, with red flags fluttering in a breeze on tall buildings along the Changan avenue. From early morning, holidaymakers, bringing along the old and the young, flocked to the Beijing Working People's Palace of Culture and the Zhongshan park located in the center of the capital, the two main public sites for festival celebrations. The culture palace and the Zhongshan park were decorated with colorful bunting, flowers and garlands for the festive occasion and, at their entrances, several hundred children sang and danced to the accompaniment of music to greet holidaymakers. Among the slogans on the streamers hung over there were to strengthen the unity with the people of all countries and work for peace, development and human progress and those to call the Chinese people to contribute to the fulfillment of their Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90).

Among the party and state leaders who visited these two public sites and watched a variety of performances today were Ulanhu, Wan Li, Xi Zhongxun, Fang Yi, Tian Jiyun, Qian Shi, Yang Shangkun, Yu Qiuli, Hu Qili, Yao Yilin and Ni Zhifu.

Former Vietnamese leader Hoang Van Hoan, and visiting President Carmen Pereira of the Guinea-Bissau National People's Assembly, members of the Zairian People's Revolutionary Movement delegation, and trade union delegations from Asia, Africa, Latin America and Europe, as well as a delegation from Hong Kong and Macao trade unions also took part in the May Day celebrations in these two parks. Moreover, 3,000 model workers and combat heros of the People's Liberation Army from all over China ascended the Tiananmen rostrum today as part of their May Day celebration activity. According to an official of the Beijing municipal government, however, about 210,000 industrial workers in the Chinese capital were still working today, and shop assistants and bus drivers and conductors are even busier than usual.

[RENMIN RIBAO 30 April Editorial: Plunge Into the Great Current of Reform -- Commemorating the Centenary of May Day]

[Text] Beijing, 30 Apr (XINHUA) -- One hundred years ago today, several hundred thousand workers in Chicago and other places in the United States, singing the battle song "We Want To Change the World," marched in the street to stage a general strike for an 8-hour work day. After a soul-stirring, bloody battle, the strike prevailed. The struggle enabled the working class the world over to realize the importance of unity. At the inaugural meeting of the Second International held in Paris in July 1889, it was decided that 1 May, a symbol of the working class' unity in struggle to win victory, be the common holiday of the international working class. Since then, working people of many countries have held rallies on 1 May to review their strength, and May Day has become a holiday of unity in struggle by workers all over the world.

Over the past century, tremendous changes have taken place in the world, and China has undergone an earth-shaking revolution. Today, as the masters of the country, China's working class and people of all nationalities join the working class and laboring people of the world in solemnly commemorating the centenary of May Day. Facing a vast scroll depicting the tempest of history and future struggles, victories and setbacks, and ideals and realities, the Chinese working class is deeply aware of the arduous historical mission they have shouldered, that is, they must, under the CPC leadership, work in unity with the masses of peasants and other laboring people and patriots and persist in making reforms and opening to the outside world in order to build China into a modern socialist country with a high degree of civilization and democracy.

The Chinese people are at a new starting point. The just-concluded Fourth session of the Sixth NPC has approved in principle the "Seventh 5-Year Plan of the People's Republic of China for National Economic and Social Development." Fulfillment of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, focused on reform, will enable China to basically start a new economic operational system, score major advances in the socialist modernization drive, and achieve progress on the road to make the country strong and prosperous and the people happy and better off, thereby further revealing the superiority of China's socialist system. The promulgation of the plan, an important event in the Chinese people's political and economic life, has attracted the attention of people in many countries. As the leading class of the country, China's working class must unite people of all nationalities to plunge into the great current of reform and fulfill the tasks of the Seventh 5-Year Plan in all fields. Workers, peasants, intellectuals, and other laboring people and patriots, fighting on the frontline of production, management, scientific research, teaching, and other trades and professions, should display the spirit of the foolish old man who removed the mountain and make the best use of their wisdom and talent. As the mass organizations of the working class, trade unions should unite and lead the large numbers of workers and staff in promoting reform in all fields and working for the accomplishment of the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

Comprehensive economic structural reform, focused on the urban economy, is an extensive and penetrating social transformation from an old system to a new one, which can produce a strong impact on long-established models, conventional concepts, and habitual forces that are incompatible with the expansion of productive forces. The gigantic waves of reform have pushed us to a new height and enabled us to see a new horizon and the wide road of socialist modernization. As the representative of advanced productive forces, the working class are the people with the least conservative thinking, and therefore should even more conscientiously stand on the frontline of reform. The large numbers of workers and staff should diligently study Marxism in the light of the special characteristics in the country during the new period. They should deepen their understanding of reform, be aware of the necessity and ardous nature of reform, and steadfastly carry out the basic policies of opening to the outside world and invigorating the domestic economy. They should also diligently study and grasp modern science and technology, general knowledge, and advanced management experience; continuously raise their political awareness and professional competence; strengthen their organization discipline; and play an exemplary role in building socialism in both the material and spiritual civilizations.

The undertaking of China's revolution and construction is inseparable from supporting and assisting the working class the world over and people in other countries. In this "International Peace Year," the Chinese people, who are now the masters of their own destiny after suffering from the wars of aggression launched by colonialists and imperialists against China for nearly a century, feel even more keenly the great value of a peaceful life. Proceeding from the vital interests of the Chinese people and people the world over, we will join the people of other countries in learning from and supporting each other and enhancing unity to jointly oppose hegemonism, safeguard world peace, and strive for the progress of mankind.

Bo Yibo at Hunan Rally

[By reporter Zhang Zaihua]

[Text] Changsha, 30 Apr (XINHUA) -- Speaking at a rally commemorating the centenary of May Day in Hunan on 29 April, Bo Yibo, vice chairman of the Central Advisory Commission, said: The current reform is a task of prime importance for the Chinese working class, and one on which their immediate and long-range interests rely. Bo Yibo attended the May Day rally in Changsha on 29 April together with Hunan provincial party, government, and Army leaders. He presented the May Day Labor Medal to 38 advanced model workers. Bo Yibo and Mao Zhiyong, secretary of the Hunan provincial party committee, spoke at the rally. Bo Yibo said: The reform is another revolution concerning the future and destiny of China, and it is of decisive importance to China's development in the next several decades. The reform is undoubtedly a task of prime importance for the Chinese working class, and one on which their immediate and long-range interests rely. He urged the working class to persist in making reforms, be courageous in blazing new paths, study diligently, and work hard and in a down-to-earth manner to deepen the reform.

PAPER COMMENTS ON PROGRESS IN REFORM

HK010408 Chongqing CHONGQING RIBAO in Chinese 20 Apr 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Looking Back on Past Events Does Not Mean Turning the Clock Back"]

[Text] When climbing mountains, people often take a short rest and look back down the mountain. Those who have strong will power become more interested in the climbing when viewing the green scenery below and push themselves to climb the peak, while those with weak will power are filled with fear of the difficulties in the climbing when they look back, and then turn to go down.

This year, on the basis of summing up the experience gained in past reform, the CPC Central Committee has put forth the principle of consolidation, digestion, replenishment, and improvement, and requires us to develop the reform achievements that we have already scored while making preparations for taking greater steps in reform in next 2 years. Obviously, this is a positive principle that encourages us to open up our path and forge ahead. However, some comrades want to see this principle from its negative side. They wrongly regard consolidation as stopping progress and improving as retrogression, and they have a strong desire to abolish some of the reform measures that we have already adopted. We cannot help but feel worried about this.

For example, 392 enterprises in our city have implemented the factory director responsibility system on a trial basis and have achieved good results, but this year some comrades want to reform to the old system. The CPC Central Committee's decision on reform very clearly points out that in modern enterprises, as division of labor is intensive, as there is great continuity in our production, as the technological requirements are strict, and as the relations of cooperation are complicated, we must establish a unified, powerful, and highly efficient system of production command and [words indistinct]. Only by establishing the factory director (manager) responsibility system can we meet these requirements. The party organizations in our enterprises should conscientiously support the factory directors in exercising their power of office.

Supporting factory directors in exercising their power of office means supporting the reform and the economic development. Of course, it is still necessary to perfect the factory director responsibility system as a new leadership system. At the same time, we should strengthen our ideological and political work, perfect various systems of democratic management, and thus enable the party committee, factory director, and staff members and workers congress in an enterprise to make concerted efforts toward the same goal. However, we must persist in implementing the factory director (manager) responsibility system. This is very clear. How can we turn the clock back?

Another example, in accordance with the principle of "returning power to factories, returning the power of administration to bureaus, and turning organizations back into enterprises," and in accordance with the principle of voluntary participation and mutual benefit, our city has organized and established a number of companies having the nature of an enterprise. This is an effort toward correct orientation and has yielded good results. Recently there has been some trouble in this area: On the excuse of perfection and in violation of the principle of voluntary participation and mutual benefit, some departments have issued administrative orders to require some companies to merge with some enterprises, or they want to turn companies having the nature of an enterprise back into administrative companies. This is not a desirable practice. In 1982 we followed the path of organizing and establishing administrative companies by compulsory means, but after 2-3 years of efforts, it proved to be a failure. Therefore, we had to switch to the method of reorganizing our companies and changing their patterns on a voluntary basis. We worked hard for over a year to overcome lots of difficulties to straighten out the relations between our companies and factories. How can we turn the clock back?

In the course of reform practice in the past few years, similar phenomena have repeatedly emerged. When we encounter difficulties in the course of our reform or when we readjust certain measures of reform in light of the changes in reality, the desire to turn the clock back emerges in the minds of some comrades. Like the old women named Jiujin that Mr Lu Xun described in his short story, these comrades always sit in the corner of the room and grumble: Each generation falls short of the preceeding one. They often yearn for the past and cannot bear to part with this or that aspect of the old economic management system, including the uniform structure of public ownership, the distribution system whereby the state collects all the income and pays all the costs and in which people and units "eat out of the same big pot," the circulation system with only one channel and many links, the mechanism of macroeconomic management with direct control as the core, the management method that does not separate the functions of government from those of enterprises, and closed or semiclosed external economic relations. They frown at the socialist economic system we are creating and establishing, often find fault with it, and fail to sufficiently see the tremendous role of the reform in promoting the development of our productive forces.

Our city is an example: In the 3 years since January 1983 when the CPC Central Committee and the State Council gave their approval for carrying out a comprehensive economic structural reform, Chongqing city has already entered a period in which its economic construction has great vitality, and is most prosperous ever since the founding of PRC. Compared with 1982, the city's GNP, national income, and gross industrial and agricultural output value for 1985 increased by 47, 46, and 48 percent, respectively. The annual growth rates for these three indices all exceeded 13 percent and were greater than both the average growth rates it achieved before the reform and the national average. The reform has also brought about great changes in people's lifestyles and mental attitude that should not be underestimated.

"I looked for her thousands of times. Turning around, I suddenly see the girl I looked for where the light of lanterns was waning." When we review what we have gone through since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and see that a Chinese-type socialist economic management system is emerging brand new, how happy and proud we should be! Of course, while being happy, we should also fully know that this is an extensive, profound, arduous, and complicated reform. Therefore, it is impossible for us to carry it out entirely smoothly without encountering setbacks or difficulty. Setbacks and difficulty are not fearful. What is fearful is the defeat in the fight in the ideological field. As long as we correctly sum up our experience and thus "learn something new after reviewing the past," our confidence will be strengthened and we will write a new chapter for the reform with the spirit of the foolish old man who removed the mountain and with great willpower.

RENMIN RIBAO ON TRANSFER OF REFORM-BENT MANAGER

HK301307 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 23 Apr 86 pp 1, 2

[Newsletter by Kang Jimin, Li Jihan, Chen Zilin, and Lu Xiaoping: "The Bitter Experience of a Plant Director Who Is Determined To Make Reforms -- Story of Song Beifang, Director of the Motor Vehicle Plant of the Zhengzhou City No 2 Communications and Transportation Corporation"]

[Excerpts] On the morning of 19 December 1985, Song Beifang was dismissed from office, despite the repeated arguments of the responsible comrade of the Zhengzhou City CPC Committee.

Cherishing a High Aspiration for Reform

Song Beifang, 54, was a student of the mathematics department of Lanzhou University and was appointed director of the motor vehicle plant of the Zhengzhou No 2 Communications and Transportation Corporation in October 1984. This is a collectively-owned small plant with less than 300 workers. In the past, in the narrow factory area, the workshops were in a jumble, the equipment was old and outdated, and labor discipline was lax. Under the guidance of the "decision" of the CPC Central Committee on reform of the economic structure, Song Beifang, who was not scared by all these difficulties, began to carry out a series of bold and resolute enterprise consolidation.

First, he established the production responsibility system in his plant, linking wage, bonus, and material benefits with the profits of the enterprise and the contributions made by individuals. Under this system, those who work hard and make good products are encouraged and rewarded and those who are lazy and make inferior products are criticized and punished.

In order to solve the problem of a lack of technical forces, he went to many places and finally invited seven experienced technicians and engineers to the plant to act as advisers. Meanwhile, more than 200 workers were sent to other plants for further training. In light of the needs of production, he boldly reorganized middle-level cadres and labor organizations. He worked day and night like an untiring motor, arousing the labor enthusiasm of the workers by his exemplary action.

A miracle finally appeared. In the 1st quarter of last year, this collectively-owned small plant, with comparatively backward production conditions and technology, created a profit totaling 172,800 yuan and turned over to the state 69,000 yuan profit tax, 19,000 yuan more than the total tax paid in the year 1984. Personal income of the staff and workers simultaneously increased.

As the first step was successfully taken, Song Beifang began to scale a higher target. He was determined to firmly grasp the development of new products and joint ventures with other units so that the annual output value of this plant could exceed 10 million yuan and its profit reach 800,000 yuan. He planned to improve housing conditions on the staff and workers within 3 years and make this collectively-owned small plant one of the most advanced enterprises in Zhengzhou in the near future.

A Passage of Writing Invites Unexpected Calamity

Changes in the motor vehicle plant aroused great attention of the Zhengzhou city CPC Committee, but also jealousy of the chief leaders of the corporation, who found the "bone" to be thrown away had become a piece of "fat meat." Since then, a series of administrative orders were issued one after another to weaken the decisionmaking power of the plant and cut its profits. What surprised people is that all these administrative orders were issued after the "decision" of the CPC Central Committee on reform of the economic structure was promulgated.

Song Beifang held that they were directly counter to the guideline of "simplifying administration, extending decisionmaking power, and invigorating enterprises" put forth by the "decision," and were expressions of the practice of "everybody eating from the same big pot" in a disguised form. Thus, he told a comrade in his office to write the following passage in a performance report submitted to the city's economic committee, communications bureau, and the No 2 Communications and Transportation Corporation last April: "If the corporation shall maintain unanimity with the CPC Central Committee in action, smash the "big pot," and do things in accordance with the economic law, extend the decisionmaking power of the enterprise, and carry out the system of plant director assuming full responsibility in the enterprise, it can be expected that the annual sales volume will reach 10 million and the profit will be over 1 million."

Song Beifang never expected this passage of writing to invite bitter calamity. The secretary of the corporation's CPC committee went to see the director of the city communications bureau and said truculently: "This is a false charge against the corporation's CPC committee!" "Just for this reason I can dismiss him from his post! If he will not go, I will!" All directors of the communications bureau understood that the secretary was not a man to be trifled with, but it was not appropriate to dismiss Song Beifang from his post merely because of this. They could do nothing but gently persuade the visitor.

Later, rumors spread like wildfire in the No 2 Communications and Transportation Corporation as well as in the motor vehicle plant that "Song Beifang is involved in serious economic cases," and "Song Beifang has committed bribery." An investigation group was sent to the motor plant by the corporation CPC Committee. They checked the accounts time and again and held many meetings. The workers were all very clear what the investigation was aimed at. At this moment, how Song Beifang wished that the leaders of the communications bureau would uphold justice and pass fair judgment! Unfortunately, the chief leaders of this bureau just took an attitude of mediating between both sides and a laissez-faire attitude.

Struggle Forward While Being "Tied Up"

To strive for more decisionmaking power for the plant, Song Beifang submitted an "unhooking" plan to the city communications bureau and the corporation last July in accordance with the strong demands of the staff and workers, demanding that the plant be separated from the No. 2 Communications and Transportation Corporation. He fully explained the necessity of "unhooking" from the corporation in light of the history, the type of organization, and the operation orientation of the plant and in accordance with the requirements of reform of the economic structure. The responsible persons of the corporation got very angry about this "unhooking" plan. They threatened that if the plant was separated from the corporation, it "should repay the money to the corporation, because the plant was built by the workers with their accumulated funds."

To this unreasonable demand, Song Beifang still agreed to repay 2.75 million yuan to the corporation in 10 years. Unexpectedly, the corporation went back on its word and demanded that a total of 3 million yuan be repaid within 1 year and, in addition, fees for using the land should also be paid by the plant.

After he failed in this attempt to separate the plant from the corporation, Song Beifang found it difficult to direct production in the plant, and some people in the plant's leading body began to openly reject his direction.

Being unable to work on or to separate the plant from the corporation Song Beifang really wished that he could resign his position as plant director. However, this was a matter of food and clothing for the 300 workers. He could not bear to see that the small plant, which had just been revitalized, be destroyed. So, with tears in his eyes, he went hither and thither to seek support while making great efforts to remove obstacles both inside and outside, to expand production, and to struggle forward in great difficulties. By the end of October, the total sales revenue of the plant still reached more than 5.79 million yuan, which was 140 percent of the annual plant or 250.7 percent of the revenue in the same period of the previous year; the output value and profits obtained were respectively 2.67 million and 752,000 yuan, 143.1 and 251 percent of the annual plan or 141 and 899.4 percent of the figures of the corresponding period of the previous year; and the tax turned over to the state was 300,000 yuan, an increase of 600 percent over the previous year's figure.

"It is dangerous to stir up a hornets' nest." This advice to Song Beifang came true. On the morning of 18 December last year, the responsible person of the corporation, bringing with him a contract drafted by the corporation and written instructions of the city's communications bureau, gave Song Beifang the ultimatum: "Now you may choose between the two: To do, or not to do?" Song Beifang soon understood: "This is another method to drive me away! How could a contract be written like that? Who on earth is the contractor?" However, for the sake of the plant's future, he made a concession and said: "We can certainly sign the contract, but the following principles should be observed: 1) to act in accordance with regulations regarding plant directors; 2) to act in accordance with the enterprise law; and 3) after the targets are set, the corporation should not wantonly employ administrative intervention in this respect." Unfortunately, these just demands were all rejected.

On the morning of the following day, a decision on "relieving Song Beifang of his post as plant director for transfer to another unit" was announced. Indignantly, Song Beifang asked: "Why should I be dismissed from office?" The answer was just as high-sounding as the decision: "This is a normal transfer!" He was replaced by a deputy manager of the corporation. After the new plant director took office, the original frozen bonus, which was more than 30,000 yuan, was soon unfrozen, and a new production plan was worked out:

"In 1986, the output value will be 1.52 million yuan and the profit will be 125,000 yuan." These figures were much lower than those proposed by Song Beifang, which were respectively 2.676 million yuan and 750,000 yuan for the period from January to October. Nevertheless, the leadership power was seized by the corporation.

Many people cannot understand why a plant director who is determined to make reforms has been dismissed from his post. What does all this imply?!

Reasons Questioned

[Commentator's article: "Why Was Song Beifang Dismissed?"]

[Text] Song Beifang, who was determined to make reforms, has been relieved of his post. This shows that some adminstrative corporations and departments in charge of economic work are still consciously or unconsciously using old ways and methods to carry out rigid management over enterprises. In the course of replacing the old system with the new, problems of this kind should be brought to our serious attention.

Whether the enterprises have decisionmaking power is one of the basic conditions for invigorating the enterprises. The regulations issued by the State Council on extending the decisionmaking power of the enterprises clearly point out that this power should be protected. Enterprises owned by the collective should be managed in accordance with the principle of "independence and self-determination, assuming sole responsibility for their profits and losses, and democratic management." Higher-level corporations and departments in charge should never exercise excessive intervention in the operational activities of the grassroots enterprises by means of administrative orders. However, instead of conscientiously implementing these regulations of the State Council, some areas and departments are still ordering people about and exercising brutal intervention in the operational activities of the enterprises.

Under the old system, as a result of separation between departments and regions, enterprises owned by the whole people and those owned by the collective became enterprises owned by the departments or regions. This became a deeply rooted idea in our minds. Some comrades are used to regarding enterprises as subsidiary bodies of their departments or even of their own, often saying: "Since it is my enterprise, it should obey my orders!" Those who air different views in accordance with the regulations of the State Council are suppressed, attacked, or even dismissed from their posts. Has the bitter experience of Comrade Song Beifang not happened due to this wrong guiding ideology? The Zhengzhou city CPC Committee decided to redress the case. This is entirely correct.

We are now in a period of replacing the old system with the new. Both old and new methods are being adopted. But there are often contradictions between old and new policies. While considering whether a plan for reform is correct, we must consider whether it conforms to the objective demand of developing the socialist commodity economy and whether it is conducive to the development of the productive forces. Practice shows that all those which are conducive to the development of the productive forces and the commodity economy should be enthusiastically supported, helped, and constantly perfected. As to reformers who have shortcomings or mistakes in their work, it is necessary to help them sum up experiences and lessons so that they may deepend their understanding and continue to make progress. It is not a correct attitude to find fault with a cadre who has made great achievements in reform and enjoys high prestige among the workers while praising another who has stuck to old ways and done mediocre work or has even brough his enterprise to the verge of bankruptcy.

Before the old system characterized by separation between departments and regions is actually changed, the leading departments at all levels should fully protect the decisionmaking power of enterprises in accordance with the decision of the 3d Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee and relevant regulations of the State Council on extending the decisionmaking power of enterprises. Only thus can we invigorate the enterprises. At present, some corporations have firmly grasped in their hands power over major issues concerning human, financial, and material resources as well as supply, production, and marketing of the enterprises, but do not assume any economic responsibility. This is obviously harmful to the normal operation of the enterprises and to mobilizing the initiative of the staff and workers. It seems that overcoming the "intermediate obstruction" in our economic work is an important matter that cannot be overlooked. A pressing problem to solve in the current structural reform is how to improve the work of certain corporations or departments in charge of economic work so that they may better serve production and operations of the enterprises and serve their reform.

Investigation Conducted

[Article by reporters Li Wen and Fang Xiaoxiang: "Notes on an Investigation"]

[Text] The article "The Bitter Experience of a Plant Director Who is Determined To Make Reform," is finally published by this paper today after many setbacks. The writers have long been among the masses to gather materials and have changed their manuscript eight times.

We recently had an interview with the leading comrades of the Zhengzhou City CPC Committee and the No 2 Communications and Transportation Corporation, as well as some cadres and workers of the motor vehicle plant. Although certain comrades held views different than those of the report, they all admitted that facts exist as reported.

The Zhengzhou City CPC committee has sent people to investigate the matter of Song Beifang's dismissal. After the facts were learned, the responsible comrade of the city CPC committee definitely declared the Song Beifang is a good comrade. He did much work during his tenure of office, and great achievements were made in the reform carried out in the motor vehicle plant. It was wrong for the No 2 Communications and Transportation Corporation and the Zhengzhou city communications bureau to relieve Song Beifang of his post. Both the bureau and the corporation should unify their understanding on the basis of distinguishing right from wrong and take appropriate measures to resolve the problems concerning Comrade Song Beifang and the reform carried out in the motor vehicle plant. They should also draw a lesson from this.

SHANGHAI PROMOTES LATERAL ECONOMIC COMBINATIONS

HK270318 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1140 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Commentary by reporter Chen Dawei: "Shanghai Activity Promotes Horizontal Economic Combinations"]

[Text] Shanghai, 24 Apr (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) — Shanghai, the biggest industrial and commercial city in China, recently decided to make the development and promotion of horizontal economic combinations with other provinces in the interior the focal points of the city's future economic structural reform. This new move by Shanghai in its economic life has attracted the attention of people in economic and press circles.

There have been many indications over the last few months that Shanghai has increased its interest in developing horizontal economic combinations with provinces and enterprises in the interior. During the first 10 days of March, the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee and municipal government invited leaders from Shanghai offices of all the ministries of the central authorities and provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions to a large symposium to listen to their views and make friendly contracts. Almost all the responsible officials in Shanghai, including the secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee Rui Xingwen and others, were present. Reportedly, this is the first time that Shanghai has held such a meeting.

As one of the largest industrial bases in China, Shanghai is, in fact, mainly a processing industry center. Just as Rui Xingwen said: Shanghai has neither mines nor oil fields, and its supply of raw materials, fuel, agricultural and sideline products depends on other parts of the country. In the past, as most of Shanghai's industrial production tasks were assigned by the state and the raw materials and energy resources were uniformly allotted by the state, Shanghai was not very enthusiastic about developing horizontal economic combinations with other provinces in the interior. With the deepening of the country's economic structural reform, rapid changes have taken place in this traditional system. This year, the amount of raw materials Shanghai can get under the state plan for unified distribution will drop from 70 percent in previous years to 18 percent. Because of such a change, Shanghai, which "never sought help from others for anything" has to find a way out by developing horizontal economic combinations.

In the first quarter of this year, the total industrial output value in Shanghai only increased by 1.8 percent over the corresponding period of last year, of which the increase rate in January was only 0.5 percent. Such a small increase has been rare in the past. Departments concerned pointed out that the main cause for this state of affairs is the lack of funds, raw materials, and energy resources. In the future, with the big reduction in the raw materials and energy resources supplied by the state according to mandatory planning, Shanghai's concerned industries and enterprises will be confronted with a more severe situation. People concerned believe that this is an important factor urging Shanghai to make up its mind to struggle for existence by developing horizontal economic combinations.

However, it is not objective enough to understand Shanghai's present enthusiasm for developing horizontal economic combinations only in this passive sense. Judging by the situation as a whole, developing "cooperation with other parts of the country" will be of special strategic significance to future economic development in Shanghai. According to Shanghai economic development strategy, it should become an open, multifunctional, and scientifically and technologically advanced modern city with a productive industrial structure and a high degree of civilization which can play "the roles of a pioneer, bridge, and base" in national economic construction.

Only by developing horizontal economic combinations with other provinces in the interior can Shanghai bring into play these three roles. Meanwhile, through the development of horizontal economic combinations, Shanghai's production, product, technology, and enterprise organizational structures will also be readjusted and become more realistically oriented. Especially if the advantage of Shanghai's processing industry and interior's resources are combined to jointly produce export products to earn foreign exchange, Shanghai and the interior will benefit significantly. Judging from the comments recently made by municipal leaders, Shanghai already has some understanding of these benefits.

Based on the above understanding, three new trends have recently arisen in horizontal economic combinations between Shanghai and other provinces in the interior: First, the economic combinations which were mainly organized by government departments by administrative means from top to bottom have developed to the extent that enterprises themselves organize the combinations by economic means and in light of the principles of economic rationality, mutual benefit, and selecting the best. Second, horizontal economic combinations which were purely production cooperations or individual projects have developed into overlapping combinations involving industry, agriculture, commerce, science and technology, education, and other fields and allowed exchanges and mergers in capital, technology, qualified people, equipment, and so on, and Third, horizontal economic combinations which were purely aimed at promoting cooperation among specialized products and strengthening the capability of producing major products have developed into high-level combinations like software developement in management, technology, and so on.

At present, a number of economic and technological combines between Shanghai and other provinces in the interior have been set up. These combines are joined by not only factories and enterprises, but also agricultural, commercial, foreign trade, scientific research organizations, and so on. It has been learned that Shanghai Municipality will soon promulgate, implement, and enforce the State Council's "regulations regarding further Promotion of Horizontal Economic Combinations and Other Issues." It is believed that the promulgation will play an active role in promoting horizontal economic combinations between Shanghai and other provinces in the interior.

GUANGZHOU HOLDS RALLY TO CELEBRATE MAY DAY

[Excerpts] About 1,500 people from all walks of life in the Guangzhou area happily gathered this morning to mark the 100th anniversary of May Day. At 0825 provincial and Guangzhou city party, government, and army leaders appeared on the rostrum at the meeting. Among them were Liu Tianfu, member of the Central Advisory Commission now Guangzhou; Lin Ruo and Ye Xuanping, responsible comrades of the provincial CPC Committee; Liang Lingguang, responsible comrade of the provincial Advisory Committee; Luo Tian, responsible comrade of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee; Kuang Ji, responsible comrade of the provincial People's Government; Qi Feng, responsible comrade of the provincial CPPCC; Zhang Zhongxian and (Liu Zhenzhi), responsible comrades of the Guangzhou Military Region and the provincial military district; and Xu Shijie, responsible comrade of Guangzhou City.

At 0830, Luo Shengan, chairman of the provincial Trade Union Federation, announced the opening of the meeting. Comrade Wang Ning, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered a speech at the meeting.

GUANGXI GOVERNOR OUTLINES SEVENTH 5-YEAR PLAN GOALS

HK280257 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 27 Apr 86

[Excerpts] In part 2 of his report at the Fourth Session of the Sixth Regional People's Congress, regional government Chairman Wei Chunshu dealt with the economic and social development goals and the main tasks for the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

He said: In accordance with the spirit of Premier Zhao Ziyang's report to the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC and in connection with Guangxi reality, we must, in our economic and social development during the Seventh 5-Year Plan, continue to implement the instructions of the CPC Central Committee Secretariat on work in Guangxi. In line with Comrade Hu Yaobang's speech delivered during his inspection of the region, we must carry out reforms in depth, persevere in invigorating the domestic and international economy, relax policies, harmonize relationships, make rational arrangements, take advantage of our strong points, achieve all-round improvement in economic results, and attain a growth rate slightly higher than we achieved during the Sixth 5-Year Plan and slightly higher than the Seventh 5-Year Plan growth rate for the whole country. We must gradually narrow the gap between us and the rest of the country.

The region's total industrial and agricultural output value during the Seventh 5-Year Plan should rise to 31.5 billion yuan, rising at an annual average of 8 percent. We should strive to achieve doubling this 1 year ahead of schedule. Agricultural output value should reach 10.9 billion yuan, rising at an annual average of 5.5 percent. This includes output value of 12.4 billion yuan [as heard] in industry at and below village level, rising at an annual average of 6.5 percent.

Industrial output value should reach 20.6 billion yuan, rising at an annual average of 9.9 percent. This does not include industry at and below village level, whose output value should reach 19.1 billion yuan [as heard], rising at an annual average of 9 percent.

Local financial revenue should reach 3 billion yuan, rising at an annual average of 8 percent.

These goals have a built-in margin, and we should strive to overfulfill them in arranging our annual plans and in our actual work.

He also said: Regarding the question of growth rates, we should not blindly pursue high growth nor should we one-sidedly lay stress on keeping the rate down. We must act according to our capacity. In light of Guangxi's present realities, we should do everything possible to improve the growth rate while laying emphasis on economic results. It is both necessary and possible that our growth rate increase slightly during the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

Wei Chunshu continued: This is the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. We should maintain and develop the good momentum that appeared last year and strive for relatively great development of our national economy, so as to make an excellent start in fulfilling the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Total industrial and agricultural output value this year should rise by 9 percent over last year, and we should strive for a 10 percent increase. Agricultural output value should rise by 7.4 percent, and we should strive for 8 percent. Industrial output value should rise by 10 percent, and we should strive for 12 percent. Local financial revenue, under comparable headings, should rise by about 10 percent. We should strive to overfulfill this figure.

In addition, he said: In developing agriculture, we must continue to implement the principle of actively promoting diversification without any slackening of grain production. We must strive to attain basic self-sufficiency in grain, importing only a little from other places. Total grain output in 1990 should reach 28.6 billion jin, and we should strive for 30 billion jin. Output this year should top last year's by 2.5 billion jin, and we should strive for a 3 billion jin rise. While developing grain production, we should further develop various industrial crops and forestry. We should in particular raise the production of pigs, poultry, fish, eggs, milk, and vegetables, to improve the supply of nonstaple foods. We should pay attention to the following points in agricultural production during the Seventh 5-Year Plan:

1. Continue to perfect the rural economic responsibility systems. We should properly solve problems in unified operations, management, and service, and develop and perfect the cooperative economic organizations, starting by improving services. We should improve agricultural labor productivity and stimulate agricultural specialization and modernization and the development of the commodity economy. We should also further develop the grain purchase contract system.

2. Correctly handle the relationship between grain and industrial crops. We must unswervingly persevere in readjusting the rural production structure. This must be done in light of needs and possibilities and should proceed in a planned, measured, active, and steady way under the premise of ensuring steady growth in grain output.

3. Strive to improve agricultural production conditions. At present, the region's water conservancy situation is deteriorating, soil fertility and seed are degenerating, and farm machinery is ageing. This situation is rather serious. This is a potential danger in our agricultural development. During this Seventh 5-Year Plan, we must rely on science, increase input, and improve management, in order to seriously solve this problem well.

4. Further improve the standard of scientific grain cultivation. We should develop new seed strains and techniques suited to our region, and strengthen and improve frontline research and technological popularization.

Wei Chunshu also said: During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, the region's industry must formulate sectoral plans and further rationalize its production and product structures. We must accelerate the development of strong-point trade and products; expand the production capacity of energy, communications, telecommunications, and raw materials enterprises; increase output of consumer goods and export goods; and develop tertiary industry serving production and people's daily lives.

Under the premise of continually improving economic results and product quality, we should strive for a relatively high, sustained, and steady growth rate.

During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we should universally introduce the factory manager responsibility system in a measured way by groups and batches. We should gradually perfect the economic responsibility systems and ideological and political work. We should simultaneously grasp technology and management and continually improve the capacity for self-transformation and development. In strengthening enterprise management, we should do a good job in planning and promote all-round quality control.

It is essential to do a good job in economizing energy and reducing input, and to save fuel and raw materials.

Wei Chunshu concluded: During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, a total of 12.31 billion yuan has been arranged in investment in fixed assets for enterprises under ownership by the whole people, and increase of 57 percent over the Sixth 5-Year Plan figure. In capital construction, the investment allocated by the state is mainly to be used in energy, communications, and raw materials construction. Most of the investment allocated by the region is to be used in developing energy, communications, raw materials, light and textile industries, agriculture, education, science, culture, and sports. The majority of the capital raised by the prefectures, cities, and counties should be used in production facilities and in education, science, culture, and public health. We must appropriately control housing construction. Except for tourist facilities, construction of large buildings and halls must be resolutely cut.

YANG XIZONG ATTENDS HENAN CPPCC MEETING 28 APRIL

The Provincial CPPCC Committee vice chairmen who attended today's opening ceremony and took their seats on the rostrum were Yan Jimin, Cui Guanghua, Dong Minsheng, Ye Renshou, Hao Fuhong, Ren Leiyuan, Zuo Mingsheng, Ren Fangqui, Duan Zongsan, Ding Zhenyu, and Tu Jiaji. Others attending today's meeting and taking their seats on the rostrum were leading comrades of the Provincial CPC Committee, Provincial People's Congress, Provincial Government, and Henan Military District, including Yang Xizong, Liu Zhengwie, He Zhukang, Zhao Di, Zhang Shude, Zhan Jingwu, Zhang Zhigang, Lin Xiao, Wu Shaokui, Guo Peijun, Fan Lian, and Wang Huayun, former chairman of the Provincial CPPCC Committee.

At the opening ceremony, the agenda and schedule for the meeting were first adopted. After that, Provincial CPPCC Committee Vice Chairman Ye Renshou delivered the work report of the fifth provincial CPPCC Committee Standing Committee.

HUNAN OFFICIAL STRESSES NEWS COVERAGE OF REFORMS

HK301159 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Excerpts] The Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC has decided that during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, we must give priority to reforms. Similarly, journalistic workers must also give priority to reforms.

They must study, write stories about, support, and promote reforms. This is the requirement proposed by Liu Zheng, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, in his speech at the provincial meeting of radio and television reporters held on 29 April.

Comrade Liu Zheng said: To switch from a product economy to a planned commodity economy is a fundamental change that concerns the core of reforms. The most important issue in this historic change is to seek common understanding among the people about reforms.

However, why do some people still comment extensively about reforms? In the final analysis, this is because they do not have thorough understanding of the necessity, inevitability, long-term significance, complications; and arduousness of reforms. In order to carry out reforms, we must first change our concepts and thinking.

He continued: Reforms are a comprehensive, profound, and long-term change. There should be progress in adapting oneself to the situation. We must seriously do well in the propaganda work of reforms and shorten the progress of understanding their importance.

On the work of journalistic workers in reporting stories of reforms, Comrade Liu Zheng pointed out: Reforms should be arranged by the central authorities while the masses should probe innovative ways to carry them out. We must be good at and sum up the relatively successful experience. We must be bold in reporting stories about reforms. Press, radio, and television news reports are not instructions of the party, but they are commonly taken by the masses as party instructions. Thus, we must handle with care and in a solid way, matters on which we are not very certain, including commendation and criticism. We should focus on the positive side when reporting stories about reforms. This does not mean that we need no criticism or reporting of problems, but we must confirm the accuracy of criticism and reports when reporting them.

HUNAN RADIO URGES VIGILANCE AGAINST FLATTERERS

HK281013 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 27 Apr 86

["Sunday Chat" by (Xia Tianyan): "Be Vigilant Against Flatterers"]

[Excerpts] No leader will say: I like boasting and flattery. However, many have gone so far as to fall into the trap of flatterers. The number of flatterers has now gradually become small, but in our practical life, flatters have not become extinct. For example, a new leader has been transferred to a certain unit or a leader has been newly promoted in the unit, and no sooner had he assumed office than some people wrote articles:

Under the correct leadership of so and so, our outlook has taken an altogether new aspect. Some quietly promoted or transferred the relatives of the leader who had just assumed office. [sentence indistinct] When the leader made a certain mistake and was criticized or a disciplinary action was taken against him, some others complained of unfairness on his behalf and quickly comforted him so that the leader continued to make mistakes. Therefore, persons with breadth of vision have proposed that when a new cadre assumes office, he must pass five tests. The test of boasting and flattery is the first of the five tests. This shows keen insight.

How can we resist flattery? One of the important ways is that we must think and act in one and the same way. Second, we must keep a clear head. If a leading cadre treat flatterers as ghosts, I think that not only can party style be straightened out very well but also the number of flatterers will be greatly reduced.

HEILONGJIANG CARRIES OUT TRANSFER OF ARMED FORCES

SK250746 Harbin Heilingjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] The 94 country-level People's Armed Forces departments throughout the province will be transferred to the localities by the end of June. The county-level People's Armed Forces departments in our province were transferred to the military organizational system in 1951. Over the past 30 years or so, these departments have made contributions to army building, militia construction, local economic development, and the prosperity and consolidation of border areas.

The nature of the county-level People's Armed Forces departments and their tasks will remain unchanged even after their transfer to the local organizationsl system. These departments will work under the jurisdiction of the localities and will be subject to the dual leadership of both local and military authorities. Playing a role as the local leading military command organs, there departments will undertake the tasks of conscripting servicemen, conducting militia organizational construction, equipping and managing weapons, conducting military training and political education for militiamen and reserve servicemen, and leading militiamen to join the army or enter a war.

After these departments are transferred to the local organizational system, their rights to the use and manage equipment and materials will remain unchanged so that they can make full use of their training bases and facilities.

The People's Armed Forces departments of Suihua City and Harbin City's Nangang District carried out the transfer work on a trial basis in March. So far, the transfer work is basically ready to be conducted.

JILIN'S GAO DI ATTENDS MAY DAY CELEBRATION

SK300804 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Report on meeting to mark the 100th anniversary of May Day held in the assembly hall of the Changchun City Workers' Cultural Palace on 29 April -- recorded]

[Excerpt] [Announcer] A meeting to mark the 100th anniversary of May Day sponsored by the Jilin Provincial and Changchun City Trade Union Councils was held in the assembly hall of the Changchun City Workers' Cultural Palace today. Attending the meeting were more than 1,000 workers representatives, model workers, and trade union activists from the railway, bus, postal, telecommunications, textile, commercial, educational, and public health fields.

(Dong Guoliang), chairman of the Jilin Provincial Trade Union Council, presided over the meeting.

[(Dong Guoliang)] The meeting to mark the 100th anniversary of May Day is now open. Attending today's meeting are provincial and city leaders, including Gao Di, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee; Wang Xianjin, Gao Dezhan, and Wang Zhongyu, deputy secretaries of the provincial CPC Committee; Zhang Shiying, vice chairman of the provincial Advisory Commission; (Li Shuren) and (Wu Heng), Standing Committee members of the provincial Advisory Committee; Zhao Xiu, chairman of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee; Huo Mingguang, Liu Cikai, Zhu Jinghang, and Xu Yuancun, vice chairmen of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee; Gao Wen, vice governor ofthe provincial government; Liu Jingzhi, chairman of the provincial CPPCC Committee; Zhang Fengqi, Luo Yuejia, and Xin Cheng, vice chairmen of the provincial CPPCC Committee, Li Deming, secretary of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission; (Du Qinglin), Standing Committee member of the provincial CPC Committee and director of the organizational department of the provincial CPC Committee; (Zhu Zhang), deputy political commissar of the provincial military district; (Wu Yuxia), secretary of the Changchun City CPC Committee; and (Wang Li), chairman of the city People's Congress Standing Committee. Also attending today's meeting were Yu Lin and Song Jiehan, former deputy secretaries of the provincial CPC Committee, and retired trade union workers. First of all, we will ask Comrade Wang Xiangjin, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, to give a speech.

[Wang Xianjin] On the occasion of ceremoniously celebrating the glorious day of the working class and the 100th anniversary of May Day, on behalf of the provincial CPC Committee and the Changchun City CPC Committee, I extend festive greetings to the broad masses of staff members and workers on all fronts, throughout the province, and send cordial greetings to the labor medal winners and the vast number of trade union workers.

Our working class is a great working class with a glorious revolutionary tradition and outstanding achievements. All achievements and results that have been made were cemented with the sweat of the working class and embody the wisdom of the working class. At present, our country has formulated a new economic development plan. The task ahead of us is to build our country into a modern, culturally advanced, and highly democratic socialist country. The Seventh 5-Year Plan and Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the Seventh 5-Year Plan examined and approved at the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC re-represented to the people the grand blueprint for the economic and social development in the next 5 years, and reveal heartening and brilliant prospects. Realizing the Seventh 5-Year Plan is of great significance for better maintaining the current good economic situation and for successfully realizing the fighting goals by the end of this century. Thus, the broad masses of staff members and workers throughout the province should conscientiously study and implement the documents of the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC, carry forward the spirit of the "old foolish man who removed the mountains," bring their functions into play, and make contributions to the realization of the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

JILIN COMMENTARY VIEWS STRENGTHENING POLITICAL WORK

SK280653 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 27 Apr 86

[Station commentary: "Analysing Economic Results and Strengthen Ideological and Political Work"]

[Text] After the third industrial production work conference of the provincial government, industrial enterprises throughout the province have launched activities of analyzing economic results. In analyzing economic results, enterprises should not only analyze and solve the actual problems in production to transform unfavorable factors and to make the most of favorable factors, but also should pay full attention to analyzing the ideological understanding of the people and sturdy ways to strengthen ideological and political work so as to spark the enthusiasm and creativeness of the broad masses of cadres, staff members, and workers. This is a key guarantee for the smooth development of industrial production.

The situation of the enterprises' ideological and political work is generally good at present. But quite a large number of enterprises still have actual problems in production and lag behind in terms of their ideological and political work. Some ideological problems requiring solution exist among their cadres and workers. Tendencies of being lax in labor discipline and management generally exist. Some enterprises often concentrate their analysis of economic results on actual problems in production and management to the neglect of the ideological factors among the staff and workers; thus, they have not done nearly enough to discover the causes affecting economic results in conducting ideological and political work.

With much work to do, the enterprises should take essential and effective measures for establishing and perfecting rules and regulations. Simultaneously, they should rely on the staff and workers to implement rules and regulations no matter how good these rules and regulations are. So, in analyzing economic results, we should not only analyze the work concerning strengthening enterprise management and setting up regulations and systems, but also analyze the present conditions of the staff and workers and the problems concerning ideological and political work.

Only when the enterprises fully spark the enthusiasm of the staff and workers for developing socialism by strengthening ideological and political work among them, safeguarding their status as masters of the enterprises, and enhancing their sense of responsibility, can the rules and regulations that have been established and perfected be implemented earnestly and successfully, and will the staff and workers be able to play their role as the masters of the enterprises to earnestly solve the problems not related to rules and regulations. Thus, enterprises should concentrate their analysis of economic results on analyzing and grasping the two civilizations, regard the analysis of economic results as day-to-day work, and persistently carry it through to the end.

JILIN MOVES TO ELIMINATE NEPOTISM IN CADRES

OW301224 Beijing XINHUA in English 1211 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Changchun, April 30 (XINHUA) — Jilin provincial employment officials have introduced aptitude tests for all applicants for office vacancies in a bid to end unfair practices in cadre appointments. In the past, the provincial labor and personnel department received many complaints that new cadres were chosen through family connections rather than ability. Cadre in China is the name given to a white collar worker or official.

Under new departmental regulations, potential cadres must show that they have had adequate education and professional training, and must undergo cultural, physical and political examination. Applicants who score highly but do not meet all the qualifications are held in reserve.

A department official said efforts should be made to recruit more cadres from rural areas.

CHERNOBYL ACCIDENT MAY AFFECT NUCLEAR POWER POLICY

OW010335 Taipei CNA in English 0257 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Taipei, April 30 (CNA) -- Economics Minister Lee Ta-hai said Wednesday that the government is watching closely the development of the Soviet nuclear reactor accident, but he declined to comment if the accident will have certain impact on the government's nuclear energy policy.

In response to interpellations by legislators Lin Lo-shan, Liao Fu-ping and Chang Chun-hsiung at a meeting of the Legislative Yuan, Lee said that people here are as much concerned about the accident as other people in the world.

He said it is too early to predict what kind of impact the accident will have on the government's policy on nuclear power plants before learning more about the accident, which some experts have described as the worst of its kind in the world.

Lee indicated that all nuclear technologies and equipment of the nuclear power plants here were imported from the United States where safety has always been the top priority in building nuclear power plants.

The U.S. Government took a long time to investigate the nuclear power accident at the Three Mile Island and finally concluded that human errors were the major cause of the accident, Lee said. Before learning more about the cause of the Soviet nuclear accident, people here should not jump to the conclusion that all nuclear power plants are unsafe, he said.

Lee promised that the government will take all necessary measures to ensure the safety of the nation's nuclear power plants.

INFORMATION OFFICER COMMENTS ON PRC DEFECTION

OW301514 Taipei CNA in English 1453 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Taipei, April 30 (CNA) -- Government Information Officer [GIO] Director General Chang King-yuh said Wednesday that Chen Pao-chung's decision to flee to freedom and to join the anti-communist fight of the Republic of China on the national recovery bastion of Taiwan has clearly shown that the reunification of China through the three principles of the people is a certainty and a natural trend and is the best way to solve the China issue.

Chang made the remarks in a press conference in the afternoon through which freedom-seeker Chen was introduced to the public. Chang pointed out that in the short period of the past five years, one after another Chinese Communist Air Force pilots, including Wu Jung-ken, Sun Tien-chin, Wang Hsueh-cheng and Hsiao Tien-jun, have succeeded in flying to freedom while risking their lives. Now, he added, Chen Pao-chung has followed in their steps to flee to the free land indicating clearly that there are serious problems within the Chinese Communist Armed Forces.

"Giving them opportunities, they will all repudiate Leninism-Marxism, and the communist system and will try every means, by air, sea or land, to seek freedom," the GIO head said. "The attraction of the "Taiwan experience" will definitely give the strength to overthrow the tyrannical communist rule on the mainland," he quoted President Chiang Ching-kuo as saying.

While we extend our most hearty welcome to Chen, he said, we should doubly remind ourselves that a billion compatriots are still living under the communist regime's oppression. We must unite even more closely and strive even harder to help them regain freedom and happiness. Chang also expressed on the occasion, on behalf of the government and people of the Republic of China, his respect and gratitude to the government of the Republic of Korea for its respecting Chen's will and letting him come to the free motherland. He also took the opportunity to call on all freedom-loving nations in the world to continue to promote humanitarian values and to render help to the peoples of captive nations to overthrow totalitarian regimes.

Pilot Holds News Conference

HK301244 Hong Kong AFP in English 1434 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Excerpts] Taipei, April 30 (AFP) — A Chinese Air Force pilot who flew a MiG-19 to Seoul in a defection bid arrived here Wednesday to seek political asylum and said North Korean jets had tried to intercept him during his daring journey.

"If you were in my position as a pilot, you would have realized the danger involved," he said. There were many advanced facilities in Shenyang and 13 military bases in North Korea that could have stopped him," he added. "It was a difficult decision to leave my parents and my girl friends... I have to admit that by doing so, I have failed to fulfill my duties as a son, but between filial piety and freedom, I could choose only one."

He said he had left a statement before he left China to "denounce communism and break any ties with the Chinese Communists. I also asked them not to persecute my parents, relatives, and friends for my personal behavior, if they have any conscience left."

Foreign Ministry Statement

OW010343 Taipei CNA in English 0237 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Taipei, April 30 (CNA) -- The Ministry of Foreign Affairs said in a statement Wednesday that "the ROC [Republic of China] Government greatly thinks its South Korean counterpart for respecting Chen Pao-chung's will to seek freedom in the Republic of China" by letting the former Red Chinese pilot come to Taipei Wednesday afternoon. The MOFA noted that the government and people of the Republic of China have been very much concerned about Chen since he landed his MiG-19 in South Korea February 21 and expected that the freedom seeker will arrive in the free motherland at an early date. Now that the government of the Republic of Korea has sent Chen Pao-chung to the Republic of China, the statement added, the ROC Government "expresses thanks for the ROK Government's viewing the friendship between the ROC and the ROK as having great value, and for its stand on safeguarding freedom and justice and respecting human rights." The Foreign Ministry also reiterated its warm welcome to Chen to arrive in the free mother country.

Meanwhile, Dr. Han Lih-wu, president of the Chinese Association for Human Rights, said Wednesday that the arrival of the 26-year-old former communist pilot in the ROC is "a strong negation" of the possibility for the Chinese Communists to succeed in applying united front tactics against the Republic of China, particularly at a time when the Peiping regime is escalating the plot. Han stressed that the best way to counter Peiping's united front tactics is to strengthen freedom, democracy and human rights in this country so as to ensure the ROC's final victory over the evil Chinese communists. However, he warned against over-confidence on the part of the ROC people in their fight against the Peiping regime, saying over-confidence will result in negligence.

DAYA BAY PLANT OFFICIALS STUDYING ACCIDENT IN USSR

HK010548 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 1 May 86 p 8

[Text] Chinese officials involved with the Daya Bay nuclear plant are looking with much concern at the massive nuclear accident in Russia. One top official with the Guangdong Nuclear Power Joint Venture Co., which is responsible for building and running the plant, said yesterday he would like to obtain detailed information about the accident but added: "Our country now has fairly limited links with the Soviet Union and the Russians are keeping their nuclear technology under close wraps."

Mr Shen Jiansheng, second deputy general manager of the company, said the type of reactor used by the Russians was different from that to be installed at Daya Bay. An engineer involved with the Daya Bay project explained that the Soviet reactor was a light water graphite reactor (LWGR) while those to be installed at Daya Bay are pressurized water reactors (PWR). LWGR gets its name from the fact that the reactor is cooled by light water and moderated by graphite in the reactor core. The engineer said the Soviet LWGR does not have containment surrounding the reactor core, which makes it more vulnerable to fire when the coolant system malfunctions. A PWR has triple protection for the nuclear core.

One local observer said the Chinese are probably more eager to learn about the accident because a large number of mainland nuclear experts obtained their training in Russia during the 1950's. "The Chinese are probably more familiar with the Soviet nuclear plants than their Western counterparts," he said.

Meanwhile, the Hong Kong Government will be asked to keep the public informed if Hong Kong is affected by the radioactivity from the Soviet Union. Deputy convenor of the UMELCO [Unofficial Members of Executive and Legislative Councils] public utility panel, Mr Hui Yin-fat, said last night that they were concerned about the incident and would press for more information from the government. But Mr Hui pointed out that there was no reason to be alarmed since the effect of the explosion would be a global one and there should not be any imminent danger to Hong Kong people.

However, the incident in the Soviet Union would help to remind local people to keep a closer watch on the Daya Bay plant.

Mr Hui said that although they had been reassured by the government, even so security measures would be adopted at Daya Bay.

EDITORIAL EXAMINES DAYA BAY SAFETY PRECAUTIONS

HK300433 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 30 Apr 86 p 6

[Editorial: The Need to Look Again at Daya Baya Safety Precautions]

[Text] It was claimed from the beginning that nuclear reactors, generating electricity, were safer than any other form of energy technology. The extravagance of such arguments has been exposed, once again, by the accident at a Soviet nuclear power station.

Indeed, it has alarmed all sectors of the nuclear industry round the world. And there can be no doubt that officials in a number of countries are now taking a serious look at the security precautions at their own nuclear power stations.

The Kiev incident will undoubtedly add extra force to the arguments of environmental groups who are strongly opposed to nuclear energy.

Some opponents want to ban any new nuclear plants. Others would halt plants already under construction. Still others would abandon those now in service.

Supporters of the nuclear industry, on the other hand, will probably insist that the relevant question is: "What can be done to eliminate the deficiencies of fission rather than eliminating fission itself?" The utter divergence of these points of view has marked the controversy in recent years about energy from fissioning atoms. The man on the street may be forgiven if he is not sure who is right. The debate has been frequently emotional, sometimes bitter, often confusing. Frightening stories about radiation hazards of nuclear materials view with worrisome forecasts of energy famine, economic troubles, and even environmental disaster if nuclear energy is abandoned.

Seven years have gone by since the 1979 accident at the General Public Utilities Corporation's Three Mile Island reactor in the United States. But nuclear jitters were sparked off again in the United States by a mishap in Florida a year or so later. Some people called the breakdown at the Crystal River nuclear plant in Florida the worst reactor accident since Three Mile Island. But how serious is that? Should the American public have been alarmed at yet another sign of nuclear frailty, or pleased that the Crystal River accident was fully contained? An American columnist wrote at the time: "The Crystal River plant operators contained the accident. But history will record whether the investigator managed to contain the public's doubts. The United States is the kind of society where the scale and potential hazards of such incidents can be freely discussed in the media.

Unlike the United States, however, the Soviet Union is not an open society. The extent of the Kiev accident was still unclear last night. Even the four-sentence TASS announcement would never have been issued if high radiation levels had not been reported earlier in several Nordic countries. Swedish Energy Minister Birgitta Dahl has noted that Moscow failed to inform its neighbours about the accident. "This accident gives added weight to our demands for the Soviet Union's entire civilian nuclear programme to be opened to international inspection," she said. It also illustrates the point about nuclear power stations which their defenders have not been able to answer.

The assurances about Daya Bay, of which we were at one time given so many, now look a bit thin. It is upwind of Hong Kong. It may be quite a long way away but it is a lot nearer than Kiev is to Helsinki. It is not, perhaps, for Hong Kong to say whether the scheme should be allowed to go ahead in its present form, or in any form at all.

The accident in Russia certainly suggests the need to look again at safety precautions at the Daya Bay plant, and the action that may be needed in Kong Kong -- potentially including large-scale evacuation -- if something goes seriously wrong. We are not threatened with a bomb on our doorstep. But we can no longer duck the fact that we are threatened with something potentially a good deal nastier than anything we have to fear from Castle Peak. [Hong Kong power production area]

LIAOWANG VIEWS APPROPRIATE PRC GROWTH RATES

HK270842 Hong Kong LIAOWANG Overseas Edition in Chinese No 21 Apr 86 p 18

[Article by Xie Hong: "Comments on China's Pursuit of an Appropriate Economic Growth Rate"]

[Text] One of the important features of the "Seventh 5-Year Plan" is that it highlights the need to maintain an appropriate economic growth rate and to make the various components of the national economy develop in proportion and with excellent results.

This is in fact an important decision made after summing up historical experience, analyzing the present state of our economy and various trends, and studying the general pattern of our economic development.

China is a developing country. In order to augment its national strength and to raise its people's living standards, it is necessary to maintain an appropriate economic growth rate. However, economic growth is rule-governed and is dependent on the balance and compatibility between various factors. Only by bringing about an overall balance and harmonizing various proportional relations can we arrive at a high growth rate which promises excellent results.

The Growth Rates During the Period Covered by the "Sixth 5-Year Plan" Were Quite Normal

At present China is experiencing a historical and strategic change and its economy, which is a "binary economy and a modern, non-agrarian economy, and is developing rapidly in the direction of a modern economy. In addition, its current closed, rigid economic system, is developing at the same time into a commodity economy full of vitality. During the period covered by the "Sixth 5-Year Plan," China's economic growth rates were very high. Economists hold different opinions on this. Generally speaking, these growth rates were quite normal because, thanks to the reforms and readjustments, some major proportional relations became harmonious. In addition, previously suppressed economic activities were given impetus and the input of the key elements to the reproduction cycles improved both qualitatively and quantitatively. Of course, one must not overlook the existence of some abnormal phenomena such as the growth rate propped up by an increase in investment, by the growth of demand, and by the vast import of raw and processed materials, parts, and components.

Create Conditions for Replacing the Economic Pattern

If we analyze the increase in the pace of economic growth in terms of developmental changes and regular, periodic changes, we will be able to clearly see that development is rational only if it is appropriate, well fostered, extremely beneficial, effective, and continuous, and that if a high growth rate is aimed at an increase in output value and achieved by means of extensive development and an increase in input, balanced overall development will be disrupted and we will be forced to make readjustments. Thus, the correct choice would be to maintain an appropriate economic growth rate, to understand anew the idea of economic growth, and to change patterns with a view toward the attainment of better results. All this is precisely what the Chinese people should strive to achieve in the future.

An appropriate economic growth rate is a necessary condition for the comprehensive reform of the economic structure. This condition should be able to make circumstances favorable for the comprehensive reform of the economic structure, to facilitate the rational readjustment of product mix and production setup, and to draw people's attention to the need to improve economic results and the quality of products.

Measures To Be Implemented in the Future

To maintain an appropriate economic growth rate, China will have to implement the following measures in the future:

-- Acquiring a new understanding of economic growth. In the next few years, China will make an effort to eliminate the influence of the old concept of economic growth dominated by an idea of the importance of output value and the influence of the traditional development pattern; to correct the practice of making output value targets more ambitious at each level and the practice of trying to outpace others; to put an end to the practice of assessing the performance of various localities, departments, and enterprises using increases in output value as a criterion; to perfect the systems governing the assignment of targets and assessment of performance; and to speed up the introduction of GNP targets.

-- Controlling social demand and strengthening the control and regulation of the composition of demand. Last year China adopted a series of measures to strengthen macroeconomic control, with the result that the "overheating" of the economy resulting from growth of demand was alleviated. However, in eliminating the destabilizing factors in economic activities, it is more important to control the composition of demand because the balance between demand and supply is always a structured dynamic balance. By bringing the composition of demand under control, we can make the composition of supply more rational, introduce a production setup commensurate with our national conditions, formulate a production policy to guide economic development, gradually transform the traditional economic growth pattern, coordinate the development of our primary industry and tertiary industry, and quicken the pace of the construction of basic facilities and of the development of the energy industry, transportation, telecommunications, the materials industry, and other basic industries.

In addition, the different pace of economic development in different economic regions will make it necessary for China to handle the problem of balancing the regional distribution of various resources and forces, to help them make the best use of local conditions and resources, to develop horizontal economic ties, to establish multi-layered, multi-faceted, and multi-functional regional economic networks with the large cities as their centers, to make its production setup more flexible, and to make the distribution of resources more advantageous to all. By doing all this, China will be able to adapt itself to the modernization of its economy and the changes in its people's consumption patterns.

-- Strengthening macroeconomic regulation and gradually replacing the state's direct control mainly by indirect control. In this regard, China will gradually replace its direct control of the distribution of its resources with control by economic means and pay close attention to the problem of how planning, financial, and banking policies and various regulatory mechanisms can back up one another in order to bring about an overall balance among finance, credit, foreign exchange reserves, and the supply of goods and materials. In addition, it will also correct various economic malpractices by perfecting economic legislation, strengthening the supervisory organs, and supervising economic activities according to the law. The state's economic management function will be readjusted and the organs responsible for this work will be correspondingly reformed. This is to enhance the ability of the departments responsible for economic management to manage the overall economic situation.

-- Striving to improve supply and to bring about a balance between gross supply and gross demand. China should, by using a rational composition of demand as a guide, increase supply with a minimum increase in input, improve the quality of its products, and enrich its product mix in order to improve the supply situation, and then bring about a limited buyers' market. This is the future course of China's economic operations. Thus, China's primary task is to establish a rational system for the distribution of the interests derived from investment, to provide conditions for equal competition between its enterprises, and to reorganize production. By doing all this, it can develop a self-balancing mechanism to ensure the rational operation of its enterprises. Second, it should develop horizontal economic ties among its enterprises and form groups of enterprises with different characteristics at different levels in order to produce group benefits and social benefits. Third, by offering preferential treatment in taxation, prices, and credit, it would encourage its enterprises to make technological advances, to improve the quality of their products, and to cut down the consumption of materials.

Fourth, it should establish a socialist market system and perfect it in order to provide its enterprises with the necessary capital, goods, materials, technology, and skilled labor for their development. Fifth, it should formulate without delay a clear production policy in order to increase supply, to improve the composition of demand, and to balance social demand and supply.

From the "Seventh 5-Year Plan" and the discussion at the NPC session, it can be seen that efforts made to hold firm to the reforms and development and to make the national economy steadily, continuously, and harmoniously develop are important features of the new 5-year plan and the key to the success of future economic operations.

HONG KONG STANDARD ON MOONLIGHTING PRC UNION LEADERS

HK270620 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 27 Apr 86 p 5

["Special report: by Yan Mei-ning, Stephen Morgan, Annie Lam, and Ivan Lo: "The State of the Unions: Union Leaders Who 'Moonlight' as Managers"]

[Text] Mr Li Ruiting is the trade union chairman of Luk's Industrial (Shekou) Co Ltd, but this is only a part-time job. His official position in the factory is head of the personnel department. Another example of the same person holding concurrently the positions of trade union chairman and head of personnel can be found in Huaqiang Sanyo Electronics Co Ltd in Shenzhen. Both Mr Li and the management of Huaqiang Sanyo claimed that this was only a coincidence and assured that they were very impartial in carrying out their two contradictory roles. This is just one of the many unusual features of trade unions in the SEZ's [Special Economic Zone] foreign funded enterprises.

According to law, full-time union staff should be paid by union funds. The Sunday STANDARD was told, however, that in practice this was not the case; the pay came from the employers. "Every union branch set up in an enterprise has to contribute 40 percent of its funds to the trade union at a higher level. What is left can barely cover the expense of daily union activities," explained Mr Chen Zengxiao, trade union chairman of Shenzhen Aero-Fasteners Manufacturing Co. Ltd. "In state-owned enterprises, the salary of full-time trade union staff will come from welfare funds drawn down from the employers," he added.

The position and salary of a full-time trade union chairman is equivalent to deputy head of the enterprise. As most of the employers still refuse to pay them, the majority of trade union staff are on a part-time basis and carry out their duties mainly in the evenings. Trade unions in the foreign funded enterprises are given rights to attend board meetings as non-voting members.

Huaqiang Sanyo was scheduled to have their first board meeting last Friday since the Japanese injected half of the capital two years ago. But the management told the Sunday STANDARD in an interview on Wednesday that the factory's trade union so far had not asked to be present at the meeting. Although the management was to have a meeting with the trade union staff on Thursday, their Japanese manager predicted that the trade union staff would not raise the issue at a time so close to the board meeting. He added that the trade union chairman, who is also the head of the personnel department, had many opportunities to discuss the workers' situation with the management during his everyday duties.

Mr Zhang Shijin, manager of Luk's Industrial (Shekou) Co Ltd, said that the company is wholly foreign-owned and the directors are from Hong Kong. The board meetings, of course, are held in Hong Kong. It is therefore difficult for trade union representatives to attend.

Wholly foreign-owned enterprises have to set up a regular consultative meeting system between trade unions and employers. Mr Zhang said this is very flexible in their company and the meetings are irregular.

Their trade union chairman, being head of the personnel department at the same time, can always talk to thim if he wishes. A Chinese employee responsible for overall management, will inform the Hong Kong owners through telephone and telex or during their infrequent visits.

Mr Mi Zhiliang, head of the Labour Relations Department of the Shekou district trade union, said that they had much to learn in dealing with foreign owner and management. They had to be careful in selecting titles for seminars for foreign management staff. Otherwise the foreign owners would accuse the management of being too lenient towards workers and trade unions, Mr Mi said.

To organise a committee monitoring labour safety in a factory would arouse suspicion from management and owners if the trade unions adopted the jargon used in state-owned enterprises as these terms are seen as very aggressive.

WEN WEI PO DISCUSSES DEBATE AMONG PRC ARTISTS

HK291207 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 29 Apr 86 p 1

[Special dispatch from Shanghai: "Appraisals on Noted Contemporary Painters of Traditional Chinese Painting Made by a Youth in Nanjing Have Triggered Off a General Debate Among Artists Throughout the Country"]

[Text] Last year, Liu Haisu, a noted Chinese painter, was criticized and somewhat negated by a young man in an article. This triggered off a nationwide debate on the fine arts. Master Haisu said that only by holding debates can academic activities be invigorated and that this article has activated the stagnant state of theoretical criticism on the fine arts.

At a recent interview given to reporters of JIANGSU HUAKAN [Jiangsu Pictorial], Liu Haisu said that "appraisals of an artist can be quite different" and that "I will not take offense at the criticism by a young man. Academic research must be done by everyone, and only by holding debates can it be invigorated."

These remarks by Liu Haisu were written in headlines in the third issue of the magazine this year.

Last July, JIANGSU HUAKAN published an article entitiled "My Views on Contemporary Chinese Traditional Paintings" by Li Xiaoshan, a graduate student of the school of art in Nanjing. Of all the painters who are relatively influential in contemporary artistic circles and rappraised in the article, Liu Haisu is more negated than affirmed. Li Xiashan maintains that although Liu Haisu is an outstanding representative of contemporary traditional Chinese painters, as his conception of painting is limited to the sphere of traditional ideology, he should certainly not be regarded as a great epoch-making master. Nevertheless, as Liu Haisu commenced the practice of aesthetic experiences in painting and ushered Chinese traditional painting into the door of modern painting, his works have added new contents to the extension of Chinese traditional painting.

As soon as this article by Li Xiaoshan was published, there was a public outcry in artistic circles and a nationwide debate on the fine arts began. Some people believed that "the criticism by Li Xiaoshan on the old painters are reasonable.

Although some have struck the vital points, some lack specific analyses." But some people believed that it is obviously not proper for the author to have negated all the most influential contemporary painters in the country and asked whether this is a reversion of overthrowing all.

While expressing his different opinions, Li Haisu explicitly pointed out that "Li Xiaoshan's article came out as by a great critic" and that "this article by Li Xiaoshan has activated the stagnant state of theoretical criticism on the fine arts."

PRC NAVY LOGISTICS EXAMINES IMPROVING MANAGEMENT

HK290813 Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 29 Apr 86 p 6

["Special Dispatch" from Beijing: "The Logistics Department of the PLA Navy Holds an On-the-Spot Meeting in Lushun to Improve Logistics Services and Modernize Management"]

[Text] The Logistics Department of the PLA Navy recently held an "on-the-spot target management meeting" in Lushun. At the meeting, Li Chunming, director of the Navy Logistics Departments, announced that Navy logistics work for the next 3-5 years is to gradually achieve the modernization of scientific management. The principal task this year is to spread knowledge, to train core members, and to conduct pilot experiments.

The department concerned disclosed that the on-the-spot meeting was held from 12 to 15 April and was attended by over 80 officials from Navy Logistics Departments at various levels. The meeting listened to reports on experience in "target management" conducted by Lushun Naval Base logistics department and the units under its command and organized the participants into conducting an on-the-spot inspection.

The meeting pointed out: In Navy logistics departments management work there exist extensive problems, such as emphasizing experience and neglecting laws; emphasizing qualitative analysis and neglecting quantitative analysis; emphasizing quotas and neglecting results; emphasizing quantity and neglecting quality; and emphasizing supply and neglecting management. These have led to a serious waste of material and financial resources. For this reason, it is necessary to learn and apply modern management science.

At the meeting, the Lushun Naval Base logistics department briefed the participants on how they carried out and what they gained from, "target management." For a long time in the past they had continued to apply old and methods experiences. They had spent as much effort and money as before but still attained little results. Since they conducted "target management" in 1984, they "have carried out their work well with less people and less money."

For example, by conducting factor management the 1st company of a certain automobile battalion has succeeded in reducing accidents; by applying a network method a certain submarine detachment has increased its capability to ensure logistics services in the coastal areas; and by applying "target management" a certain coastal artillery regiment has attained better economic results in agricultural and sideline production.

Navy Logistics Department director Li Chunming said: After 3-5 years of effort, Navy logistics work must gradually modernize its scientific management. The principal task this year is to spread knowledge and to train core members. Every base and every fleet should conduct at least one pilot experiment and then gradually spread the experience.

SENATE AGREES TO SALE OF AIRCRAFT PARTS TO PRC

OW020806 Beijing XINHUA in English 0757 GMT 2 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 1 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee today approved in a vote of 14 to 1 the sale of aircraft avionics components to the People's Republic of China. The committee voted for the Avionics sale to China after Senator Richard Lugar, the panel's chairman, said the sale should be approved because "I believe ultimately it is in our interest to cooperate with China.

"I am convinced that this particular sale does not disrupt the current military balance or alter the current military balance between the People's Republic of China and Taiwan," Lugar added.

The Reagan administration submitted the plan of the 55 [as received] million dollar avionics sale to Congress last month. The proposed sale was opposed by such conservative senators as Jesse Helms, who cast the only vote against it today.

Acting Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense Edward Baker told the Senate panel Tuesday that the United States intended to export to the People's Republic of China 55 integrated avionics system kits for the upgrading of 50 Chinese F-9 interceptor aircrafts, which will be completed about 1995 or 1996.

U.S. PRESIDENT ON U.S.-ASEAN TRADE COOPERATION

OW)11857 Beijing XINHUA in English 1846 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Hong Kong, May 1 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan said today that his country will cooperate fully with the association of Southeast Asian nations (ASEAN) in efforts to keep open the avenues of world trade. The Malaysian News Agency BERNAMA quoted Reagan as saying the necessity of keeping open the trade avenues would be one of his messages to the 12th economic summit of the seven industrialized nations scheduled to begin in Tokyo on May 4.

Making his opening remarks at a meeting with the ASEAN foreign ministers in Denpasar, capital of Bali, Indonesia, Reagan promised that he would channel whatever ideas they have to the Tokyo summit. It was reported earlier that during their meeting with Reagan today, the ASEAN foreign ministers would raise two statements concerning ASEAN's economic relations with indsutrial countries and its economic ties with the United States.

On the Kampuchean issue, Reagan assured the ministers that his government would continue to support the basic principles for the settlement of the conflict as agreed upon at the international conference on Kampuchea in 1981. However, BERNAMA did not mention what Reagan's position was on the recent eight-point peace proposal made by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea. The proposal was supported by the ASEAN member countries.

Referring to his two-hour meeting with Indonesian President Suharto earlier today, Reagan said they touched on bilateral, regional and international issues.

Reagan, who arrived in Denpasar on April 29 for a three-day working visit, will fly to Tokyo tomorrow.

POSSIBLE POSTPONEMENT OF NUCLEAR MISSION TO USSR

OW020105 Tokyo KYODO in English 0057 GMT 2 May 86

MORE REPORTAGE ON CHERNOBYL ACCIDENT

18 Injured Seriously

OW011648 Beijing XINHUA in English 1643 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Moscow, May 1 (XINHUA) -- Radiation levels at the Chernobyl nuclear power station and at a neighboring settlement have dropped by one-and-a-half to two times but 18 people injured in an accident at the station are in serious condition, the Soviet Council of Ministers said today. A report from the council said all 197 people hospitalized after the accident are under treatment, 18 of them badly injured.

Meanwhile, the official news agency TASS reported that the Soviet Foreign Ministry has briefed the ambassadors of Great Britain, Finland, the Netherlands, and the charge d'affaires of France and Austria on action being taken in the wake of the accident. TASS did not say what the diplomats were told.

Earlier today, the Soviet Council of Ministers announced that two people died in the Chernobyl reactor accident, which occurred last Saturday.

May Affect Agriculture

OW011847 Beijing XINHUA in English 1338 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 1 (XINHUA) — Some American agricultural experts who are specialists in Soviet studies have predicted that the nuclear accident at Chernobyl power station in Ukraine could have a devastating impact on Soviet farm production.

Interviewed by THE WASHINGTON POST, those experts noted that Ukraine and four other republics north of Chernobyl are the richest and most productive lands in the Soviet Union. They accound for about one-third of all Soviet dairy output, more than one-third of its winter wheat, more than one-fifth of all its other grains and major share of livestock production. Calling those most affected areas the breadbasket in the Soviet Union, a University of Illinois-Urbana economist, Steven Schmidt, said that it is frightening to think of the consequences of this accident. It could add severe stress to the Soviet food production system which is already unable to meet the nation's needs, he said.

Charles Benbrook, an agriculture specialist with the American National Academy of Sciences, predicted that the Soviet dairy industry would feel the first impact as cows eat grass and drink water that may have been contaminated by radiation.

Early reports indicated that windborne radioactivity moved northwest away from Chernobyl, over the four republics which account for 12.6 percent of the Soviet Union's output, on its way to Poland and Scandinavia. Farmers in Poland were already warned to shelter their cows in barns to avoid exposure.

Benbrook also suggested that contamination of agricultural lands northwest of the crippled power plant might be so serous that cultivation would be impossible, because cultivation stirs dust that could cause additional problems.

In addition, a University of Missouri economist, Elizabeth Claqton, noted that in the large areas south of Kiev, water could be another source of radiation and animals eating the feed produced in those areas would also pose a major concern.

MOSCOW MAY DAY MESSAGE FOCUSES ON ECONOMICS

OW100635 Beijing XINHUA in English 1445 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Moscow, May 1 (XINHUA) — Moscow's annual May Day parade in Red Square was marked by a call from the Soviet leadership for faster economic growth. The dominant slogans, carried by tens of thousands of workers in the two-hour procession through Red Square, were: "The Social-Economic Sphere Should be Developed at an Accelerated Rate" and "Progress in Science and Technology is the Call of Time."

At the same time, many of the placards carried through the square accused the United States of a policy of "state terrorism" and called for a ban on space weapons.

Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev and other senior party and state officials took the salute at the traditional May Day parade.

All Moscow-based Politburo members were on hand for the parade, including 76-year-old President Andrey Gromyko, who was reported to have been hospitalized briefly in April.

One hundred years ago today, on May 1, 1886, American workers marched in the streets of Chicago with red banners to defend their rights. The day was later declared International Labor Day by the socialist international.

ASIAN DEVELOPMENT BANK MEETS IN PHILIPPINES

PRC Admission

[all quotations marks as received]

[Text] Manila, April 29 (XINHUA) -- President of the Asian Development Bank (ADB) Masao Fujioka said here today that with the entry of the People's Republic of China into the ADB on March 10, 1986, close relationship between the ADB and China will be established. In an exclusive interview with XINHUA, Fujioka said he was very glad that China had finally become a member of the ADB. "I expect very close relations between the bank and China," the 62-year-old ADB president said at his office in the ADB headquarters here just before the 19th annual meeting of the Board of Governors of the ADB due to open tomorrow.

"All participants at the meeting will welcome the Chinese delegation and congratulate China on its admission into the ADB," Fujioka added.

Aside from the Board of Governors, the highest policy-making body of the 47-member ADB, the meeting is expected to be attended by about 1,000 bankers and officials as well as representatives from other international organizations and aid agencies.

Fujioka noted that China likes to join ADB because it wants to participate in the regional efforts of the economic development in Asia, and that he would discuss what role China will play in this field with the Chinese representatives. He also said he would like to discuss with China the loans the ADB will possibly provide to the country in her drive for modernization. "The ADB is happy to cooperate with China," he said.

On his coming visit to China scheduled for May, Fujioka said the main purpose of the visit "is to establish good relations with China." Adding "It is a good occasion to discuss cooperative relationship between China and the ADB." Commenting on reports that Taipei, China, refused to attend the coming annual meeting, Fujioka said Taipei is a member of the ADB and "I wish Taipei will come to Manila to attend the meeting, but it is up to it to decide.

Fujioka, a well-known Japanese economist, assumed the ADB presidency on November 24, 1981. Dwelling on the role the ADB has been playing, the president said that the purpose of the bank is to help the economic development in the Asian-Pacific region, and that the bank has been giving assistance to its 58 members since its founding in 1966.

[Text] Manila, April 30 (XINHUA) -- The 19th annual meeting of the Board of Governors of the Asian Development Bank (ADB) opened at the Philippine International Convention Center here today to review economic problems of the Asia-Pacific region and formulate the ADB's plans for the coming year. Some 1,200 delegates and observers from ADB member countries or regions and international institutions attended the meeting.

A delegation from the People's Republic of China headed by Chen Muhua, state councillor and president of the People's Bank of China, attended the meeting for the first time. The Chinese delegation received a warm welcome and congratulations from delegates of various countries and regions. China became the 47th member of the ADB on March 10 this year.

After the People's Republic of China became an ADB member, the Taiwan authorities remain in the ADB under the designation of Taipei, China. But it did not send its delegation to today's meeting.

The ADB Board of Governors is the highest policy-making body of the 47-member bank, which was established in Manila in 1966 to accelerate economic development in the Asia-Pacific region.

Addressing the opening plenary session of the meeting this morning, Philippine President Corazon Aquino said that the Philippine people now had a renewed faith in their capacity to overcome their massive poverty and other problems Marcos had left them. "We need the confidence of international banking institutions such as the ADB, our trading partner countries, and other entities that can help us revive our economy," she added.

In his speech, Ronnie de Mel, chairman of the Board of Governors of the ADB and governor for Sri Lanka, extended a warm welcome to the delegations from China and Spain, both of whom are new ADB members. "The admission of the People's Republic of China is a long overdue step, which completes the Asian character of the bank and extends its coverage to one of the most important countries in Asia," he stated. He noted the fact that so much of Asia's population remains poor, badly housed and undernourished. He called for collective effort and support to solve the pressing problems of Asia and to set an example to other regions by achieving higher levels of economic growth with equity and social justice for all.

Masao Fujioka, President of the ADB reviewed the major developments in the Bank in recent years. He noted that the ADB is a dynamic financial and development institution which has contributed much to the economic development of the Asia-Pacific region. He said that the ADB would continue providing financial and technical assistance to developing member countries. The three-day meeting will run till May 2.

Welcomes Admission

[Text] Manila, May 1 (XINHUA) - Chen Muhua, state councillor and president of the People's Bank of China, declared here today that the admission of China to the Asian Development Bank (ADB) had further expanded the bank's representativeness and universality in membership. This was an event of great significance both for China and for the Asian and Pacific region as a whole, she said.

Chen Muhua was speaking at the 19th annual meeting of the Board of Governors of the ADB held here this morning. She said that as the sole legitimate representative of China, the People's Republic of China was formally admitted to the membership of the ADB on March 10 this year. This was the result of joint efforts by the bank members and its management. She expressed heartfelt thanks to them for their valuable support to China.

"We regard highly the decision of the ADB on China's admission," Chen said. As a member country of the bank, she added, "we are ready to abide by the agreement establishing the ADB, fulfil the obligations and exercise the rights provided by the agreement. We wish to work together with all other members to enhance the prestige of the bank and promote its objectives."

The Chinese state councillor stated, "Since China's admission to the bank, the bank management has been consulting with its members about the settlement of the question of an additional seat for China on its board of directors, in consideration of China's position in the regional economy and that of the world as a whole. "We expect that through joint efforts by all members of the bank, a satisfactory solution of the question can be worked out at an early date," she said.

She pointed out that China would participate in the activities of the bank in keeping with the principles of equality and mutual benefits, stress on practical results, diversity in form, and attainment of common progress, and would do all it can for the economic growth of the Asian-Pacific region.

Leaders Urge Board Seat

OW301338 Beijing XINHUA in English 1327 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Manila, April 30 (XINHUA) -- Two top leaders of the Asian Development Bank (ADB) spoke of the need to accommodate China in the ADB Executive Board at the opening session of the 19th annual meeting of the Board of the Bank Governors here today. Ronnie de Mel, chairman of the board of ADB governors and governor for Sri Lanka, said, "It is essential that we maintain the truly representative character of the bank. The entry of a country with one billion people should certainly be an adequate reason to consider the enhancement of the size of the board of directors."

Masao Fujioka, president of the ADB, said, "1986 has witnessed a major event in the expanding role and growing importance of the ADB. I refer to the admission of the People's Republic of China to membership in the bank. As the country with the largest area and the largest population in our region, the membership of China greatly enhances the scope, geographical coverage and operational importance of our institution."

"Now, a number of member governments have requested that the size of the board of directors be increased by one, to create a new constituency to accommodate the People's Republic of China without disturbing the existing grouping arrangements." "I hope the governors will give us guidance on this matter," he said.

Members Support New Seat

OW020222 Beijing XINHUA in English 0153 GMT 2 May 86

[Text] Manila, May 1 (XINHUA) -- The majority of the members of the Asian Development Bank (ADB) today supported the creation of an additional seat on the ADB board of directors to accommodate the People's Republic of China (PRC), which was officially admitted to the bank on March 10. At the 19th annual meeting of ADB Board of Governors here, all delegates expressed the view that the admission of China in the bank would make ADB truly representative of the region. They also agreed that China's entry to the regional economic scene would prove highly beneficial for the region's economy as a whole in a number of ways.

Head of the Pakistan delegation Syed Nisar Ali Shah said: "China's entry to the bank has placed it in the mainstream of economic and social development and will also pave the way for it to play a more vital role in helping the developing member countries of the region into an era of sustained growth and prosperity in the years to come."

C. J. Hurford, Australian immigration and ethnic affairs minister, said: "Australia has always given strong support to China's application for bank membership. Now that China is a member, arrangements have to be made for its presence on the board. We would support an increase in the size of the board from 12 to 13 to accommodate China.

Malaysian Finance Minister Daim Bin Zainuddin stated at the session: "There is no greater justification than the entry of an exceptionally large regional country like PRC with a population of one billion. I would therefore like to strongly support the proposal for the creation of an additional set for the region as this is the only way to ensure that the representation of the weaker member countries is not further weakened."

Thierry Moulonguet, head of the French delegation, said: "We consider the People's Republic of China's request to have a full seat on the bank's board of directors perfectly legitimate, and we shall support any arrangement which does not reduce the role and influence of non-regional countries on the board.

Governors from the Philippines, Japan, Singapore, India, Sri Lanka, Thailand, and Vietnam also expressed the same attitude toward the expansion of the size of the board of directors to accommodate China.

Meeting in PRC Suggested

OW010754 Beijing XINHUA in English 0739 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Manila, May 1 (XINHUA) -- China welcomes the Asian Development Bank (ADB) to hold an annual meeting in the country in the near future. This was declared by Chen Muhua, Chinese state councillor and president of the People's Bank of China, in her speech made at the 19th annual meeting of the Board of Governors of the ADB here today.

Chen said that China took a positive approach towards its cooperation with the ADB, it had full confidence that this cooperation would be smooth and fruitful, and it would surely have a bright future. "It is our sincere wish to join in with all members of the ADB to make unremitting efforts for the achievement of economic and financial prosperity of the Asian-Pacific region, and for the maintenance of peace and people's well-being in the region and of the world as a whole," she stated.

Developing Countries' Role Noted

OW010852 Beijing XINHUA in English 0840 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Manila, May 1 (XINHUA) -- Chen Muhua, Chinese state councillor and President of the People's Bank of China, stated here today that the accomplishments of the developing countries in the Asian-Pacific region in their economic development would contribute a great deal to the growth of the world economy.

Addressing the 19th annual meeting of the Board of Governors of the Asian Development Bank (ADB) here this morning, she said that over the past two or three decades, the vast majority of the developing countries in the region have made unremitting efforts and remarkable progress in their economic development. Once a slow-growing region has now become one of the most dynamic and fast-growing regions of the world.

Chen Muhua pointed out that the economic growth of the region's developing countries slowed down in 1985, due to such adverse factors as mounting protectionism, trade barriers, falling prices of the primary products in the international markets, heavy debt burdens, and stagnation of investment. "This situation must be changed," she said. Chen emphasized that the world economy today is more and more interdependent. No countries, not even those highly-developed ones, can afford to isolate themselves from the outside world, and expect to develop all alone without economic contacts and cooperation with other countries.

"Economic growth in the developed world is subject to insurmountabl constraints, if the developing economies remain stagnant," she said. "The increase of economic strength of developing countries is not only in their own interests, but also conducive to the cooperation between developing and developed countries, as well as to the economic prosperity of the world as a whole."

She said that operating in an area with a population of two and a half billion, the ADB plays an important role in the cooperation among its 47 members, involving both cooperation among its developing members and that between its developed and developing members. "The ADB's achievement in the regional cooperation will undoubtedly push forward the global cooperation, and thus make contributions to the vigorous economic development in the region and that of the world as a whole," she said.

Chen on Taipei Representatives

OW010820 Beijing XINHUA in English 0812 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Manila, May 1 (XINHUA) -- Chen Muhua, Chinese state councillor and president of the People's Bank of China, stated here today that Chinese representatives are willing to work together with representatives from Taipei at the Asian Development Bank (ADB). The statement was contained in her speech made at the 19th annual meeting of the Board of Governors of the ADB here this morning.

Chen Muhua said, "Taiwan is an integral part of China. In accordance with an understanding we reached with the bank, Taiwan authorities shall remain in the ADB under the designation of Taipei, China.

"I would like to take this opportunity to state that in line with the understanding, we are willing to work together with the representative from Taipei, China, within the framework of the ADB," she said.

Taiwan Absence From Meeting Noted

OW020848 Beijing XINHUA in English 0834 GMT 2 May 86

[Text] Manila, May 2 (XINHUA) -- Chen Muhua, president of the People's Bank of China said here today "regrettably, representatives of Taipei, China did not attend the present meeting of the Asian Development Bank (ADB)."

At a press conference, Chen said, "We hope that they will be able to come to the next annual meeting of the ADB and join all the other members of the ADB in the discussions on the economic cooperation and development in the Asian-Pacific region." Chen Muhua said that it was the common wishes of the people on the both sides of the Taiwan Straits to increase their contacts and mutual understanding. "We welcome all channels and ways that will facilitate such contacts," she said.

It is our consistent stand to have trade, navigation and communication relations with Taiwan," she said, adding "in the future we are certainly willing to have business cooperation with the representatives of Taipei, China within the framework of the ADB. We have noted that people in the economic and financial circles and the media in Taiwan also entertain hopes for this."

Chen Muhua said, "Taiwan is an integral part of China. When the People's Republic of China was admitted to the ADB as China's sole legitimate representative, the Board of Governors made the unanimous decision that the Taiwan authorities should remain in the ADB under the designation of "Taipei, China"."

PRC Uncertain on Borrowing

HK020648 Hong Kong AFP in English 0604 GMT 2 May 86

[Text] Manila, May 2 (AFP) — China remains undecided on whether to borrow from the Asian Development Bank (ADB) amid continuing problems over its representation, the head of Beijing's delegation to an ADB conference here said Friday. Chen Muhua told a news conference that while China was "willing to introduce foreign resources" to modernize its economy, "we need to make further studies on whether to apply for a loan from the ADB or not." In a separate news conference, ADB president Masao Fujioka said "we still don't know if China wants to borrow from us."

China's admission in March as the latest member of the 47-nation ADB sparked a row when the bank retained Taiwan but amended its name to "Taipei, China" while adopting China's full name, the People's Republic of China. Taiwan, a charter member, boycotted the three-day ADB Board of Governors conference ending Friday, while China made a well-publicized debut in the institution's highest policy-making body.

Mrs Chen, governor of the People's Bank of China, said Beijing regretted Taiwan's absence here, but reiterated her country's stand that Taiwan was "an integral part of China." She said China was not closing the door to future "business cooperation" with Taiwan, adding that she hoped Taiwan would "adopt a cooperative approach" towards her country within the ADB.

The Manila-based ADB was established in 1966 to provide easy loans and technical assistance to its developing member countries (DMC), who now total 29. Eighteen developed countries also belong to the bank as contributors.

CHEN MUHUA COMMENTS ON RELATIONS WITH PHILIPPINES

OW020748 Beijing XINHUA in English 0742 GMT 2 May 86

[Text] Manila, May 2 (XINHUA) -- China attaches great importance to the development of its friendly cooperation and traditional friendship with the Philippines, Chen Muhua, state councillor and president of the People's Bank of China, stated here today. In an interview with XINHUA, Chen said during her meeting with Philippine President Corazon Aquino here on April 30, both sides expressed the desire to further strengthen their friendly and cooperative relations.

"We hope and believe that relations between our two countries will be strengthened. This is not only in the interest of our two peoples, but in the interest of peace and stability in the region," she added. Chen noted that the Aquino Government is now taking reform measures in various fields. "We hope the Philippines will achieve stability and wish the Philippine people every success in the economic recovery," she said.

Chen emphasized that during her stay here she has had extensive contacts with the economic and financial community of the Philippines, which has enhanced the mutual understanding between the two countries.

CPC LEADERS GATHER FOR 1 MAY CELEBRATIONS

Beijing, Shanghai Meetings

OW012358 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1236 GMT 1 May 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 1 May (XINHUA) — Some 100,000 people today held garden parties at the Working People's Palace of Culture and Zhongshan Park in Beijing to mark the centennial of "1 May" International Labor Day, a festival of all the working people of the world.

Present separately at the two garden parties were Ulanhu, Wan Li, Xi Zhongxun, Hu Qili, Fang Yi, Tian Jiyun, Qiao Shi, Yang Shangkun, Yu Qiuli, Yao Yilin, Ni Zhifu, Qin Jiwei, Deng Liqun, Wang Zhaoguo, Liu Lantao, Li Desheng, Huang Zhen, Han Guang, Ngapoi Ngawang Jigme, Seypidin Aizezi, Zhou Gucheng, Yang Jingren, Kang Keqing, Hu Ziang, Qian Chanzhao, Yang Chengwu, Burhan, and Ma Wenrui; and leaders of the Beijing Municipal CPC Committee and Municipal Government Li Ximing, Chen Xitong, Zhao Pengfei, and Jiao Rouyu. Comrade Hoang Van Hoan also attended a garden party.

At the garden parties, Ulanhu, Xi Zhongxun and Tian Jiyun shook hands with and greeted Zhang Binggui, Tao Xiping, and Han Youjin. Zhang Binggui is a national model worker, while Tao Xiping and Han Youjin are special-class model workers of Beijing Municipality. Xi Zhongxun said to Tao Xiping, a middle school teacher for 30 years: "We need talented people like you." Wan Li, Yang Shangkun, Kang Keqing, and Chen Xitong also called on workers and staff members of celebrations at Zhongshan Park and watched a bird-taming demonstration given by the bird-lovers association of Dongcheng District.

A literary and art soiree to mark the centennial of "May Day" was held in Shanghai on the evening of 30 April. Present at the Shanghai soiree were Hu Qiaomu, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee; Chen Pixian, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee and vice chairman of the NPC Standing committee; Song Renqiong, vice chairman of the Advisory Commission of the CPC Central Committee; and Liu Jingji, vice chairman of the CPPCC National Committee.

Hu Yaobang, Others at Rally

OW301630 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1239 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 30 Apr (XINHUA) — Workers and staff in the capital gathered at the Great Hall of the people this afternoon to mark the centenary of May Day. The rally called on workers and staff throughout the country to work with stamina and diligence, be determined to carry out the modernization program, persist in making and promoting reform, and make new contributions to fulfilling the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

Attending the rally were model workers, advanced personages, and representatives of workers and staff in Beijing, as well as trade union delegations from Hong Kong and Macao and foreign countries, members of a delegation from the Australian Communist Party, and French communist scholar (Alan Lu), totalling some 6,000.

Leading comrades seated on the rostrum were Hu Yaobang, Wan Li, Xi Zhongxun, Hu Qili, Fang Yi, Tian Jiyun, Qiao Shi, Wu Xueqian, Yu Qiuli, Ni Zhifu, Wang Zhaoguo, Liu Lantao, Lu Dingyi, Han Guang, Seypidin Aizezi, Rong Yiren, Chu Tunan, Gu Mu, Zhang Aiping, Song Jian, Hong Xuezhi, Yang Jingfen, Kang Keqing, Hu Ziang, Qian Changzhao, Yang Chengwu, Burhan, Miao Yuntai, Fei Xiaotong, Qu Wu, Ma Wenrui, and Mao Yisheng.

At 1500 [0700 GMT], Ni Zhifu, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and president of the all-China federation of Trade Unions, declared the meeting open. All those present rose to sing the national anthem. Admist thunderous applause, Hu Qili, member of the Political Bureau and the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, delivered a lengthy speech, entitled "Historic Mission of the Current Chinese Working Class." On behalf of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, he extended warm regards and festive greetings to workers, peasants, intellectuals, and all working masses of all nationalities in the country, trade union cadres and activists, model workers on all fronts, advanced producers, retired workers and staff, veteran trade union workers, patriotic compatriots in Taiwan, Hong Kong, Macao, and overseas, and trade union delegations from Hong Kong and Macao and foreign countries present at the meeting today.

The rally ended amidst the strains of "internationale."

Hu Qili Speech

[Capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] Beijing, 30 Apr (XINHUA) -- Title: The Historic Mission of the Chinese Working Class in the Present Age -- speech at a meeting commemorating the May Day Centennial by Hu Qili

Comrades and friends: Today, we have gathered at this grand meeting to celebrate the centennial of May Day, a glorious festival of the working class and other working people the world over. On behalf of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, I extend cordial regards and festival greetings to the workers, peasants, intellectuals, and other working people of all natinalities throughout the country; to large numbers of trade union cadres and activists; to model workers and advanced producers on all fronts; to retired workers, staff members, and trade union workers; to patriotic compatriots in Taiwan, Hong Kong, and Macao, as well as those residing abroad; and to the trade union delegations attending this meeting from Hong Kong, Macao, and various foreign countries.

On 1 May a century ago, hundreds of thousands of workers in Chicago and other parts of the United States staged a national general strike to strive for the right of an 8-hour work day. By waging a heroic struggle in close unity, they won a victory of great symbolic significance for the working class. At the meeting for the establishment of the Second International in 1889, 1 May was designated as the common festival for the international working class.

Changes have taken place in the international workers movement over the past century, with one climax following another. The movement went through days of relatively peaceful development as well as days of charging forward and advancing triumphantly. More than once it has won great victories which were significant milestones in human history; however, it has also more than once suffered grave mistakes and setbacks. Nevertheless, the once small trickle of the international proletarian movement, in spite of its difficult and tortuous course, has already become a big, irresistible wave pushing history and society forward, as well as a force not to be ignored in the world political arena.

Under the leadership of the CPC, the Chinese working class, with great aspirations, mounted the political stage in the early 20th century. Uniting with people of various nationalities across the country and carrying forward the spirit of the foolish old man, the working class -- one stepping into the breach as another fell -- finally won the great victory of the new democratic revolution after shedding its blood and making sacrifices for 28 years.

After the founding of New China, members of the working class who stood up and became masters of their own fate enthusiastically threw themselves into construction of the New China. We have built and consolidated the political power of the state under the people's democratic dictatorship led by the working class and based on the alliance of workers and peasants. We have achieved and consolidated the great unity of all nationalities throughout the country and have strengthened and expanded the broadest united front led by the CPC. We have basically realized public ownership of the means of production and the principle of distribution according to work. We have gradually built an independent and fairly complete industrial system and national economic system. And we have also made tremendous achievements in education, science, culture, national defense, foreign affairs, and other fields. In the course of the socialist revolution and construction, members of the working class, along with other people of the country, personally experienced the joy of victory and suffered a lot in the 10 years of domestic turmoil. But practical experiences over the past 30-odd years repeatedly show that the Chinese working class has proved itself to be the long-tested, most advanced revolutionary class and the leading force in the socialist revolution and construction. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, members of the Chinese working class, together with people of various nationalities across the country, have started a new Long March and have been working hard to accomplish their new historic mission.

THIS NEW HISTORIC MISSION IS: UNDER THE CPC LEADERSHIP, THE WORKING CLASS MUST FORGE CLOSE TIES WITH THE VAST NUMBER OF PEASANTS, OTHER LABORERS, AND PATRIOTS, AND THEY WILL PERSIST IN OPENING TO THE OUTSIDE WORLD, UPHOLD REFORM AND WORK HARD TO BUILD CHINA INTO A HIGHLY CIVILIZED AND HIGHLY DEMOCRATIC SOCIALIST MODERN COUNTRY. To achieve this great mission, several generations must work hard persistently and dauntlessly for several decades or even longer. We must eradicate the residual influence of feudalistic ideas that lasted several thousand years in China as well as conventional ideas and habits caused by a longstanding closed-door policy, and persist in opening the country to the outside world. We must also carry out a series of economic, political, cultural, and other reforms around economic construction in accordance with the general requirement of building a Chinese-style socialist society. We must persist in carrying out economic reform in order to build a dynamic, efficient, and effective socialist economic system, develop social productivity, and build a society with material progress. We must persist in carrying out political reform, energetically foster socialist democracy, perfect the socialist legal system, continue to eradicate the influence of residual feudalistic ideas and decadent capitalist ideas in the ideological and political sphere, and combat bueraucratic attitudes so the party and state leadership will become more adaptable to socialist construction. We must also persist in carrying out cultural reform and promote educational, scientific, literary, art, sports, and health work in order to build a society with advanced culture and ideology.

The CPC Central Committee has put forward a tentative 3-step plan for China's socialist construction during the next several decades. The three steps are as follow: First, quadruple 1980's total industrial and agricultural output by the end of this century and become "comparatively well off;" second, reach the level of an intermediately-developed country by around the 10th anniversary of the founding of the CPC: and third, approach the level of an economically developed county and become an advanced and prosperous modern socialist power by around the 10th anniversary of the founding of the country. For a populous, economically weak, and culturally backward big country with uneven development, it is an extremely complex and arduous task to attain this grand objective. After several decades of hard work, we have found a correct way to build a socialist society with distinctive Chinese characteristics.

However, since there was neither a pattern to follow nor mature experiences to emulate in modernizing the country, carrying out reforms, and opening the country to the outside world, we had to carry out unprecedented, difficult explorations alone under the guidance of basic Marxist principles. Transforming our closed or semiclosed economy into an open economy that makes active use of international exchange, replacing our rigid or semirigid economic system with a planned commodity economy based on public ownership, and replacing an old institution with a new one has been an extremely extensive and profound revolution. Until this revolution, never before had our people's concepts, mental state, life-style, and way of thinking been so profoundly influenced. During the process when the old system is being replaced by a new one, we should do everything we can to reduce unnecessary social shock and avoid making any mistakes. We must fully realize the complexity and arduousness of reform and be fully prepared for it mentally. It is the earnest aspiration of the nation's 1 billion people to do away with poverty and backwardness and achieve prosperity and modernization. The vast number of the nation's workers must thoroughly realize their historical responsibilities, throw themselves into the torrents of reform and four modernizations, and make even more heroic contributions. When our children ask what we have accomplished during the 1980's we can proudly tell them that we were determined to carry out reforms and build a strong China during the 1980's, and since that time China has been on its way to rejuvenation.

To accomplish their new historic mission and give full scope to their role in socialist material and spiritual construction, all workers must transform their subjective world while transforming the objective world. We must follow the instruction of the party Central Committee and Comrade Deng Xiaoping and take the initiative in tempering ourselves into ethical, educated, and disciplined socialist laborers with lofty ideals. To this end, we must work hard in various ways now and in the future:

ALL WORKERS MUST STUDY MARXISM IN LIGHT OF THE NEW HISTORICAL CONDITIONS, HEIGHTEN THEIR POLITICAL AWARENESS, AND FIRMLY CARRY OUT THE BASIC PRINCIPLE OF OPENING TO THE OUTSIDE WORLD AND ENLIVENING THE DOMESTIC ECONOMY. Marxism has never been a rigid dogma. It has always been a guide to action, providing us the correct stand, viewpoint and methods for analyzing and solving problems. While social practices are developing, Marxism must also develop along with their development. While we must uphold the basic Marxist tenets under new historical conditions, we must have the courage to break through the few conclusions that experience has already proven to be outmoded or not entirely correct. Only by doing this can we uphold and develop Marxism and expedite the dynamic development of the socialist cause. Concerning attitudes toward Marxism, while we must neither be skeptical about the basic Marxist theories nor wager in our stand toward them, we must also oppose mental ossification and avoid regarding Marxism as a dogma that never changes.

To accelerate the demise of the old system and the gradual establishment of a new system in the course of the current economic reform, we must work constantly to eliminate all outmoded ideas and old habits that cannot keep pace with the development of productivity, we must foster new concepts compatible with socialist modernization, and we must open a new spiritual realm. We must clearly realize that full-scale development of the commodity economy is a stage that cannot be sidestepped in socialist economic development and it is an essential factor for achieving China's economic modernization. While we must guard against the invasion of decadent capitalist ideas in carrying out reforms and in opening to the outside world, we must not underestimate the negative influence of residual feudalistic ideas, a small production mentality, and outmoded traditions and habits on our modernization cause.

Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out as early as 1980 that "We must now clearly set forth the task of continuing to eradicate the residual influence of feudalism in the ideological and political areas, and we must carry out a series of effective institutional reforms; otherwise the state and people will continue to sustain losses." We must clearly understand this issue and give ample attention to it.

Our work during the last 7 years or so after the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee is ample proof that the party Central Committee's strategic policy concerning reform and opening to the outside world is an entirely correct Marxist policy. Not only have reform and the policy of opening to the outside world ensured continuous, coordinated, and steady national economic development, but they have also brought about positive changes in the people's thinking, mental state, and way of living, and have powerfully rebuffed all residual feudalistic ideas, small production mentality, and ignorant and conservative traditions and habits that have a close bearing on our underdeveloped commodity economy.

As reform goes on and the nation continues to open to the outside world, our workers, peasants, and intellectuals have also emancipated their minds, broadened their vision, and become more aware of the need to exert all-out efforts to catch up. The enthusiasm and creativity of people living in cities and developed coastal areas, as well as people living in remote inland areas and the countryside, has been liberated on an unprecedented scale. Although there are still problems have and there, as well as some negative factors in the road ahead, our society is, on the whole, experiencing tremendous historic progress.

Dialectic materialism tells us: We may not necessarily understand at once what we perceive. We can only distinctly perceive what we understand. Only by earnestly studying the basic Marxist theories as well as the party's line, principles and policies, will China's broad masses of workers and staff members who are undergoing a tremendous change fully understand the great significance of the on-going change in China, and realize the historic responsibilities on their own shoulders so as to consciously and firmly stand on the forefront in carrying out reforms. By significantly raising their political awareness, the more than 100 million workers and staff members will be able to ensure the speedy fulfillment of the policy of carrying out reforms and opening our country to the outside world and lay a solid social and ideological foundation in ensuring the continuity of our policies.

Over the past few years, the workers and staff members have attended political seminars on a rotational basis, carried out reading activities and broadened their education on current events and policies, attaining excellent results. They should carry on this practice and continuously improve themselves. In carrying out ideological and political education of all types among the workers and staff members, we must pay attention to actual results and oppose formalism. We must resolutely help the broad masses of workers and staff members raise their awareness and strengthen their resolve in implementing the four basic principles and the policy of carrying out reforms and opening the country to the outside world. It is our firm belief that more and more workers and staff members — who have emancipated their thoughts, sought truth from facts, displayed a pioneering spirit, created new realities and remained honest at all times in performing their official duties — will become pioneers in performing reform work.

THE BROAD MASSES MUST DO THEIR OWN JOBS WELL WITH THE SENSE OF BEING THE MASTERS OF THEIR OWN AFFAIRS AND WARM ENTHUSIASM FOR CONSTRUCTION, AND CONTRIBUTE TO FULFILLING THE "SEVENTH 5-YEAR PLAN" AND REALIZE THE FOUR MODERNIZATION PROGRAM.

So far as the Chinese people are concerned, we must forever carry forward and give full play to the vigorous revolutionary spirit. In times of peaceful construction, this kind of revolutionary spirit has been transformed into warm enthusiasm in construction and strennous efforts in studying and working hard. To strive to fulfill the Seventh 5-Year Plan for national economic and social development is of great significance in helping us achieve our goal in developing our economy in "three major steps" from the 1980's of this century to the middle of the next century. The broad masses of workers and staff members must enhance revolutionary vigor, and strive to do a better job in fulfilling the "Seventh 5-Year Plan" as compared with what we did in the fulfillment of the "Sixth 5-Year Plan."

During the "Seventh 5-year Plan", we must give top priority to reform. The new situation in carrying out overall reform has imposed new stringent demands on the workers and staff members in all fields of endeavor. The existence and development of an enterprise and the increase of the material benefits of the workers and staff members will depend to a large extent on the enterprise's own management level and the way it runs its business. Therefore, the workers and staff members must actively participate in administering democratic management and suggest says and means for carrying out reforms. They must enthusiastically participate in various activities to offer rational proposals and promote technical innovations. They must try to improve production quality, put an end to waste, reduce production costs and improve economic efficiency. At the same time, they must turn out more varied and interesting low-priced and readily marketable commodities for the society and offer excellent services. Workers in the fields of education, science and technology, public health, culture and sports must actively carry out reforms, develop the four modernizations program, and make their own contributions to fulfilling the "Seventh 5-Year Plan," improving the qualities of the whole nation, and enriching the material and cultural life of the broad masses of people. Whoever does better in this regard will win even greater respect of the party, government and people. At today's meeting, we would like to commend the second group of winners for the "1 May" medals for outstanding workers. On behalf of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, I wish to extend my heartfelt respects to you and to all the model and advanced workers in the whole country.

THE BROAD MASSES OF WORKERS AND STAFF MEMBERS MUST VIGOROUSLY STRENGTHEN THEIR SENSE FOR ORGANIZATION AND DISCIPLINE, TAKE THE LEAD IN OBSERVING LAW AND DISCIPLINE, STRENGTHEN THEIR DEMOCRATIC SUPERVISION AND BRING ABOUT A FUNDAMENTAL CHANGE FOR THE BETTER IN PARTY STYLE AND SOCIAL ETHICS. A high level of socialist legal system are major signs of our nation's success in promoting its modernization program. They also constitute the fundamental guarantee to implementing China's policy of invigorating its domestic economy. The masses of workers and staff members must actively participate in various activities to exercise socialist democracy and strengthen the legal system with their own actual deeds.

A current problem is that some people, including some leading cadres, still do not have an adequate understanding of the importance of democracy and the legal system. We should continually pursue propaganda and education efforts concerning the legal system among the people in an effort to make every citizen realize that our law is an effective measure for safeguarding national security and unity and for protecting the legitimate rights of the people and to make everyone behave within the bounds of the law self-consciously. At the same time, continuing efforts should be made to draw up and improve on the various laws in accordance with the lawmaking procedure.

With the exemplary conduct of the workers in observing discipline and the law, coupled with the people's support and endeavors in other respects, we can certainly minimize the various negative phenomena that inevitably appear in the course of carrying out reform, opening to the outside world, and enlivening the domestic economy, thereby further consolidating and enhancing the stable and united political situation and upgrading the spiritual civilization of the whole society to a new level.

Under the Chinese Constitution, PRC citizens have the right to file a petition, complaint, or report with relevant state organs concerning the illegitimate or derelict acts of any state organ or functionary, provided that the case is not fabricated and the charge is not framed up by distorting the facts. The broad masses of workers should take the lead in exercising these sacred rights bestowed on us by the Constitution and step up democratic supervision. At present, the workers should pay heed to and help with the work of rectifying party style and tightening political discipline as part of an active drive to correct party style and stop unhealthy tendencies. It is necessary to harshly combat such criminal activities as serious cases of bribery, profiteering, swindling, smuggling, and tax evasion, in accordance with the law. Efforts should be made to relentlessly crack down on such bureaucratic acts as seeking private gains through the abuse of power and serious cases of dereliction of duty that have led to immense economic and political losses. All men are equal before the law, and no privileged citizens or party members, who are unrestrained by the law, should be allowed.

With the massive rejuvenation of the Chinese workforce in recent years, it is necessary to intensify worker education, improve the workers' political and professional qualities, promote vocational ethics, perfect business management, reinforce rules and regulations, and tighten up organizational discipline. It is essential to overcome the incorrect view of setting the workers' status of being masters of their own affairs against their subordination to the management in mass production, and to vigorously consolidate labor and work discipline. Young workers should accept rigorous training for social production and transform themselves into a new crop of workers who have the strictest discipline and meet the requirements of modernization and mass production.

WORKERS SHOULD DILIGENTLY STUDY AND MASTER MODERN SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNOLOGICAL KNOW-HOW AND ADVANCED MANAGEMENT EXPERTISE, AND CONSTANTLY IMPROVE THEIR ABILITY TO UNDERSTAND AND TRANSFORM THE WORLD.

With the rapid development of the new technological revolution in the world and the penetration of science and technology into all areas of production and living with each passing day, both management and labor are confronted with increasingly higher demands for modernization and mass production. Workers with a sound knowledge of modern science and technology, intellectuals, and experts, are fast becoming a very active and a determining factor in the new social productive forces. An encouraging fervor for learning science and technology and acquiring general knowledge has gripped the Chinese workforce in recent years. Many young workers have surmounted difficulties and complete middle and high school courses through sheer perseverance. Many middle-aged and young workers have seriously undertaken technological and vocational training. More and more people are attending technical colleges, vocational schools, evening universities, correspondence schools, and other sparetime institutions of higher learning. Consequently, a large number of people have emerged as talented personnel through self-study, and worker inventions have never been scarce. The hot pursuit of science, technology, and general knowledge by the broad masses of workers is a tremendous achievement in China's efforts to build a spiritual civilization, and has given a strong impetus to the material civilization.

The current scientific knowledge, educational background, and managerial skills of Chinese workers are still inadequate for the historic missions they have undertaken. Therefore, it is necessary to keep on studying. Workers and cadres should take the needs of their jobs into account and acquire schooling, scientific and technological knowledge, and managerial skills in a planned manner. With China's actual situation in mind, they should fully exploit the advantages afforded by the open policy; conscientiously study and digest the advanced scientific and technological knowledge of other countries in the world, including capitalist developed countries, as well as the advanced managerial skills reflective of the pattern of socialist mass production; and apply these knowledge and skills to China's socialist modernization.

IT IS NECESSARY TO STRENGTHEN THE UNITY OF THE CHINESE WORKERS, PEASANTS, INTELLECTUALS, LABORERS, AND PATRIOTS.

Under socialist conditions, there still exists a difference between physical laborers and mental laborers among the working class. However, such a difference does not in the least impair the close unity established on the basis of equal rights between these two types of laborers. Thanks to efforts in recent years, the relations between physical laborers and mental laborers and between workers and intellectuals have greatly improved. More and more workers and peasants have now come to realize that the prosperity of the nation, the development of enterprises, and the improvement of the material and cultural life are inseparable from the wisdom of intellectuals. Likewise, more and more intellectuals have come to realize that contributions to the four modernizations are inseparable from the efforts of workers and peasants as well as the rich experiences of society. Therefore, workers, peasants, and intellectuals should become united in launching common efforts and should forge and expand a new type of relationship characterized by mutual respect, emulation, and assistance. It is necessary to encourage and help intellectuals, including natural scientists, social scientists, cultural workers, and party and government cadres, to go down to the grass roots in order to improve their mutual understanding and emulation with workers and peasants, and achieve better results in all the tasks through concerted efforts.

Encouraging respect for knowledge and intellectuals does not mean that physical labor can be despised and belittled. Physical laborers still account for the majority of China's workforce today. Physical laborers in all fields, especially those engaged in heavy and strenuous work, should enjoy the full respect of society because they have rendered valuable contributions to building the material and spiritual civilizations through hard work. It should be noted that there are experienced skilled technicians and craftsmen in all fields. Their roles should be fully developed and their ranks should be enlarged because they are the treasurehouse of the country, the backbone on the frontline of production, and the pioneers in boosting product quality and competitiveness.

The tremendous success of China's rural reform has promoted the coordinated, stable, and sustained development of the overall national economy, and has offered a useful experience for carrying out urban reform. Further development of rural reform and the upsurge in rural construction are now in increasing need of wide-ranging support and assistance from urban workers.

The broad masses of urban workers, especially those at state-run large and medium-sized enterprises, science research institutes, and colleges and universities, should provide their peasant brothers with all forms of services with a profound sense of political responsibility in order to satisfy the ever-increasing needs of the 800 million peasants for manufactured goods, scientific and technological knowledge, literary and artistic pursuits, education, and public health services, thereby ushering in a new stage in the worker-peasant relationship.

Having developed into a political alliance made up party of socialist workers and partly of socialist-minded patriots, the various democratic parties in China have made invaluable contributions to socialist construction. Compatriots from Taiwan, Hong Kong, and Macao, as well as Overseas Chinese are aligned with their motherland, and their wish for the reunification and prosperity of their motherland has become increasingly stronger. They have played an active role in the cause of reunification and in helping with the four modernizations. We should further strengthen our ties with them, consolidate their unity, and launch a joint struggle with them for the reunification, prosperity, and strength of our motherland. The grand unity of the various nationalities in China, as well as that of workers, peasants, intellectuals, democratic partisans, people with no party affiliation, patriots who hope their motherland will be reunified and become prosperous and powerful, and all the Chinese people at home and abroad, is the fundamental guarantee for continuing successes in our work.

The All-China Federation of Trade Unions is a major social and political organization of China's working class. It is an important link between the CPC and the masses of its own class, a major pillar for exercising people's democratic dictatorship, and a powerful backing to the governments at all levels and the administrative departments of various enterprises. Right now, the trade union organizations at all levels are shouldering heavy responsibilities in uniting with and leading the broad masses of workers and staff members in carrying out the entire economic structural reform with emphasis on the cities. The various party and government organizations must attach great importance to the role of the trade unions and vigorously support trade unions in carrying out their work. The trade unions at all levels must help trade union cadres improve their qualities and work methods, maintain close ties with the broad masses of workers and staff members, particularly the young ones, become their intimate friends, and carefully listen to and reflect their views, requirements and voices. The trade unions at all levels must help the leadership at all levels to solve the workers' actual problems -- problems that must be and can be solved in production and in livelihood -- and to protect the workers' legitimate rights and interests. The trade unons must guide the workers to correctly exercise their own democratic power, actively take part in managing political and social affairs of the state, and continuously combat the various erroneous ideas and wrongdoings in their own ranks. The trade unions must help the government and the enterprises to systematically improve the facilities for culture, sports, convalescence and public health for the well-being of the workers and staff members. We must turn trade unions into "homes for workers and staff members" trusted by the workers and staff members.

Comrades and friends: To safeguard world peace and promote social development represents a strong desire of the peoples of various countries. The relatively stable international situation after World War II has provided many countries with a good opportunity to develop themselves. Although the shadow of a world war still exists, the possibility to prevent and stop a war has become greater in each passing year. The peoples in various countries have fully realized that only by living in a peaceful environment will it be possible to carry out economic and cultural developments normally, and build material civilization and spiritual civilization of a higher level.

A world war can be avoided and world peace and development can be safeguarded as long as all the people and nations in the world that cherish peace unite as one, oppose the arms race, overcome the danger of war, and expand the forces for peace. The UNGA last year unanimously adopted a proposal for an international year for peace. This has reflected the determination of all the peoples in the world including the Chinese people in strengthening unity and safeguarding peace. The Chinese people need a peaceful international environment in order to fulfill their new historic mission. They need not only peace in the last 15 years of this century, but also a lasting peace in the next century. We must cherish the peaceful environment, strive to promote our economic construction, and work hard to make a still greater contribution to safeguarding world peace and development.

The Chinese people adhere to an independent foreign policy, oppose hegemonism and are safeguarding world peace. We unswervingly side with the Third World, continuously strengthen unity and cooperation with the Third World countries, and strive to establish or expand normal relations with all countries in the world and engage in friendly cooperation with them on the basis of the five principles for peaceful coexistence. We oppose interference and aggression against any country, advocate the settlement of international disputes through peaceful means, and are against the use of force. In order to relax the tense situation and avert regional clashes, we should strictly adhere to the principle of treating all countries, big or small, on an equal basis, with regard to international relations. No country is allowed to interfere in the internal affairs or encroach upon the sovereignty of another country in any form. We must further strengthen unity with the working class and trade union organizations and all peace-loving forces in various nations throughout the world.

All the peoples in the world unite! Wage unremitting struggles and achieve new and great victories in safeguarding world peace and working hard for an even more beautiful tomorrow!

Li Xiannian in Tianjin

OW301621 Beijing XINHUA in English 1618 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Tianjin, April 30 (XINHUA) -- Chinese President Li Xiannian today said thanks to a group of Tianjin model workers for their contribution to China's modernization before a soiree marking the 1986 labor day.

Among them were industrial workers, engineers, business managers, medical workers, teachers, as well as self-employed people in this major industrial and port city in north China.

Present at the meeting and soiree were two other leaders, Hao Jianxiu and Lu Zhengcao. Hao, member of the Secretariat of the party Central Committee, attended a mass rally celebrating May Day's centenary.

Hao Jianxiu Visits Tianjin Workers

OW020504 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1510 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Tianjin, 1 May (XINHUA) -- While inspecting Tianjin, Hao Jianxiu, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, visited sanitation worker Liu Dugang and retired barber Peng Yixiang at their homes this morning to greet them on the occasion of May Day.

Hao Jianxiu first went to a dormitory for Hebei area sanitation workers to visit Liu Dugang, a Tianjin Municipal model worker who lives there. Liu Dugang has been a sanitation worker for 35 years. Hao Jianxiu said to Liu Dugang: "Sanitation workers, who have put in a lot of hard work for the sake of people's health and the creation of a clean social environment and have made contributions to the building of a spiritual civilization, should receive respect from all strata of society." She inquired about the working conditions and labor insurance situation of sanitation workers. When she learned that Tianjin Municipality has built showers, cafeterias, and lounges for workers, with satisfaction she said: "The work of sanitation workers is dirty and tiring; therefore, we should provide them with nice clean working conditions and a good living environment." In addition, she called on the relevant departments of Tianjin Municipality to constantly pay attention to the workers' marriage and family problems, especially to helping young workers find marriage partners.

When Comrade Hao Jianxiu entered the spacious, new three-room house of Peng Yixiang, a retired barber and national model worker, Peng and his wife were very happy. Hao Jianxiu said to Peng Yixiang: "Although you are retired, you have still preserved an old worker's true spirit by turning down offers of high wages and voluntarily cutting hair for elderly and disabled patients and children in child care centers. You deserve a commendation." She urged more people to learn from Peng Yixiang and said that young people should take Peng Yixiang as an example. Hao Jianxiu also suggested that retired workers pay attention to physical exercise, sum up their work experience, teach young workers revolutionary traditions and skills, and care about the growth of the younger generation.

Chen Yun in Zhejiang

[By reporter Wu Keqiang]

[Text] Hangzhou, 1 May (XINHUA) -- Chen Yun, member of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau and first secretary of the Discipline Inspection Commission of the CPC Central Committee, attended a get-together in Hangzhou City this morning. The get-together was held by Zhejiang Province and Hangzhou City to mark the centenial of "May Day."

Also present at the meeting were Jiang Hua, member of the Standing Committee of the Central Advisory Commission; Wang Fang, secretary of the Zhejiang Provincial CPC Committee; and Xue Ju, governor of Zhejiang Province.

After the get-together, Comrade Chen Yun met with two special-class model workers of Zhejiang Province. They were Lu Guanqiu, a peasant enterpreneur called "a person walking from the field to the outside world"; and Guo Rongqing, a textile mill worker. Comrade Chen Yun praised them for their revolutionary spirit in working hard for the four modernizations. Comrade Chen Yun also joined the cadres, model workers, and literary and art workers at the get-together for a group photograph to mark the occasion.

HU YAOBANG ON RELATIONS BETWEEN PARTY, OTHERS

HK011038 Beijing WEN ZHAI BAO in Chinese No 306, 24 Apr 86 p 1

[Report: "Bring Closer Relations Between the Party and Friends Outside the Party -- Two Newly-Published Comments by Hu Yaobang -- Originally Publixhed in the 'Selected Documents on the United Front Work in the New Period' published by the United Front Department of the CPC Central Committee, the Department for Research of Party Literature of the CPC Central Committee, the Department for Research of Party Literature of the CPC Central Committee, and the Publishing House of the CPC Central Party School"

[Text] In my opinion, we should strictly supervise and inspect the implementation of policies and not leave problems that should be resolved unresolved. We should avoid being fooled by false information given by people at the lower levels. In handling specific cases, we should avoid quibbling over side issues and not think that people for whom our policies should be implemented will gain some extra advantages. In fact, they have been wronged and endured suffering for many years. How are there any extra advantages for them to gain? More often than not, the problem now is that some comrades who have not suffered in the past and still have "leftist" ideas would prevent the implementation of policies. This warrants our attention and earnest correction. (Comments written on an appealing letter on 22 April 1984)

It is very common that some comrades in our party ride roughshod over our friends outside the party or act like an overlord among them. If their malpractices are discovered by the higher auchorities, they get things over by making an apology. If not, the people concerned must endure without protest. What should be done in the days to come? If we rely on the higher authorities to discover these malpractices, it would mean that we are still practicing rule by man and not rule by law. It is advisable to encourage our friends outside the party to appeal to law in dealing with these people. (Comments written on a report submitted by the Central United Front Work Department on 11 January 1985)

GU MU STATEMENTS ON OPEN POLICY VIEWED

OW301128 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English 28 Apr 86 p 6

[By Yang Xiaobing]

[Text] The import licence system recently introduced in China will pose no difficulty for joint ventures with Chinese and foreign capital, State Councillor Gu Mu told the BEIJING REVIEW at a press conference attended by more than 100 Chinese and foreign reporters in Beijing on April 10.

The Chinese Government, he said, would provide every convenience for foreign investors and simplify the red tape involved in processing applications for import licenses. Permission will be given to imports prescribed in contracts already signed, he added.

The state councillor, who had postponed the press conference because of poor health, had just been discharged from the hospital and appeared a bit tired. But his confidence in the country's open policy soon got the best of it, and he talked through the conference in high spirits.

The year just gone by was a vintage year for China in drumming up foreign capital needed for the modernization drive, he said. All told, direct foreign investment in China amounted to US $5.85 billion, 120 percent more than in the previous year; and approval was given to 1,300 joint ventures with Chinese and foreign capital, equivalent to the total approved in the previous five years altogether.

But joint ventures already established in China are far from enough, Gu said. He told the reporters that the Chinese Government would do everything it could to help joint ventures overcome whatever difficulties they encountered.

Over the last six years, China gradually has set up an extroverted economic structure encompassing special economic zones, open port cities, coastal economic open zones and enterprises in its interior, pumping new life into the country's economy.

Shenzhen, the first special economic zone established in China, now has 147 industrial enterprises that manufacture export commodities. Last year the zone exported nearly twice as many industrial commodities as it did in 1984, with the percentage of exports in the zone's total sales volume rising from 33 to 43.

Referring to the Foreign Exchange Certificates currently in circulation in China, the state councillor said that China, noticing the many drawbacks to the two-currency system, would work to abolish it. Gu was quick to add, however, that the abolition would not guarantee the renminbi's immediate status as a currency free for exchange with foreign currencies. In Shenzhen, he said, three currencies were now in circulation -- the renminbi, Foreign Exchange Certificate and the Hong Kong dollar. This has proved detrimental to China's economy and will be dealt with as soon as possible.

Foreign Exchange Certificates, with a face value equivalent to that of the renminbi, are issued in limited quarters in return for foreign currencies collected.

Some reporters asked if China was disappointed that its major trade partner, Japan, had invested little in special economic zones and elsewhere in China. Gu said it was not a matter of disappointment because it was always up to the investors to decide whether to invest. He noted, however, that Japanese investment in China did show a slight upturn last year.

Responding to complaints on the part of some foreign businessmen that land use costs in the special economic zones and other open areas were too high, Gu said he deemed the charges rational, but he said China has been reassessing the issue.

ZHAO ZIYANG ON ECONOMIC REFORM AT HUBEI MEETING

OW010920 Beijing XINHUA in English 0911 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Wuhan, May 1 (XINHUA) -- The success of the present economic reforms depends on the participation and support of the people throughout the country, said Premier Zhao Ziyang.

He told a meeting of model workers and representatives of teachers and technicians in Yichang City, Hubei Province, the premier said the successful execution of the Six Five-Year Plan from 1981 to 1985 mainly depended on economic reforms and so will the execution of the next five-year plan. The success or failure of the new five-year plan will have a long-term bearing on future economic development in China, he said. And the success of the economic reforms depends on the support of the people. He hoped that people of all nationalities, especially the working class should take an active part in the economic reforms, which will make the economy flourishing and the workers, peasants and intellectuals and all other people in the country more prosperous.

Economic reforms are complicated, said the premier. And there will be many difficulties and we are ready to cope with and overcome them.

Vice-Premier Li Peng, and Wang Renzhong, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, attended the meeting yesterday.

They inspected mountain areas on the borders of Sichuan and Hubei Provinces.

SHANGHAI: RUI XINGWEN WRITES ON GOOD LITERARY WORKS

OW290600 Shanghai WEN HUI BAO in Chinese 24 Apr 86 p 1, 4

[Rui Xingwen article: "Create Good Literary and Art Works for the People"]

[Text] When I recently participated in a number of play-writing meetings and forums organized by comrades of the liberary and art circle, I watched the following plays: "To Find a Man" and "Sons and Daughters" by the Shanghai People's Art Theater; "March of a Fool" by the Youth Modern Drama troupe; and "A Color Question Mark" by the Luwan Ward Palace of Culture. The participants' speeches at these meetings and forums and those plays strongly reflected the profound feeling for the party of the writers, screenwriters, directors, and performers. They have expressed their full support for the party's line and principles adopted since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and for the current reform to restructure the economy and other reforms being undertaken throughout the country. That is why our literary and art contingent has gained the trust, support, and love of the party and people.

Shanghai's theatrical circles have been thriving recently. Theatrical workers have worked very hard to select more than 50 plays for the Shanghai theatrical festival where good plays were chosen through public appraisal. Theatrical workers have displayed their enthusiasm for writing plays as they are determined to advance the quality of this work. This kind of desire for better works is very valuable because once we have the desire to advance and are unhappy with the status quo, our literature and art are given the condition to develop and thrive. If the correct orientation for literary and art creation is further explicitly defined, there is no doubt that the literary and art creation situation in Shanghai will further improve, and outstanding works will certainly increase.

My general impressions after seeing the plays are that they represented the spirit of the times and embodied the tempo of life in our contemporary era. Moreover, these few plays also reflected real life, -- life and struggle of the people in their drive for socialist modernization. It should be said that these few plays have, at varying degrees, played the role of inspiring people and boosting their fighting power. The orientation of these plays is correct, and artistically they are of comparatively better quality. Of course, there are shortcomings. In this regard we have to heed suggestions from all quarters before improving the plays by making some meticulous revisions. It is quite difficult to write a theme that reflects the contemporary world, because we are living in a process of drastic social changes in which life is advancing at a quick tempo and contradictions keep changing and developing. It requires courage to keenly bring to light the problems of reality and to ensure that literary and art works throb with the pulse of our times. Therefore, our artists must have a profound understanding of real life and, still more, a strong sense of duty to society. At the same time, it is unreasonable to demand our writers and artists understand all problems very comprehensively and correctly and reflect reality in their works accurately and precisely. We should leave room for exploration and innovation and allow literary and art works to go through a process of achieving perfection.

There are bound to be different views and appraisals of some plays, including some of the current literary and art works. This is normal because it reflects the sound activity and contending atmosphere within the literary and art circles. We should carry out more scientific, equal, and reasonable discussions of literature and art and thoroughly explore all kinds of literary and art problems by applying the basic viewpoint of Marxism. We should refrain from hastily and simplistically reaching any conclusion. Comrade Xiaoping has said that the ideological and artistic success of a literary and art work should be determined by the people.

In appraising the ideological contents of a literary or art work, I think that we should first look at its main theme. Politically, we should judge whether it is in conformity with the party's line, principles, and policies laid down since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. "To Find a Man" sings the praises of pioneering youth of our times. It lashes those young people who lack manhood and moral integrity, worship foreign things, and fawn on foreign powers. I think that in our society there are indeed some persons who are conservative and cowardly and do not dare to carry out reform in accordance with the party's principles and policies and in consideration of their own particular situation. Gazing around with misgivings, they always want to find a safe haven and avoid any risks. If all the people in our society are like them and we support them, can we carry on the reforms and the four modernizations? Isn't it nice to have a drama which lashes this kind of person?

There is another kind of person who thinks that "everything Western is good." In fact, they do not know Western countries at all. Under the pretext of opening to the outside world, they blindly appreciate decadent Western things. This kind of person should also be lashed, because they are distorting the policy of opening to the outside world, not implementing it.

In this drama, there is a technical section chief who is very representative of being worldly wise and playing safe. We can see that the writer wants to portray Jiang Yi, the plant director, as the image of a genuine pioneer. However, the character seems to be somewhat weak and lacks machismo.

"March of a Fool" has a major basis with the development of a diversified economy under the precondition of the system of public ownership continuing to occupy an absolutely dominant position after the 3d Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, some "foolish individuals" emerge as the times require; this individual sector of the economy plays to a certain extent a positive complementary role in our economic development. I think the image of the fool in the drama is very lively. Some of these people, wanting to stimulate the economy, improve operation, and become well-to-do, are very slippery and are erroneous in their thoughts and work style. Nevertheless, they will not become bourgeois, because their operations and activities are still within the framework of a dominantly socialist economy. They will end up linked to the wheels of state-owned or collectively-owned enterprises, just as the drama shows.

As long as the people's democratic political power is under the leadership of the communist party and in the hands of the proletariat, we will be able to fundamentally guarantee the socialist nature and prevent polarization and a capitalist road. This is precisely the socialism with Chinese characteristics on the basis of the four basic principles. This drama proves this truth to a certain extent. Its plot is also quite interesting. However, we still should seriously study how to further portray the fool's son in the drama.

I was deeply moved by "Sons and Daughters," because it is about us. It portrays the image of a group of cadres' sons and daughters who have courage, are upright, and are people of typical significance of our times. Some of them have impressively lofty ideals, and a few of them have made mistakes. Such a plot is realistic, not generalized. The portrayal of old cadres is reasonable and appropriate. The theme of "A Color Question Mark" is also good.

Artistic images on the stage should be very rich and colorful, just as the life of our society is in the course of reform and advance. For instance, the veterans in the film "Our veterans" are the image of communists with political consciousness and lofty thinking. We need such an artistic image of positive characters. We also need to portray the image of such people as the fool. All kinds of characters and themes can show and prove that our socialist system is good and that the reform and opening to the outside world is an irreversible historical trend. For the same reason, the style of creation and the methods of expression should also be diversified. As long as we keep to a correct orientation, we should boldly create all kinds of art works. As people have all kinds of demands for art, the more nourishment for the mind the artists can provide them, the better.

During Shanghai's recent third theatrical festival, a Zhejiang opera troupe performed a play adapted from a theatrical work by Shakespeare. This shows we have expanded our field of literary creation and increased the variety in our theatrical performances. It will be very good if we hold a festival for Shakespeare's theatrical works, for we can therefore draw on the experience of treasured foreign art to enrich ourselves. Publishing or performing some literary or theatrical works, even though they may have little social significance, should be allowed only if they have healthy contents and entertain the masses. We should persist in treating different literary works differently; some should be promoted, publishing of some should be allowed, and some others should be restricted. The policy on literature and art should remain stable for a long time to come, so that writers and artists can engage in creation with tranquil minds. If one has a lingering fear, how can one create good works?

Literature and art reflect reality, unite and educate people, and enhance their morale; literature and art play an important role, and there is no substitute for them. In the revolutionary war years, all field armies had song and dance or modern drama troupes. A good play or film can have a tremendous influence on people. It is gratifying that theatrical workers in Shanghai are determined to promote the theater so that it will become an important means to push our undertakings forward. All kinds of art in Shanghai should further flourish, and writers and artists should understand the social duties on their shoulders. They should uphold the principle of serving reform and the four modernizations. They should enhance their understanding of Marxist theory and policies and increase their artistic attainments.

In addition, they should go among the masses and delve into the realities of life in order to find raw materials for literary creation, to portray vivid artistic images, and to reflect new features and new things in the great social change. Their works should give people artistic enjoyment and encourage them to work in unity to undertake the four modernizations and to build Chinese-type socialism. Vigorous efforts should be made to turn out not only first-rate material products but also first-rate intellectual products in Shanghai. An upsurge in cultural development will certainly come with the upsurge in economic construction, and Shanghai should contribute to the simultaneous building of a material and spiritual civilization.

SHANGHAI ECONOMIC DELEGATION VISITS YUNNAN

OW020416 Shanghai JIEFANG RIBAO in Chinese 26 Apr 86 p 1

[Text] After visiting Sichuan and Guizhou, the Shanghai economic, technological, and trade delegation lead by Wu Bangguo, deputy secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee, and Dong Jiabang, member of the Standing Committee of the Shanghai Municipal Advisory Commission, visited Kunming on 20 April where it reached initial accord with Yunnan Province on undertaking 31 economic and technological projects. The accord includes joint efforts to establish nonferrous metal, rubber, paper pulp, and other raw materials bases in Yunnan during the Seventh 5-Year Plan. In addition, Shanghai will help Yunnan accelerate the technological transformation of its light and textile industries. Secretary Pu Chaozhu of the Yunnan Provincial CPC Committee, Governor He Zhiqiang, and vice governor Zhu Kui met with the delegation.

SHANGHAI DELEGATION MEETS GUIZHOU SECRETARY

OW020235 Shanghai JIEFANG RIBAO in Chinese 26 Apr 86 p 1

[Text] A Shanghai economic, technological, and trade delegation led by Wu Bangguo, deputy secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee, visited Guiyang in mid-April. During its visit, the delegation held talks with Secretary Hu Jintao of the Guizhou Provincial CPC Committee, Governor Wang Chaowen, and Vice Governor Zhang Shukui on establishing long-term and stable economic and technological cooperation between Shanghai and Guizhou. A minute on the talks was signed afterward.

The two sides initially decided to develop jointly Guizhou's aluminium, zinc, antimony, and other mineral resources, expand its light, textile, food, livestock, and processing industries, and make comprehensive utilization of its agricultural and sideline products. The two sides also agreed to strengthen the exchange of economic and technological information and to expand commodity flows. Under the accord, Guizhou will adopt a preferential policy to attract technological personnel from Shanghai and will systematically send the managerial cadres of its large and medium-sized enterprises to Shanghai to study.

GUANGXI: FURTHER ON WEI CHUNSHU ECONOMIC REPORT

HK290257 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Excerpts] Comrade Wei Chunshu said in his report to the regional people's congress session: We must make the urban and rural markets prosperous and improve circulation services. First, we must reform the urban and rural commodity circulation setup in order to stimulate market prosperity. Second, we must make proper all-round arrangements for the markets, to ensure the masses' needs in production and daily life. We must bring into full play the dominant role of state-owned commerce in taking part in market regulation, promote comprehensive operations, and vigorously organize the purchase and sales of pigs and vegetables. Third, we must strive to do a good job in supporting the development of production, especially rural commodity production.

Wei Chunshu said: We must actively develop foreign economic relations and trade and tourism. Our planned export volume in 1990 is $600 million, a rise of 62.2 percent over 1985. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we must continue to practice the policy of encouraging exports. We must improve the export commodity mix and export more industrial goods, while continuing to increase exports of traditional commodities. We should gradually switch our exports from primary to finished products, and from cheap goods to expensive and moderately expensive goods. We should also increase the variety and improve packaging. We must therefore build a number of export commodity bases with relatively good conditions and a certain size, to ensure that the sources of export goods are on a firm basis of long-term and steady growth. We must also work to consolidate and develop our traditional markets, and actively open up new markets, so as to increase our business.

Tourism too is a business earning foreign exchange. Taking Guilin as the key point, we should build a Gangxi tourism network focused on Guilin, Nanning, Liuzhou, Wuzhow, and Beihai cities.

While doing a good job in earning foreign exchange from exports and tourism, we should also get a good grasp of exporting labor, so as to earn still more foreign exchange. We must strengthen controls on foreign exchange spending on imports, and make active use of foreign investment. Our planned import volume in 1990 is $300 million, a rise of 110 percent over 1985. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we should strive to use $700 million in foreign investment, a six-fold rise over the actual figure for the Sixth 5-Year Plan.

Comrade Wei Chunshu said: We must vigorously organize financial revenue and bring into full play the channel role of bank capital. Financial work must be geared to and support production. We must help all areas and enterprises to accelerate development of production items that rapidly result in increased income and yield good economic results. We must support technological transformation in the enterprises and invigorate the enterprises. It is also necessary to do a good job in reducing deficits and increasing surpluses.

The banking system must fully play its role in raising and channeling capital, guiding the flow of capital to the lower levels, and improving the economic results of spending capital, to promote coordinated economic development.

Wei Chunshu said: We must stimulate the progress of science and technology and increase the exploitation of brain-power. We must specifically tackle the following tasks: 1) Organize and implement the spark plan, and select and develop a number of science and technology projects with a major impact on the national economy and people's life that yield good and rapid results.

These projects should be applied to stimulate and guide the medium and small enterprises, township enterprises, and the entire rural economy. 2) Launch a drive to have science and technology support poor areas. 3) Organize efforts to solve difficult problems in science and technology, promote technical services in conjunction with technological trnasformation of enterprises, speed up the development of brand and new products, and improve the competitiveness of exports. 4) Strengthen the capacity of the key cities in technological development. These cities should also radiate outwards to their surrounding rural areas and lead the development of the entire economy forward. 5) Increase allied and basic scientific and technological research related to building up reserve strength for national economic development, and make technological preparations for future development. 6) Actively import, digest, and absorb advanced science and technology from China and abroad.

During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, in light of local conditions, we should gradually put into effect 9-year compulsory education. Developed areas should introduce universal primary and secondary education by 1990, while ordinary areas should introduce universal primary education. Poor areas should have partially introduced universal primary education by that date.

We must readjust the structure of secondary education. While developing secondary technical schools, we should speed up the development of agricultural and vocational secondary schools. Every county and county-level city should have one to three of these. By 1990, the number of students at such schools should be roughly the same as those attending ordinary secondary schools.

In developing tertiary education, we should focus on tapping potential and improving standards of old schools, gradually improve the teaching conditions and quality there, strengthen the specialities in which we are deficient, and increase the capacity to train post-graduates. We must pay particular attention to teacher training. We must also actively popularize standard Mandarin dialect, while also popularizing Zhuang language in a planned way.

Wei Chunshu said: We must further improve the work of supporting the poor areas. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, the region must basically solve the food and clothing problem for 1 million of the masses. We must therefore make a success of the following tasks: 1) Continue to apply the policy of allowing the poor areas a rest to recover. 2) Strive to turn the resource strong points of poor areas into commodity strong points. We must do a good job in managing and spending the state funds allocated for developing undeveloped areas, and make careful preparations and assessments before undertaking projects. 3) Strengthen leadership, organize cooperation between all parties, and take comprehensive measures to solve the problems.

Wei Chunshu said: We should gradually improve the people's material and cultural living standards. The plan calls for an annual average rise of 8.2 percent in the peasants' net income, and an annual rise of 10.5 percent in workers' wages. We must develop more employment opportunities and basically find jobs for all the newly-grown labor force in the urban areas. We should gradually turn urban housing into a commodity, develop mass cultural and entertainment facilities, and continue to carry out the patriotic sanitation drive.

The growth of consumption must not exceed the increase in production. The growth rate of workers' real wages must not exceed the growth rate of labor productivity. We must continue to practice the policy of allowing some people to get rich ahead of others. At the same time we must avoid excessive discrepancies in income between enterprises and members of society. Thus we should express the principle of distribution still better according to work and ensure social stability and unity.

Wei Chunshu said: We must strive to control population growth, ensure that the annual natural production growth rate does not exceed 12.4 per 1,000 within the next 5 years, and that the region's population does not exceed 41.19 million by the end of 1990. The leaders at all levels must fully understand the importance of planned parenthood, assign it an important position, and persevere in grasping the two kinds of production simultaneously. They must thoroughly grasp this work. Otherwise, they are in dereliction of duty. It is necessary to put the administrative organs on a firm basis, augment the technical forces, and arrange the necessary funds to ensure that this work is carried out on a regular basis.

GUANGZHOU MEETING ON STRENGTHENING MILITARY DISCIPLINE

HK010816 Guangzhou NANFANG RIBAO in Chinese 29 Apr 86 p 1

[Report by He Jinsheng: "Military Cadres Should Take the Lead in Strengthening Discipline Says Zhang Zhongxian, Political Commissar of the Guangzhou Military Region at a Mobilization Meeting"]

[Text] Yesterday morning the Guangzhou Military Region held a mobilization meeting on strengthening discipline, calling on all party members and cadres of the region's organizations to go into vigorous action and set a good example in strengthening discipline for the troops throughout the region by their own deeds.

Some 1,200 people attended yesterday's meeting. They included leading cadres of the Guangzhou Military Region and its organizations, and party members and cadres of its organizations and units directly under the jurisdiction of the region. Zhang Xudeng, secretary of the Guangzhou Military Region Discipline Inspection Commission, and Deputy Commander Zhang Wannian separately transmitted the documents of the discipline inspection commissions of the CPC Central Committee and the Central Military Commission, the speech by Yu Qiuli, director of the General Political Department, and the proposals of the military region for strengthening discipline. On behalf of the Standing Committee of the party committee of the military region, Political Commissar Zhang Zhongxian made a speech at the meeting on how to make the current work of strengthening discipline a success. He stressed that in strengthening discipline, we should have the courage to tackle tough problems and strictly investigate and deal with all cases of violating the law and disciplinary codes. On no account must we be soft-hearted in this regard. As for the problems discovered in the process of strengthening discipline, we should make serious analysis and discover their causes, study, and work out measures to correct them case by case. We should also carry out rectification and correction of faults simultaneously and further institute and perfect various rules and regulations.

SUN WEIBEN ATTENDS HEILONGJIANG MAY DAY CELEGRATION

SK020600 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 1 May 86

[Excerpts] In celebrating the 100th anniversary of the May Day on 1 May, the provincial and Harbin City authorities held a grand park celebration at the (Shaolin) Park. This morning, Harbin City with all kinds of sprouting trees was full of enchanting scenes of spring, and the (Shaolin) Park was also colorfully decorated for the festival. Attending the park celebration were more than 20,000 people, including workers, peasants, PLA fighters, intellectuals, representatives who were attending the provincial meeting of model workers representatives, and members of the provincial "four have" report group in charge of publicizing the advanced deeds cropping up on various fronts.

Also happily attending the park celebration were leading comrades from the provincial CPC Committee, the provincial Advisory Commission, the provincial People's Congress, the provincial People's Government, the provincial CPPCC Committee, the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission, the provincial military district, and the PLA units stationed in the province, including Sun Weiben, Chen Lei, Hou Jie, Li Jianbai, and Wang Zhao. Among those who were invited to the celebration were more than 200 foreign guests and experts who are currently staying in Harbin City.

At the celebration, more than 4,000 full-time or part-time literary and art workers who belong to more than a dozen troupes and teams presented their outstanding programs. The staff members and workers of the Harbin Bearings Plant, one of the national-level "six good" enterprises, presented a chorus program "Our Workers Are Powerful," in which they demonstrated the lofty aspirations and great ideals of the working class in conducting reforms in society and natural environment. Seven districts of Harbin City, the capital of the province, also carried out celebration activities on that day.

HEILONGJIANG: SUN WEIBEN WRITES ON PARTY REFORM

SK012215 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Issue No 5 of FENDOU ZAZHI [Struggle Magazine] published on 29 April carries an article by Sun Weiben, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, entitled "Having the Leadership Set Examples in Work Represents the Key in Straightening Out Party Style." The article states: The key to achieving a turn for the better as soon as possible in party style throughout the province lies in the work performance of leading organs at all levels, particularly on leading cadres at all levels. Each leading cadre should follow the demand set forth by the central authorities to truly regard as a central item in their work schedule the work of straightening out party style and do a good job in vigorously conducting this work in a timely manner. In particular, the principal leading cadres must regard as a most important task the work of straightening out party style.

HEILONGJIANG CONFERENCE ON NORMAL, UNHEALTHY ECONOMIC TRENDS

SK290135 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 26 Apr 86

[Text] On the afternoon of 26 April, the provincial CPC Committee and government held a press conference. Hou Jie, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and governor, announced at the conference some stipulations concerning the lines of demarcation in applying a policy while distinguishing between normal economic activities and unhealthy trends of local state-run and collective industrial and commercial enterprises. These stipulations were formally put into effect on 26 April.

The stipulations point out: We should strictly distinguish between general mistakes in reform and taking advantage of reform to engage in unhealthy trends. Mistakes, which occur in the process of reform caused by imperfect regulations and systems, ineffective measures, and inadequate work experiences, and the deviations emerged in the course of development and exploration are the problems in our course of advance. They should be corrected through summing up experiences and be improved through deeply carrying out reforms. By no means should they be considered as unhealthy trends. However, such acts as taking advantage of reforms to violate policy stipulations, ignoring the overall interests of the state and the people, abusing one's power and position and the favorable working conditions to seek personal gains for oneself or for a small group of people should be considered as the unhealthy trends of exploiting an advantage in reform, and should be resolutely checked.

The bonuses and profit retentions of enterprises should be given to units and workers as long as they are issued in line with the relevant state and provincial stipulations and in accordance with the contracts which have been approved by the higher levels. More bonuses should also be issued provided that their sources are legitimate; they are not the appropriations of the state revenue; and the above-quota portions have been taxed in line with regulations. Those bonuses which have been issued to workers should not be recalled. However, the bonuses, subsidies, and articles given to workers in violation of regulations and through improper means such as using production development funds, funds for trial manufacturing of new products, workers' welfare funds, enterprises' reserve funds, as well as other kinds of funds, should be considered illegal.

Along with the implementation of the system of substituting taxes for delivery of profits, large and medium-sized enterprises are permitted to implement the contract system of fixing the quotas of taxes and profit delivery. Their bonuses should be allocated by the financial departments of their corresponding levels, and these bonuses should be owned by enterprises. These enterprises may use part of the bonuses to reward their workers, and such bonuses should not be included in the total volume of bonus funds of enterprises and thus should not be taxed. The bonuses of leading cadres of enterprises should not be much greater than those of cadres, and the average amount of bonuses of workers should not be used as a standard for giving bonuses to leading cadres of enterprises.

It is necessary to implement the policy of integrating responsibilities with rights and profits, and widen the difference in wages of various workers in line with their actual working situations and contributions. It is proper for enterprises to carry out activities favorable to their operation and to entertain scholars, experts, professors, engineers and technical workers of the relevant units who come to give lectures, to carry out economic and technological cooperation, and to provide consulting services in the course of carrying out proper economic contacts. The entertainment funds should be allocated from the total sales of products of enterprises. The standard of entertainment should be some 10 yuan per meal for each person.

Products which enterprises are entitled to sell and the above-plan products may be sold at floating prices in line with stipulations. However, we should observe the socialist competitive principle and strictly forbid such practices as giving and receiving sales commission in the course of purchases and sales as well as giving and receiving bribes.

JILIN'S GAO DI, GAO DEZHAN WORK AT GRASSROOTS

OW291159 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0201 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Excerpts] Changchun, 29 Apr (XINHUA) — Jilin Province's principal party and government leading cadres have gone down to grass-roots level to carry out investigation and study and help enterprises practically solve pressing production problems.

Since the beginning of this year, some industiral enterprises in Jilin have been experiencing shortages in energy, funds, and raw materials, and their production has been affected as a result. The provincial party commettee and provincial government are urging leaders at various levels to serve the grass-roots units effectively and, first of all, help enterprises solve actual problems concerning them most.

In the past 2 months, provincial party committee Secretary Gao Di and provincial Governor Gao Dezhan have made successive visits to four prefectures to carry out investigation and study at nine key enterprises — including lack of funds, shortage of raw materials, difficulty in marketing, and insufficient supply of electricity — they have suggested that four coordination groups in funding, supply, electric power, production and marketing respectively be formed by the provincial departments concerned. The purpose is for these groups to make coordinated efforts to handle, on a timely basis, the specific problems the various localities find in their industrial production. Because the coordination groups have organized enterprises to supply material for the electricity they need, the province's daily average of electricity output during the first quarter increased 2.3 million kilowatt-hours compared with the corresponding period last year. This has alleviated electricity shortages for production purposes. The basic need for industrial production have also been ensured by the more than 420 million yuan provided by the provincial bank as circulation fund loans for industry.

The principal party and government responsible cadres of Jilin Province have also offered direct, on-the-spot assistance to key enterprises to help them solve problems they face in production. The Changchun cigarette factory recently had to stop production of its famous brand product — the 85-tip yellow-packed Ginseng cigarette — because the tobacco was not right. Provincial party committee Secretary Gao Di and provincial Governor Gao Dezhan organized the provincial departments concerned to send their people to jointly work on-the-spot at the factory. As a result, several approaches were worked out to solve the problem.

SHAANXI SECRETARY POINTS OUT UNHEALTHY TENDENCIES

OW300931 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1238 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] Xian, 28 Apr (XINHUA) — Speaking today about an incident in which transportation supervisory personnel in Lintong and Changan counties abused their authority by flagging down cars for their own personal use, Bai Jinian, secretary of the Shaanxi Provincial CPC Committee, called on the various trades and professions to face up to their unhealthy tendencies and take effective measures to bring about a change for the better in social practice. Bai Jinian said: Cases of power abuse, such as that involving the transportation supervisory personnel of Lintong and Changan counties, are not idolated, but exist in other trades and professions as well. Those in charge of highways abuse their power to flag down cars; those in charge of water shut off water supply at will; those in charge of taxes increase taxes and fines at will. Even in departments in charge of land planning, housing management, administration of justice, and public security, there are some people who would use the power given them by the people for personal gain. If these "highway lords," "water lords," and "housing lords" were allowed to continue practicing their philosophy that "those who live near a mountain live off the mountain, those who live near water live off the water," they would inevitably cause serious damage to the interests of the state and the people and corrupt social practices.

Bai Jinian pointed out that, currently, the party organs at all levels in Shaanxi Province must regard correcting unhealthy tendencies in various trades and professions as an important task in improving the party-style, and must deepen this campaign in the various trades and professions in accordance with different situations and particular conditions in various departments. He called on the party organs in various departments to take warning from the Lintong-Changan incident, find out what are the unhealthy tendencies in their own department or unit angering the masses most, and then analyze their cause, propose corrective measures, and resolutely correct them. He particularly reminded the leading cadres and party members to regard themselves as public servants and be models in correcting unhealthy tendencies in their own trades or professions. He further called on them to take a correct attitude and welcome supervision and criticism of unhealthy tendencies in their departments by the masses and social public opinion.

SHAANXI: EXPANDING LATERAL ECONOMIC TIES STRESSED

HK010104 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Radio talk: "Deeply Understand the Great Significance of Lateral Economic Ties; Strive To Speed Up the Development of Lateral Economic Ties"]

[Excerpts] Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, along with the implementation of the policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy, on the basis of giving more decision-making power to enterprises, the barriers between areas, departments, and trade have been removed, resulting in various lateral economic ties and cooperation at different levels and with different aspects. This is a prime issue in China's economic life and shows great historical progress.

Why do we say this? Because developing lateral economic ties is an inevitable trend and objective law in modern economic development. This is not only a requirement for developing the productive forces, but can also promote economic structural reform.

There are abundant natural resources and a sufficient work force in Shaanxi's rural areas, but we lack advanced science and technology and our business management is at a low level. Large and medium key enterprises and military industrial enterprises have better technology and equipment, but are often restricted in terms of raw materials, factory building spaces, and workforce. Scientific research units and higher learning institutes have advanced technology, but lack other elementary factors needed in production. The way to solve these problems is to develop lateral economic ties.

Developing lateral economic ties and compensating for anothers deficiencies can turn weaknesses into strong points. It can turn a potential productive force into a real productive force and upgrade the productive force from a relatively low level to a relatively high level. Developing lateral economic ties is an important guarantee for rural areas to upgrade their productive level and turn poverty into wealth, a basic way for large and medium key enterprises and military industrial enterprises to expand reproduction, and the only way for scientific research units and higher learning institutes to implement the principle that science and technology must serve economic construction.

All in all, to improve Shaanxi's macroeconomic and microeconomic results and to vigorously develop and invigorate Shaanxi's economy, we must increasingly develop lateral economic ties. At present, all cadres, responsible comrades at all levels in particular, must deeply understand the great significance of lateral economic ties and take effective and active measures to speed up the development of these ties to contribute to invigorating Shaanxi.

TA KUNG PAO COMMENTS ON CHERNOBYL NUCLEAR ACCIDENT

HK010802 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 30 Apr 86 p 3

["Political Talk" column by Shih Chun-yu: "A Serious Accident Occurred in a Soviet Nuclear Power Station"]

[Text] TASS Was Unwilling To Reveal the Real Situation

A serious nuclear power station accident occured in Chernobyl, 80 miles north of Kiev, capital of the Soviet Ukrainian Republic, leaving many people dead or injured. The whole town has been sealed off.

At first the Soviet Union wanted to cover up the serious accident. However, northern European countries such as Denmark, Sweden, and Finland detected an unusually high amount of radiation in the atmosphere, and discovered that the cloud of radiation came from the Soviet part of the Baltic Sea. Therefore, they concluded that there was a nuclear power station accident on Soviet territory.

At 1930 on 28 April (2330 Hong Kong time), TASS still prevaricated in the face of inquiries made by foreign correspondents into the matter, and said that there would be a formal announcement at 2100 Moscow time (0100 Hong Kong time on 29 April). When asked by correspondents what really happened, the TASS spokesman still said: "It is only an accident. Please wait for a formal announcement."

The Nuclear Reactor Caught Fire

The situation was deterioting unexpectedly. It seemed that the Soviet Union was unable to control the situation for the time being. One of the huge reactors of the nuclear power plant caught fire and the graphite core of the reactor was burning. Graphite is a substance used to control nuclear fission. If the fire cannot be extinguished, large-scale radioactive pollution will occur.

Large amounts of radioactive pollutants have been discovered in the ice along the Swedish eastern seashore, and the intensity is 100 times higher than normal. The Soviet part of the Baltic Sea borders northern Europe. The cloud of radiation over the Soviet territory has entered the latter's sky. Residents of Copenhagen, the capital of Denmark, rushed to purchase iodine tablets, which were expected to prevent their throats from being damaged by radiation. Europe is worried about the accident. West German and Sweden suggested sending experts to the site where the accident occurred, and the United States also expressed its willingness to send experts to the Soviet Union to help put out the fire. Moscow has not yet decided whether or not it will accept the proposals offered by the Western countries. We only hope that the Soviet Union will get the fire under control soon. Otherwise it should immediately let European and American nuclear fire brigades help put out the fire.

"Cobalt-60" Contaminates the Atmosphere

Specialists detected that the radioactive pollutant blown to northern Europe was "Cobalt-60," which is used as a "nuclear seed" in generating electricity. It is a radioactive substance leaking out from the nuclear device. It has been reported that the level of radiation does not yet constitute a danger to northern Eurpean countries.

It has been reported that when the accident broke out at the Chernobyl nuclear power station, eight people were killed. Another report indicated that the death toll amounted to 2,000 people. The latter information may not necessarily be true to the facts. However, the authorities ordered tens of thousands of city residents to leave the city promptly, sealed off the city for a radius of 30 miles, and banned foreign reporters from gathering news there. This indicated that the accident was quite serious.

Nuclear Power Stations Must Put Safety First

Since the accident broke out at Three Mile Island nuclear power station several years ago, the construction of nuclear power stations in the United States has been at a low ebb. Now a serious accident has occurred in the Soviet Union, the first in its history. It can thus be seen that the security protection and management of nuclear power stations are extremely important. If the Soviet Union can make the causes and details of the accident public so that specialists in various countries can study ways of preventing similar occurrences, this will be a valuable contribution to future world nuclear power undertakings.

CPC LEADERS URGE RELAXED CULTURAL ATMOSPHERE

HK010945 Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 1 May 86 p 5

["Special dispatch" from Beijing by Keng Chun: "The CPC Will Encourage Exploration, Remove Tensions Among Intellectuals"]

[Text] A new wind recently rose from Zhongnanhai, Beijing. In response to some people censuring academic and theoretical explorations conducted by young and middle-aged intellectuals, senior CPC officials either gave written instructions or delivered speeches, calling for the creation of a harmonious and relaxed atmosphere in the ideological field in order to remove tensions among intellectuals and to encourage exploration and pioneering undertakings.

It has been reported that the department concerned is drafting a document on guiding ideological work in order to provide wider scope for intellectuals in academic studies and literary creation.

On 2 November 1985, GONGREN RIBAO carried an article entitled "Ten Major Changes in China's Study of Economics." The article summed up 10 changes that have taken place in recent years in the study of economics, from critical economics to constructive economics, from rejecting contemporary Western economics to analyzing and using it, and so on. Written under the name of Ma Ding, the article drew a strong reaction in Japan and the United States after it was reprinted in BEIJING REVIEW. In the domestic press circles, some people pounded the table and shouted "bravo!" while some others shook their heads in disapproval. Someone wrote a letter to Hu Yaobang, asking him to read Ma Ding's article and held that this was an anti-Marxist, bourgeois liberal tendency we should guard against.

After reading the letter, CPC General Secretary Hu Yaobang immediately passed it over to Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang who, after reading it, wrote the following comments: Care should be taken in criticizing liberalism in economic theories; bolder exploration is needed at present. Later, beside Zhao Ziyang's written instruction, Hu Yaobang added two large characters meaning "agree." In line with the written instructions of the two central leaders, theoretical research workers in Beijing and Shanghai held forums to criticize some rash acts toward Ma Ding's article.

Liu Zaifu, director of the Literary Research Institute of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, has been regarded as a promising young writer in China's literary theoretical circles. Some of his new viewpoints and explorations in the study of literary theory have also been ensured by some people in recent days. At the recent Fourth Session of the Sixth CPPCC National Committee, Liu Zaifu wrote a proposal entitled "Eight-Point View on Cultural Problems."

In his written proposal Liu Zaifu said: "Efforts should be made to create a cultural atmosphere and a cultural environment coordinated with the modernization program. Without such an environment and such an atmosphere we shall make an erroneous appraisal of the situation and exaggerate the problems in the reform so that the reformers are subjected to psychological pressures greater than the practical difficulties, which may deter them from scientifically facing up to and analyzing the existing problems."

"A leader should not be satisfied at merely playing the part of a 'sentry' or a 'referee' but should play the part of a 'builder.'"

After reading Liu Zaifu's proposal, senior CPC official Hu Qili said that these suggestions were very good. There are many crack personnel among the young intellectuals. They should be allowed to air their views so that political life can become livelier.

Two days after the conclusion of the CPPCC National Committee meeting, Hu Qili arrived in Shanghai. In a speech at the forum for literature, film, and television circles he pointed out: It is necessary to organize forces to conduct a systematic study into major theoretical and policy issues on social development and to bring into play the role of social science workers as think tanks. He hoped that party and government leaders at all levels, social science workers, and cultural circles would make joint efforts to create a united, harmonious atmosphere of mutual trust and understanding.

After Hu Qili left Shanghai, Rui Xingwen, secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee, delivered a speech to the Shanghai literature and art circles. He said: "For writers and artists we should create a united and harmonious environment of mutual trust and understanding and provide good soil, fertilizer, water, and sunlight for the creation of works worthy of our great era. This policy will never change." He also said: "We should first have a flexible, stable, and long-term policy. We should allow people to blaze new trails and to explore and allow our works to undergo a process of continuous improvement."

On 25 April, the mainland press carried a speech by Zhu Houze, head of the propaganda department of the CPC Central Committee. In his speech Zhu encouraged theoretical workers to be bold in exploring and blazing new trails. The written instructions and speeches of the senior CPC officials were warmly received in the intellectual circles. Those in the literature and art circles, who were frightened at the end of last year by a ban on the opera "W M" ["w m" stands for the two Chinese characters "wo" and "men" which together mean "We"], suddenly felt relieved.

SEVEN-NATION SUMMIT OPENS IN TOKYO 4 MAY

OW041645 Beijing XINHUA in English 1438 GMT 4 May 86

[Text] Tokyo, May 4 (XINHUA) — Leaders of seven major industrialized countries began their 12th annual meeting here this afternoon to seek political unity and coordinate economic policies. Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone gave a red-carpet welcome this afternoon at Akasaka Palace to heads of state attending the meeting, who are President of the United States Ronald Reagan, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, French President Francois Mitterrand, Federal German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, Italian Prime Minister Bettino Craxi, Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, President of the European Council Ruud Lubbers and President of the Commission of European Communities Jacques Delors. After the welcoming ceremony, Prime Minister Nakasone gave a reception at the New Otani Hotel.

During the dinner following the reception, leaders exchanged views on East-West relations and arms control, and called for unity among the Western countries. They also agreed to add international terrorism and the Soviet nuclear plant accident to their meeting's agenda.

The political discussion begun this evening is expected to continue until tomorrow morning when a political statement, as well as a special declaration on international terrorism and a statement on the Soviet nuclear plant accident will be issued. The meeting will broach economic issues tomorrow.

Observers here say that the failure of Japan and the United States to agree on slowing the appreciation of the Japanese yen during their pre-summit meeting yesterday will cast a shadow over the meeting on economic issues.

The annual economic summit of the major industrialized countries began in 1975 shortly after the world oil crisis. This is the second time Tokyo has hosted the meeting.

Chernobyl Accident on Agenda

OW041026 Beijing XINHUA in English 0935 GMT 4 May 86

[Text] Tokyo, May 4 (XINHUA) -- The Chernobyl nuclear station accident might be high on the agenda of the Tokyo summit as heads of the seven major industrialized countries have repeatedly expressed their concern over the issue.

Federal Germany Chancellor Helmut Kohl said today that during his talks with Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone he insisted that the summit meeting which is scheduled to open this afternoon should issue a joint declaration on nuclear safety.

Nakasone, who is host of the summit meeting and has the right to rule on what subject should be discussed has agreed that the nuclear accident will be one of the issues on the meeting's agenda together with other topics like world economy, international terrorism, and East-West relations, according to Friedhelm Ost, spokesman of the Federal German Chancellor.

U.S. President Ronald Reagan also criticized the Soviet Union yesterday for "its failure to give the outside world the accurate and full information about the accident." White House spokesman Larry Speakes said that Washington wanted the summit to call on Moscow to improve its procedures for the inspection of Soviet reactors by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA).

A joint political statement by the summit participants -- Britain, Canada, France, Italy, Japan, Federal Germany and the United States -- might be issued Monday and could include mention of what attitude is to be adopted toward the accident, he said.

The nuclear accident occurred last Monday at the nuclear power-generating plant near Kiev, western Soviet Union, causing explosion and fire.

Call for Statement on Terrorism

OW041227 Beijing XINHUA in English 1156 GMT 4 May 86

[Text] Tokyo, May 4 (XINHUA) -- Britain and the United States today urged that a concrete statement on terrorism should be issued at the seven-nation summit which opened here today. In a briefing on British Foreign Secretary Geoffrey Howe's separate meetings with U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz and Japanese Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe earlier today, a British spokesman said Howe and Shultz talked for nearly one hour and "it became quite clear that the two sides wanted to see some credible statement" on terrorism from the summit. He said that Shultz wanted the statement to be "as concrete as possible" and that Britain shared that view. Anti-terrorist measures agreed to at a series of European community meetings last month were likely to provide the basis for the projected statement, the spokesman added.

Terrorism has become an outstanding global issue since the controversial U.S. air raid on Libya on April 15 and is expected to top the agenda of the summit. Observers here noted that Britain and Canada are the only two parties to the summit that have given unqualified support to the U.S. bombing.

According to earlier Western news reports, there has been a divergence of opinion in the United States and Europe as regards the U.S. bombing. While 70 to 80 percent of the Americans approved of President Reagan's action, two thirds of Western Europeans expressed disapproval, the reports said. Most European countries held that the air strike solved nothing and are opposed to more drastic action. Other countries around the world also condemned the U.S. air strike as an act violating the norms guiding international relations and a fight against terrorist activities with greater terrorist moves.

Monetary Policy, Trade Issues

OW030250 Beijing XINHUA in English 0219 GMT 3 May 86

["News Analysis: Tokyo Summit and Western Economic Problems by Zhang Xichun" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] New York, May 2 (XINHUA) -- On the eve of the annual summit of the seven Western industrial countries scheduled for May 4-7 in Tokyo, people are not sure what kind of agreement these countries would reach on coordinating their efforts in solving the economic problems facing the West.

This year, the plummeting oil prices have brought many benefits to major industrialized countries, especially those dependent on oil import. As a result, their expenses on oil were reduced, unemployment rates fell and interest rates went down. All this has been stimulating consumption and industrial production. For this reason, Western observers hold that the prospects of this year's summit -- attended by leaders from the United States, Japan, Federal Germany, France, Canada, Italy, Britain and the European Economic Community -- would be better than last year's.

Nevertheless, there are still a number of factors, including serious structural problems as termed by the press here, that are affecting the stability of Western economies. One of the most controversial issues is monetary exchange rates. In fact, this is a problem caused by American policies. The high interest rates policy adopted by the United States had kept the dollar firm for a long time, which boosted an inflow of foreign capital but had negative effects on export.

The United States suffered a trade deficit amounting to nearly 150 billion dollars by the end of 1985, with much of its home markets taken over by foreign goods. To improve its trade balance, the United States decided to force down the dollar against other currencies to promote its exports.

The finance ministers of the United States, Britain, Federal Germany, France and Japan, known as the Group of Five (G-5), agreed at a meeting in New York last September to take coordinated measures to devalue the dollar. By April 28, the value of the Japanese yen had risen by 30 percent and the Deutsch mark by 23 percent against the U.S. dollar compared with the days before the New York meeting. This change, which is helpful to U.S. exports as expected, already has caused panic on the financial market. It is feared that the devaluation of the dollar might undermine people's confidence in the U.S. currency and lead to selling dollars in big quantities, which, some analysts argued, might cause an uncontrolled free fall for the dollar.

At the same time, Americans, who thought the devalued dollar was frustrating foreign investors by reducing their benefits, again raised their interest rates, a move which would somewhat offset advantages for the U.S. economic expansion. Therefore, experts have repeatedly warned that the dollar has been devalued too much.

Facing this situation, the U.S. Government is trying to further the value rise of the yen and the mark on one hand, and advocating the building of a more managed world monetary system in the place of the free fluctuation system on the other. The purpose of these efforts is to maintain the dollar's exchange rates against the yen and the mark at a level in favor of the United States.

At a mid-April International Monetary Fund (IMF) meeting, U.S. Finance Secretary James Baker proposed to his four G-5 counterparts that target zones be set up for the fluctuations of major Western currencies and demanded countries involved adopt coordinated monetary and economic policies. But, the Baker project was controversial among some U.S. allies. Opposing the Baker project, the ministers from Japan and Federal Germany questioned whether the exchange rates the United States demanded were in the interests of the two countries. "The question is," said Bonn's Finance Minister Gerhard Stoltenberg, "who would decide the zones, and even more important, who would defend them."

Meanwhile, Dutch Finance Minister H. Onno Ruding said that the stress on adjusting a country's home policies to the international situation would no doubt weaken the economic sovereignty of that country.

U.S. President Ronald Reagan will reportedly press the leaders of the six U.S. allies at the Tokyo summit for the building of the U.S. proposed monetary system. But the U.S. press predicted that the divided West can hardly turn the Baker project into a reality.

Then comes the problem of protectionism, a long argument between the United States and its leading Western partners. It has heated up because of the huge trade deficit in the United States in the recent years. The Reagan administration, while voicing opposition to protectionism, is exploiting the sentiment of protectionism in the U.S. Congress and industrial sectors as a pressure to urge Japan and Western Europe to open their markets wider for American products. Meanwhile, the White House has taken measures against the dumping of foreign goods in the United States to please the protectionists at home.

Washington and Tokyo reached an agreement last January to lift restrictions on U.S. exports of communications facilities, medical equipment and electronics to Japan. In March, the Reagan administration went a step further by taking "a radical new approach" towards the U.S.-Japanese trade issue. It asked Tokyo to change its basic domestic policy to turn Japan into a major buyer of American products. This shows that Washington is not content with Japan's decision to lift restrictions on only a few products but desires to solve the long-standing trade imbalance between the two countries in a comprehensive manner.

The conflicts between the United States and its leading West European partners are focused on farm produce. In early April, the Reagan administration announced that the United States would raise tariffs on 28 farm imports from Western Europe valued at some 10 billion U.S. dollars because the United States had suffered heavy losses in grain sales to Western Europe after Spain and Portugal joined the European Economic Community in January. Responding to the U.S. move, the EEC declared on April 9 that it would retaliate against the United States.

Washington is expected at the Tokyo economic summit to raise the problem of world markets glutted with farm produce and call on major West European countries to readjust their agricultural policies. However, as farm produce is a sensitive issue for West European countries, they may not take any joint action at the summit. They may save the issue for a new round of GATT talks in 1987, says an article in THE WALL STREET JOURNAL.

The United States and West Europe also differ on problems about Western economic growth. The United States wants Federal Germany and Japan -- the two countries which have seen a slowdown of their economic growth since last year -- to speed up the growth by reducing their interest rates and cut taxes at home, which would help the United States reduce its huge trade deficit. Federal Germany and Japan, however, are reluctant to take radical measures for fear that the move might spark inflation.

U.S. newspapers reported that all these major issues could possibly be discussed at the economic summit in Tokyo, however, it could be a mere discussion and mean nothing more.

QIAN QICHEN REMARKS ON SINO-SOVIET RELATIONS

HK040332 Hong Kong AFP in English 0309 GMT 4 May 86

[By George Biannic]

[Text] Beijing, May 4 (AFP) -- China believes that pressure exerted on Moscow by domestic public opinion could speed up a Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan, a Chinese official has said. In an exclusive interview with AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE Saturday, Vice-Foreign Minister Qian Qichen, who heads the Chinese delegation to Sino-Soviet talks on normalization, compared the current situation in Afghanistan with that of the United States in Vietnam. "The Americans had to abandon the burden" of Vietnam, Mr. Qian said.

Responding to a question of the possible influence that Soviet citizens could have on their government, Mr. Qian said: "I think this kind of pressure exists. Of course, the Soviet Union is a big country and Afghanistans is small, but the Soviet people are disappointed. What the Soviets are coming up against in Afghanistan is the opposition of a nation, not of a group. Military forces do not have a big role to play in the confrontation with this nation."

The Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan along with Vietnam's occupation of Cambodia and the presence of Soviet troops along the Chines border constitute the three obstacles Beijing says stand in the way of normalizing relations with Moscow. Mr. Qian said that while all three obstacles must be removed for normalization to be achieved, areas where "blood is flowing", Afghanistan in particular, should be considered priorities by the Soviet Union.

The vice-minister stressed the common denominator of the three obstacles was the fact that third countries were directly affected by Soviet policy: Cambodia, occupied by Vietnam with the support of the Soviet Union, Afghanistan and Mongolia, where Soviet forces are stationed along its border with China. Resolution of these problems would be in the interests both of the Soviet Union and of the third countries, Mr. Qian added.

A source close to the vice minister said that this question was kept at the center of Sino-Soviet talks on normalization but that so far the Soviet Union had turned a deaf ear. "It's a headache for the Soviet Union to listen to us on the question of the three obstacles and of the third countries," the vice minister said, adding that "normalization corresponds to the interests of these third countries."

"No political progress has been recorded" thus far in Sino-Soviet discussions on normalization, Mr. Qian stressed. He indicated that no dates had yet been fixed for a proposed exchange of visits this year between the Chinese and Soviet foreign ministers, Wu Xueqian and Eduard Shevardnadze. Mr Qian dismissed the possibility that Mr. Wu would travel to Moscow during the tour of East Germany, Hungary and Romania he is scheduled to begin late this month.

The vice minister conceded that the three obstacles could not be removed all at once, but that the most pressing problems, where "blood is flowing," should be solved first.

The Chinese official said Hanoi's stated plan to withdraw from Cambodia in 1990 was a deception and that the next five years would see a Vietnamization of the Indochinese peninsula with the formation of a federation of the treee countries of Indochina: Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos.

Mr Qian believes Vietnam is unlikely to overwhelm the forces of the tripartite Cambodian resistance. Western estimates put Vietnamese troop strength in Cambodia at about 150,000.

Despite the skepticism about the prospects for an imminent normalization of relations with the Soviet Union, Mr. Qian stressed the desire of both countries to develop their state-to-state relations, and notably economic cooperation. Growth of Sino-Soviet economic ties has been spectacular in the past few years. The Soviet Union now ranks as China's fifth-biggest trading partner after Japan, the United States, Hong Kong and West Germany. Bilateral trade volume last year amounted to 1.9 billion dollars and is due to reach 5 billion to 6 billion dollars in 1990. China's trade with Eastern bloc countries has been impressive growth and is expected to total 33 billion dollars in the 1986-1990 period, according to East European estimates.

Mr. Qian, considered likely to succeed Wu Xueqian as head of Chinese diplomacy, confirmed China's desire to develop exchanges with its powerful northern neighbor on the basis of "the principals of equality and mutual benefit."

The Sino-Soviet schism dates from ideological disputes which led to the recall of all Soviet advisors from China in 1960. For the first time since then, an exchange of experts between the two countries is planned for this year. At a time when China is concentrating its efforts on economic development, an increase in trade, particularly barter trade, with the Soviet Union and its allies would allow China to save the foreign currency needed to make purchases from the West.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON CHERNOBYL ACCIDENT

PRC Nuclear Development Unaffected

HK050811 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1134 GMT 4 May 86

[Report by Dai Yaping: "Jian Shengjie Says Soviet Nuclear Accident Will Not Affect China's Nuclear Power Development"]

[Text] Beijing, 4 May (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- At a press conference today, Jiang Shengji, Director of the Nuclear Safety Administration, said: The Soviet Chernobyl nuclear power plant accident will not affect the progress of nuclear power development that China has started.

This nuclear industry expert said: China must draw experience and lessons from the Soviet nuclear accident. The most important point is that in China's nuclear power construction, we must stress the principle of putting quality and safety first.

Jiang Shengjie said: Before deciding on the building of a nuclear power plant, China made detailed investigations and studies of various reactor types. What the Chernobyl nuclear plant adopted were graphite-moderated pressurized water reactors. There were no safety shells installed for the reactors. The emergency water injection systems may also not be perfect enough. The current accident very likely arose from a steam explosion disrupting the waterpipe system and cutting off the reactor core water supply leaving no escape for the heat. The melting and burning of graphite was thus caused by the reactor fuel core. Due to the absence of protective safety shells, radioactive gases quickly escaped into the atmosphere after the accident. The occurence of this accident shows that the Soviet nuclear safety measures are not perfect enough. So far no official report has been issued on the cause of the accident. The melting of relevant components and the burning of graphite have become known. It is estimated that the helium coolant system has also been damaged.

Jiang Shengjie still acts as Chairman of the Science and Technology Committee of the Ministry of Nuclear Industry. He was once the chief engineer at China's largest nuclear power plant in Northwest China and was in charge of the building of China's largest reactor.

Concerning the casualties in this accident, he considers the Soviet press report about two deaths and over 100 people sent to hospital for checkups relatively credible. The two deaths were very probably directly caused by the steam explosion. There was no basis for foreign press reports about 2,000 deaths being involved, because the plant had only 1,000-odd workers. Even if quite a large number of people had received unusually large doses of radiation, they were not likely to die in a short period of time.

Jiang Shengjie said: In the design of nuclear power plant reactors, China has drawn on foreign experience and has adopted the safest design program. It calls for three protective screens: The intricately enclosed [cuo bao 6934 0545] shell for reactor nuclear elements, the pressure shell, and the safety shell. There are these three protective screens for the pressurized water reactors of the Guangdong Daya Bay Nuclear Power Plant and the Taishan Nuclear Power Plant. Even given an accident like that in the Soviet Union, the safety shell installed as a protective screen will keep radioactive gases from escaping into the atmosphere. He said: Despite a major accident, the U.S. Three Mile Island Nuclear Power Plant was well equipped with safety facilities and did not cause the escape of large amounts of radioactive materials.

He said that China has adopted a series of measures to ensure the maximum safety of nuclear power plants:

1. Safety control over nuclear plants is strengthened. Safety rules and regulations governing nuclear power plants are established and perfected. The business of checking the safety of the design for a nuclear power plant is strengthened. In accordance with safety rules and regulations governing nuclear power plants, strict supervision and inspection are carried out to ensure their operation according to relevant rules.

2. In nuclear power development, there are strict quality control programs for various work processes, such as design, construction, installation, testing, start-up, and operation. A whole set of perfect systems to guarantee quality are established. Nuclear power plants of high quality with guaranteed safety are thus set up.

3. The quality of operators is raised and efforts are strengthened in training and assessing operators.

4. A close watch is kept over developments from the Soviet Chernobyl nuclear plant accident. The Nuclear Safety Administration has quickly established a special group to follow up and study the current incident.

He said that in the past year or so since the establishment of the Nuclear Safety Administration, a series of safety systems and laws and regulations have been formulated. Safety assessment programs for the Daya Bay and Taishan nuclear power plants have been worked out. With the help of international atomic power organs, quite a large number of safety control personnel have graduated from international training classes.

Nuclear Team To Visit USSR

HK050825 Hong Kong AFP in English 0801 GMT 5 May 86

[By Pierre-Antoine Donnet]

[Text] Beijing, May 5 (AFP) -- China still plans to send a team to the Soviet Union to study possible nuclear cooperation despite the recent atomic power plant accident in the Ukraine, officials said Monday. Foreign Ministry spokesman Huang Jin expressed Beijing's "concern over the serious accident" at the Chernobyl plant, but said that this would not affect plans underway for the Chinese nuclear power program.

"The departments concerned on our side are keeping a close watch on the impact the accident may have on the atmosphere and environment over China," he said.

Jiang Shengjie, security director for China's nuclear industry ministry, said China had learned from the Chernobyl accident that security and quality must be given the highest priority in the construction of nuclear plants. China carefully studied foreign nuclear plants before deciding on its own facilities, the overseas edition of the PEOPLE'S DAILY quoted him Monday as saying. The Chernobyl accident would have no bearing on the development of China's plans, Mr. Jiang told the communist party organ.

A spokesman for the nuclear industry ministry said China still planned to send a delegation to the Soviet Union to discuss possible nuclear cooperation. "The preparations for this delegation are continuing. This visit has not been canceled but the dates have not yet been set," the spokesman told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE. An informed East European source said before the April 26 Chernobyl accident that the Chinese team would go to the Soviet Union around mid-June and would visit several nuclear power plants.

China has no such plants in operation. But its first unit, a Chinese-designed 300-megawatt power station, is under construction at Qinshan near Shanghai and is to be finished in two years. Chinese authorities recently said they expected to add on two 600 megawatt units at Qinshan.

An 1,800-megawatt station is to be built at Daya Bay near Hong Kong by the French firms Framatome and Electricite de France and the British corporation General Electric. China repeatedly has said that all security precautions were being built into the two plants. Officials of the Qinshan project recently said that the Three Mile Island plant accident in the United States in 1979 had delayed the inauguration of China's nuclear program.

China first announced an ambitious plan to build ten 1,000-megawatt stations by the year 2000 to resolve a chronic energy shortage. But the plans were seriously curtailed last year, mainly because of their cost. Since then, China has emphasized the building of new plants without massive foreign technology. The construction of a 2,000-megawatt facility at Sunan near Shanghai was dropped from the country's 1986-1990 plan even though negotiations with Western firms were well advanced.

The offer by Soviet First Vice-Premier Ivan Arkhipov last month for China to send a delegation to discuss possible nuclear cooperation was the first such invitation since Moscow and Beijing fell out over ideological differences in 1960. Nearly all of China's nuclear experts were trained in the Soviet Union in the 1950's. China exploded its first atomic bomb in 1964.

IAEA Head Invited to Moscow

OW041556 Beijing XINHUA in English 1540 GMT 4 May 86

[Text] Vienna, May 4 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union has invited the Director-General of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), Hans Blix, to Moscow in connection with the Chernobyl nuclear accident, the agency announced here today.

Blix will be accompanied by two senior experts. They are Leonard Konstantinov of the Soviet Union, who is deputy director-general in charge of the Agency's department of nuclear energy and safety, and Moffis Rosen, an American who is director of the division of nuclear safety. The three are to leave for Moscow tomorrow.

The Vienna-based agency said the invitation was officially extended on Sunday. However, the announcement did not say how long the experts will stay in Moscow or whether they will visit the Chernobyl nuclear plant.

MORE REPORTAGE ON ADB MEETING IN MANILA

Chairman Supports PRC Seat

OW011536 Beijing XINHUA in English 1500 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Manila, May 1 (XINHUA) -- The chairman of the Board of Governors of the Asian Development Bank (ADB) today reiterated his support for the proposal to accommodate China as a member of the board of directors. Ronnie del Mel, who is also the minister of finance and planning of Sri Lanka, said at a press conference this afternoon that since China is a powerful country in Asia, it is normal for the country to have a representative in the ADB's board of directors. He hoped that the admission of China into the board of directors would not imperil the interests of small member countries in the board.

He said the ADB has laid down the principle that its main objective is to promote economic development of smaller countries in Asia. That's why many member countries, including both regional and non-regional countries, are strongly supporting the admission, he pointed out. He said, "We are trying to mobilize the support of the required 75 percent of votes to support the proposal." The chairman disclosed that they have already got 60 percent votes.

Asked about the absence of representatives from Taipei, China in the 19th annual meeting of the ADB, Ronnie de Mel said "Taipei, China is still a member of the ADB. It is my hope that Taipei, China will continue to be a member of the ADB and attend the meetings in the future."

Entry Triggers Split

HK011555 Hong Kong AFP in English 1341 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Manila, May 1 (AFP) -- A split has developed within the Asian Development Bank (ADB) over representation problems triggered by the entry of China, the bank's chairman disclosed here Thursday. Ronnie de Mel, chairman of the ADB Board of Governors, told a press conference that a proposal by the bank's developing member-countries to increase their representation on the bank's Board of Directors was facing strong opposition from certain developed countries.

Mr De Mel said that if the developing countries were denied an additional director's seat, then six small Asian countries would have to be humped off the board to make way for China, which became the ADB's newest member only two months ago. The six countries -- Vietnam, Laos, Afghanistan, Nepal, Sri Lanka and the Maldives -- form a constituency and jointly hold one seat on the board.

Mr De Mel, who is Sri Lankan finance and planning minister, said the rejection of the proposal would be "a serious blow" to the ADB and would go "against the principles of the founding fathers of the bank."

Each of the bank's 47 member-countries are equally represented on the board of governors, which is the ADB's highest policy-making body. The Board of Governors is holding its three-day annual conference here.

The board of directors, the ADB's top management organ, takes care of the day-to-day operation of the bank. Of the 12 seats on the Board of Directors, eight go to largely underdeveloped nations of the Asia-Pacific region that comprise the bulk of the ADB membership. Four seats are alloted to the richer non-regional members.
The Manila-based ADB is a multilateral financial institution established in 1966 to provide easy development loans and technical assistance to its 29 developing member-countries. The bank also includes 18 industrialized countries in North America and Western Europe.

China's entry into the bank in March caused an uproar when the ADB amended the designation within the bank of Taiwan, China's political rival, to "Taipei, China." Taiwan has boycotted the current meeting, while the Chinese have made a grand debut here, led by Chen Muhua, governor of the People's Bank of China.

George Liu, the ADB's deputy spokesman, told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE there seemed to be "some confusion" about China's representation on the Board of Directors. Voting on the board is done by blocs of countries according to their paid-up capital subscriptions. Only Japan and the United States, the ADB's two biggest capital contributors, hold director's seats of their very own. Mr Liu said China had subscribed to 114,000 shares of the ADB's capital stock, but said he did not know if this entitled Beijing to its own director's seat.

Mr De Mel said the United States was the chief opponent of the proposal to increase the number of directors' seats, adding that he did not know why the Americans would object to what he called a "very fair and feasible" proposal. He said he was not optimistic about the chances of the proposal being passed because the United States held "fairly large voting power." He added that the proponents needed at least 76 percent of the vote but had been able to muster only 64 percent.

The ADB governors wind up their deliberations Friday.

Position in Question

OW021208 Beijing XINHUA in English 1148 GMT 2 May 86

[Text] Manila, May 2 (XINHUA) -- Masao Fujioka, president of the Asian Development Bank (ADB) said here today the People's Republic of China has the right to represent itself in the ADB board of directors. He was answering questions at a press conference immediately after the closing of the 19th annual meeting of the ADB board of governors.

He said there is wide support that China is entitled to a directorship and it is more reasonable that the solution to the China's membership is to create "one more seat to accommodate the People's Republic of China in the board of directors."

However, he said, his proposal to increase by one did not get sufficient support in the last few days. Some governors objected to the increase by one, while some suggested increase by two or three. He indicated he would try to solve the problem.

He also announced the ADB and China have made an arrangement that China will send a representative to attend meetings of the board of directors, but without the voting right.

Fujioka said he is going to China for a five-day working visit in May. The purpose of his visit is to establish good relationship between the ADB and China.

Speakers Support Admission

OW021304 Beijing XINHUA in English 1249 GMT 2 May 86

[Text] Manila, May 2 (XINHUA) -- The three-day annual meeting of the Board of Governors of the Asian Development Bank (ADB) came to a successful conclusion at the Philippine Convention Center in Manila today. At today's closing session, Masao Fujioka was unanimously re-elected president of the ADB for a second term in recognition of his contributions to the fruitful operation of the bank.

The governor for Japan was elected chairman of the Board of Governors in the coming year. The Japanese city, Osaka, was chosen as the place of the 20th annual meeting for 1987.

During the past three days, 44 delegates from various member countries and regions spoke on a wide range of problems concerning the economic development of the Asian-Pacific region and the future directions of the bank. Speakers discussed the economic situation in the region and expressed their concern over the problems of the developing member countries and regions — the fall in the price of primary commodities, continuing tight budgetary conditions and heavy debt service burdens. Some speakers were of the opinion that the recent fall in oil prices and lower worldwide interest rates should provide momentum for reviving economies.

Governors from developing countries in their speeches urged developed countries to refrain from practising protectionism and erecting trade barriers. They pointed out that the world economy is more inter-dependent and the increase of economic strength of developing counties is also conducive to the cooperation between developing and developed countries. They hoped the bank would play a role in helping the region to deal with its various problems.

The overwhelming majority of the speakers expressed satisfaction with the admission of the people's Republic of China to the ADB. They supported the right of China to the directorate of the ADB, although some governors from Europe had different views on specific ways to solve the question.

In his closing remarks, ADB president Masao Fujioka said that the ADB would make all possible efforts to help the developing member countries in achieving growth and market oriented adjustment. It would resume the expansion of its lending volume.

Chen Muhua on Loan Application

OW021044 Beijing XINHUA in English 1035 GMT 2 May 86

[Text] Manila, May 2 (XINHUA) — Chinese State Councillor and President of the People's Bank of China Chen Muhua stated here today that China needs to make further studies on whether to apply for loans from the Asian Development Bank (ADB) since the ADB resources are limited.

Answering questions at a press conference, she pointed out that as a developing country in the Asian-Pacific region, China mainly relies on its own resources to develop its economy and at the same time likes to introduce foreign capital in accordance with the policy of opening to the outside world.

Chen said ADB President Masao Fujioka will soon visit China to help it get familiarized with the lending procedures of the ADB. Besides, China will send specialists to the ADB to study the matter. It is premature at present to announce what will be the result of the studies.

Chen said, "China is willing to enter into extensive cooperation with the authorities and other members of the ADB within the framework of the bank, so as to make joint efforts to seek and promote the economic development and prosperity of the Asian-Pacific region. [no end quotation marks as received]

She said China would like to have an additional seat in the board of directors of the ADB. Before the settlement of the question, it will send a representative to the board.

Chen Muhua Interviewed

HK011245 Hong Kong LIAOWANG Overseas Edition in Chinese No 17, 28 Apr 86 p 5

[Report by Staff Reporter: "Chen Muhua on China's Entry Into the Asian Development Bank" — Interview with Chen Muhua, state councillor and president of the People's Bank of China]

[Text] In the capacity of the Chinese member of the board of the Asian Development Bank [ADB], Chen Muhua, state councillor and president of the People's Bank of China, left for the Philippines at the end of April to attend the 19th annual ADB board meeting. This is the first time that the PRC has taken part in ADB activities as the sole legitimate representative of China. For this reason, a LIAOWANG reporter interviewed Chen Muhua on the following questions.

[Reporter] Would you please talk about the position and role of the ADB in the Asia-Pacific region? Why has China joined the ADB? What is the significance of the PRC's entry into the ADB as the sole legitimate representative of China?

[Chen] The ADB is an international monetary organization formed by governments in the Asia-Pacific region, with the aim of promoting economic growth and cooperation in Asia and the Far East. Its main activities include collecting funds, providing loans and technological aid for its member countries in the Asia-Pacific region, providing preferential treatment for projects and plans which are beneficial to the coordinated economic development of the entire region, and giving special consideration to the needs of its small member countries or member countries which are comparatively underdeveloped. The ADB is composed of 47 member countries. Some are countries in the region and some are countries outside the region; some are developing countries and some are developed countries. Developed member countries must subscribe for shares and contribute funds to the ADB, but they cannot apply for loans. Developing member countries must also subscribe for shares and are allowed to apply for loans. The ADB also provides that enterprises of the member countries only are entitled to participate in tendering for ADB loan projects. The ADB will give priority to experts of its developing member countries when recruiting experts for its loan projects and technological aid. The ADB has two jobs: One is launching regional economic and financial cooperation, that is "South-South cooperation," and the other is promoting cooperation between its developing and developed member countries, that is "South-North dialogue and cooperation." Therefore, not only will the growth of its business be beneficial to the development of the economy and banking business of this region, it will also help promote "South South cooperation: and "South-North dialogue" throughout the world. As a formal member country of the ADB, we hope for the realization of all this and will play our proper part.

As an Asian country, it is a matter of course for China to join the ADB. With a population of 1 billion, China's entry into the ADB has expanded the scope of ADB representation to a region with 2.5 billion people. This has made the ADB an Asian development bank worthy of the name.

[Reporter] After joining the ADB, what role will China play in promoting economic development and financial cooperation in the Asia-Pacific region? What vocational activities will China take part in? What responsibility will it shoulder?

[Chen] Many developing countries in the Asia-Pacific region have made great economic achievements over the past 20 to 30 years since they won political independence. This region has become one of the regions in the world with a fast rate of economic development. There are many valuable experiences in the economic development of the Asia-Pacific region which China should study and refer to.

As a country in the Asia-Pacific region, China too wishes to play its proper role in developing the region's economy and finance. We will abide by the four basic principles set forth by Premier Zhao Ziyang in 1983 on economic and technological cooperation between China and other developing countries, that is, equality and mutual benefit, paying attention to actual results, variation of forms, and common progress. We will participate in the activities of the ADB and contribute what little strength we have to promoting economic and financial development in the Asia-Pacific region.

As a member country of the ADB, we will strictly observe its regulations, perform our duties, and enjoy our rights and interests. Since joining the ADB, China has in accordance with its rules subscribed to 114,000 shares, totaling 31.3 billion, of which 3150 million have been paid. Now China has handed over 317 million in foreign exchange and 71 million yuan. China is subscribing to about 7 percent of the ADB shares and is the third largest shareholder. As China has just joined the ADB, it is not familiar with its vocational activities, and it will take time for China to familiarize itself with them. Apart from participating in the 19th annual meeting, we are ready to invite ADB Director Fujioka to visit China for the purpose of exploring matters regarding strengthening bilateral cooperation. As the number of Chinese seats on the board has not been decided, China and the ADB have agreed that China will send representatives to the ADB to carry out business contacts. The ADB has formally invited China to take part in the round-table conference on trade liberalization and development to be held in HongKong in July this year, and China will send participants to that conference. In addition, China is also prepared to invite the ADB to send a team of experts to China to introduce business conditions. In short, China takes a positive attitude toward cooperation between China and the ADB. I am convinced that bilateral cooperation will be smooth and fruitfull and that its prospects are excellent.

[Reporter] What impact will China's entry into the ADB produce on China's four modernizations and its policy of opening to the world?

[Chen] The policy of opening to the world is China's basic state policy. China's entry into the ADB corresponds with the policy of opening to the world. We should use the strong points of other countries to serve our economic construction, and the ADB program is to promote economic and financial development in this region. So China's entry into the ADB has opened up a new road, geared to the Asia-Pacific region, for China to launch external economic and technological cooperation, to use foreign investment, to introduce foreign technology, to undertake contract projects, and to carry out cooperation in labor services. All this is, undoubtedly, beneficial to China's policy of opening to the world and its four modernizations drive.

[Reporter] The Taiwan region will remain in the ADB under the name of "Taipei, China." In future ADB activities, how will Chinese representatives handle their relationship with the Taiwan representatives?

[Chen] Taiwan is an integral part of Chinese territory. In accordance with the agreement reached with the ADB authorities, we are willing to work together and cooperate with the representatives of the Taiwan region of China within the ADB framework. During the 19th annual ADB board meeting, I am willing to mix with the representatives of the Taiwan region, relive our compatriot relationship, and discuss matters relevant to the ADB's and the region's economic and financial development.

Hong Kong To Continue in ADB

OW021103 Beijing XINHUA in English 1043 GMT 2 May 86

[Text] Manila, May 2 (XINHUA) -- Secretary for Monetary Affairs of Hong Kong David Nendick said here today that "Hong Kong's future has been assured and so has our continuing membership in the Asian Development Bank (ADB). He made the statement at the 19th annual meeting of the Board of Governors of the ADB in Manila. The Hong Kong official said, the reestablishment of confidence following the announcement of the Sino-British Joint Declaration was consolidated by its ratification. He told the meeting that local residents and foreign investors now have the assurance that Hong Kong in the immediate years ahead and beyond 1997 can continue to enjoy the stability and prosperity created over the years.

He said that there is no doubt about Hong Kong's continued participation in the ADB after 1997. "We will continue to lay our role as a member in the bank. Through the membership, we hope to continue to contribute to the development of the Asia-Pacific region," he added.

Turning to the operation of the ADB, Nendick said Hong Kong long recognized the importance of the private sector in the economic development process. However, he expressed the concern that there was a fall in emphasis in the lending to development finance institutions. He hoped that the bank will offer as quickly as possible the various forms of assistance to the private sector without government guarantee and assistance to the developing member countries and regions in privatizing public sector enterprises.

ASEAN SUPPORTS CGDK 8-POINT PEACE PROPOSAL

[Text] Manila, April 29 (XINHUA) -- The Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) said today that the eight-point proposal put forward recently by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea (CGDK) "is reasonable and reflects the genuine effort" to find a just and durable solution to the Kampuchea problem.

In a joint statement issued today, the ASEAN foreign ministers said that they were impressed by the comprehensive nature of the proposal, including the core points of total withdrawal of vietnamese troops, self-determination for the Kampuchean people, and concrete steps to bring about national reconciliation.

The foreign ministers reaffirmed that the Kampuchea problem has to be solved by the Kampuchean people themselves, and the eight-point proposal can serve as constructive framework for negotiation.

They urged Vietnam to seriously consider the various positive aspects of the proposal, which was unveiled in Beijing in mid-March, and join in direct or indirect talks together with the the CGDK and the Heng Samrin group. Hanoi has so far rejected the proposal.

ASEAN is comprised of Brunei, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand.

PHILIPPINES HALT NUCLEAR POWER PLANT PROJECT

OW302001 Beijing XINHUA in English 1939 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Manila, April 30 (XINHUA) -- The Philippine Government today decided to mothball the controversial nuclear power plant project in Bataan Province, some 250 kilometers west of Manila, presidential spokesman Rene Saguisag announced in a press briefing.

Saguisag said the decision was reached "after a thorough deliberation" at a two-hour cabinet meeting presided over by President Corazon Aquino in the presidential palace.

The nuclear power plant costing 2.1 billion U.S. dollars is the most expensive single project being built in the Philippines. The plant has taken more than ten years to build and now more than 95 percent of the construction work has been finished. Opposition to the operation of the plant centered on the safety factor. Many feared that it would endanger the lives of people living near the plant. Anti-nuclear activists here also claimed that the plant was overpriced and that "the country bought one for a price of two."

The spokesman said the cabinet members had taken into consideration the nuclear accident in the Ukraine Republic of the Soviet Union in deciding to mothball the project. The Soviet nuclear power plant accident reportedly caused many casualties and radioactive fallout reached some 900 kilometers.

Saguisag said the cabinet would instead "negotiate, arbitrate, or litigate" the issue with the plant's contractor, Westinghouse International Corporation, and the main financier of the project, American Export-Import Bank. While the cabinet meeting was in progress, hundreds of anti-nuclear activists posted a picket in front of the presidential palace to protest against the plant's probable operation.

PENG CHONG-LED NPC GROUP BEGINS AUSTRALIA VISIT

[Text] Sydney, April 29 (XINHUA) -- A Chinese National People's Congress (NPC) delegation led by Peng Chong today began a twelve-day visit to Australia at the invitation of Australia's Commonwealth Parliament. Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincain, vice-chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, is the deputy leader of the Chinese delegation. Sydney, the first leg of the Chinese delegation's visit to Australia, is the capital of the Australian southeastern state of New South Wales, the largest industrial and financial center in the country.

This evening, Neville Wran, premier of New South Wales gave a grand reception at the Government Building in honor of the visiting Chinese. In his speech, Wran expressed his warm welcome to the Chinese delegation. He said that the relationship between Australia and China has been greatly strengthened after the exchange of visits by Chinese party leader Hu Yaobang and Premier Zhao Ziyang, and Australian Prime Minister Bob Hawke.

Peng said in his toast that since the establishment of diplomatic relations between China and Australia, the two countries have enjoyed good relations. He said China's Guangdong Province and Australia's New South Wales state, which established sister relations in 1980, had taken the lead in exchange of visits and cooperation in economic, trade, cultural educational, scientific and technological fields.

New South Wales minister for natural resources John Aquilina and Chinese Ambassador to Australia Li Xiling and more than 100 guests were present at the banquet. Afterwards, the delegation watched a performance given by the Australian Ballet at the Sydney Opera House. Early this afternoon, the Chinese delegation toured the Sydney habour on board the ship "Captain Philip" provided by the new maritime services board.

HU QILI LIAOWANG INTERVIEW ON CPC, OPEN POLICY

CPC To Retain Old Cadres

HK020913 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 0625 GMT 2 May 86

[Report: "Hu Qili on the 13th National Congress of the CPC" -- XINHUA]

[Text] Hong Kong, 2 May (XINHUA) -- The latest issue of the Chinese Weekly LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION to be published soon quotes Hu Qili, member of the Political Bureau and Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, as saying that the 13th CPC National Congress will reelect the central leading organ of the CPC, thus taking a new step toward enhancement of cooperation between veteran and new cadres and replacement of the former by the latter. A group of old revolutionaries who have rich experience and enjoy high prestige will remain at the helm.

Hu Qili said: Founded on the principle of democratic centralism, the CPC practices a high degree of centralism on the basis of a high degree of democracy. Decisions on major issues within the party have always been made by party congresses. As scheduled by the party Constitution, the 13th CPC National Congress is to be held next year. In the meantime, the party's central leading organ will also be reelected in accordance with the party Constitution. The exact time for the 13th CPC National Congress will be fixed through discussion during the 6th Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee to be held in the latter half of this year.

In order to cope with the arduous tasks of modernization, our party has made great efforts in the past few years to reorganize its ranks of cadres so that leading cadres at all levels will be more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated, and more professionally competent. This is a major and fruitful project that our party has engaged in with regard to political reform. In the past few years our party's central leading organization underwent two massive readjustments, the one taking place at the 12th CPC Congress and the other at last year's National Conference of Party Delegates. Both readjustments were carried out smoothly. A number of old comrades voluntarily stepped down from the central leading organization and thus made valuable contributions to the abrogation of the life tenure of leading posts which was then a reality, as well as to the rejuvenation of the central leading organization. Meanwhile, a number of young cadres have taken up new leading posts and plunged into work full of vigor. Now our new and old cadres respect each other, work in close cooperation, and unite with each other. This is an important indication of our party's prosperity. In order to ensure that our central leading organization will better meet the needs of the four modernizations, and to guarantee the continuity and stability of our party's line, principles, and policies, the 13th CPC National Congress will take a new step toward enhancement of cooperation between veteran and new cadres replacement of the former by the latter. But at the same time, it must be pointed out that ours is a big party with 40 million members and China is a big country with a population of 1 billion. The ruling of such a big party and big country needs a group of long-tested old revolutionaries to take the helm, who have rich experience and enjoy high prestige both at home and abroad. Therefore, while promoting a large number of young and middle-aged cadres, we will stick to the principle that a number of old revolutionaries will remain in their leading positions.

Open Policy Reaffirmed

HK050156 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1013 GMT 4 May 86

[Text] Beijing, 4 May (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Hu Qili, member of the Political Bureau and of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, said that some decadent phenomena in China's current society are related to, but are not the inevitable result of, the policy of opening up to the outside world and invigorating the domestic economy.

We will not refrain from doing something necessary for fear of a slight risk. Continuously opening up to the outside world is our unshakable, basic national policy. Hu made this remark when interviewed by a Beijing correspondent of the Australian Broadcasting Corporation on 10 April. The contents of his talk will be carried in the LIAOWANG issue to be published on 5 May.

Hu Qili said: By and large, the policy of opening up to the outside world and invigorating the domestic economy has played a positive role in the ideas and ethics of the masses of the people. This is also the principal aspect. Naturally, in the process of opening up some negative phenomena have also emerged. This is the secondary aspect. Early last year, some ideologically unsound tabloids and pornographic video tapes appeared in some localities. After carrying out investigation and dealing with them, we have basically curbed this unhealthy tendency. Prostitution is illegal in China. There were also some isolated cases. This malpractice has profound social and historical roots. It is related to, but is not the inevitable result of, the new objective conditions following the opening up and the invigoration of the domestic economy. Although there are quite a few problems in our current society, our public order and the general standards of our social conduct are still much better than those in many other countries in the world.

Hu Qili said: When engaging in a modernization program, a country cannot but derive nourishment from the material and spiritual wealth jointly created by mankind. Blind opposition to everything foreign can only lead modernization to empty talk. The change from closing our country to international intercourse to opening it to the outside world is an historic progress. In opening up to the outside world, we not only can absorb foreign capital and learn advanced scientific, cultural, and technological knowledge and managerial skills from foreign countries, but also instill new vitality to our national spirit and effect profound changes in people's spiritual life. Naturally, just as flies will enter our house when we open the doors, some decadent ideas and life styles of capitalist society will also take advantage of this opportunity to enter our country. Moreover, the pernicious influence of the remnant feudal ideas left over from old China cannot be thoroughly eliminated in a short time. As soon as there is a suitable climate, these dregs of society will come to the surface. For this reason, it is entirely unnecessary to be alarmed if some decadent phenomena increase to some extent. So long as we satisfactorily carry out the building of spiritual civilization, step up education, and improve the legal system, we will certainly be able to minimize the negative influences.

Fighting of Crime To Continue

HK050158 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1053 GMT 4 May 86

[Text] Beijing, 4 May (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Hu Qili, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and secretary of the CPC Central Secretariat, said: Efforts will continue to be made to investigate and punish people who violate party discipline and state law; and the principle is that each case will be handled realistically and in light of the law without exaggerating the problems or involving the innocent, but no evildoer will be let off.

He said this when being interviewed by a foreign reporter.

According to the report on this interview by LIAOWANG No 18, Hu Qili told the reporter that the general public is glad to see the party act to deal with major cases and to straighten out the party style, and these actions have won the growing confidence of the public. The legal system has been consolidated. However, the public still wants to see the development of things and hopes that the CPC will persevere in eliminating the evil things inside the party and in society. However, the people do not want to see any political movement, because a movement, like a storm which may damage many houses, may create new unjust charges and verdicts which will have to be reversed some time later. This time, our practice will be different.

We will adhere to democracy and the legal system, and we have made up our mind to seriously and persistently deal with the lawbreaking cases. On the one hand, we will strengthen education, on the other hand, we will rely on legal means. We will enact more laws and regulations so as to base our socialist democracy on a sounder legal foundation.

Hu Qili reiterated: We always hold that all people are equal before the law. If a person violates party discipline or state law, no matter who he is nor how high a position he holds, he must be punished in light of party discipline and state law. No special party member will enjoy the prerogative of being above punishment when he violates party discipline or state law.

This senior CPC official said: Only a small number of people among party members and cadres are involved in various irregularities and malpractices, and only a very small number of them have become criminal offenders. Between 1981 and 1985, the number of party members who were punished according to party discipline for various reasons accounted for merely 0.2 to 0.3 percent of the total number of party members. Those being sentenced by courts for committing various crimes accounted for an even smaller percentage.

'FAR-REACHING IMPACT' OF HU QILI SPEECH CITED

HK040312 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE in Chinese 1115 GMT 3 May 86

[Article by Zou Zongbin: "The Hu Qili Speech of Far-Reaching Impact"]

[Text] [no place-name as received] 3 May (ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE) -- The speech made by Hu Qili, a top CPC leader, on the eve of the 1 May Labor Day has evoked strong repercussions at home and abroad. It would have been inconceivable in the past for a member of the CPC Central Committee Political Bureau and Secretariat to call for plucking up the courage to break through certain conclusions of Marx, the great revolutionary master of the proletariat, that practice has shown to be outdated and incorrect. Hu Qili made the speech at a rally of the world proletariat, including trade union delegations sent by various countries. It goes without saying that his speech will be of profound significance and of far-reaching impact.

Marxism is the theoretical foundation of the CPC'S thought. While carrying out the arduous task of building socialism with Chinese characteristics, the CPC is bound to seek theories from Marx' philosophical thought to solve questions arising from practice and to take up the challenge of contemporary natural and social sciences. Hu Qili's speech indicates that, in the course of China's modernization program, certain of Marx' conclusions deviate from and even conflict with China's current social reality. If these problems are not solved, they will adversely affect the reform of the CPC.

The expositions of Marx, a man of over a century ago who never experienced the economic life of socialism, on the economic laws of the socialist period could only be tentative. According to Marx, commodities and currency would be unnecessary and emphasis should be put on public ownership during the period of socialism. During the 1930's, the Soviet Union looked upon such Marxist theory as a magic weapon, while the CPC also followed the same track up to the present. Over the past decades, for someone to dare to suspect these "classics" would spell disaster, to say nothing of making a breakthrough.

In fact, practice has proved that not all of Marx' conclusions are true. For example, his theory of urban uprisings was applicable to certain countries but not to China.

Could China's revolution have been a success if Mao Zedong had also looked upon this conclusion of Marx' as a "universal" truth?

A Beijing University professor recently pointed out that the reform of the ownership system will determine the success or failure of China's economic reform. This new viewpoint, which is completely different from that of the CPC, has attracted the attention of the departments concerned. Although the CPC may not necessarily accept the viewpoint, it shows that more and more people have plucked up their courage to break through outdated conventions and to probe Marxist ideology in "contemporary China" in an attempt to integrate Marxism with the practice of China's modernization program. It is quite definite that this valuable spirit of exploration will encounter obstructions in the course of seeking truth. Nevertheless, the great significane of Hu Qili's speech and the support he afforded to the reformers should not be underestimated.

HONGQI ARTICLE VIEWS ACCEPTANCE OF MARXISM

Academic Research Urged

HK021259 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0642 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Beijing, 1 May (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- In an article in this year's issue No 9 of HONGQI published today, Hu Sheng, President of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences said there are no forbidden zones in academic research.

Hu Sheng said that anything that helps social and scientific development, and anything that is needed in the light of reality, should be made a subject of research. An academic worker can do independent research and bring out his own research results. Generally speaking, a scholar's individual research results do not represent the view of the party and the government. The responsibility rests with the researcher both academically and theoretically. Any research results of value should be allowed to be made public so long as they are not against the leadership of the party and against the socialist road.

He said that since our research workers are called upon to show courage in solving actual problems, then we must allow them to err and make detours in the process of exploration. Where there are mistakes, we must use the method of academic discussion and guidance to seek a solution. Of course, be it a mistake or not, we must have discussions and go through the test of practice. No one can prejudge. Regarding any view point, we should allow criticisms and also counter-criticisms. We advocate obeying the truth in the interests of the people. This is a solemn scientific attitude. A person should not stick purely to his own views and have a narrow outlook on things. This is undesirable and contemptible. Everyone should discuss things on an equal footing. Where there is a real mistake or something is wrong, we should start all over again. So we set the rule as a prerequisite: A mistake is allowed; we cannot "deal a fatal blow at one stroke" where there is any mistake.

Hu Sheng suggested that we should not freely elevate academic mistakes to the plane of political mistakes. Some problems in social sciences are likely to touch on political ones. Even problems of this kind cannot simply be treated as political ones in our approach.

On how to use Marxism as a guide to academic research, Hu Sheng said that all the work of our country proceeds under the guidance of Marxism. Our research work in social sciences should also proceed under the guidance of Marxism. This is the most fundamental guideline for our research work.

He thinks that as far as the social sciences front is concerned, a problem likely to be of particular importance is the one of putting Marxism in simple and vulgar terms. We must now overcome such a trend. Of course, we can only use Marxism as a weapon in overcoming it.

Hu Sheng considers that academic research not involving the conscious application of Marxism should also be allowed. After citing an article in the Constitution which says: "Citizens have the freedom to carry out scientific research, literature and art creation and other cultural activities," he said: Any scientific research work that helps in promoting the creativity of the people should be encouraged and given support. It is not a case of just supporting scientific research work that involves the conscious application of Marxism as a guide. The same applies to research in the social sciences. It should be admitted that some scholars are not consciously applying Marxism as a guide in academic research. But their research contributes toward enlivening socialist academic studies and is beneficial to the people.

Marxism 'Cannot Be Forced'

OW031534 Beijing XINHUA in English 1507 GMT 3 May 86

["People Cannot be Force-Fed Marxism"] -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, May 3 (XINHUA) -- A leading theoretician has described Marxims as a science alive with the current changes, in which people have confidence for nothing but its scientific truth.

In an article in the latest issue of RED FLAG journal, Hu Sheng, president of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, said that Marxism is not stagnant and sealed. Instead, he said, "it is developing to suit the current situation in China and abroad." People cannot be forced to believe in Marxism, he said, adding that in China, it has enjoyed massive trust and support as a result of its scientific truth and combination with China's actual practise. It won't do to use political power and administration to compel people to accept an idea, Hu Sheng added.

Hu, who is concurrently director of the party history research center under the party Central Committee, proposed that the current political courses in colleges be improved. At present, many students take such courses for the sake of examinations. And because of this, he said, they just try to find and recite the "standard" answers to the paper.

He also advised Chinese scholars of Marxism to discuss with the exponents of other schools of political sciences in the world.

"Marxists will make progress by having discussions with people who have different opinions to absorb useful ideas and research methods," he said.

ZHAO ZIYANG, OTHERS AT CONDUCT REPORT MEETING

OW301000 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1442 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, 29 Apr (XINHUA) -- At a meeting sponsored by the Central State Organs Party Committee this afternoon, secretaries of party committees and discipline inspection commissions of all departments under state organs discussed the implementation of the Central Committee's instruction that central organs must set an example in improving party conduct. They also examined the situation of and set forth future requirements for improving party conduct.

Before the meeting, Comrades Zhao Ziyang, Wan Li, and Tian Jiyun heard a Central State Organs Party Committee report on its recent work to improve party conduct, and made important speeches. Endorsing the successes of central state organs in improving the conduct of their party members, they emphatically pointed out that the mainstream among the vast number of state organ functionaries is good; most of them are actively involved in reforms and are working hard to serve the people. They said, however, that we must also realize that certain serious problems have indeed occurred among some party members and cadres. After the party and the people give them some power, some state functionaries, instead of serving the people wholeheartedly, have resorted to all means possible to seek personal gain, taking advantage of their authority as well as the opportunity of reforms and the policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the economy. This is intolerable to party discipline and state law. We must be determined to take firm actions to deal with this problems so as to ensure normal progress of reform and the implementation of the policy of opening to the outside world and enlivening the economy, and to develop and consolidate the gratifying situaton. Meanwhile, we must realize the complexity of the issue, lest we handle it simplistically. While handling the issue, we must be firm and cautious. We must determine the nature of various matters in accordance with the party's principles and policies and state law, and firmly improve state organs' workstyle and efficiency. This is an objective we must strive to attain.

Addressing the meeting today, Comrade Tian Jiyun stressed: Improvement of party conduct and reforms should proceed hand in hand with our work because they can enhance each other. Leading authorities at all levels must clearly realize our long-range strategic principle, namely, material construction and spiritual construction must proceed at the same time in our socialist society. While economic work is at the center, ideological and political work can guarantee its success. Should we slacken or weaken ideological and political work, our economic work will go astray, and our reforms and work for opening to the outside world and enlivening our economy cannot possibly succeed.

He pointed out: The current main issue lies in the fact that certain departments have yet to consider improving party conduct and strengthening ideological and political work as part of their leadership. Leaders of leading party groups must genuinely understand the importance of improving party conduct. They must place the work of improving party conduct on their agenda and make sure it is attended to. While planning their work, they should also include in their plan the work of improving party conduct; and while checking their work, they should also check the work of improving party conduct. The two jobs must be done and accomplished at the same time. We must also examine our experiences in improving party conduct, carrying out reforms and performing our routine work at the same time. We must dare to commend good experiences and criticize bad ones.

Tian Jiyun said: Major cases must be investigated according to the principle that they must be handled firmly, cautiously, accurately, and efficiently. While investigating and handling cases of law-breaking and serious misconduct among party members, some departments are daunted by difficulties or become softhearted. There are many reasons for this; but it is primarily because some comrades think a lot more about their own safety than the interests of the party and the state. All departments must select honest and impartial cadres who have a strong sense of principle and policy to take part in handling cases, and they must dare to deal with tough issues persistently until they are resolved. While handling major cases, we must seek truth from facts and work according to policies.

We should not compete with each other for high figures, quick progress, or fanfare. While we should not absolve everyone, we should not implicate the innocent. Each case must be accurately, properly and thoroughly handled on the basis of proven facts so that they can stand the test of history.

Tian Jiyun said: Party operation must be strengthened. Party organizations must exercise their supervisory role, and members must exercise their vanguard exemplary role by taking care of party affairs. Party organizations at all levels must attend to these three things: education, supervision, and discipline. They must educate party members to foster the attitude of serving the people wholeheartedly and the spirit of this age, namely aiming high and bringing forth new ideas. They must strengthen their organization, lead a normal organizational life, give full scope to democracy, make criticism and self-criticism, make inner party life more ideological and political, and have a stronger sense of principle. Party members and leading party member-cadres at all levels should supervise each other's conduct.

Tian Jiyun pointed out that greater efforts should be exerted during the next 2 years to achieve a breakthrough in changing state organs' workstyle through combating bureaucratic attitude and improving operating efficiency. He added that, in order to combat bureaucratic attitude, a lot of work has to be accomplished in solving institutional problems and in intensifying ideological education.

He said: We must effectively intensify the building of a contingent of political workers, reinforcing it with cadres who have a strong party spirit, and who are law abiding, honest in performing their duties, educated, proficient, in the prime of their lives, practical, exploratory, enterprising, and dedicated.

During the meeting, Zhang Jingyuan, deputy secretary of the Central State Organs Party Committee, made a report on state organs' recent efforts to improve their party conduct. He also stated his opinions regarding future tasks. He said: Following the conference of central organ cadres, the vast number of party member-cadres of all departments under state organs have been earnestly studying and discussing the important speeches by Hu Yaobang and other central leaders as well as other relevant documents of the Central Committee concerning the need to improve party conduct. During discussions of democratic practices, leading party groups of all departments have examined their performances against stated requirements, made corrections in the course of examination, and drawn up measures for improving their conduct. They have also seriously handled a number of cases of lawlessness and indiscipline. In general, the progress has been smooth and initial success has been achieved. However, the development of the work of improving party conduct has been uneven, and a lot of hard work has to be done in the next 2 years in order to achieve a fundamental change for the better in state organs' party conduct -- a goal set forth by the Central Committee. In accordance with the Central Committee's requirements for improving party conduct, all departments under central state organs must attach great importance to the issue, intensify their leadership, firmly adhere to the principle that material and spiritual construcion must be organically combined and carried out simultaneously.

To ensure successful results, they should make rational and overall arrangements, and create a good social environment that can facilitate reforms as well as the implementation of the policy of opening to the outside world and enlivening the economy. We should use both positive and negative examples to educate state organ functionaries to heighten their sense of lofty ideals, discipline, and law, so that they will perform their public services honestly, foster the moral characters of upholding principles, strictly abiding by discipline, being devoted to their duties, and consciously resisting all types of unhealthy practices, and so that they will introduce into state organs a new order of the 1980's.

During the meeting, the Ministry of Coal Industry, the Ministry of Electronics Industry, the Ministry of Water Conservancy and Electric Power, and the Ministry of Posts and Telecommunications reported their situation in improving party conduct.

Leading comrades of leading party groups of various departments under state organs were present at the meeting, which was chaired by Chen Junsheng, secretary general of the State Council and concurrently secretary of the Central State Organs Party Committee.

BEIJING COMMENTATOR STRESSES EXPERT LEADERSHIP

OW290150 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Station commentator's article: "To Exercise Expert Leadership Is the Purpose Requiring Leading Bodies To Be Professionally Competent"]

[Text] Professional competence is an important component of the four requirements for cadres in the new period. As Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out, in our socialist modernization drive today, party cadres at all levels should not only equip themselves with a certain level of basic scientific and general knowledge but also be familiar with the professional knowledge needed for their work and the specific situation in their professional field and its special rules.

In readjusting the leading bodies over the last few years, all localities and departments have, generally speaking, striven to comply with this requirement. A large number of capable people with professional knowledge and qualifications have used their talent at leading posts at various levels. However, in some localities and departments, no distinction is drawn between general and professional knowledge, as attention is paid only to leading cadres' general and basic knowledge while neglecting the professional knowledge necessary for them to exercise expert leadership. Besides, a number of specialized personnel are not apt at organizational and leadership work. As a result, although the members of some leading bodies are better educated after the readjustment, the structure of their professional knowledge is somewhat irrational, and their organizational and leadership capability weak.

It should be clearly pointed out that professional knowledge is related to education. Any kind of professional knowledge is based on a certain level of general knowledge. However, better education does not ensure people with professional competence. People with a certain level of general and basic knowledge are not necessarily well versed in a specialized field. Proceeding from the strategic objective to improve and strengthen the party's leadership over the socialist modernization drive in readjusting party and government leading bodies, all localities should step up the comprehensive evaluation of cadres. It is necessary to examine whether every leading members has sufficient professional knowledge and competence for the work of which he is in charge and to ensure that the leading body is rationally formed by experts with decision-making, organizational and coordinating capabilities.

Leading bodies with an unsatisfactory structure of members with professional knowledge should examine the situation and carryout further readjustment. Leading members with specialized knowledge, a reasonable share of the work, and leadership and management ability should be given the powers and jobs to bring into full play their talent. Those who are still temporarily not adjusted to leading posts but definitely have leadership potential should be given a better opportunity to undergo training for improvement. As for those whose practical experience in leading posts proves them incompetent, they should be promptly removed to posts suitable for them.

TIAN JIYUN ADDRESSES CHEMICAL CONFERENCE

[By RENMIN RIBAO reporter Li Wen and XINHUA reporter Ding Genxi]

[Text] Beijing, 26 Apr (XINHUA) -- Addressing a national work conference on the chemical industry yesterday, State Council Vice Premier Tian Jiyun urged all chemical industrial departments and enterprises in the country to deepen the economic structural reform and do a good job in production in order to further promote the sustained, stable, and balanced growth of the national economy.

Tian Jiyun said: The chemical industry is an important raw and semi-finished materials industry that covers a wide range of trades and professions, turns out a large variety of products, serves extensive areas, and maintains close coordination with other industries. It is vital to the development of the whole national economy. In particular, scientific and technological progress and the emergence of new industries have placed new demands on the chemical industry, and chemical industrial departments are confronted with the new task of producing more new chemical industrial raw and semi-finished materials. The industry has broad prospects for development. Despite remarkable achievements scored during the Sixth 5-Year Plan, China's chemical industry still cannot cope with the needs of the national economic development and the people's livelihood.

Tian Jiyun pointed out: In order to accelerate the development of China's chemical industry to satisfy the needs of the national economy and the people's livelihood, the party Central Committee and the State Council have decided to place the production of raw and semi-finished materials, including the chemical industry, in the same important position as energy and transport construction. Currently it is necessary to pay close attention to the work in the following fields:

First, it is necessary to persistently give to priority to reform. In carrying out the economic structural reform this year, it is necessary to vigorously develop and achieve a breakthrough in promoting lateral economic cooperation while taking small steps in other areas. The chemical industry is an industry most suitable for comprehensive utilization of resources, and it has advantages for developing lateral economic cooperation.

There is a great deal of merit in lateral economic cooperation, which should be encouraged by all men. It can help the chemical industry and other related industries explore and open up more sources of raw materials and develop their processing and utilization, and it can also help individual industries promote comprehensive utilization of resources and turn "waste" into "treasure," thereby reducing the pollution and improving social benefit. Administrative departments concerned should support and facilitate the development of lateral economic cooperation and refrain from unnecessary interference. Moreover, it is necessary to perfect and reinforce the economy responsibility system in enterprises in order to further harness the enthusiasm of staff and workers. It is necessary to properly combine the distribution relationship with the economic responsibility system within enterprises.

Second, it is necessary to strive to increase the production of chemical fertilizers, farm chemicals, and other products for supporting agricultural production. Due to various reasons, small chemical fertilizer plants have been facing a serious situation in unsalable products since last year. Holding that small chemical fertilizer plants had already fulfilled their historical mission, some local governments have drastically cut coal and electricity consumption quotas for small chemical fertilizer plants and ordered them to manufacture otherr products to yield profits. It is our opinion that although small chemical fertilizer plants had made their share of contributions to history, they should continue to play their role and be given the opportunity for technological transformation and innovation. It is necessary to unify our thinking as far as this question is concerned. We should not waver in our basic orientation of supporting agricultural production because of temporary stagnation in the markets of small chemical fertilizer plants. It should be pointed out that agriculture is the foundation of the national economy, while grain is the basis of this foundation. It should be very difficult to accomplish the modernization program if we fail to lay solid foundations of agriculture and grain and production and solve the problem of feeding and clothing China's 1 billion people. It is a strategic principle of China's modernization drive to ensure an allround stable development of agriculture and a steady growth of grain production. In order to produce more, it is necessary to invest more in agriculture. Investment in agriculture, including chemical fertilizers and farm chemicals, should be increased. The government has already taken, and will continue to take, necessary measures to encourage the production of goods for agriculture. At the same time, chemical industrial enterprises that manufacture goods for agriculture are urged to strengthen leadership and mobilize the masses of staff and workers in further raising the technical standard, conserving energy, lowering consumption and costs, and building up the ability to assimilate imported technology so as to more effectively support agriculture. The State Council has decided to lower the prices of products manufactured by small chemical fertilizer plants. This is an important measure for supporting agriculture as well as revitalizing the production of small chemical fertilizer plants. It should be implemented as quickly as possible.

Third, it is necessary to thoroughly digest and assimilate imported technology and improve the quality of Chinese-made products. Chemical industrial departments have done a good job and accumulated some experience in assimilating imported technology. However, judging from the country as a whole, there have been redundant and anarchic imports of technology, and some of them are not properly assimilated. From now on, the government will rationally readjust the structure of imported goods and persist in giving priority to importing software, advanced technology, and key equipment. Special efforts will be made to digest and assimilate imported technology for building up our own capabilities.

Fourth, it is necessary to pay close attention to the production of chemical industry and maintain a suitable growth rate. The government has attached a greater importance to and made proper arrangements for the chemical industry in the Seventh 5-Year Plan. The government will continue to give necessary support within our capabilities and to arrange investment and work out economic measures to ensure the chemical industry develops harmoniously with other sectors of the national economy. The chemical industry should tap the potentials of existing enterprises and unfold activity to increase production and practice economy so as to ensure an appropriate growth rate of the industry and improve its economy efficiency.

JINGJI RIBAO URGES SUPPORT FOR REFORMERS

[Commentator's Article: "Please Pay Attention to the Destiny of the Reformers"]

[Text] In the mighty torrent of reforming the economic structure of our country over the past few years, a number of pathbreakers have merged on all fronts and in different trades. Their creative thinking, courage in blazing new trials, and enterprising spirit have captured admirable attention in our society. The smooth progress of our reform should be attributed to their leading role, and they have rendered great service in the marked success we have achieved in the four modernizations.

However, the destiny of some reformers in some areas and departments has recently met with an adverse wind. Some have found themselves in a tight corner because of condemnation, criticism, rumors, and slanders, and some have been dismissed or transferred to other posts without explanation. People describe it by saying that "they have been hit by arrows and have fallen from horses." Such a situation appeared only in some areas, but it has greatly chilled the enthusiasm of the majority of the reformers and hampered the smooth progress of reform. We must pay close attention to the situation.

As developments in some areas show, the "falling from horses," of these reformers is due fundamentally to the following reasons.

Some reformers were censured because they could no longer make any new breakthroughs in work after they achieved some marked results in reform. This is because they are not well prepared ideologically and theoretically and they do not have novel working methods.

Some reformers, who dare to think and act, have achieved success in work, but they have now been thrown into passivity because they "went too far" in eliminating the bad and playing up the good of the reform measures already adopted and even committed some mistakes in work because they do not have deep and correct understanding of the present policies.

Another situation has nothing to do with errors. Some defects and shortcomings in work have been recklessly exaggerated and even slandered only because some reform measures offended the vested interests of some people and entrenched upon timeworn ideas and old customs, or because their marvelous work was hated by some people out of jealousy just as " a tall tree catches the wind." Such a situation also commits serious harm to the reformers.

Moreover, in another situation, some units adopted some effective rules and regulations. However, when things changed a little, some people immediately doubted these new rules and regulations and claimed to replace them with the previous ones in an attempt to negate the new rules and regulations. Meanwhile, some people who earlier supported the new rules and regulations also assumed an ambiguous attitude, surrendering from their previous position and even making a 180-degree turn. As a result, some "pathbreakers" in reform have been caught in a embarrasing situation.

Of course, there is also a small number of ill-behaved people who "pass off fish eyes as pearls" and act wildly in defiance of law in the name of reform. This has not come as a surprise. Now that reform is a profound revolution, it is inevitable that good and bad people are mixed up. Therefore, it is absolutely normal and necessary to examine and weed out a few fake reformers. However, we must distinguish this situation from the embarrasing situation into which some reformer are plunged, and must not lump them together.

As we know, the reform is another revolution in our country. Perservance in the reform has a great bearing on the future of our country and will bring about great hopes for the country. At the same time, our reform is an arduous and complex undertaking as never done by our predecessors. Therefore, we must take certain risks. To ensure the progress of our reform, reformers not only stimulate it with their utmost courage and tenacity, but also need the understanding and concern of the whole society. Especially when they are confronted with difficulties and setbacks, they need support, particularly from leaders at various levels. Whether leaders can assess the merits and shortcomings of reformers by applying the principle of "one divides into two," and whether they can distinguish principal from secondary aspects in work and give necessary support to reformers is a practical problem that we must now resolve. This affects not only policies of our party but also the entire situation of carrying out reform to the end.

It is necessary to take a correct attitude toward the achievements and shortcomings in the work of reformers. This is because they do not have a ready-made pattern to follow, they have to learn while working, and have to explore new possibilities before new progress is achieved. Meanwhile, our present reform involves complicated readjustment of relations in many aspects and the situation varies from place to place. Therefore, errors committed by reformers are perfect and sure of success. When they commit some mistakes in work, leaders should not be panic-stricken and refuse to support them as if they give up eating for fear of choking. In taking a correct attitude toward the reformers, we must consider the main aspects of their work and their political integrity, encourage them to explore new possibilities in work, and forsake their permissible errors. In concrete practice, we must boldly affirm their achievements in reform and seriously point out their problems and weak points. Meanwhile, we must adequately value their zeal and enterprising spirit for reform and protect their enthusiasm for reform. When reformers suffer reverses, we must help them draw lessons with patience, give them continuous guidance, and encourage them to rise and advance bravely. No gold is pure, and no man is perfect. Therefore, we should not make excessive demands on the reformers. When the reform went smoothly, some people "added flowers on the brocade," but when it met with setbacks, they refused to "offer timely assistance." Such an attitude and practice are not encouraging.

When reformers are castigated not because of their mistakes in work, leaders should come out boldly to prevail over all dissenting views and uphold justice and should not be controlled by irresponsible hearsay. "Zeng Cen [0582 0639] is not a real murderer, but frequent willful calumny frightens his loving mother." In carrying out reform, our leaders at various levels should be on the alert against such rumors. They must be aware of dirty tricks such as the cheap trick "an anonymous letter costs only an 8-cent stamp but leaders should investigate the case for years."

What is particularly important is that leaders, out of their sense of responsibility for the party's cause and the reformers, should come out and interfere in wrongs suffered by those who were unjustly dismissed from their posts, clarify some facts, redress trumped-up cases, and help the dismissed reformers to be reinstated. For example, the Taiyuan City CPC Committee overcame numerous difficulties and redressed the case of Yang Minqian, director of the city's solvent factory. Whether leaders can do accordingly is a test of their party spirit.

It is not very easy to make correct appraisal of the reformers and take a correct attitude toward them. Leaders should share a common fate with the reformers, go deep into the realities of reform, and throb with the pulse of reform. At the same time, they should make efforts to change their ideological method of thinking and style of work and stand in the forefront of reform. In summing up and publicizing the achievements and experiences made by reformers, we should be realistic and should neither overestimate nor understimate them. Only by so doing will they be able to guide the progress of our reform. All great social change usually creates a number of outstanding people. It is predicted that the furnace of reform will temper a large number of people who have the least conservative ideas but the most enterprising spirit and are good at management. Leaders at various levels should dare to assume responsibility without fear or favor, pay great attention to the destiny of the reformers, create a most favorable social environment for their growth, and help them to give full play to their talent so that the reform will be able to develop in depth.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES SHOWING CONCERN FOR PEOPLE

[Commentator's Article: "Occupying a High Position, One Should Be Concerned with the Interests of the People"]

[Text] "When you are in trouble, to whom will you pour out your heart? Who will you ask for help in solving problems in your daily life?" A college student carried out a sample survey among the students regarding their answers to the above questions and found such answers to be quite different. Some said they would go to their parents for help. Others said they would go to their friends and teachers. Some also said they would ask for help from party and CYL organizations but these students did not account for a high percentage. This survey may not be very typical and it may not be scientific either. People's troubles and worries in their daily life vary greatly and their methods to dispel their depression and melancholy are not the same. Those who are willing to tell their parents about their feelings of pain or embarassment may not be willing to tell their teachers about them. Some people may not be willing to tell party and CYL organizations about thoughts which they will disclose to their friends. All this is quite understandable. Nevertheless, this survey has put the following questions to party and CYL organizations at all levels: Do you show enough concern for others? Do you know what others are thinking about? Do you know what their troubles are? Do you know what their demands are?

Since our party and CYL organizations at various levels are to serve the people, it is only proper that they should wholeheartedly help the people solve their problems and get rid of their troubles. The CPC Central Committee always advocates that cadres should go among the masses in order to make friends with them, have heart-to-heart talks with them, and earnestly help them solve some concrete problems in their thoughts, at work, and in daily life. Comrade Deng Xiaoping said in December 1980, "While paying close attention to principles and policies to the appointment of important cadres, the party's leading organs should focus their time and energy mainly on ideological and political work, work related to man, and mass work."

Anything that makes a person feel unhappy is extremely important to that person and he certainly wishes to have his problem solved as soon as possible, although it is merely something trivial in the eyes of the leaders. To a youth, for example, the problem of whether he can continue his studies at higher level school or whether he can get a good job is indeed very important. His demand may or may not be reasonable. Anyway, it is an important thing which has a bearing on his future.

The leaders should go to him and try to find out what is on his mind in order to help satisfy his reasonable demands or to help him understand why his demands are unreasonable. This will set his mind at ease.

Some comrades may think that with a country so big and with such a large population, how can we ever solve all the people's problems, which vary greatly and are complex? It is true that no one is capable of solving all these problems. Even if the old problems are solved, new ones will crop up. However, if we keep on solving one problem after another, we shall reduce their number. Besides, people will draw inferences about other cases from one instance and a kind of chain reaction will take place. The solution to one problem will help solve many other problems. In the course of solving problems, we can grasp some laws of development of things which will enable us to formulate feasible policies. What the masses worry about most is that the leading comrades of some departments merely talk about matters of principle but do not seriously solve any concrete problems.

Our party has a fine tradition and has accumulated rich experience in problems related to man. However, the "leftist" ideology had much influence in this respect and caused barriers between organizations and the masses, and even suspicions among the people. Through the work to set things aright, the situation has changed. The practice of attacking people finds little support, relations between the party and the people have been fundamentally improved, and relations between man and man have also been improved. However, the bureaucratic practices of standing high above the masses and showing no concern for them, and of exercising "principled leadership" of issuing documents and holding meetings are still quite common. Consequently, some party and CYL organizations, some leading organs, and some leading cadres are quite divorced from the masses and the masses do not feel attached to them. We should keep a watchful eye on this.

Work related to man is extremely important and it is at once difficult and not difficult to do. It is difficult to do because it needs time and painstaking work to solve the problems of the masses in their work, study, daily life, and thinking. It is not difficult to do because the masses are reasonable. If the leaders show concern for the masses, the masses can understand why there are temporary difficulties. If we do mass work well, we will be able to arouse even greater enthusiasm for building socialism among the people. "Occupying a high position, one should be concerned with the interests of the people" is a well-known sentence in Fan Zhongyan's "Yueyang Tower." Today, this sentence should have added meaning. Our leading cadres at all levels and all comrades doing ideological work, please come out of your towers and courts and work among the masses! This is the demand of the party and the appeal of the people.

END TO FORCED SELLING OF SHODDY GOODS URGED

[Commentator's Article: "Grasp the Crucial Point in Stopping Forced Selling of Undesirable Goods"]

[Text] Commenting on the discussions initiated by this newspaper on the "prevalent malpractice of forced selling of undesirable goods," a State Council official recently pointed out that the main factors behind forced selling are that some state-owned industrial enterprises are not good at management, do not strive for technological advances, ignore consumer needs and force state-run commercial departments to sell their inferior but expensive goods to consumers. These factories first sell their shoddy but expensive and undesirable goods to commercial departments through coercive measures (or by illegal means) and the commercial departments sell them to the masses of the people by compulsory means. In resolving this problem, we must eliminate inferior goods and promote industrial progress.

These remarks by the State Council official fit the remedy to the persistent ailment of the forced selling of undesirable goods.

The malpractice of forcing consumers to buy undesirable goods appears in the field of circulation but the "source of the malpractice" flows from production departments. Some industrial enterprises lag behind technologically and are not good at management, do not strive for further progress and reform, and ignore market demands and the interests of the people and keep on blindly producing inferior and slow-selling goods. Government departments in some areas are fully aware that some goods produced by industrial enterprises in their areas are unsalable because they are poor in quality and high in price. However, being concerned with their local and immediate interests, they support or support in disguised form these industrial enterprises in continuously producing such goods and force or force in disguised form local commercial units to practice the forced selling of such goods. What is more intolerable is that some industrial enterprises abuse the decision-making power that has been extended to them in the course of reform, and promote the sale of goods under all sorts of pretexts and by illegal means such as bribery or by under-the-table commissions. As a result, some inferior and unmarketable goods flow into the field of circulation and are sold by compulsory means along with high-quality, brand-name and salable goods. This is because a rational price system has not yet been established and so far, we cannot properly widen price differentials for products of varying quality. Consequently, the the malpractice of palming off the bad as the good in the afore-mentioned production and marketing links cannot be checked but worsens.

Therefore, the key to the elimination of the malpractice of forced selling of undesirable goods lies in reforming the economic management system, delegating more decision-making power to the enterprise, promoting technological transformation in the existing enterprises, enhancing the quality of products, improving the mix of products, and increasing the output of high-quality, brand-name, and readily marketable commodities by every possible means so as to gradually stop the flow of shoddy and undesirable goods into the field of circulation. Meanwhile, through reform of the price control system, we must gradually straighten out the major price relations and properly widen price differentials for products of varying quality so as to fundamentally change the economic conditions which protect the production of inferior products and eradicate the gounds for forced selling.

Of course, reform undergoes a gradual process of progressive exploration and experimentation. We will be able to finally eliminate the forced selling of undesirable goods through reform. But this does not mean that we can allow the malpractice to spread unchecked in the course of reform. The industrial, commercial, and price control departments, the industrial and commercial management departments and consumers associations should go into action right now to strengthen economic management, administrative intervention, and social supervision so as to check and eliminate the malpractice of forced selling to a maximum in an all-round way.

GU MU SPEAKS ON CRACKING DOWN ON SMUGGLING

OW041109 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1453 GMT 3 May 86

[By RENMIN RIBAO reporter Liu Xiao and XINHUA reporter Chen Naijin]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 3 May (XINHUA) -- The fifth meeting on cracking down on smuggling in the three southeastern provinces was held from 28 April to 3 May in Beijing.

State Councillor Gu Mu attended and spoke at the meeting. Gu Mu pointed out: At present, our country has made good progress in cracking down on smuggling. Various localities and comrades directly involved in the work against smuggling have done a lot of work. Cracking down on smuggling is a prolonged struggle, and so leading cadres at various levels and comrades in charge of the work against-smuggling must carry forward the spirit of arduous struggle, wage resolute struggles against the criminal activites of smuggling and selling smuggled items, and protect state sovereignty in order to insure the successful implementation of reform and the policy of opening to the outside world and to promote the building of socialist modernization in our country.

According to the information provided by the meeting, since the fourth meeting on anti-smuggling work in 1984, the comrades in charge of the work of cracking down on smuggling at various levels in Guangdong, Fujian, and Zhejiang have been faithful to their duties, strengthened efforts to investigate and stop smuggling on land and sea, and taken vigorous measures to investigate and handle major and serious cases of smuggling activities by some enterprises. They have made great achievements in their work.

The meeting decided that attention should be paid to the following work: It is necessary to educate cadres at various levels on straightening out their ideas on and heightening their understanding of the danger and harm of smuggling and selling smuggled items. It is imperative to effectively crack down on serious smuggling activities by enforcing the law strictly. It is necessary to take comprehensive measures to deal with smuggling activities and strengthen the control and management of fishing boats and freighters in coastal areas. The examination and approval of import items in special economic zones and the Hainan Administrative Area should also be strengthened.

The representatives of offices in charge of anti-smuggling activities of Guangdong, Fujian, and Zhejiang Provincial People's Governments, the representatives of units directly handling anti-smuggling work, and responsible comrades of concerned departments of the party Central Committee and the State Council attended the meeting.

'RASH OF SWINDLING' HITS INSURANCE COMPANIES

HK020717 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 2 May 86 p 3

["Special to CHINA DAILY" by Gu Jianzhoung]

[Text] China's insurance companies, facing a booming business across the country, have recently been hit by a rash of swindling.

According to reports from local branches, the People's Insurance Company of China has uncovered more than 40 cases of fraudulent attempts to collect insurance compensation involving tens of thousands of yuan.

The most serious case was in Changping County of Beijing where some 150,000 yuan worth of plywood was burnt to ashes at a multiple-processing factory in an effort to claim 210,000 yuan under a property insurance policy. The factory owned huge debts to its customers.

Police discovered the fraud when they found the warehouse had been forcibly entered and traces of gasoline were detected.

They arrested the factory manager and his accomplice on charges of arson.

A number of other cases of fraud involved patients who took out life insurance when they found out they were fatally ill.

In Guangdong Province, the son of 58-year-old Zhang En took out four 10-year-term policies for a total of 520 yuan on behalf of his father. He lied that his father's health was good although he knew he had lung cancer.

Yang Meiying, 47 died only three months after she bought five 20-year-term life policies for a total of 1,640 yuan. She was found to have been suffering from chronic diabetes and was in critical condition when she bought the insurance.

To prevent more incidents of this type, the People's Insurance Company of China has established new rules.

First, on-the-spot inspection of insurance claims must be made in co-operation with public security organs, transport management offices, hospitals and repair shops to make sure that property damage was due to natural causes.

Second, life insurance applicants must have health certificates verified by hospitals. For those suffering from chronic diseases, the number and terms of policies must be limited. Compensation will not be paid for deaths within three months of the issuing of policies.

POWER MINISTRY OFFICIAL URGES END TO MALPRACTICE

OW031427 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0912 GMT 2 May 86

[By Reporter Yu Youhai, correspondent Lu Bin]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 2 May (XINHUA) — An official of the Ministry of Water Conservancy and Electric Power told reporters: Over the past several years, the power department has stepped up efforts to deal with "power bullies," the malpractice of seeking personal gains has not been eliminated. A handful of workers and staff of some units have abused their powers to extort the consumers.

The official said: To combat the malpractices of the "power bullies" and to correct unhealthy tendencies in the power industry, the Ministry of Water Conservancy and Electric Power, in November 1983, issued the "Decision on Combating the Power Bullies" and published the "Open Letter from the Ministry of Water Conservancy and Electric Power to Power Consumers Throughout the Country." Subsequently, the ministry investigated and handled a number of typical cases of seeking personal gain. We must exert further efforts in this respect in future. On the other hand, we must also strengthen the spiritual civilization of the workers and staff, and foster the ideology of "the people's power industry serving the people." A campaign for high quality service by the power supply units will be launched among the power supply departments across the nation this year. We hope that the entire society will supervise our work.

ZHAO ZIYANG INSCRIPTION FOR BOOK ON REFORMER

SK280635 Beijing BEIJING RIBAO in Chinese 17 Apr 86 p 1

[Text] Premier Zhao Ziyang praised the fine Communist Party member Zhang Jieshi as an "ordinary but great reformer," whose reformative and creative spirit and honest work-style are the embodiment of the spirit of the era.

On 10 April, Premier Zhao Ziyang wrote an inscription for the book "Zhang Jieshi, A Reformer Who Is Honest in Performing His Duties," which will soon be published. The inscription reads: "An indomitable reformative and creative spirit, and an honest work-style of serving the people wholeheartedly are conspicuous strong points of Comrade Zhang Jieshi, and also an embodiment of the spirit of the era. It is hoped that the publication of the book 'Zhang Jieshi, A Reformer Who Is Honest in Performing His Duties,' will help in our study of the noble characters of this ordinary but great reformer, and then in promoting the socialist construction and reform of our country continuously." Premier Zhao Ziyang was deeply concerned over the reform of the Changcheng Raincoat Company, and once heard a report by Comrade Zhang Jieshi.

Comrade Zhang Jieshi was a special-grade model worker of our municipality, and manager of the Changcheng Raincoat Company during his lifetime. Thanks to his reformative and creative spirit, he turned a seriously overstocked enterprise into the largest raincoat company of the country in his 5-year term of office. He unfortunately died of liver cancer on 22 March this year.

The book "Zhang Jieshi, A Reformer Who Is Honest in Performing His Duties," introduces Zhang Jieshi's dedication to reform with his deeds in reform and running the company. It was compiled by the Research Office of the Ministry of Light Industry, the Organization Department and the Party Rectification Office of the Beijing Municipal CPC Committee, and the Beijing Municipal Second Light Industrial General Company, and will be published in late April by the publishing house of the Ministry of Light Industry.

WUHAN SECURITY BUREAU CRACKS TAIWAN KMT SPY CASE

[Report: "The State Security Organ of the Wuhan City Public Security Bureau Cracks Taiwan KMT Spy Case"]

[Text] With the vigorous support of units concerned and active assistance given by the masses of people, the State Security Organ of the Wuhan City Public Security Bureau has cracked a Taiwan KMT spy case after a thorough investigation. The secret agent, Lin Qingtai, was recently sentenced by our country's judicial organ to 12 years imprisonment and deprivation of political rights for 3 years.

Lin Qingtai, a male aged 44, was formerly a worker at the Wuhan "471" Factory. Not long after he settled in Hong Kong, he became acquainted with Taiwan KMT special agents operating in Hong Kong and was recruited by the enemy secret service as a member. After he joined the service, he slipped into Wuhan and other places on many occasions to carry out his activities. With money and materials as the bait, he recruited secret gents on the mainland, gathered political, economic, and military information from our country, and worked energetically in the service of the enemy secret service, thus jeopardizing our country's security.

WEI CHUNSHU ON GUANGXI ECONOMY STRONG, WEAK POINTS

[Excerpts] Comrade Wei Chunshu spoke on making tational arrangements and taking advantage of strong points in his report on the draft of the Seventh 5-Year Plan delivered at the regional people's congress session. He spoke on three issues in this respect: 1) Continually deepen understanding of Guangxi's conditions and have a clear picture of the characteristics and strong poings of its economy. 2) Make rational arrangements for economic construction, based on reality. 3) Open up all opportunities for speeding up the exploitation of resources.

Chairman Wei said: Comrade Yaobang pointed out when inspecting our region this year that Guangxi, Yunnan, and Guizhou have the following outstanding strong points, taking account of the development needs of the whole country: 1) an abundant and relatively full range of mineral resources; 2) abundant subtropical industrial crops; 3) large areas of mountains and pastures.

Guangxi also has abundant hydroelectric resources, the aquatic product resources of the Beibu Guld, tourism resources centered on Guilin, and the foreign trade ports of Beihai and Fangcheng on the coast and Wuzhou. We thus have good conditions for developing foreign economic relations and trade.

However, Guangxi's economic foundation is poor. We are in financial difficulties. There is a large population and little arable land. Our education, science, and technology are backward, and there are not enough talented people. This is the other side of the coin, which constitutes a constraining factor on economic development.

Chairman Wei said: We should gradually establish and form a number of economic development bases. These should include bases for subtropical crops; for raw materials, focused on non-ferrous metals, manganese, non-metal mining, and building materials; for export commodities; for tourism; for mountain area animal husbandry and forestry; and for aquatic production in the Beibu Gulf. We should speed up the development of the key cities and the eastern part of Guangxi, and strengthen the economic and cultural construction of the western part.

We must use our limited capital in the places and sectors where it is most necessary and appropriately concentrate it in subordination to macroeconomic policymaking. The capital should mainly be used for improving energy and communicaitons and i implementing a number of projects with strong points in resources and the ability to produce good economic results.

HAINAN PLA HOLDS MEETING ON PARTY RECTIFICATION

HK010828 Haikou Hainan Island Service in Mandarin 0400 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] The Hainan Military District recently held a meeting of CPC Committee secretaries of units at the regimental level and of party rectification inspectors to study the instructions of the leaders of the central authorities and military commission, to analyze the situation in party rectification, to exchange experiences, and tomake new arrangements for comparison and examination in party rectification at the regimental level.

Liu Guinan, Hainan Military District CPC Committee secretary and political commissar, attended the meeting and spoke. Units including Hospital 187 of a certain anti-aircraft gun regiment of the Yulin Military Subdistrict introduced their experiences at the meeting.

The meeting demanded: Party organizations at and above the regimental level must begin with idiological education and seriously do a good job in comparison and examination. Leaders must do well in publicizing the circulars of the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification and Central Discipline Inspection Commission on strengthening discipline and the spirit of the upper levels' relevant documents on party rectificaiton. They must define guiding ideology and the demarcation line for policies. In comparison and examination, it is necessary to regard the CPC committees and county groups as the main bodies and to regard the practical problems as the main contents. CPC committee secretaries must be bold in facing reality, work hard to accurately grasp the main problems, take the lead in doing well in criticism and self-criticism, and really correct the new unhealthy trends.

The meeting also made arrangements for the method, steps, and time of comparison and examination in the organs of the CPC committees.

HUBEI MEETING VIEWS RECTIFYING PARTY STYLE

HK021012 Wuhan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Excerpts] On the morning of 29 April, the leadership group for straightening out party style under provincial organs and the CPC Committee of provincial organs jointly held a meeting on exchanging experiences in straightening out party style. Ding Fengying, Standing Committee member of the provincial CPC Committee and deputy secretary of the provincial Discipline Inspection Committee, and Tian Xinbo, deputy secretary of the provincial Discipline Inspection Committee, attended the meeting.

At the meeting, responsible comrades from the provincial construction bank, the Chinese Science Academy Wuhan branch, and the provincial educational committee introduced their experiences in straightening out party style.

Comrade Deng Fengying delivered a speech at the meeting. After reviewing the initial achievements provincial organs have made in straightening out party style, she put forth demands on the work of straightening out party style in provincial organs in the next stage. She emphasized that while making continued efforts to curb and correct six malpractices, we must treat correcting malpractices with trade characteristics as important work in straightening out party style. At present, we must seriously deal with some malpractices with trade characteristics about which the masses have many complaints. For example, the malpractice of arbitrarily establishing schools, charging tuituion fees, and issuing diplomas; the malpractice of power industry departments seeking their own interests by taking advantage of their power supply; the malpractice of financial departments seeking their own interests by advantage of their power in granting loans; the malpractice of labor and personnel departments in recruiting workers, students, cadres, and transfering cadres; and the malpractice of commercial departments in dealing with short-supply goods by backstairs influence. Deng Fengying said that leading cadres must set a good example in straightening out party style and must take the lead in correcting malpractices.

In conclusion, Deng Fengying said that we must correctly understand and handle the relationship between straightening out party style and opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy. Malpractices and economic crimes are not necessarily related to reform, to opening up to the outside world, and to enlivening the domestic economy. On the contrary, they have undermined reform and implementation of the open policy. Therefore, it is necessary to resolve these problems.

TAIWANESE PILOT SEEKS ASYLUM IN PRC

Lands at Guangzhou

[Text] Guangzhou, May 3 (XINHUA) -- A Boeing 747 cargo plane of Taiwan's China Airlines, piloted by crew Commander Wang Xijue, landed at Baiyun Airport here today in a bid to return to the motherland, according to the Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC). The plane landed at the airport at 15:10. Also on board were co-pilot Dong Guangxing, mechanic Qiu Mingzhi and 220,000 pounds of cargo. The plane and its cargo have been taken proper care of. Commander Wang Xijue requested to be allowed to live on the mainland to be reunited with his family. CAAC has asked China Airlines to send a representative to Beijing as soon as possible to discuss how to deal with the plane, its cargo and other crew members.

[Text] Beijing, May 3 (XINHUA) -- The Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC) sent a telegram today to Taiwan's China Airlines, inviting it to send a representative to Beijing to discuss how to deal with its cargo plane which landed in Guangzhou earlier today. CAAC informed its Taiwan counterpart in the telegram that a Boeing 747 Cargo plane of China Airlines landed at Guangzhou's Baiyun Airport at 15:10 hours today. The crew commander, Wang Xijue, requested to be allowed to live on the mainland. "Please send your representative as soon as possible to Beijing to discuss with CAAC how to deal with the plane, its cargo and other crew members," CAAC says.

Guangdong Fetes Pilot

["Returned Taiwan Pilot Feted in Guangzhou" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Guangzhou, May 3 (XINHUA) -- Pilot Wang Xijue, who landed a cargo plane of Taiwan's China Airlines at Guangzhou's Baiyun Airport earlier today, was feted here this evening. The hosts included Lin Ruo, secretary of the Guangdong provincial committee of the Chinese Communist Party, and Ye Xuanping, governor of Guangdong. The two leaders welcomed Wang to come and settle down on the mainland.

The pilot, 56, is a native of Sichuan province. He entered an Air Force Academy of the Kuomintang in 1948 and went to Taiwan the following year. Later, he joined the China Airlines. Wang told the hosts that he had been missing the mainland and the kith and kin here. "I'm very happy to see you," he said. The compatriots in Taiwan are all looking forward to the resumption of trade, telecommunications and navigation between Taiwan and the mainland, he added.

[A similar item carried by Guangzhou Guangdong Domestic Service in Mandarin at 0300 GMT on 4 May adds the following: Wang Xijue said: There have been great changes in the motherland in recent years and there has been considerable improvement in living standards. The orientation now is to concentrate efforts on economic development. This is extremely correct.]

Interview With GUANGZHOU RIBAO

OW050925 Beijing in Mandarin to TAIWAN 0400 GMT 5 May 86

[Text] In an interview with reporters of GUANGZHOU RIBAO and Guangdong Television Station at the airport, Wang Xijue, crew commander of the Boeing-747 cargo plane of Taiwan's China Airlines who flew the plane back to the motherland, said with great excitement: I have longed to return to the motherland for years. The Chinese people on both sides of the Taiwan Strait wish for reunification of the motherland and believe that it will come about sooner or later. It is entirely on my own free will that I return to the motherland, and it has nothing to do with any other person. Even my relatives did not know of my plan to return. My wife and children are in Taiwan. I hope they will not be subjected to persecution by the Taiwan authorities. He added: I am now 56 years old and can still fly a few more years. I would gladly render my services to the Civil Aviation Administration of China if so requested.

Wang Xijue toured Guangzhou yesterday. He visited the ongoing China Export Commodities Fair, the China Hotel, the Dongfang Guesthouse, the White Swan Guesthouse, the Garden Hotel, and the Guangzhou Zhongshan Memorial Hall. He also toured the Baiyunshan scenic spot. Wang glowingly said: The changes that have taken place in the motherland are greater and better than I thought.

Wang Xijue flew the plane to Guangzhou from Singapore after loading it with cargo in Bangkok on the afternoon of 3 May. Wang is a native of Suining County, Sichuan Province. His father and brothers still live in his hometown.

BOOK TO ANSWER TAIWAN COMPATRIOTS QUESTIONS

HK280018 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0850 GMT 26 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, 26 Apr (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- To answer the questions raised by Taiwan compatriots and Overseas Chinese interested in the motherland's great cause of reunification, the Mainland Affairs Publishing House has invited the proper specialists and scholars to compile "Answers to Questions Raised by Taiwan Compatriots," which will be published in Beijing this June.

The book is a collection of the 60 questions most frequently raised by Taiwan compatriots. They include: What is meant by "one country, two systems"? What are its essential features? What are the essential features of the mainland's opening up policies? Will the present policies continue to be implemented in the future? How do the government and people on the mainland appraise Dr Sun Yat-sen? Why does the CPC not promise the United States that it will not use force against Taiwan? How are those KMT generals captured many years ago doing now? Why does the CPC allow advocates of "Taiwan independence" to visit the mainland? How can one assure that the CPC does not intend to annex Taiwan? Why is the slogan "Rule of Taiwan by Taiwan people" not favored? Is it still necessary to transform the intellectuals on mainland? How bad was the Tangshan earthquake?

These are just some of the questions concerning the mainland rural economy and the life of urban workers on the mainland. The specialists and scholars will answer these questions on the basis of facts and the principle of seeking truth from facts.

CAL ASKS CATHAY PACIFIC TO NEGOTIATE ON PLANE CREW

HK040736 Hong Kong AFP in English 0728 GMT 4 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 4 (AFP) -- China Airlines (CAL) Sunday asked the Hong-Kong based Cathay Pacific Airways to negotiate on its behalf for the return of its cargo plane with three crew aboard which landed at Guangzhou in southern China, a CAL official said. CAL Public Relations Director Lin Liang-chih said the flag carrier had requested that China return the jet and three crew "according to international practices, and we have asked Cathay Pacific to negotiate with China on our behalf."

The Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC) has sent CAL a telegram asking that it send a representative to Beijing as soon as possible to discuss how to deal with the plane, its cargo and the two other crew members. The Taipei authorities refuse to have any form of direct contact with their rivals in Beijung. The cargo plane serving the Singapore-Bangkok-Hong Kong-Taipei route landed at Guangzhou's Bai Yun airport Saturday at around the time it was scheduled to arrive in Hong Kong. The plane was carrying 214,500 pounds (96,525 kilograms) of cargo which included fruit and tires.

It was not known why Captain Wang Hsi-chueh, 56, flew the plane to China. The two other crew members were co-pilot Tung Kuang-hsing, 57, and flight engineer Chiu Ming-chih, 39. The NEW CHINA NEWS AGENCY (NCNA) quoted Mr. Wang as requesting to be allowed to live on the mainland to be reunited with his family. Mr. Wang's family here refused to believe the NCNA report and begged the Chinese authorities to return him to Taiwan.

Mr. Wang's wife of 30 years, Fei Hsin-lin, said her husband had no reason to defect to China. "We are a very happy family and he has been doing well in his job," she said. Their eldest son, 29, was married in January and another son, 17, is a high-school student. A 26-year-old daughter lives in Canada. Mrs. Wang said her husband, a graduate of Taiwan's Air Force Academy, had received a dozen awards for carrying out successful reconnaissance missions over China before he joined CAL in 1967. "If he had wanted to live on the mainland, he didn't have to wait until now," she said. "I just don't believe it was his decision to fly the plane to China and I beg them (Chinese authorities) to let him come back." Mrs. Wang added that her husband is a native of Sichuan Province in central China. His mother died when he was young, and his aging father may still be alive.

FORMER COMMUNIST PILOT BROADCASTS TO MAINLAND

[Text] Taipei, May 1 (CNA) -- Former Chinese Communist pilot Chen Pao-chung told his compatriots on the China mainland in a broadcast Thursday that the major reason he decided to leave his family and risked his life to seek freedom here is that he hopes to do something meaningful for his free mother country. Chen, who flew a MiG-19 to South Korea two months ago and returned to this nation Wednesday, visited the central broadcasting station in Taipei Thursday. Through a broadcast to the China mainland, Chen explained why he decided to seek freedom.

Chen said that his action to seek freedom is an expression of his support of the government's call for reunifying China through the Three Principles of the People. He believed that he has made a right decision to come to free China and hopes his parents and a girl friend would feel proud of him for what he has done. He also called on the Chinese communists not to take reprisal against his family and girl friend whom he described as innocent and unaware of his plan.

Talking about the current situation on the China mainland, Chen said most people on the China mainland have completely lost their faith in the Chinese Communist regime and its four modernization projects. Chen also said he hopes his colleagues on the mainland will follow his example and take actions to show their support of the call for reunifying China through freedom and democracy.

Earlier in the day, Chen called on Foreign Minister Chu Fusung at his office and expressed thanks to all personnel at the ministry and staffers at the ROC [Republic of China] Embassy in Seoul for helping him realize his wish. In the evening, Chen attended a dinner party at the Air Force Officers Club hosted by Gen. Kuo Ju-lin, commander-in-chief of the ROC Air Force. Also present at the dinner were eight former red Chinese pilots who have succeeded in their bid to seek freedom here including Kao Yu-tsung, Liy Cheng-shih, Li Hsien-pin, Fan Yuan-yen, Wu Jung-ken, Sun Tien-chin, Wang Hsueh-cheng and Hsiao Tien-jen.

YUAN EXPLAINS NO CONTRACTS POLICY WITH PRC

[Text] Taipei, May 1 (CNA) -- The Executive Yuan said Thursday that if the Republic of China establishes "substantive contacts" with the Chinese communists, it would fall into their united front traps. It also pointed out that the country's insistence on not talking and trading with the communist regime is aimed at countering its united front tactics.

The Cabinet made the remarks in a written reply to an interpellation by Legislator Hsieh Hsueh-hsien. The Cabinet said that Peiping is applying a flanking tactic to tempt this country into negotiating with it. "Its ultimate goal is to take over Taiwan," the cabinet said. "To counter Peiping's united front offensive," it added, "we should stand firm and united and continue expanding our strength based on the past achievements." The Cabinet said, "We should have the confidence that the Three Principles of the People will prevail over communism in the near future."

On the suspension of diplomatic relations with those countries that have established formal ties with the Peiping regime, the Cabinet said that the government has taken various practical factors into consideration before making a final decision. "Such decision should also comply with our basic anti-communist policy and national interests as well," it noted.

PRC REJECTS CPA AS MEDIATOR OVER DEFECTING PLANE

HK050517 Hong Kong Commercial Radio in English 0430 GMT 5 May 86

[Text] China has rejected an attempt to get Cathay Pacific Airways [CPA] to mediate in talks on the return to Taiwan of a CAL [China Air Lines] plane which landed in Guangzhou at the weekend. Head of the Civil Aviation Authority in Guangzhou (Yu Yuen Yen) told Commercial Radio that any discussion must be done directly between Taipei and Beijing, not through a third party. He stressed that the questions of the plane and the defecting pilot are an internal affair and has nothing to do with other people.

The Boeing 747 was flown to Guangzhou on Saturday bypassing Hong Kong where it was to have landed. The pilot Wang Hsi-chueh sought political asylum afterwards but two other crew members of the cargo plane want to return to Taiwan. Cathay Pacific Airways have refused all comment on the matter. But a spokesman for CAL, Larry Lin told Commercial Radio on the telephone a short while ago that they had not had word from Beijing on the matter. He said CAL has appointed Cathay Pacific to talk for them and this is permitted under international law.

[Begin Lin recording] We appointed CPA to do the contact for China Air Lines to return the aircraft and the crew members and the cargo. According to the international civil aviation traditional practice no one should keep the aircraft and crew members from other airlines. So they should return the aircraft and crew members to China Air Lines. [end recording]

HSIN WAN PAO CRITICIZES TAIWAN NO CONTACTS POLICY

HK040808 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 4 May 86 p 1

["New Talk" column: "There Should Be a Breakthrough in the Three Nos' Policy as Taiwan Plane Lands in Guangzhou"]

[Text] The Taiwan authorities face a tricky problem: how to get back the China Airlines Boeing 747 that landed at Guangzhou's White Cloud Airport yesterday. The mainland has repeatedly declared in recent years that it hopes for "three contacts" with Taiwan -- in postal services, commerce, and transport links. But the reply of the Taiwan authorities has been "three nos" -- no contacts, no talks, no compromise.

Now that this problem has cropped up, will they initiate contacts and talks with the mainland and try to reach a solution in order to recover this aircraft which was purchased from the United States only last year or not? The mainland is handling this aircraft incident in a way markedly different from those of the past. Several aspects of this merit attention.

First, the pilot Wang Xijue diverted to Guangzhou while flying from Bankok to Hong Kong. Reporting this, XINHUA merely said that he "flew the plane to the motherland and requested to stay there and to be united with his family." This is completely different from any reports issued previously.

Second, the Civil Aviation Administration of China [CAAC] immediately cabled Taiwan's China Airlines to inform them of the incident. This was obviously treating the incident as a matter to be handled by the two business organizations, without inflating or escalating it.

Third, although the cable was brief, it vaguely revealed that the aircraft and those crew members who did not wish to stay would be allowed to return. The cable said, "our administration invites you to send your representative to Beijing as soon as possible to discuss how to deal with the aircraft, its cargo, and the other crew members."

Fourth, leaders of Guangdong Province received and feted Wang Xijue yesterday evening, but the other two crew members were not present. However, Guangdong officials stated: "We welcome those who come and will give a send-off to those who leave," thus expressing an attitude of allowing freedom of movement. This is precisely an important component part of the Taiwan policy previously stated by the mainland authorities.

Up to now, China Airlines has not yet contacted the CAAC. It appears that this is not a problem that can be solved by China Airlines alone: It can only make a move after the Taiwan authorities have made their choice. However, the Taiwan authorities are unable to produce a suitable counterstrategy in a hurry, since they are locked into the policy of the "three nos."

A report from Taipei in a Hong Kong paper this morning said that China Airlines issued a statement early today to the effect that the Taiwan authorities would bring the two crew members back to Taiwan with the help of a third party. The report did not mention the aircraft. The report did not elaborate on who the third party might be. If the Taiwan authorities want foreigners to act for them, then the Chinese people on both sides of the Taiwan Strait will feel a common disappointment. The mainland has already clearly stated that this affair can be satisfactorily dealt with through contacts. If they want foreigners to act on their behalf in a small matter between Chinese, do they still want to use the old almanac of 40 years ago?

Maybe the location mentioned by the CAAC in its hope that China Airlines would send someone to Beijing was a bit conspicuous. But so long as China Airlines makes contact, it seems that this point is by no means non-negotiable.

Apart from the above-mentioned "three nos," the Taiwan authorities have recently added a further "three nos" regarding representation in the Asian Development Bank -- no recognition, no withdrawal, no attendance. A few days ago there was a welcome rally for the "anticommunist hero Chen Baozhong." All this comes under the category of strangling yourself in your own web. The result is that when this incident of the China Airlines plane landing in Guangzhou occurs, they have no room to maneuver and can hardly deal with it. It is evident that the time for a breakthrough in the "three nos" has indeed come.

[Text] Beijing, 2 May (WEN WEI PO) -- According to well-informed sources, the CPC Central Committee and the State Council are paying close attention to the accident in the Soviet nuclear power station and are asking Chinese nucelar power experts to submit a report to the central authorities about the accident and give their opinions. At the same time, the pace of the progress of the construction of the Daya Bay nuclear power station will not be affected by this incident.

According to a spokesman of the Ministry of Nuclear Industry, following the outbreak of a serious fire in the Soviet nuclear power station, the central authorities have already asked Chinese nuclear experts to provide information and give their opinions. The minister of nuclear industry is personally heading a group of experts to study the impact of this accident on the development of China's nuclear power industry. The spokesman said that the nuclear power station where the accident occurred is the type of reactor with a "graphite core," but in developing its nuclear power industry, China will choose "pressurized water reactors." Our country has selected "pressurized water reactors" for both its Qinshan nuclear power station and Daya Bay nuclear power station. He said that in the past China conducted numerous studies and according to the results, decided to select "pressurized water reactors," because the security coefficient of "graphite reactors" is inadequate and because "pressurized water reactors" are safer.

Since in a "graphite reactors," fuel rods are put in pipes and because there is pressure in the pipes when the reactor is operating, radioactive matter will directly enter the atmosphere if there is an accident. But in a "pressurized water reactor," the whole reactor is covered by a pressure shell, which constitutes a safety shell that ensures that in case of an accident, radioactive matter will be contained in this shell and will not leak into the atmosphere.

Pollution is relatively small in an accident in a "pressurized water reactor" such as the accident in the Three Mile Island nuclear power station in the United States. The group that the minister of nuclear industry personally heads, consists of security defense experts, environmental protection experts, scientific intelligence units and nuclear engineers, including "graphite reactor" experts. Their work covers the following spheres: Collecting materials about this accident; analyzing the structure and components of various types of reactors; and providing the central authorities with opinions on the development of China's nuclear power industry. At present, experts on "graphite reactors" are simulating the various scenarios which may have led to the accident. He expressed the view that so far no analysis has been made to give the actual cause of the accident and that the Soviet side has not yet published anything about its cause. Chinese and Soviet experts have not made any contact concerning the incident.

Concerning the impact of this incident on the development of China's nuclear power industry, the spokesman said that although the accident occurred in the Soviet Union, it has had a very shocking impact on us, since people have a common worry about possible accidents in nuclear power plants. It is only natural that they are talking about the incident. Therefore, the central authorities are also paying close attention to this accident. However, the spokesman has not heard of any change in policy decisions concerning our country's nuclear power industry.

On the other hand, the Guangdong Nuclear Power Joint Company has already decided to postpone its board meeting in order to collect sufficient information before the meeting. The board meeting was originally scheduled on 6 May, but it has now been decided to postpone it until 14 May in order to have sufficient information to discuss the matter at the meeting. The company said that this accident in the Soviet Union has sounded an alarm for China and made it pay close attention to security since the very beginning of the development of its nuclear industry. Before the incident occured, the central authorities issued one instruction after another calling on us to do a good job of safety. Now, the various departments concerned will attach even greater importance to this issue.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON TOKYO SUMMIT

Leaders Issue Declaration

OW051826 Beijing XINHUA in English 1813 GMT 5 May 86

[Text] Tokyo, May 5 (XINHUA) -- Leaders of seven major industrialized countries attending the May 4-6 summit today called on the United States and the Soviet Union to resume their "high-level dialogue and negotiation" to improve East-West relations.

In a declaration on political issues, entitled "Looking Forward to a Better Future," which was released at a press conference by Japanese Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe, the summit leaders said that they are "committed to addressing East-West differences through high-level dialogue and negotiation." In this regard, the declaration, while expressing appreciation for the United States' negotiation efforts, called on the Soviet Union "also to negotiate positively."

"To that end," the declaration said, "each of us supports balanced substantial and verifiable reductions in the level of arms; measures to increase confidence and reduce the risks of conflicts; and the peaceful resolution of disputes."

Speaking of their relations with the developing countries, the summit participants said they have acknowledged that their countries "cannot enjoy lasting stability and prosperity without stability and prosperity in the developing world." A number of developing nations had called on the summit participating countries to take practical steps on elimination or cut of trade protectionism, expansion of imports from the developing countries, raising and stabilization of the price of raw materials and stabilization of the price of raw materials and increase of aid for development.

In a statement on anti-terrorism, the summit leaders pledged to fight "relentlessly" against international terrorism and criticized Libya by name for its alleged "sponsoring or supporting" of terrorist activities. Terrorism "must be fought relentlessly and without compromise," the statement said. The statement specified anti-terrorism measures including refusal to export arms to states which sponsor or support terrorism, and strict limits on the size of the diplomatic and consular missions which engage in terrorist activities. The statement also called for collaboration from all nations and international organizations such as the United Nations, the International Civil Aviation Organization and the International Maritime Organization in fighting against terrorism.

In a statement on nuclear safety, the summit leaders said, "Nuclear power is and, properly managed, will continue to be an increasingly widely used source of energy. For each country the maintenance of safety and security is an international responsibility, and each country engaged in nuclear power generation bears full responsibility for the safety of the design, manufacture, operation and mainentance of its installations."

The statement called on the Soviet Union to provide more information on the Chernobyl nuclear accident.

It also welcomed and encouraged the work of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) in seeking to improve international cooperation on the safety of nuclear installations, the handling of nuclear accidents and their consequences.

XINHUA Views Declaration

OW051802 Beijing XINHUA in English 1748 GMT 5 May 86

["Roundup: Tokyo Summit Issues Political Statements by Zhao Zijian" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Tokyo, May 5 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. got its way in the second day of the summit of the seven industrial countries as a statement from the summit leaders blamed Libya for "sponsoring or supporting international terrorism."

Postponed three times and after three drafts, the final version of the summit statement issued this afternoon listed six measures which the summit seven will jointly take against what they regard as international terrorism.

The six measures are:

-- Refuse to sell arms to countries which support terrorism;
-- Limit the diplomatic missions and other official bodies of states which engage in terrorist activities, control the travels of their personnel or even close such missions or bodies;
-- Denial of entry of any people who have been expelled or excluded from one of the summit seven countries for terrorism;
-- Improve extradition procedures;
-- Stricter immigration and visa requirements for nationals in states suspected of terrorist activities;
-- Strengthen bilateral and multilateral cooperation between various security organizations.

The statement also said that the leaders have agreed to "intensify the exchange of information" on terrorist activities.

The statement on international terrorist issue was added to the agenda in the wake of U.S. raids against Libya on April 15. The raid was condemned worldwide and was a topic of disputes between the U.S. and its allies.

As the summit opened, the U.S. got strong backing from Britain, which is favoring an extradition treaty with the U.S. because it has "terrorist" problems with the Irish Republican Army. During the morning session today, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher was reportedly trying to "sharpen" the language of the statement, which centered on whether or not to name Libya in the final version.

Though the U.S. idea finally got through, sources here have doubts that the root problems of the terrorist issue have been pinpointed and that the concentration on the six measures proposed may not solve the problem.

As soon as Japanese Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe finished reading the statement to the gathering reporters, he was questioned about the wisdom of Japan's joining the action because Japan was not involved in the Libya tussel and she is now trying to promote the Middle East peace process. The naming of Libya will prevent Japan from making effective arguments due to possible Arab resentments.

In a separate statement this afternoon the summit leaders have criticised the Soviet Union for withholding information about the Chernobyl nuclear power station accident.

However, in a conciliatory note, the statement said the leaders are satisfied that the Soviet Union has shown willingness to discuss immediately with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), possibly for post-accident analysis.

The two statements, together with a previous political declaration, have taken up so much time for the three-day economic summit that economic matters have appeared secondary in terms of urgency. A Japanese official complained to reporters this afternoon that there is little time for economic discussions among the presidents and prime ministers.

Ties With Developing Nations

OW051752 Beijing XINHUA in English 1735 GMT 5 May 86

["News Analysis: Will Tokyo Summit Make Good on Commitments to Developing Countries? (by Zeng Hu)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, May 5 (XINHUA) -- Some developing nations may be pleased with today's Tokyo summit political declaration in which leaders from the seven economic powers acknowledged the indispensable part of the less developed countries in the world's economic and political affairs.

But, the developing countries will have to wait and see if the "big seven" come out of the economic discussions with something to meet the real needs of less developed countries or only make their acknowledgment as good as it sounds.

In the Tokyo declaration, named "Looking Forward to a Better Future," leaders from the United States, Japan, Britain, Federal Germany, France, Italy, Canada and the European Community said that today's world is characterized by ever increasing interdependence. Their countries, the leaders noted, "Cannot enjoy lasting stability and prosperity without stability and prosperity in the developing world." The leaders also pledged to "fight against hunger, disease and poverty, so that developing nations can also play a full part in building a common, bright future."

However, as observers see it, the knotty economic problems that hamper development of Third World nations will not be solved with easily uttered commitments unless the developed countries take concrete measures.

Before the summit started yesterday, many countries in Asia, Middle East and Latin America voiced their demand for reducing trade restrictions in the industrialized world, alleviating debt burdens and stabilizing or increasing raw material prices. The Association of South East Asian Nations (ASEAN), which includes Indonesia, the Philippines, Malaysia, Thailand, Singapore and Brunei, told U.S. President Ronald Reagan last week that the summit should take a clear position against protectionism and in favor of more stable raw material prices.

Thailand repeated its particular worry to Federal German Chancellor Helmut Kohl during his stopover in Bangkok last week about the impact of the U.S. Congress' proposed farm act on its exports of rice and other agricultural goods.

India has called for reforms in the international monetary and financial systems, while Singapore, hit by a declining demand for its manufactured goods, wants Japan and the EEC to remove trade barriers.

In a message to the summit, the presidents of Argentina, Brazil, Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Chile, Mexico, Peru, the Dominican Republic, Uruguay and Venezuela urged participants to take up the debt problem. The debts of these nations account for 80 percent of Latin America's total debt of 372 billion U.S. dollars.

The Latin America presidents also called for a change in the current world economic order, lower interest rates, higher raw materials prices and removal of trade protectionism by industrial countries. And, they pointed out that their debt-ridden economies are vulnerable to any fluctuations in world economy.

Economists have noted that the current international environment, though favorable to industrialized nations whose economies are expected to grow considerably this year because of the oil price slump, is not putting developing countries on a sound path toward growth.

Along with rising protectionism, the fall in commodities prices and high real interest rates have contributed to growing inflation, slow economic growth and skyrocketing unemployment in the heavily indebted countries, they said. Under such circumstances, analysts believe that participants in the Tokyo summit are facing a difficult task in deciding how much they would like to sacrifice in order to keep their commitments from becoming only lip service.

ENVOY ADDRESSES UN SESSION ON DEBT PROBLEM

OW060608 Beijing XINHUA in English 0547 GMT 6 May 86

[Text] United Nations, May 5 (XINHUA) -- With the resumption of the 40th regular session of the U.N. General Assembly, the second economic and financial committee reopened its debate today on the debt problem of developing nations. The week-long debate is to focus on international cooperation in money, finance, debt, resource flows, trade and development. Speaking on behalf of the "Group of 77", Ignac Golob of Yugoslavia said that the external debt problem of developing countries concerns everyone.

"The debt problem requires a political dialogue between the debtor and creditor countries and international financial and banking institutions. Developing countries believe that real interest rates should be brought down, while payments, grace and consolidation periods should be stretched out. Debt-service payments should be limited to a percentage of export earnings. The criteria of international financial institutions should be substantially changed." Developing countries, Golob pointed out, have consistently emphasized that the debt problem cannot be solved in an environment in which commodity prices continue to fall, foreign resources continue to dry up, real interest rates remain high and no action is taken to resist and roll back protectionist measures. Golob also said that a limited group of countries cannot decide on issues which are of vital importance to the rest of the world.

Tamas Foldeak from Hungary said that in many developing countries the debt problem has become a real threat to their economic security and that a necessary condition for solving the problem is a real reduction in interest rates, as well as the restructuring of the international monetary and financial system.

Wang Baoliu of China noted that a fundamental solution to the debt problem can only be found in promoting the growth of developing countries, and he urged the major developed countries to adopt measures to meet the real needs of the debtor countries.

Denmark's Finn Jonck said that the issues of growth, monetary stability, alleviation of debt problems, commodity earnings and trade call for intensified efforts to ensure conditions for sustained, non-inflationary growth. "That requires a continuation of growth-oriented adjustment policies in both developed and developing countries," Jonck said.

UN URGES USSR TO PROVIDE INFORMATION ON CHERNOBYL

OW030814 Beijing XINHUA in English 0700 GMT 3 May 86

[Text] Geneva, May 2 (XINHUA) -- Mostafa Tolba, executive director of the U.N. environment program, today called on the Soviet Union to provide precise information on the Chernobyl nuclear plant catastrophe to the world. Tolba told reporters that he made the call during a meeting this morning with the Soviet ambassador to the United Nations organization. "In fact, the right for information in cases of serious pollution, and particularly when the pollution passes across the borders (of a country), is one of the rights of mankind," he said. He said he wants to know the "original" intensity of the radiation, that is, the magnitude of radiation produced at the moment the accident occurred in the Soviet nuclear plant.

GORBACHEV MESSAGE TO REAGAN ON U.S.-USSR SUMMIT

OW041436 Beijing XINHUA in English 1359 GMT 4 May 86

[Text] Tokyo, May 4 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev has sent a message to U.S. President Ronald Reagan through British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher indicating his willingness to hold U.S.-Soviet summit in the United States this year, a U.S. official said today. During a private meeting with Reagan at the Tokyo economic summit which opened here today, Thatcher passed the message handed to her last Wednesday by the newly-appointed Soviet ambassador to London, Leonid Zamyatin.

The U.S. official who declined to be named said the "upshot" of the message was that Gorbachev "is still interested in a summit this year and wondered if the United States was interested in a summit." The official said there has been no formal response from President Reagan as yet, but he added, "the answer, of course, is yes."

Gorbachev and Reagan reached an agreement during their first meeting last November in Geneva for the Soviet leader to go to the United States this year. However, the two sides failed to fix a date for the talks. The Soviet Union then canceled a meeting between Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze in mid-May protesting U.S. air strike of Libya on April 15.

During her South Korean visit on the eve of the Tokyo economic summit, at which leaders from major Western industrialized nations get together to discuss political issues such as East-West relations as well as economic ones, Thatcher said a new U.S.-Soviet summit was important for progress in arms control. She said that no recent events such as the U.S. air strike on Libya or the Soviet nuclear disaster had made a summit less necessary. "I believe the need is as great as it was before, and I believe it will come about," Thatcher said.

HU YAOBANG MEETS FOREIGN TRADE UNION DELEGATIONS

OW301232 Beijing XINHUA in English 1224 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 30 (XINHUA) -- Chinese leaders Hu Yaobang, Wan Li, Xi Zhongxun, Hu Qili, Wu Xueqian, Ni Zhifu and Gu Mu, met eight visiting foreign trade union delegations at the Great Hall of the People here today. The delegations are from Benin, Burundi, The Congo, Italy, Japan, Sri Lanka, Togo and Yugoslavia, and they have been invited to attend the centennial activities of "May 1" in Beijing. The Chinese leaders also met a Communist Party delegation from Australia and Alain Roux, a scholar of the French Communist Party.

CUI YUELI, DELEGATION ATTEND WHO CONFERENCE

OW051844 Beijing XINHUA in English 1453 GMT 5 May 86

[Text] Geneva, May 5 (XINHUA) -- The 39th conference of the World Health Organization (WHO), attended by representatives from 140 countries, opened here today to review its work in the past year and current health issues of the world. According to sources of the organization, the conference will discuss the application of the strategy of "health for all from present to the year of 2000", a work programme adopted in May of 1981, and the work report by WHO Director General Halfdan Mahler.

Other topics for discussion include the health issues of Southern Africa and Arab countries resided by Palestinian refugees and the inter-department cooperation in a country.

The conference, attended by health officials as well as ministers of finance and agriculture of certain countries, will also look for more effective ways to improve the well-being of the world.

The Chinese delegation, headed by Health Minister Cui Yueli, is attending the meeting which will end on May 16. The WHO, consisting of 166 countries, holds such a meeting every year.

WAN LI, OTHERS AT SOCCER TOURNEY OPENING

OW051002 Beijing XINHUA in English 0639 GMT 5 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 5 (XINHUA) -- The opening ceremony of the China Youth News TDK Cup under-18 soccer tournament was held here this morning. Nearly 200 players from Brazil: England, France, Thailand, China, and China's Beijing, Liaoning and the army teams participated in the ceremony.

Among those present on the occasion were Wan Li, vice-premier of the Chinese State Council, and Chen Xitong, mayor of the capital city.

Speaking on behalf of the organizing committee, Liu Yandong, president of the committee, first welcomed the foreign guests and wished the tournament success. "The blossoming May highlights the spring of the international peace year in Beijing. It is by such a good time that the tournament starts. The youth of various countries came here to spread the seeds of friendship in safeguarding peace and humanity of the future. I believe it will surely be fruitful."

Yuan Weimin, vice minister of the Chinese Physical Culture and Sports Commission and president of the Chinese Football Association, also made remarks. He said the tourney, which will feature different styles of South America, Europe and Asia to be displayed by players from world soccer powerful nations such as Brasil, England and France, apart from Thailand, would provide the Chinese players with an excellent chance to learn from their counterparts and delight the Chinese soccer fans.

Vice-Premier Wan Li received the managers of the four foreign teams prior to the ceremony.

The tournament will start this evening with Thailand vs. China's army team, England vs. China in the Workers' Stadium, while France vs. China's Liaoning, and Brazil vs. Beijing in Xiannongtan Stadium.

PLA CHIEF OF STAFF ARRIVES IN WASHINGTON

OW060622 Beijing XINHUA in English 0611 GMT 6 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 5 (XINHUA) -- Chief of General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army (PLA) Yang Dezhi arrived here this afternoon for a 16-day friendly visit to the United States.

Yang, accompanied by his wife Shen Gejun and Vice Chief of General Staff Han Huaizhi, were greeted at the Andrews Air Force Base by Lieutenant General Richard Burpee of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff; Han Xu, Chinese ambassador to the United States; and Zhang Zhi, Minister of the Chinese Embassy.

Upon his arrival, Yang said that he has "come with the aim to seek friendship" and to "continue the exchange of views with the U.S. side on issues of common concern."

"I am confident that this visit will also help to further develop the relations between our two countries and our armed forces," he said in a written statement. "We have always held that a stable and amicable relationship between Ching and the United States accords with the interests of our two peoples and makes for world peace," he added.

U.S. OFFICIAL ON PROGRESS IN EXCHANGES WITH USSR

OW020918 Beijing XINHUA in English 0850 GMT 2 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 1 (XINHUA) -- A high-ranking U.S. official claimed today that despite the recent strains in U.S.-Soviet relations, progress has been made in implementing the new U.S.-Soviet exchange agreement signed in Geneva last November. Speaking to the American National Press Club this morning, Charles Wick, director of the U.S. Information Agency, which is responsible for implementing the agreement, told reporters that the Soviet Union, for the first time, has agreed to send groups of Soviet teenagers to the United States this summer and is giving serious consideration to sending students to study at a prep school in New England.

"This is an important, even momentous development which we are very excited about," he said. He added that the Soviets have also agreed in principle to expand the sister cities program from six to 16 cities, with a possible increase to 25 over the next two years.

The United States wants to increase people-to-people exchanges with the Soviet Union as a first step to improving relations between the two countries, Wick said. In recent months, Wick and other U.S. officials have traveled to the Soviet Union to discuss exchanges with their Soviet counterparts. Wick termed the discussions "friendly" and fruitful."

The new U.S.-Soviet exchange agreement resulted from the Geneva summit between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev last November. The agreement will extend through 1991.

GORBACHEV RESPONDS TO TEST-BAN REQUEST

OW030304 Beijing XINHUA in English 0239 GMT 3 May 86

[Text] Moscow, May 2 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Gorbachev said his country is "in no hurry to resume" nuclear testing and still wants an accord with the United States to end atomic explosions, according to the official Soviet news agency TASS today.

In his response to an April 8 letter from the leaders of six nations calling for a ban on such tests, Gorbachev repeated his earlier proposal for a special summit with U.S. President Ronald Reagan in a European capital to discuss ways for terminating nuclear weapons experiments and said he supports the call issued by these leaders to both superpowers to refrain from nuclear testing until the second Gorbachev-Reagan summit, scheduled in the United States later this year. The six nations who made the appeal to the United States and the Soviet Union are Argentina, India, Mexico, Tanzania, Sweden and Greece.

Gorbachev announced a unilateral nuclear test ban last summer lasting from August 6 to the end of 1985 and extended it until such time as the United States conducted such a test. The Soviet Union ended the eight-month-old moratorium last month following one of Washington's nuclear detonations. Noting that his country "took a certain risk" by its unilateral moratarium, Gorbachev said, "We are compelled to lift the unilateral commitment taken by us voluntarily not to conduct any nuclear explosions, because we cannot waive our own security and the security of our allies and friends. I repeat the actions of the U.S.A. compelled us to take this decision."

The Soviet leader said, however, "I would like to emphasize that the Soviet Union is doing everything necessary to make a bilateral Soviet-American moratorium a reality. We are prepared to return any moment to the question of a mutual moratorium if the United States does not conduct nuclear tests." "We are in no hurry to resume nuclear tests," Gorbachev said.

Gorbachev said Washington's actions following the U.S.-Soviet Geneva summit last November are "at variance with the task of searching ways for improving international relations and intensifying the positive tendencies that emerged as a result of the meeting." Gorbachev accused the United States of causing "direct damage" to the dialogue between the two countries.

MOSCOW CRITICIZES U.S. APPROACH TO TOKYO SUMMIT

OW050258 Beijing XINHUA in English 0155 GMT 5 May 86

[Text] Moscow, May 5 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet media yesterday criticized Washington for intending to harness its partners at the seven-nation summit in Tokyo with its "neoglobalism" and to "gloss over" disagreements in the economic field. "The very first statements by U.S. President Ronald Reagan (in Tokyo) have indicated that Washington intends to take advantage of the Tokyo meeting to harness its partners to further its aggressive neoglobalist strategy," said a report by the official TASS news agency.

TASS was referring to comments made by Reagan in his weekly radio address to the American people, which was delivered from Tokyo. The Soviet Communist Party newspaper PRAVDA said the United States wants to emphasize terrorism at the summit "to divert... attention from the most important problems of international relations." The TASS report also said the seven nations at the summit -- Britain, Canada, Federal Germany, France, Italy, Japan and the United States -- will be unable to agree on ways to resolve their economic differencas.

BOLIVIAN FOREIGN MINISTER BEGINS VISIT

Arrives in Beijing

OW021607 Beijing XINHUA in English 1558 GMT 2 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 2 (XINHUA) -- Guillermo Bedregal Gutierrez, Bolivian minister of foreign affairs and worship, who leads a government political and economic delegation, flew in here this evening. He has come at the invitation of Wu Xueqian, Chinese state councillor and foreign minister. Among those welcoming him at the airport was Zhu Qizhen, vice-foreign minister.

Minister Bedregal is the first Bolivian foreign minister to visit China since the two countries established diplomatic relations in July 1985. Before his departure, he said at the airport of La Paz that, his China visit aims at deepening cooperation and exchanges between Bolivia and China in the fields of politics, economy, culture, science and technology. He said he will also hold discussions with Chinese leaders on international developments and issues directly related to the interests of developing countries especially Bolivia and China.

Holds Talks With Wu Xueqian

[Text] Beijing, May 3 (XINHUA) -- Both Chinese and Bolivian foreign ministers expressed their satisfaction with the smooth development of the bilateral relations during their talks held here today.

Wu Xueqian, Chinese state councillor and foreign minister, and Guillermo Bedregal Gutierrez, visiting Bolivian minister of foreign affairs and worship, exchanged views on the international issues of common concern and ways to continue the development of bilateral relations. Wu said since the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries in July 1985, relationship between China and Bolivia has entered a new stage. He spoke highly of the efforts made by the Bolivian Government for the establishment and development of the bilateral relations. He stated both China and Bolivia are engaged in the national development, and interested in the growth of South-South cooperation. He expressed his belief that mutual understanding and friendly cooperation between the two countries will continue to grow.

Bedregal said as Bolivia is a developing country, it works for Non-Aligned Movement, the enhancing of unity among developing countries and the safeguarding of world peace. He said friendly cooperation between the two countries enjoy broad prospects and, in particular, there are good conditions for further economic and technological cooperation.

Wu Xueqian Addresses Banquet

OW031628 Beijing XINHUA in English 1610 GMT 3 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 3 (XINHUA) -- Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian expressed the belief here today that Sino-Bolivian friendly cooperation would see fast growth through common efforts by the two countries. Wu said this at a banquet he gave here this evening to welcome visiting Bolivian Minister of Foreign Affairs Guillermo Bedregal Gutierrez and a Bolivian Government political and economic delegation led by him. Wu praised the Bolivian Government and people for their continued efforts to safeguard their national sovereignty and revitalize their national economy. The establishment of Sino-Bolivian diplomatic relations in July 1985 opened a new chapter in the relations between the two countries, he pointed out.

He said that the visit of the Bolivian minister, in less than a year after the establishment of diplomatic relations, demonstrated the importance the Bolivian Government attached to the development of its relations with China. Wu said that the two countries share identical or similar views on many important international issues as well as a common wish to further their relations. He expressed sympathy with many Third World countries which are facing serious economic problems caused by the irrational international economic order as well as natural disasters.

[Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 1635 GMT on 3 May in a similar report adds the following: "On the international economic situation, Wu Xueqian said: Because of irrational international economic order, the majority of developing countries are having great economic difficulties and facing such pressing problems as huge debts, intensified trade protectionism, lower prices of primary products, and natural disasters. We deeply sympathize with these countries."]

He reiterated that it is an important aspect of China's foreign policy to strengthen its unity and cooperation with other developing countries. China, as a developing socialist country, will stand unswervingly on the side of the Third World countries and work together with them to transform the old international economic order, promote the North-South dialogue and strengthen South-South cooperation.

Bedregal said in his toast that his visit to China is of great significance. The Bolivian and Chinese peoples share identical views on safeguarding their ideals and fighting to obtain their goals. He condemned some countries for aggravating international relations by creating tension to further their own interests. He said that Bolivia, with its political will and stability, is a basic member of the Non-Aligned Movement. The Third World countries, he said, should establish various institutions to safeguard world peace and triumph over the remnants of colonialism and neo-colonialism courageously and forcefully. Above all, he added, an international law for democracy and peace should be worked out to counter occupation of other countries and hegemonism.

Meets With Li Xiannian

[Text] Beijing, May 5 (XINHUA) -- President Li Xiannian said here today that China is a developing country and wants to strengthen its cooperation with Bolivia and other Third World countries in its socialist construction. Li made these remarks during a meeting with a government political and economic delegation led by Bolivian Minister of Foreign Affairs and Worship Guillermo Bedregal Gutierrez.

Li said that China and Bolivia enjoy very good relations and share identical or similar views on many issues. Li also noted that Bedregal had been the first Bolivian high-ranking official to visit China at the head of a government delegation since the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries last July. The current visit would promote the development of Sino-Bolivian cooperation and friendship, Li said.

Turning to international issues, Li reiterated China's firm support to the Contadora Group, hoping that the South-South cooperation will be enhanced to help promote the "North-South dialogue".

Bedregal said that Bolivia, a member nation of the Non-Aligned Movement, supports the Contadora Group and the Lima Group in their efforts for a peaceful solution to conflicts in Central America. Bedregal hoped that Bolivia and China, both Third World countries, should continue to strengthen their cooperation and share each others's experience.

The Bolivian minister forwarded Li a letter from Bolivian President Victor Paz Estenssoro to Chairman Deng Xiaoping.

Gives Medal To Wu Xueqian

[Text] Beijing, May 5 (XINHUA) -- Guillermo Bedregal Gutierrez, Bolivian minister of foreign affairs and worship, conferred a great-cross-grade National Medal of the Andes Condor on Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian here this evening.

Wu expressed his thanks for the honor accorded to him. He said that Bedregal's current China visit is a great event in Sino-Bolivian relations and that bilateral cooperations will score greater success.

Wu was also honored at a banquet given by the Bolivian foreign minister after the ceremony. The Bolivian guests left here tonight for a visit to Shanghai and Guangzhou.

Meets Zhu Liang

[Text] Beijing, May 5 (XINHUA) -- Zhu Liang, head of the International Liaison Department of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, met with Guillermo Bedregal Gutierrez, Bolivian minister of foreign affairs and worship, here today.

Bedregal conveyed the desire of the Nationalist Revolutionary Movement of Bolivia to expand its relations with the Chinese Communist Party.

Zhu Liang said the Chinese Communist Party is willing to develop its relations with the Bolivian movement and other friendly political parties on the principled basis of independence, complete equality, mutual-respect and non-interference in each other's internal affairs.

The Bolivian minister called on Chinese Minister of Metallurgical Industry Qi Yuanjing and Minister of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fisheries He Kang this afternoon. They also paid their respects to the remains of late Chairman Mao Zedong here.

Signs Cooperation Accords

[Text] Beijing, May 5 (XINHUA) -- Four documents on cultural and economic cooperation between Chinese and Bolivian Governments were signed here this evening. The documents were signed by Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian and Bolivian Minister of Foreign Affairs and Worship Guillermo Bedregal Gutierrez on behalf of their respective governments. These documents comprise an agreement on cultural cooperation, an agreement on economic and technological cooperation, a protocol on projects of economic and technological cooperations and a note on the partical [spelling as received] repair of the national number one irrigation system of Bolivia.

LI XIANNIAN, CITY LEADERS INSPECT TIANJIN

OW051431 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0057 GMT 5 May 86

[By reporter Zhu Zemin]

[Text] Tianjin, 5 May (XINHUA) -- On a recent inspection tour of Tianjin, Li Xiannian, president of the PRC and Standing Committee member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, emphatically pointed out: In developing the economy and carrying out reform, we must pay attention to strengthening ideological and political work. Our party has built itself up by relying on ideological and political work. We cannot do anything well without ideological and political work. He pointed out: In doing ideological and political work, we must continue to bring forth new ideas and pay attention to our experience and the law in carrying out ideological and political work during the new period.

From 17 April to 3 May, accompanied by Tianjin Municipal CPC Committee Secretary Ni Zhifu, Tianjin Mayor Li Ruihuan, and others, President Li Xiannian inspected factories, rural areas, and various city construction projects in Tianjin, the new Tianjin port, and the Tianjin economic and technical development zone now under construction. He also met with representatives from all walks of life and some veteran comrades who had retired. Together with Comrade Hao Jianxiu, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, he heard a briefing on the work of the Tianjin Municipal CPC Committee and the Tianjin Municipal Government. Li Xiannian said: The leading bodies of the Tianjin Municipal CPC Committee and the Tianjin Municipal Government are united as one. This is a fundamental requirement in strengthening party leadership and scoring victories. He said: During the "Sixth 5-Year Plan" period, Tianjin's total industrial output value rose by 50 percent. It reached 28.5 billion yuan in 1985. It is not easy to attain such an achievement after a decade-long chaotic situation and a severe and disastrous earthquake. In this regard, Tianjin has the support of the central authorities as well as its own existing foundations. However, ultimately, we must attribute such an achievement to the joint efforts of the masses, cadres, intellectuals, and the people of all walks of life of Tianjin.

Li Xiannian said: Currently the situation in the whole country is fine. So is the situation in Tianjin. We may encounter some problems in the course of advance. We must face these problems squarely and try to solve them step by step. The city of Tianjin has accumulated some experience in promoting planned economy and carrying out market regulation. It should do a good job in summing up such experience. I realize that the Tianjin people's enthusiasm is high and their spiritual outlook is fine. It means that Tianjin has a bright future.

Li Xiannian hoped that the leading party and government comrades of Tianjin City will implement the guidelines of the National Party Congress and the Fourth Session of the Sixth National People's Congress in close connection with the actual situation in Tianjin, creatively do their work, overcome difficulties in the course of advance, and continue to work hard to develop the favorable situation.

President Li pointed out: The key to developing socialist modernization lies in having qualified people. We must pay full attention to education and run kindergartens, primary and middle schools, and colleges well. We must improve teaching standards and train all types of qualified people. At the same time, we must encourage people to master advanced scientific and technical skills and managerial expertise through self-study. Both measures are of great importance. We must do a good job in linking the two measures.

When President Li Xiannian was in Tianjin, the 5th Session of the 10th Tianjin City People's Congress was held there to discuss and examine the city's Seventh 5-Year Plan for economic and social development. President Li Xiannian met with the deputies attending the session and called on the people of Tianjin to work hard to fulfill the state's as well as the city's own "Seventh 5-Year" plan and to do a good job in carrying out reform and construction. He said: The central task in carrying out the state's "Seventh 5-Year" plan is to carry out reform, with reform aimed fundamentally at developing the productive forces of society. We must concentrate our efforts on developing production. In the field of industry, we must pay attention to reducing production costs, improving production quality, and raising economic efficiency. In the field of agriculture, we must grasp production. Only if grain output steadily rises, will it be possible for us to promote diversified economy. To increase industrial and agricultural production, we must first rely on policy. Second, we must rely on our knowledge of science and technology. Third, we must rely on our efforts to continuously improve production conditions. More importantly, it is necessary to rely on our awareness. We must adhere to the principle of "to each according to his work." At the same time, we must educate people on communist ideas, bring into full play the communist style of work, and make still greater contributions to the masses.

When Li Xiannian inspected Zhaoguli village in Dabizhuang Township in Tianjin's eastern suburbs, Li Wenlin, head of the village, said: The village produced 12 million jin of vegetables last year. Although the state stipulates that vegetable farmers can sell 30 percent of their vegetables on the market, peasants who contracted for vegetable plots sold all their vegetables to the state. President Li Xiannian praised him, saying: "Good. You have done well. After deregulating vegetable prices, it is necessary to keep them steady. The key lies in increasing vegetable production. You have not only supported the city and made price reform a success, but also become well-to-do yourselves." After visiting vegetable farms and the village-operated Tianhua gem and crystal factory, President Li Xiannian met with Liu Wenming, a peasant with a high income. President Li said: "If all peasants had an income like yours, our country would be rich and prosperous."

President Li Xiannian also visited the newly completed western section of the Zhonghuan line [not further identified] as well as the eastern section of the line now under construction. From the beautiful lawn of the 19-km-long belt-shaped Haihe Park, President Li watched the beautiful scenery along the banks of the Haihe River. Many earthquake shelters had been built there after the 1976 earthquake. Now, there is no earthquake shelter in sight. The place has become a recreation center with many flowers and trees as well as sightseers and tourists. President Li asked the city's leading comrades to put more chairs and benches in the park so that people can sit and relax. In the newly completed residential area north of the Tianjin College of Physical Culture, President Li showed great interest in the green lawns and some of the garden ornaments seen between rows of six-story residential buildings. Mayor Li Ruihuan said: We plan to gradually supply gas, plant more trees, provide families with domestic help, and set up a central heating system for the residential area. Li Xiannian said: "That would indeed be a big event and also a good deed. We communists seek to wholeheartedly serve the people." Accompanied by Comrade Ni Zhifu, Li Xiannian also visited the Jizhuangzi sewage disposal plant. This plant, the largest sewage treatment plant in China, can treat 260,000 tons of sewage each day. It not only purifies water for the city and irrigates farmland, but also generates electric power by using the marsh gas that it extracts from the sludge. This plant now serves 1.08 million people. President Li Xiannian wrote an inscription for the plant, which reads: "Bring benefit to people."

XI ZHONGXUN SPEECH AT MAY 4TH MOVEMENT FORUM

OW041419 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1522 GMT 3 May 86

[Captilized passages denote boldface as indicated by XINHUA]

["Several Points of Expectations of Our Youth" a talk at a forum marking the 67th anniversary of the "May 4th" Movement on 3 May 1986, by Xi Zhongxun]

[Text] Beijing, 3 May (XINHUA) -- Young friends, comrades: I am very happy today to join the youth representatives from various circles at this forum to celebrate the "May 4th" Youth Day. On behalf of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, I want to extend my warm congratulations to you and the young people of various nationalities of the entire nation!

The "May 4th" Movement, which took place in 1919, was a great revolutionary movement to oppose imperialism and feudalism in the history of China. The May 4th revolutionary spirit has always inspired our young people to advance. What is this "May 4th" revolutionary spirit? To put it briefly, it is the spirit of patriotism, the spirit of promoting democracy and science, and the spirit of unity between the young intellectuals and the workers and peasants. In commemorating "May 4th" today, we call on the vast number of youths to carry forward the "May 4th" revolutionary spirit under new historical conditions, to more closely unite around the party and the government, and to make new contributions in building a highly civilized, democratic, and modern socialist nation. For that reason, I propose several points of expectation of our young people:

FIRST, IT IS NECESSARY TO ACTIVELY PARTICIPATE IN THE REFORM. Reform is the only way to build socialism with special Chinese characteristics. Currently, the structural reforms in economic affairs, science, technology, and education are developing in depth in both the cities and the countryside. Our vast number of young workers, peasants, and intellectuals and other working youths must seriously study to understand the target, significance, principle, and policy of reform and actively participate in various forms of reform with a keen sense of responsibility. This is also a call for carrying forward socialist democracy in the new situation. A few days ago, GONGREN RIBAO published a long letter of suggestions by a young worker of the Anshan Iron and Steel Company. In that letter, the young worker made a series of suggestions with keen insight concerning plant reform, production, management, and ideological and political work to the plant leadership. It is highly commendable that an ordinary worker should be so concerned about the overall reform prosperity and well-being of the nation, and future of the plant. We must vigorously encourage such a keen sense of responsibility. Being on the forefront of industrial and agricultural production, the vast number of young staffers, workers, and peasants are highly enthused over reform. We must encourage them to emancipate their thinking, be bold in pioneering, and dare to practice. Leaders at all levels must pay attention to the young people's suggestions for reform and warmly support any pioneering undertakings that meet the requirement of reform. In the course of the reform, the young people must also learn how to currently handle the relationship between state, collective, and individual interests and consciously put the interests of the state above all else. If the young people fulfill these things, they will be a great force in promoting the healthy development of the reform.

SECOND, IT IS NECESSARY TO DO A REMARKABLE JOB IN ONE'S OWN WORK. In a report at last year's national CYL Congress, there was a sentence, which reads "doing great pioneering work in the four modernizations means making outstanding achievements in one's own work." I think the sentence is well-said. As everyone knows, the "Seventh 5-Year Plan" adopted at the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC not long ago was a very good plan. But a plan is only a plan no matter how good it is. Only when everyone strives to fulfill it at his own post can we turn the plan into reality. Therefore, the vast number of young people on the industrial, agricultural, scientific, technological, cultural, education, public health, finance, trade, and other fronts must comply with the requirements of the "Seventh 5-Year Plan" and make outstanding achievements at their own positions in accordance with the goals of struggle of their own professions and units. If everyone can make extraordinary achievements at his ordinary position, our "Seventh 5-Year Plan" will surely be fulfilled even better than the "Sixth 5-Year Plan." Making contributions in fulfilling the "Seventh 5-Year Plan" and realizing the four modernizations will be a heroic patriotic undertaking befitting the young people of China today.

THIRD, IT IS NECESSARY TO ENTHUSIASTICALLY PARTICIPATE IN SOCIALIST SPIRITUAL CONSTRUCTION. Because young people are full of ideas, are quick to accept new things, and have multiple spiritual needs, they are one of the most active forces in spiritual civilization construction. In recent years, the vast number of young people have been pioneers in promoting new social practices. For example, the reading and speech-making activities of the urban staffers and workers, activities to help difficult and poor households in the rural areas, activities of heroes and models to report their heroic and model deeds, and the consultative service provided by students in the streets have all been initiated by the young workers, peasants, PLA fighters, and young students. They have all played excellent roles in socialist spiritual civilization construction. It is necessary to fully affirm the status, function, and main trend of the vast number of youths in socialist spiritual civilization construction. At the same time, it is also necessary to point out that in the new situation of opening to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy, negative factors have been found in the areas of ideal, discipline, and morality among the young people which should not be overlooked and must be overcome with sincere efforts. The vast number of youths must continuously make efforts to study science and cultural knowledge, skillfully master technology, and learn to gradually fit themselves into the civilized, healthy, and scientific socialist lifestyle. It is necessary to vigorously propagate legal knowledge among the young people and make everyone of them study, understand, and abide by the law. It is necessary to vigorously strengthen education in professional ethics, enforce labor discipline, and correct unhealthy tendencies in various professions and trades. It is necessary to vigorously strengthen marriage and family ties, promote moral training, encourage correct attitudes toward love between both sexes, and develop family relations of equality and harmony. In rural areas, it is necessary to eliminate superstition, mercenary marriages, and extravagance and waste in wedding ceremonies or funeral rites. We believe that the vast number of young people can temper themselves into a new generation which has ideals, is morality-minded and well-educated, and observes discipline.

FOURTH, THE YOUNG INTELLECTUALS SHOULD MAKE A CONSCIOUS EFFORT TO INTEGRATE THEMSELVES WITH THE WORKERS AND PEASANTS. While the young intellectuals are relatively rich in cultural and scientific knowledge, quick of mind, and pioneering in new things, they are also poor in practical experiences and are easily divorced from reality. All promising young intellectuals must consciously integrate themselves with the workers and peasants and with reality.

On the one hand, they must dare to "climb high mountains" and diligently study Marxism, while on the other hand, they must be hardworking in "penetrating depths" to widely unite with the masses and go into reality. Only by closely linking one's own ideals and goals with the interests of the party and the people and tapping one's own talent and ability to solve real economic, political, cultural, and social problems can one temper oneself in an even larger environment to improve one's ability and become a qualified person, that meets the motherland's needs. Shouldering the honorable mission of leading and organizing CYL members and other youths in promoting various activities, the vast number of CYL cadres must march at the head in uniting with the workers and peasants.

In conclusion, I would like to quote a poem by a Tang Dynasty poet Li Shangyin, who wrote: "On the 10,000-li Danshan road lined on both sides with phoenix trees, the young phoenixes can sing even better than the old ones," which says that when the phoenix trees are in full bloom, the young phoenixes can sing even more beautifully than the old ones. In quoting the poem to encourage our young people, I hope that you unite as one and make even more billiant achievements than us, the older generation, in socialist modernization.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES IMPLEMENTATION OF POLICY

["Special Commentary" by Zong You: "Implementation of Policy Must Be Grasped to the Finish"]

[Text] Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, under the leadership of the CPC Central Committee, the State Council, and the party committees at all levels, all localities and departments have done much to set right the historical problems which, under the guidance of "leftist" ideas, were erroneously dealt with before and during the "Great Cultural Revolution." They have achieved great successes and have exerted a very good influence at home and abroad. This is of great importance to consolidating and developing the practical situation characterized by stability and unity, stimulating the four modernizations program and various reforms, and facilitating the reunification of the motherland at an early date.

However, numerous problems left from the past are yet to be solved in various localities and departments, and the task of implementing the policy is still very arduous. Some 30 percent of the letters sent by the masses and their visits are concerned with requests to solve the problems left from the past. Some have become "long-standing, big, and difficult" problems either because they are long-standing and complicated, the units handling them at that time have undergone changes, or because the local authorities have insufficient financial resources. It is indeed not easy to solve these problems. However, we should not stand still in the face of difficulties but should press forward at a brisk pace and grasp the problems to the end. We can at least cite three reasons for this. First, if the problems left from the past are not satisfactorily solved, the people will not stop visiting or writing to the higher authorities. Since the relevant departments must receive these people and handle their problems, they cannot engage in the four modernizations with one heart and one mind. Moreover, the more they procrastinate, the more passive they will become. If something should go wrong, the contradictions may intensify and become an unstable social factor detrimental to the smooth progress of the four modernizations. Second, in some long-standing problems, the number of witnesses who can provide "living data" has dropped. If we do not pay close attention to handling these problems, it will be difficult to draw correct and reliable conclusions after these "living data" disappear. The problems will become unsettled issues in history.

Third, some of the relevant people are so advanced in years that it is necessary to properly handle their problems while they are alive. In this way, they can spend their remaining years with an easy mind.

The recently held national work conference on implementing the policy on Overseas Chinese affairs pointed out that effective measures should be taken this year and the next to basically solve, on a national scale, the problems relating to returned Overseas Chinese and the relatives of nationals residing abroad left from the past. Some localities and departments have also set forth the tasks of basically implementing the policy this year and the next.

These plans demonstrate the guideline of the central authorities, which repeatedly stress the need to pay close attention to solving the problems left from the past and to basically fulfill the task of implementing the policy in the near future. However, there are also some localities and departments that do not pay close attention to this work. They work slowly and even mark time. The various obstacles in ideology and style in these localities and departments must be conscientiously removed.

-- Some people refuse to redress unjust, false, and wrong cases by citing the difficulties that will be met in dealing with the aftermath of these cases. Comrades entertaining this fear of difficulty should understand this truth: As far as the party and the government are concerned, the prestige of the policy comes first, the specific difficulties come second. Therefore, the latter should be subordinated to the former. We should not forget or disregard the prestige of the party and government policies just because it is difficult to surmount the specific difficulties. Since the facts relating to unjust, false, and wrong cases have been established through investigation, it is necessary to redress them without hesitation. We should first rehabilitate the relevant people politically and remove their heavy political burdens so that they can be emancipated spiritually. As for the specific difficulties in dealing with the aftermath of the cases, we will certainly be able to find a rational solution.

-- Some people flatly refuse to redress unjust, false, and wrong cases. Some units or personnel originally handling the cases obstinately refuse to reinvestigate them because they are afraid of negating themselves or adversely affecting their own prestige or because they want to leave something to prove that at least they were not entirely wrong in the first place. Comrades entertaining this erroneous idea should understand that history is enexorable and that the whole truth will eventually come out. If they can restore historical truth 1 day earlier, they will be able to take the initiative 1 day earlier. In a sense, a person who has the courage to admit and correct his mistakes will not lower his prestige but will make a contribution in enhancing the prestige of the party and government policies. Unjust, false, and wrong cases were brought about under specified historical environments and under the guidance of "leftist" ideas. As far as the overwhelming majority of the people handling the cases are concerned, they have been responsible only for carrying out orders. So long as they correct their mistakes, they will gain the forgiveness of the relevant people and the masses. The previous facts on the implementation of the policy have amply proved this. For these reasons, we hope that the leaders of the relevant localities and departments will adopt a vigorous and conscientious attitude toward the problems left from the past.

Some people resort to the practice of "heating leftover rice." A small number of units adopt an unconscientious and irresponsible attitude toward cases against which the masses repeatedly appealed or which the higher authorities instructed them to reexamine.

They take the previous findings and decisions form the archives and dish them up in a new form in order to deal with the complainers and the higher authorities perfunctorily. This is a delaying tactic frequently adopted by some bureaucrats. Those who regard other people's political life or suffering as a trifle matter should look at everything form another person's angle and think: How would you react if you or your relatives and good friends were in their positions? Would you like others to perpetuate your suffering? In truth, you cannot deal with the relevant people and the higher authorities perfunctorily because they will not agree. You are bound to conscientiously reexamine the cases and correct the mistakes in real earnest. The problem is that you will bring greater losses to the prestige of the party and government policies.

--Some units shift responsibilities onto another. Because of institutional changes or different or ill-defined division of professional work, some departments concerned shift the responsibility for reexamining problems left form the past onto another. By making the complainers go to and fro among several departments, they have managed to leave the problems unresolved for a long time. With regard to this type of problem, we should advocate the spirit of taking the initiative. Since the problem is related to your department and since the relevant people have asked you for help, you should take the responsibility and, along with the other relevant departmens, discuss the methods for its solution. If you fail to reach a consensus, you should promptly report to the higher authorities and ask them to act as mediatiors. Even if the problem should be handled by other departments, you should also keep to the stand of the party and determine whether it should be solved. And, if the problem should indeed be solved, you should lose no time in helping the complainer till the problem is solved. This is precisely an attitude we communists should adopt.

-- Stressing that they have no specific policies to go by, some localities adopt a wait-and-see attitude. Regarding some problems left from the past, some localities stress that, since there are no specific policies from the higher authorities, they find it difficult to handle the problems, and they will have to wait until specific policies have been worked out. What they call specific policies refer to those policies that perfectly match the outstanding problems. They fail to understand, however, that the problems left from the past are so different from one another that it is neither necessary nor possible for the higher authorities to work out very detailed and specific policies. The central authorities have issued numerous documents on problems left from the past and have worked out nemerous specific policies on various major aspects. To sum up, the general guideline of these policies is: Regarding those who have been dealt with erroneously, it is necessary to thoroughly rehabilitate them politically, to make appropriate compensation economically, to rationally employ them, and to make appropriate arrangements for their livelihood. The relevant local party committees and governments can give play to their initiative and, in light of the established policies of the central authorities and the practical conditions in their localities, actively study and solve those specific problems. Over the past 2 years, a certain province has taken the initiative to arrange, in order of importance and urgency, the problems left from the past in the province. After making a thorough investigation and study, it has worked out specific policies covering a dozen aspects; these make it possible to solve the problems of hundreds of thousands of people left from the past. In light of the basic guideline of the central policies, some localities have also adopted flexible measure to appropriately solve many special problems left from the past. We should encourage this positive attitude. Other localities should also make use of their experiences.

The work of straightening out party work style and rectifying unhealthy practices currently being carried out on a national scale has created an extremely favorable condition for solving the problems left from the past and for fulfilling the task of implementing the policy as soon as possible. So long as the party committees and governments at all levels strengthen leadership, make further efforts to achieve unity of thinking, carry out ideological and political work well, prevent and overcome the ideas of fearing difficulty and being sick of the work, never slacken their efforts, and take effective measures, they will certainly be able to satisfactorily implement the policy from start to finish and to further arouse the initiative of all quarters. In this way, the whole party and the people throughout the country will be able to engage in the four modernizations program with one heart and one mind.

RENMIN RIBAO ON GIVING PRIORITY TO REFORM

HK260501 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 21 Apr 86 p 5

[Article by Gui Shiyong: "Adhere to the Principle of Putting Economic Structural Reform First"]

[Text] The most important characteristic of the Seventh 5-Year Plan is that it puts the all-round implementation of economic structural reform as a task of first priority and makes our reform and construction be suited to and promote each other. Deeply understanding the necessity and basic contents of this policy of the CPC Central Committee is of very great significance in correctly carrying out and satisfactorily fulfilling the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

The Necessity of Giving First Priority to Economic Structural Reform in the Seventh 5-Year Plan Period

Giving first priority to reform in the Seventh 5-Year Plan period is not determined by people's subjective desire, but by the objective process of our country's economic and social development.

For a long period of time, our country scored great, but not ideal, achievements in its economic development. The first reason for this was our political instability. As we implemented the "leftist" policy of "regarding class struggle as the key link," endless waves of political campaigns seriously hindered the normal development of our economy. During the "Great Cultural Revolution," we even went to the extreme of negating production and construction. The "leftist thoughts" have also permeated our economic work itself and our "impatience in transforming" the ownership of means of production and our "impatience in pursuing a great growth rate" in our production and construction has caused us to suffer many losses. The second reason was that the existing economic system fettered our productive forces. Our over centralized management not only seriously constrained the vitality and vigor of our enterprises, but also unavoidably gave rise to subjective willfulness and bureaucracy in managing our economy and thus made it impossible for our economic activities to achieve their due results. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, through extensively and deeply bringing order out of chaos, we have resolutely discarded "leftist" theories and policies, consolidated and developed the political situation of stability and unity, promptly switched the focus of the work of the whole party and country onto our socialist modernization, and formulated an economic strategy and a series of principles and policies that are suited to our country's basic national conditions. This has created fine political preconditions for the healthy development of our economy.

At the same time, our economic structural reform has gradually extended from our rural to our urban areas. Our reform has already made tremendous progress and scored particularly marked achievements in our rural areas. But we have only won an initial battle in carrying out the all-round reform with the focus on urban reform. In order to attain our expected goal, it is necessary to do much more work and spend a relatively long time doing it. Therefore, persisting in carrying out our reform and continuing to remove various obstacles in our economic system that fetter the development of our forces has historically become a key link that we must grasp in order to promote our country's economic development.

We should also see that through the reform in the past few years, we have broken many aspects of the old system and gradually increased the factors of the new system in our economy and made them play an increasingly important role in the operation of our economy. Generally speaking, if we say that before the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the old system mainly played a dominant role, then since we took a major step in carrying out all-round reform with the focus on urban reform in 1985, a new situation of the coexistence and interaction of the new and old systems has begun to emerge. This has been the result of our vigorous efforts in carrying out the reform in the past and is also the reason why we should concentrate our energy to accelerate the reform in the future. Because of various subjective and objective reasons, in our country, it is impossible for us to adopt a "1-package" method to complete the reform at one stroke and we can only proceed in an orderly way and step by step and gradually realize our reform in order to reduce social turbulence and have more opportunities to grope for our way. Therefore, it takes time for the old system to wither away and the new system to take shape. During this process, the coexistence of the old and new systems is unavoidable and it takes a relatively long time for the new system to entirely replace the old one. However, this does not mean that we can allow the two systems to coexist on an equal footing for a long time, for this would inevitably give rise to a series of conflicts and problems and be deterimental to the development of our reform and construction. The major problems are as follows: 1) It will be difficult for the mechanism of our enterprises' behavior to be rational. As there are still relatively many fetters of the old system, our enterprises, large ones in particular, still lack sufficient vitality. In addition, as the new system is incomplete, as its various parts fail to coordinate with one another, and as some reform measures are not yet perfect, it is often impossible for our enterprises to correctly exercise the power and rights they have already acquired and it is still very hard to avoid the phenomena of enterprises shouldering responsibility only for their profits but not for their losses and of blindly pursuing short-term economic results. 2) It makes it even more difficult to exercise macroeconomic control. On the one hand, many parts of the old system have become ineffective or perform much weaker functions than they did in the past; on the other hand, the relevant functions of the new system have not yet been established and perfected. This will give rise to some loopholes in our management, and any carelessness in our management will give rise to a loss of control in some sector. In addition, lawless elements will also take advantage of loopholes to carry out their activities and thus cause confusion to spread and grow. 3) The reform has to a various extent shaken and readjusted the old relations of interests, but the layout of the new relations of interests has not yet taken shape. This will inevitably give rise to some unequal opportunities and irrational distribution of income, which will make the masses of people discontented.

Once all this worsens and endangers the stability of our economy as a whole and our social stability, we will be forced to adopt strong compulsory measures to control and correct it. This will often strengthen the old system. All this proves that it is not proper to allow the balance between the strength of the old and new systems to continue for too long a time. Otherwise, the normal operation of our economy will be hindered and there will be greater difficulties for continuing the reform. This requires us to give priority to reform and strive to achieve a decisive victory in a short time. By so doing we will mainly switch the operation of our economy into the orbit of the new system and then spend relatively more time to replenish and perfect the new system. This is a key to overcoming the contradictions and difficulties that we are encountering now and to promote the healthy development of our economy.

For a long-term historical point of view, this economic structural reform differs from the partial reform in some links that we should carry out throughout the whole socialist historical period. It is an all-round reform of the methods and mechanism of our economic operation under the precondition of adhering to the basic system and principles of socialism. This reform is a self-perfection of the socialist system; at the same time, it also contains a certain degree of revolutionary reform. It yields a long-term rather than a short-term effect in promoting our construction. In order to realize it, we should draw up careful plans and adopt a series of mutually related reform measures; therefore, we should concentrate all our force to carry it out in one period. The Seventh 5-Year Plan period is percisely such a key period in which reform should be regarded as a task of first priority, and we should arrange our construction in such a way as to facilitate the reform. This has already become a must. It by no means shows that we neglect the construction, but it is percisely aimed at creating conditions for the long-term steady development of our construction.

Our Economic Construction Should Be Suited to and Promote Our Economic Structural Reform

In order to give priority to reform and in order to arrange our construction in such a way as to facilitate our reform, the most important thing for us to do is to determine an appropriate economic growth rate and a rational construction scale and thus provide a relatively relaxed and stable economic environment for our reform. Generally speaking, in our reform we should remove excess rigid and centralized control in the light of the requirement of developing the planned commodity economy, consciously follow and apply the law of value, and give play to the positive role of the regulation of market mechanism in a planned manner. This reform must have the support of financial and material resources and needs a market with a rough balance between total demand and supply. The key to all the above is that we should maintain an appropriate growth rate and construction scale.

In order to ensure the smooth development of our reform, we must achieve a certain growth rate. If the economic growth rate is too low, it will be impossible to continue to augment the state's economic strength or ensure providing for the livelihood of the annual increase of 10 million people in our population and satisfying the demand for improving the living standard of the original population. Then we will not only lack the necessary force to support the reform, but also fail to strike a rough balance between total market supply and demand.

Therefore, under the precondition of improving our economic results, we should strive to achieve a relatively high growth rate that we will be able to sustain. However, if we pursue an excessive growth rate beyond actual possibility, we will give rise to tension in all our economic relations, which is detrimental to our construction as well as reform. Even if we can achieve such a growth rate for a certain period of time, we will not be able to maintain it for a long time. Once we fail to maintain it, our growth rate will fall sharply and this will yield serious negative consequences to our economic development. Precisely because of the above, on the basis of conscientiously striking a comprehensive balance between our needs and possibility, the Seventh 5-Year Plan decides and average annual growth rate of 6.7 percent for our gross industrial and agricultural output value, with agriculture growing by 4 percent a year and industry by 7.5 percent a year, and an average annual growth rate of 7.5 percent for our GNP. These growth rates are lower than the actual growth rates in the Sixth 5-Year plan period, but they are practical growth rates that do not deprive us of our reserve strength and are conducive to our reform.

In order to create a relatively relaxed economic environment and to achieve a rough balance between total social supply and demand, we must make the scale of our investment in fixed assets match our national strength. Our historical experience has time and again proved that expanding our investment scale beyond the limit of the state's financial and material resources will inevitably cause tension in various economic relations and a serious dislocation in proportional relationships. In this situation, it is hard even to maintain a sustained and stable increase in our economy, let alone to promote our reform. As our investment in fixed assets rose too sharply at the end of the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, some unstable factors have emerged in our economic line and further efforts are necessary to remove them. The CPC Central Committee proposed that in the first 2 years of the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, we should roughly maintain the scale of our investment in fixed assets at the level of 1985 and in the latter 3 years, we will appropriately expand it in the light of the situation then. According to the CPC Central Committee's decision, the Seventh 5-Year Plan stipulates that in the 5 years, the total volume of investment in fixed assets in the units owned by the whole people will be 896 billion yuan, 70 percent more than that in the Sixth 5-Year Plan period. Investment in capital construction will be 500 billion yuan, an increase of 49 percent. In implementing the plan, we must adhere to the principle of acting according to our capacity and be sure to control our investment scale withing the scope allowed by our national strength. This is a decisive condition that ensures the smooth development of our reform.

Moreover, in order to promote the reform, besides paying close attention to maintainging an appropriate growth rate and construction scale, in carrying out our construction, we must also switch our entire economic development strategy into a new orbit. For it is necessary for the reform to last several years. In this process, our population will grow, our living standard should improve, and in order to achieve sustained development of our production, we must carry out construction of necessary projects. In addition, the implementation of various reform measures will often give rise to redistribution of the economic interests among the state, collective, and individual and among various social strata.

In order to make this redistribution more acceptable to our people, we must do our best to carry out readjustment on the basis of universal improvement of the economic interests of all parties. All these require that there should be relatively great increase in our national income. In the final analysis, only when we relatively greatly increase our national income while exercising proper control over the growth of our consumption and accumulation can our reform have a relatively relaxed economic environment and can there be relatively much room of maneuver for the implementation of various reform measures. There are only the following two methods to increase our national income: One is to greatly increase our input and to mainly rely on the increase in the total volume of production in order to increase our national income. The other is to mainly rely on reduction of material consumption and raising labor productivity in order to increase our national income as much as possible under the condition of maintaining an appropriate growth rate for our production. The former is what we adopted in the past. It is not only detrimental to promoting economic modernization. But is also inevitably restricted by our existing material resources. Pursuing an excessive growth rate and construction scale beyond the limit of our material conditions will lead to economic instability and is also detrimental to the progress of our reform. This is unacceptable. A correct choice between the two methods is to resolutely adopt the latter method, in other words, to better switch our economic development into the orbit centered on improving our economic results. This also shows that the change in the pattern of our system is closely and internally related to the change in our development strategy. They supplement and promote each other. Precisely on the basis of this requirement, the Seventh 5-Year Plan not only decides appropriate economic growth rates and construction scale, but also makes corresponding arrangements regarding our construction principles: 1) It places great emphasis on improving our economic results, in particular, on improving product quality and puts forth strict requirements and corresponding measures. 2) We should rationally readjust our investment mix, correctly select construction projects, and improve the economic results of our investment. 3) We should pay attention to scientific and technological progress and intellectual development and continue to switch to relying on scientific and technological progress in developing our economy. 4) Focusing on improving our capacity of exports and foreign exchange earning, we should continue to expand our foreign economic relations and trade and technological exchange. 5) We should fix a rational range for the improvement of our people's living standard and thus harmonize the development of consumption and accumulation. These principles reflect the major contents of our new economic development strategy and we should persist in carrying them out for a long time in the future. The conscientious implementation of these principles in the Seventh 5-Year Plan period is significant not only for the development of our construction itself, but also in making our construction and reform match and enabling our construction to support and promote our reform.

Economic Reform Should Be Suited to and Boost Development of Our Economic Construction

Persisting in putting reform first on the one hand requires that the arrangement of our construction be suited to our reform and that if necessary, our construction should appropriately make way for our reform; on the other hand, it requires that our reform should also be suited to our construction and play its role in boosting our construction.

Our reform proceeds in the process of our construction and its final goal is to boost construction; therefore, it cannot and should not proceed in isolation and divorced from our construction. At the same time, our reform needs financial and material support and should display its power through increasing the income and benefit of all sectors. All this can only be realized on the basis of the development of our construction. In this sense, we can say that boosting construction is a condition on which our reform relies for its smooth progress as well as the goal of our reform.

In order to make our reform suited to and boost our construction, first, the arrangement and steps of reform should take full account of the capacity of our economy and society in undergoing the reform and should be conducive to boosting steady economic growth. Generally speaking, the effect of our reform should be greater than the economic support it needs; otherwise, our reform will be meaningless. However, as specific reform measures often vary, so does the time they take to yield full effect. This gives rise to the problem concerning the capacity of endurance in the time when the reform measures implemented have not yet yielded their full effect. Within a certain range, we can appropriately reduce our construction scale in order to ensure the reform we urgently need to carry out, but if this is done beyond a certain limit, it will hinder the timely arrangement of some indispensable projects and thus affect the reserve strength of our economic development. Therefore, in carrying out our reform, we should also consider necessary construction and carry out our construction in accordance with our capacity under the condition of maintaining a basic balance between total social supply and demand and maintaining steady development of our economy. It is precisely under an all-round consideration of this requirement that our Seventh 5-Year Plan arranges our reform. It does not require completing all the reform work within the 5 years, but only requires roughly forming the framework of the new system and thus putting the operation of our economy into the orbit of the new system. This policy decision has been made by proceeding from reality and taking into consideration the whole situation of reform and construction, and is a decision that can be realized through making efforts.

In order to make our reform suited for and boost our construction, our reform measures should be implemented in close combination with and boost the implementation of various reform principles and thus effectively facilitate the change in our economic development strategy. Our various reform measures should be carefully designed and coordinated with one another in order to play their role fully as soon as possible and in order to minimize their mutual impedence and conflicts. As it is necessary to probe into many specific regulations and methods of the reform through practice, we should pay close attention to promptly discovering problems and summing up experience in order to improve our reform plans and measures. It is precisely out of consideration of the general goal of the reform and also of all the requirements for boosting the construction in the Seventh 5-Year plan puts forth the task of mainly and satisfactorily grasping three aspects of reform: 1) We should better intensify the vitality of our enterprises, in particular, the large and medium-sized enterprises owned by the whole people, and turn them really into relatively independent economic entities and into socialist commodity producers and operaters that are managed independently and that shoulder sole responsibility for their profits and losses.

This is not only a key link in the formation of the new system, but also a problem that urgently needs solution at present in order to boost our production and construction. Large and medium-sized enterprises are the backbone for our country's economic development and technological progress. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, in order to improve our economic results, product quality, production composition, product mix, and enterprise structure, we must augment our capacity of self-transformation and self-development. At the same time, we should perfect the mechanism of our enterprises' behavior and strengthen their self-restriction. 2) We should continue to develop the socialist commodity market and perfect our market system. The key to this work is to continue to reform our price system and price management system and focus on resolving the problem of the excessively low prices of energy, raw materials, and other means of production. This is not only aimed at creating for our enterprises an external economic environment that both imbues them with stimulus and bears pressure on them, but is also an important measure to rationally readjust our investment structure and production composition. 3) The state's management over enterprises has gradually switched from mainly exercising direct control to mainly exercising indirect control and a new socialist macroeconomic management system has been established. This provides a guarantee to ensure that the microeconomic activities of our enterprises conform to the macroeconomic requirements and also a necessary condition for controlling and regulating investment and consumption funds and foreign payments and maintaining a basic balance between total social demand and supply during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period.

From this analysis, we can see that conscientiously and steadily pushing forward the reform in the Seventh 5-Year Plan period is the most important guarantee for the implementation of the construction principles of the Seventh 5-Year Plan period and realizing the construction arrangement of the plan. Planning and carrying out economic reform and construction in combination in the light of the whole situation of our socialist modernization is a fundamental guiding thought for the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

CPC CIRCULAR ON EMULATING POLITICAL WORK CADRE

OW0510005 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0148 GMT 4 May 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 4 May (XINHUA) -- The CPC Central Committee's Propaganda Department issued a circular on 28 April on learning from political work cadre Xiong Yuanqi. It called on party and government organizations at all levels and the industrial, transport, finance, trade, agricultural, and educational fronts to take Xiong Yuanqi as an example in carrying out ideological and political work, to carry forward the spirit of "self-confidence, self-strengthening, and self-respect," and to create a continuous new situation in ideological and political work.

The circular said: The late Comrade Xiong Yuanqi was head of the Propaganda Department of the party committee of the Jianghan Petroleum Administrative Bureau's meters and instruments plant. During his short life span, he set a brilliant example as an outstanding communist and model political work cadre on our ideological and political front. His advanced deeds are so impressive that they inspire people to advance boldly. He proposed the "political work cadres should have the spirit of "self-confidence, self-strengthening, and self-respect." His proposal should become a motto for all our political work cadres.

The circular pointed out: "Self-confidence, self-strengthening, and self-respect" embody the precious spirit of our political work cadres of the 1.30's in their vigorous, selfless efforts to build a socialism with Chinese characteristics.

For our political work cadres, who are like engineers of men's souls, self-confidence means to firmly belive in Marxism-Leninism and communism: To firmly believe that ideological and political work, which they are engaged in, is a noble and glorious task which is absolutely indispensable for the building of socialist spiritual and material civilization; and not to waver in their belief under any circumstances. Self-strengthening means to do one's work to the best of one's ability in accordance with the guiding principles of ideological and political work in the new period while integrating reforms with economic construction and displaying a determined and pioneering spirit. Self-respect means to strictly act in accordance with party principles, follow a correct work style, match words with deeds, and set an example for others.

The circular said: One of the important tasks we must fulfill to improve the party's ideological and political work is to improve the political quality and professional skills of political work cadres in order to meet the needs of reform and the building of the two civilizations. Party and government organizations at all levels, and all comrades engaged in ideological and political work on the industrial, transport, finance, trade, agricultural, educational, and other fronts, should take Xiong Yuanqi as an example, carry forward the spirit of "self-confidence, self-strengthening, and self-respect," study hard, practice what they advocate, strive to raise their political consciousness and professional skills, conscientiously study and explore the characteristics and rules of ideological and political work in the new period, do the work at their respective posts well, and constantly create a new situation in ideological and political work to fulfill the general task and general goal set by the party, advance economic reform, fulfill the Seventh 5-Year Plan, and promote the building of socialist material and spiritual civilization.

MOUNTAINOUS AREAS STRIVE TO ELIMINATE POVERTY

[Dispatch by RENMIN RIBAO reporter Lu Xiaofei and LIAONING RIBAO reporter Guo Xichen: "Peasants in Mountainous Areas in Liaoning's Chaoyang Prefecture Develop Undertakings That Yield Quick Results"]

[Excerpts] The long poverty-stricken mountainous areas in Liaoning's Chaoyang Prefecture have given prominence to developing undertakings that turn out a large volume of commodities and yield quick results in the course of readjusting the production structure, thus stepping up the pace of eradicating poverty. In 1985, the rural social gross output value of the city was 1.79 billion yuan, with a per capita income of 267 yuan among its rural population, up by 52 percent and 81 percent respectively from the previous year. Now, one-third of the 50 townships with the greatest difficulties have initially changed their poverty-stricken situation.

With the readjustment of the production structure, more labor forces may be transferred from primary industry to secondary and tertiary industries. By the end of 1985, the total number of enterprises had risen to more than 54,000. Their gross output value and profits were 1 billion yuan and 200 million yuan, up by 65 percent and 75 percent respectively. Their gross output value accounted for 33 percent of the industrial output value of the city. One hundred and seventy-seven enterprises had an output value exceeding half a million yuan. Today, 250,000 peasants are employed in enterprises of various categories, accounting for 18 percent of the total social labor forces in the rural areas.

Commentator's Article

[Commentator's article: "Proceed from the Characteristics of the Mountain Areas"]

[Text] The mountain areas have their own characteristics. We should value, and proceed from these characteristics in developing the economy of the mountain areas. It is percisely based on the characteristics of the mountain areas in changing the production structure that Liaoning's Chaoyan Prefecture has rapidly built a number of take-off undertakings with local characteristics, and taken a powerful step on the path of eliminating poverty and becoming well off. The practice of Chaoyang demonstrates that the spirit and style of being bold in seeking truth from facts and blazing new trails are needed in economic reform and construction.

True, poor natural conditions had a great bearing on the long-term poverty of Chaoyang Prefecture in the past, but another important reason to account for it was the neglect of the characteristics of the mountain areas and getting into the dead alley of "taking grain as the key link." Under the same natural conditions, the planting of grain crops is disadvantageous, when the planting of grass and trees or some economic crops is advantageous; and there is a world of difference in the results. When the rich and various natural resources of the mountain areas lie waiting to be exploited and utilized, people had to plant grain crops which "would bring in no harvest 9 out of 10 years." The practice of avoiding the advangeous but going in for the disadvangeous could only be asking for trouble! Chaoyang Prefecture has grasped firmly its own characteristics in readjusting its production structure, and explicitly proposed the principle of "taking economic crops as the key" and "developing fruit-growing and forestry, animal husbandry, and enterprises in towns and townships." Hence, the emergence of a new situation. This fully demonstrates the importance of "suiting measures to local conditions." In recent years, a large number of mountain areas like Chaoyang have persisted in the principle of proceeding from the characteristics of the mountain areas in readjusting their production structure; as a result, they have all made some breakthrough in their economic development.

For some time now, the leading comrade of the central authorities has on several occasions stressed the importance of grain production in order to overcome the deviation of neglecting grain production in some regions; the press has also increased propaganda in this field. All this is very correct and necessary in stabilizing the general situation in grain production and the correct readjustment of the production struture. However, some comrades have wavered on the principle of suiting measures to local conditions in readjusting the production structure, and they have refrained from making the necessary readjustment as the actual conditions require. Some places are located in high mountains or steep slopes, which are suitable for forestry but never grain production. In some cases, even when the land was already returned to forestry in the readjustment of production structure, it is once again returned to grain production, back to the old path leading to a dead alley, simply because the leadership there is afraid of being criticized for "neglecting grain production."

Everything has its own characteristics. Without characteristics the world would be deprived of variation.

We should do our best to avoid the neglect of the basic Marxist principle of proceeding from the actual conditions, or giving up the practice of suiting the local characteristics in economic work, simply because some leading members have made some remarks, and the press has carried some articles on a certain issue, or the issue in question has met with some opposition. Likewise, the rigid copying of an instruction, a call, or a pattern that will inevitably injure economic development and dampen the enthusiasm of the masses should also be avoided.

PEOPLE'S ARMED FORCES DEPARTMENTS REORGANIZED

OW030627 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0840 GMT 2 May 86

[By reporter Gai Yumin]

[Text] Beijing, 2 May (XINHUA) -- The transfer of command of county (city) People's Armed Forces departments to local governments is proceeding smoothly and gradually in the country.

Since the party Central Committee, the State Council, and the Central Military Commission issued a circular on questions concerning the transfer of command of county (city) People's Armed Forces departments to local governments, all provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities have generally held meetings to study ways to implement the guidelines of the circular and have successively set up leading groups to transfer command of People's Armed Forces departments. The leading groups are composed of principal, responsible comrades of local governments and Army organizations. All prefectures, cities, and counties have also set up related agencies to speed up the transfer. In order to actively and properly transfer command of People's Armed Forces departments, the Army and local leading comrades, cooperating closely with each other, have first conducted experiements on the transfer of command in some People's Armed Forces departments to accumulate experience. Now, more than 60 People's Armed Forces departments selected for the experiment have smoothly completed their transfer of command, and the experiment has laid a good foundation for effecting the transfer of command among all other People's Armed Forces departments throughout the country.

All local party and government organizations warmly welcome the reorganization of the People's Armed Forces departments. They have, on their own accord, exchanged information and views with the Army and have actively created the necessary conditions for the transfer of command of the People's Armed Forces departments. Party and government leaders at all levels in Heilongjiang, Liaoning, Shaanxi, Gansu, and Ningxia have warmly held discussions with cadres of People's Armed Forces departments, ascertained their thinking, and helped them overcome difficulties. Some leading cadres in Shanxi and Hunan have constantly worked at People's Armed Forces departments to facilitate prompt solution of problems concerning the transfer of command. Since some 400 cadres of People's Armed Forces departments in Jiangxi Province turned over their office to local governments, the province has given priority to solving their problems, such as housing, dependent jobs, and children's education; it has thus freed them from worries. Shandong and Henan Provinces have created good conditions for the cadres of People's Armed Forces departments now under local governments and properly settled surplus cadres; they have thus promoted a smooth transfer of command of People's Armed Forces departments.

All PLA military regions and military districts, regarding the reorganization of People's Armed Forces departments as an important task, have seriously made all the necessary preparations for the transfer of command.

Leading cadres at all levels have led work groups to People's Armed Forces departments, ascertained the cadres' ideological situation, and done purposeful ideological work. They have carried out education in "loving the People's Armed Forces and one's station" and have encouraged cadres of People's Armed Forces departments to consider the interests of the whole, take root in a locality, and do good People's Armed Forces work there. The leading organs at all levels have evaluated the cadres, made organizational readjustment, and staffed the People's Armed Forces departments according to the new organization to ensure that the People's Armed Forces departments transferred to local governments are manned by cadres who are good ideologically, good in work style, and know their jobs. After the readjustment, the People's Armed Forces cadre ranks will be composed of a number of "veteran armed force cadres" as the backbone as well as a large number of young cadres who have completed training at military schools. The readjustment will improve the work of People's Armed Forces departments.

LIAOWANG CITES ZHU HOUZE ON LITERATURE, ART

HK050955 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 0634 GMT 2 May 86

[Text] Hong Kong, 2 May (XINHUA) -- LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION No 18, which will be published soon, reports that since his appointment as head of the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department 6 months ago, Zhu Houze has made extensive contacts and had frank exchanges of views with people in literature and art circles. He is concerned about their difficulties in creative work. More and more people in literature and art circles have made him their intimate friend.

Zhu Houze, now 55, was previously first secretary of the Guizhou Provincial CPC Committee. He was appointed head of the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department in August 1985.

People in literature and art circles asked him about the relationship between freedom of creation and adherence to the four basic principles and about important and sensitive questions such as whether it is necessary to oppose bourgeois liberalization in literature and art circles. Believing that this indicated their trust in him, he said: Only in a situation like today's can we have a frank exchange of views. Your straighforward remarks indicate your trust in me. We are seeking mutual understanding and mutual trust. Mutual understanding is a prerequisite for mutual trust.

On the question of opposing bourgeois liberalization, Zhu Houze's view was this: When our country is behind the most developed countries in the world in many aspects, it is inevitable for people in our country to cast doubts on socialism and communism and to ask whether we can solve our social, economic, and political problems better than capitalist countries solve theirs. Owing to the fact that some of our problems have not undergone the final test of practice, as a strategic policy, the slogan of holding firm to the four basic principles and opposing bourgeois liberalization must not be given up. However, adhering to the four basic principles is a political concept, a political aim, and a political road to be chosen. It does not hinder freedom of creation or independent explorations.

This new propaganda head, who endured endless sufferings during the struggle against rightists and the Great Cultural Revolution, said that the methods of exerting high pressure and making abrupt turns should now be discouraged and that study and explorations can be made on questions concerning policies. He suggested: Theoretical work should be strengthened and people should be taught to understand the inner aspect of things.

It is necessary to strengthen literature and art work so that it exerts an imperceptible influence on people's minds. We should use these two factors to enrich socialist culture and carry forward China's material and spiritual civilizations. While promoting the overall reform of the economic structure, we should enhance our national spirit to anew height, enable people throughout society to have a better mental outlook, and encourage them to have lofty ideals and values as well as zeal and drive for practical work.

Zhu Houze said: Since our country forsook the "leftist" error of "taking class struggle as the key link" and unswervingly shifted the focus of the work to socialist modernization, we have simultaneously grasped the building of material and spiritual civilizations. Not only is economic life full of vitality, but the situation in theoretical and academic circles and in literature and art is also more vigorous than ever before. Taken as a whole, our literature and art creation is much better now than in any previous period. Everyone feels much happier now. Writers and artists have much better chance to extensively develop, and to give full scope to, their talents. This is a very favorable condition for the prosperity and the blazing of new trails in literature and art. However, under such an environment there are also partial or little waves and there are still some aftershocks. This state of affairs has emerged partly because of the normal literature and art criticisms and academic discussions within the literature and art, as well as academic, circles. Naturally, normal discussions of this kind may also stir old recollections. It is also partly due to the debates on the nature and assessment of certain literature and art works or to the inaccuracy and inappropriateness of the mode of debate, choice of words, or reasoning. The literature and art circles are very sensitive about these things and some people are still easily upset.

In his view, it is quite natural for them to be sensitive. They would not have become writers and artists had they not been sensitive. As for the fact that some people are easily upset, this can hardly be regarded as a strong point. It is no good if someone should form this or that conjecture at the sound of a wind, worrying all the time about the "changeable situation." Viewed from another angle, however, this also shows that the "repercussions" are still there and that people still have a "lingering fear." For this reason, he said it is quite necessary for those in the party and government departments in charge of cultural, art, and academic work to come into more contact and to exchange more views with people of literature and art, and academic circles in order to promote mutual understanding and trust.

On the relationship between literature and art on the one hand and politics on the other, he said: Literature and art creation is most distinctively characterized by personal character and, therefore, it is absolutely impossible to engage in literature and art production according to an order form or a pattern. For this reason, the steadfastness in implementing party principles and line should be realized through a high degree of creativity on the part of writers and artists. The unity of political objectives precisely finds expression in the diversification of literature and art. A strong sense of adhering to principles in work should be reflected through flexibility. A serious theme can easily be accepted by the masses only when it is readable and readily understandable.

He pointed out: The various ideological sectors play an extremely big role in influencing the masses. However, they give scope to his role through different features and at different levels. Theory convinces people through concepts and, like a scalpel, directly gets to the essence of a matter through numerous and complicated phenomena, thus achieving an enduring enlightening effect. Literature and art, however, affect people through images. They exert a gradual, uplifting influence on people, enlightening them and containing education in recreation. If we adhere to the socialist road, objective, and orientation and dialectically integrate them with various principles for developing academic and literature and art undertakings, such as "letting a hundred flowers blossom and letting a hundred schools of thought contend" and "making the past serve the present and foreign things serve China and weeding through the old to bring forth the new," the developmental road of literature and art is very wide.

PROPAGANDA CHIEF STRESSES LITERARY VALUES

[By reporter Guo Lingchun]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 1 May (XINHUA) — A relaxed, harmonious atmosphere has gradually been spreading through the literary and art circles. This was verified at a national forum on the editing work of some literary periodicals. At the forum, which ended today, this reporter noticed an inspiring tendency: Even in a relatively relaxed environment, literary and art workers are still very strict with themselves. Noticing this, Zhu Houze, director of the CPC Central Committee's Propaganda Department, urged everyone to value the good situation which has not been easily brought about.

Gathered at the forum, responsible persons of 86 literary periodicals tried to explore an important issue for literature in the new period: The obligations, status, and role of editors.

Li Ziyun, deputy chief editor of SHANGHAI WENXUE [SHANGHAI LITERATURE] reiterated this viewpoint at the forum: In addition to promoting knowledge, education, and esthetic appreciation and doing propaganda work, literature should also provide recreation. She held that as the tempo of daily life quickens, there is no reason why recreational literary works should not be allowed. However, vulgar literary works must be banned. Should vulgar works occur, we should show concern and help lead them onto a healthy path.

On the evening of 29 April Zhu Houze visited the participants and talked with them frankly and sincerely. He urged literary and art workers and periodical editors to value the atmosphere of unity, harmony, mutual trust, and mutual understanding that has taken shape in the literary and art circles.

The good political situation has created good conditions for the development and creation of literary and art works. The participants' feelings are identical with Zhu Houze's expectations: Consolidate and develop the good situation so that literature and art will not fall behind the advancing times.

DISSIDENT PUNISHED FOR PUBLISHING MEMOIRS

HK020938 Hong Kong AFP in English 0926 GMT 2 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 2 (AFP) — One of the main activists in China's "Beijing Spring" dissident movement has been isolated from the outside world in a windowless cell as punishment for the publication of his memoirs in the West, a reliable Chinese source said here on Friday.

According to the source, 42-year-old Xu Wenli, sentenced to 15 years in jail in 1981 for "counter-revolutionary activities" has been kept alone in a windowless cell to which the sole entrance is a trapdoor in the ceiling since being moved there late last year.

He is denied visits -- even from members of his family -- and access to newspapers or a radio, his diet consists of mainly of water and pancakes made of maize, and he is allowed neither to receive nor send mail.

Mr. Xu's new prison regime in a southern Beijing jail is punishment for the publication in the West in October 1985 -- and subsequently in Chinese dissident organs published abroad -- of 262 pages of handwritten memoirs in which he describes his interrogation and trial, the source said.

Asked to comment, a spokesman for the Chinese Justice Ministry said he did not know of the publication of the memoirs abroad and said: "Chinese prison regulations prohibit the kind of treatment you describe."

He added: "We always treat prisoners with humanity."

Mr. Xu is one of the best known of the activists in the Beijing Spring movement for greater democracy, which bloomed in 1979 and 1980 before being crushed.

Mr. Xu, an electrician, became editor of the now banned publication APRIL 5TH FORUM, which took its name from April 5, 1976 riots in Beijing's Tiananmen Square that erupted in protest against the radical regime of the "gang of four," which preceded the rule of current leader Deng Xiaoping.

In his memoirs Mr. Xu said he had been given a heavy sentence after he had refused to acknowledge his "errors" and after he demanded that the judge trying him step down because he had prejudged Mr. Xu's guilt.

Mr. Xu was one of the more moderate Beijing spring activists, never having rejected the legitimacy of the rule of the Chinese Communist Party.

In his memoirs, recently published by the London-based human rights organisation Amnesty International, Mr. Xu did not complain of rough treatment, but said that he had had to undergo 200 interrogation sessions and that in prison he could hear "screams of people being struck or electrically shocked."

The memoirs were smuggled out of prison thanks to "someone who is with the Public Security Bureau in China (who) is very sympathetic with us and helped us," Mr. Xu wrote.

FURTHER REPORTS ON TAIWAN PILOT'S DEFECTION TO PRC

Pilot Arrives in Beijing

OW060541 Beijing XINHUA in English 0531 GMT 6 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 6 (XINHUA) -- The returned Taiwan pilot Wang Xijue arrived in Beijing here this morning. The 56-year-old pilot landed a Boeing 747 cargo plane of Taiwan's China Airlines at Guangzhou last Saturday, asking for permission to settle down on the mainland. When the pilot, still in his short-sleeved China Airlines uniform, stepped down from the cockpit of the Boeing 747 which he flew from Guangzhou, a girl presented him with a bouquet of flowers. Hu Yizhou, director general of Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC), warmly shook his hand and welcomed him to contribute to China's civil aviation and modernization program. Wang's father, Wang Boxi, 82, came to Beijing from his hometown in Sichuan Province, southwest China, to meet his son. On the day the cargo jet piloted by Wang landed in Guangzhou, the CAAC asked China Airlines to send a representative here to discuss how to deal with the plane, its cargo and the other two crew members.

Reunites With Father

HK060821 Hong Kong AFP in English 0757 GMT 6 May 86

[By Patrick Lescot]

[Excerpts] Beijing, May 6 (AFP) -- A Taiwan civilian pilot that defected to China in a Boeing 747 freighter Saturday flew his plane into Beijing from Canton Tuesday for the first reunion with his father in nearly 40 years. Captain Wang Xijue, 56, smiled and raised his arms in a gesture of victory as he emerged at Beijing airport from his jumbo jet, which belongs to the Taiwan flag carrier China Airlines (CAL). His father, Wang Boxi, 82, had come from his native province Sichuan in China's southwest, to meet him on the tarmac. Mr Wang, leaning on a cane, was flanked by two other sons, one a pharmacist and the other a dentist. He was the first Taiwan civilian pilot to defect to China.

The brief, emotional reunion was the Wangs' first since 1949 when Capt Wang, then a pilot in the Chinese Nationalist Forces, went to Taiwan with the defeated remants of Chiang Kai-shek's army as the communists took over. Capt Wang was also welcomed on arrival by Hu Yizhou, director general of the Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC). Capt. Wang said he was "very happy" to be in China.

Mr Hu said China would respect the wishes of the two other aircrew who had been on Capt Wang's plane -- co-pilot Dong Guangxin and mechanic Qiu Mingzhi -- who have said they want to return to Taiwan and who were not on board the plane in Beijing.

Capt Wang said he would like to see the early resumption of air links between Taiwan and China -- "which I have already begun," he remarked, laughing -- as well as telephone and postal communications.

Red Cross Offers to Mediate

OW060259 Taipei CNA in English 0249 GMT 6 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 5 (CNA) -- The Red Cross Society of China said here Monday that if required, it will ask Red Cross International to help negotiate with Chinese Communist authorities on the return of a China Airlines Boeing 747 cargo jetliner and its crew members that were diverted to an airport on the China mainland last weekend. Ku Cheng-han, secretary general of the society, said so far it has not received any request from family members of the stranded CAL crew members.

One of the principal missions of Red Cross is assisting detained civilians around the world, he said, pledging that his organization will provide all necessary assistance to family members of the standed CAL crew members if required. Ku said he believes Red Cross International will do its best to help negotiate on the return of the plane and its crew members once it receives a formal request.

CAL spokesman Lin Liang-chih said Monday evening that his company will seek all possible means to help the stranded CAL crew members return home as soon as possible.

CAL Probing 'Diversion' Incident

OW051421 Taipei CNA in English 1415 GMT 5 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 5 (CNA) -- China Airlines [CAL] has set up a task force to look into the possible causes that led to the diversion of a CAL cargo jetliner to the China mainland last weekend, a spokesman for CAL said Monday. Lin Liang-chih told reporters that the task force, composed of three ranking CAL officials, left Taipei Monday morning for Bangkok to investigate the possible causes of the incident. An informed source disclosed that one of the three officials leaving for Bangkok Monday was a CAL vice president. The principal purpose of the task force's visit to Bangkok is to understand the security measures at the Bangkok Airport cargo terminal, he said.

Lin also indicated that his company has entrusted the Hong Kong-based Cathay Pacific Airways to negotiate with the Peiping authorities on the return of the diverted plane and its crew members. CAL will not take any further action until it has received a formal reply from Cathay Pacific Airways, he said. According to foreign wire service reports, Peiping has refused to discuss the return of CAL's plane and its crew members through a third party.

PRC Rejects Hong Kong Mediation

HK060227 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 5 May 86 p 1

["Special dispatch" from Guangzhou by reporter Szutu Yuan: "Director and Party Secretary of the Guangzhou Civil Aviation Administration Interviewed on Taiwan Plane Landing in Guangzhou"]

[Text] Guangzhou, 5 May -- In an interview with Hong Kong reporters this morning, Yu Yanen, director of the Guangzhou Civil Aviation Administration, and Bao Peide, secretary of the party committee, said that the landing of a China Airlines [CAL] cargo plane at Guangzhou is a problem concerning the internal affairs of China and that there is no need for intervention by any other party. They hope that the Taiwan authorities will send people directly to the mainland to discuss the matter.

Yu Yanen reiterated that China will uphold the stand and spirit made known earlier in its approach to this matter. As the civil aviation enterprise stationed at Guangzhou, it [the Guangzhou Civil Aviation Administration] has so far received no answer from the Taiwan authorities.

They were asked about their views on the Taiwan authorities' intention to appoint Cathay Pacific to negotiate the matter in accordance with international aviation regulations. Yu Yanen said that the business of the two sides of the straits is the country's business. This problem is a domestic issue for China. A party so far away is not likely to be involved. Nor is intervention from any other party wanted. The business between both sides should be solved through mutual discussions between themselves. He also said that up to now, no notification has been received from the Taiwan authorities about appointing a third party to handle the matter.

In addition, they [the Guangzhou Civil Aviation Administration] said: "This is the business of China Airlines. They should send people over to claim the airplane and its personnel and cargo. Whether this matter can be solved quickly depends on China Airlines' attitude." They hold the view that with Taiwan's airplane and its personnel now here, how can the Taiwan authorities; adhering to the past policy of the "three nos," do justice to the two people that want to go home?

Both Sides of the Straits Belong to China's Territory: No Need To Act According to International Regulations

Yu Yanen said that the 747 piloted by Wang Hsi-chueh and its cargo have now been properly taken care of. There are no mechanical problems with the plane. As people in the same trade, they went to see Wang Hsi-chueh, Tung Kuang-hsing, and Chu Ming-chih. Of the three, Tung Kuang-hsing and Chu Ming-chih, who have asked to return to Taiwan, are in very good spirits and are enjoying unusually good health. Concerning their request to go back to Taiwan, this matter is now being taken up. They did not come to the mainland by fulfilling the normal visa procedures. Because of special circumstances, it is still necessary to wait for the Taiwan authorities to send people over to negotiate the matter.

Setting apart the approach to the current incident from previous practice, Yu Yanen said the following two aspects: First, according to the usual practice of various countries, military and civilian planes are treated differently. Nothing is released about a military plane in certain respects. Everything is revealed when a civilian plane is involved. Second, in line with the common wish of the people on both sides of the Straits, the developing situation has changed increasingly in a favorable direction. A change in approach is compatible with the people's wishes.

In addition, in answer to a reporter's question, another official of the Civil Aviation Administration explained what rules should be followed in solving the problem. He said that international aviation regulations apply to relations between countries. Both the China mainland and Taiwan are parts of China's territory, not two different countries. International regulations should not be applied in seeking a solution.

He said that China and South Korea have no diplomatic relations, but people were sent over to settle a similar incident, because China happened to be the owner of the plane involved then. Thus, as the owner of the plane involved in the present incident, CAL should expediently send people over to the mainland to negotiate.

PRC May Detain Crew Members

[By Albert Vhan, in Guangzhou]

[Text] The two crew members of Taiwan's Boeing 747 cargo plane who want to go home may not be allowed to leave just yet, Chinese officials said yesterday. This has given rise to speculation that Beijing may hold the crewmen as a trump card to press Taiwan into agreeing to direct negotiations for their release and for the return of the plane and its cargo. Senior Guangdong aviation officials have already rejected Taiwan's request for Cathay Pacific Airways to negotiate on its behalf.

In an impromptu press conference yesterday morning in Guangzhou, the director of the Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC), Guangzhou branch, Mr Yu Yanen, said the whole issue was an internal Chinese affair and no third party should be involved. He also rejected the idea of using international aviation rules to resolve the case.

The SCM [SOUTH CHINA MORNING] POST asked Mr Yu if the two crewmen could leave the mainland any time they wanted to, since China had said it fully respected their wishes and that they were free to follow -- or not -- their pilot, Commander Wang Xijue (known in Taiwan as Wang Hsi-chueh), who has defected.

Both Mr Yu and a top Guangdong official, Mr Chen Kaizhi, who held a separate press conference in the afternoon, refused to say whether China would allow the two crewmen to leave the mainland. The officials would only repeat a previous statement that China had invited Taiwan's China Air Lines to go to Beijing to sort out arrangements for the two crewmen, the jumbo jet and the goods. Mr Yu said: "There are limits to freedom. Even Hong Kong Chinese need an entry permit to come to China and for the two Taiwanese to leave some procedures need to be taken." He also hinted that Taiwan officials should come to China to arrange for the "procedures."

But both officials stopped short of admitting that they were holding the two Taiwanese crewmen to force Taipei to open a dialogue with Beijing. Mr Yu said: "If Taipei remains stubborn with its no contact policy, they are not being fair to the two crewmen."

Another senior CAAC official, Mr Liang Jingzhao, added: "When our plane was hijacked to South Korea, we sent officials to Seoul to solve the problem. Why shouldn't Taiwan do the same? After all it was their plane that landed in our territory and they should come and take it back." After being told it was a crime in Taiwan to make direct contact with the communist mainland, Mr Yu said: "Laws could be changed."

Mr Chen, vice secretary-general of the Guangdong provincial party committee, disclosed that the two crewmen, Mr Dong Guangxing (Tung Kuang-hsing) and Mr Qiu Mingzhi (Chiu Ming-chih), had already had "several options" in mind about their fate. One of the options is to go to a third place other than Taiwan if the Taiwanese Government does not take them back.

Mr Dong's wife, who has a heart ailment, is now in California. According to Mr Chen, China Air lines' officials have told the wife that they are trying hard to arrange for her husband's return. Mr Chen confirmed that Mr Dong and Mr Qiu had asked for total secrecy about their whereabouts. "It is our sincere hope that they will come out meet the press and take a good look at the mainland but they refused and we respect their decision," said Mr Chen.

As for Mr Wang, it was disclosed that the defector has high blood pressure which is one of the reasons why he could not leave Guangzhou immediately.

Mr Chen also said doctors were assigned to look after the Taiwanese on a daily basis. Another reason why Mr Wang is stranded here is that he is waiting for new suits. "They only brought along a few things and we have arranged for tailors to make clothes for them and they will not be ready for a few days," said Mr Chen.

Commentary Views Incident

HK060511 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE in Chinese 1310 GMT 5 May 86

[Commentary by Tian Ye: "The 'CAL' Case Should Be Handled Soberly"]

[Text] Hong Kong 5 May (ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE) -- Commander Wang Hsi-chueh, former China Airlines (CAL) pilot, landed his CAL cargo plane in Guangzhou because he was so anxious to return to his home. After that, the mainland's CAAC immediately sent an appropriately and sincerely worded telegram, inviting the CAL to send people to Beijing as soon as possible to discuss the problem of handling the matters concerned.

Judging from the present situation, we know that the CPC authorities do not intend to treat the "CAL case" as a political event. The telegram was sent by the CAAC, and the consignee was the unit which owns the cargo plane -- the privately owned CAL in Taiwan. Although the CAAC is an institution of the Chinese Government, it deals with matters concerning civil airplanes. It is natural for the CAAC to invite the other party to discuss the matter of repatriating the plane and persons concerned.

However, it seems the Taiwan side has not been sober enough in handling this matter. Some papers in Taiwan said that the CAL cargo plane landing in Guangzhou meant a "recantation." Some other papers said that the cargo plane was "forced to land by the Air Force of the CPC." The authorities concerned sang the same old tune of "refusing to contact the CPC." Why bother their heads about this matter?

Up to now, the CPC authorities have not treated Wang as a "hero who crossed over." On 4 May, when answering questions raised by reporters, Wang Hsi-chueh said: "When I was in Taiwan, I missed the mainland, my compatriots, and relatives desperately. Sometimes, I simply got mad. Returning to the mainland is my long-cherished desire. I have now attained it." As a person directly involved in the case, Wang Hsi-chueh told people the motives behind the "CAL case." There is no reason for either side to treat this matter as a political event.

The argument that "the plane was forced to land by the CPC Air Force" is not tenable either. On the day the incident happened, Baiyun Airport in Guangzhou was informed by Hong Kong's Kai Tak Airport that a CAL cargo plane intended to land at Baiyun Airport, and that it was asking for permission to land. The mainland learned about the matter only after receiving this notice, and allowed the plane to land. Where did the " forced landing" come from?

Since the incident has happened, we hope that both sides will hold talks to handle it properly, and that they will avoid making it more complicated. It stands to reason that people long for their homes. This was Wang Hsi-chueh's motive in diverting his plane to the mainland. We may temporarily put aside the rights and wrongs of the matter.

The plane has landed on the mainland, and two other people in the plane have expressed their desire to return to Taiwan. Under these circumstances, the CPC has considered the matter as it stands, and asked the CAL to send people to discuss the matter. There is no cause for criticizing the CPC. What is the use of the Taiwan authorities singing the same old tune of "refusing to contact the CPC?" It is an unnecessary move for Taiwan to ask a third party to handle the matter. In addition, the mainland and Taiwan are Chinese territory. It is inappropriate to handle their own affairs according to international practices.

At yesterday's press conference, Chen Kaizhi, deputy secretary general of the Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee said: The Hong Kong office of the CAAC will actively contact the CAL to discuss the matter. The departments concerned in Taiwan should adopt a sober attitude and make a positive response.

YU KUO-HUA MEETS SAUDI FINANCE MINISTER 2 MAY

[Text] Taipei, May 2 (CNA) -- Premier Yu Kuo-hua met with Shaykh Muhammad Aba al-Khayl, Saudi Arabian minister of finance and national economy, Friday at the Grand Hotel in downtown Taipei. Premier Yu extended warm welcome to the Saudi minister. They then exchanged views on the promotion of cooperation between the two countries, particularly in economic and financial fields. Yu said that relations between the Republic of China and Saudi Arabia have been close and cordial. He expressed the hope that this traditional ties of friendship will be further strengthened through frequent exchange of visits by both Chinese and Saudi officials.

Aba al-Khayl said he has visited Taiwan several times. He has been impressed by economic prosperity and political stability here. The Saudi minister also said that his country is undertaking a fourth five-year economic development plan and welcomes greater ROC [Republic of China] participation in the project. Also present at the meeting were Economics Minister Li Ta-hai, ROC Ambassador to Saudi Arabia Tsai Wei-ping and Saudi Ambassador to ROC As'ad 'Abd al-Aziz al-Zuhayr.

Following the meeting, Premier Yu hosted a luncheon in honor of Aba al-Khayl and his entourage. The Saudi minister arrived in Taipei Wednesday to attend the 9th ROC-Saudi Arabia Economic and Technical Cooperation Conference, which ended this afternoon.

OW050427 Taipei CNA in English 0234 GMT 5 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 4 (CNA) -- The Republic of China [ROC] will increase direct purchases of oil from Saudi Arabia, Minister of Economic Affairs Lee Tai-hai said Sunday. The Saudi Government is satisfied with this plan, Lee said. The ROC authorities are negotiating with their Saudi counterparts on the planned increase of oil purchase, he said, adding, a contract will be signed soon.

The nation increases its direct imports of Saudi oil from the initial 10,000 barrels a day to the present 60,000 barrels a day over the years, the minister said. He noted that the increase in Saudi oil supply during the past two energy crises has helped this nation greatly. Currently, the nation buys another 60,000 barrels daily through foreign oil companies, adding up to a total of 120,000 barrels daily.

It is reported that one of the Middle East oil exporting countries has not lowered the prices it asks this nation to pay, and the government decided to buy from Saudi Arabia which lowered the price to U.S. dollars 12 a barrel.

PART I: WANG MENG DISCUSSES PRC LITERATURE, ART

HK011321 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 1 May 86 p 3

["Special interview" by reporter Liu Men-yi: "Wang Meng on Reform in Literature and Art -- "Part 1"]

[Text] "Revolution is a sacred cause. However, it may also make people impatient, and the result of impatience is usually not being able to effectively reach the scheduled target." Wang Meng, a well-known Chinese writer who is to assume the post of minister of culture, declared today that he would be interviewed by the reporter in the capacity of a writer. Since he has not yet been appointed "minister," all matters concerning that position would be discussed later. He spoke with fervor and assurance, introducing China's current policy on literature and art. He talked about relations between reform and literary creation and between literature and politices, his views on Liu Binyan and Ke Yunlu, and questions about the novel Jin Ping Mei ["The Romance of Ximen Qing"]. Wang Meng joined the CPC at the age of 14 and became a "rightist" at 22, but he has not changed his nature of being a Communist Party member and began his talk discussing revolution. He said that after many setbacks, China is now luckily on the road of healthy development.

Abandoned Writing Because Jiang Qing Was in Power

Wang Meng began his career as a writer in 1953. In 1955, he published "Long Live Youth," which attracted much attention in the literary circles. Then in 1956, he wrote his "A Young Man From the Organization Department," but soon after that, he was labelled as a "rightist." He was sent to a Beijing suburb to do manual labor for 4 years and then transferred to Xinjiang. He stayed there for 16 years, during which he engaged in manual labor for 8 years. This experience in his life once made him unwilling to do anything related to writing. He said: "When Jiang Qing was in power, I even threw away my pen. I kept no diary for more than 20 years, and every time I finished reading my wife's letters, I burned them..." He was in such great fear that even a single character might breed a crime.

What is estimable is that this bitter experience has not dampened his enthusiasm for writing, but has deepened his understanding of China's destiny. He said: "This experience has deepened my understanding of the difficulties and arduousness of China's development and reform and especially made me more knowledgeable about the peasants. I feel that all great theories, ideas, and aspirations will just be empty talk if they are not linked with the vast land of China and especially with the peasants."

He is convinced that China's literature and art will be developed better and more healthily. He said: "This is not decided by a certain leader, but by the result of reform." He continued: "Reform of the economic structure will inevitably exert an influence on the people's thinking, ideas, and way of life, as well as on the social atmosphere and environment. This social atmosphere and environment is of great importance to writers. If the reform is carried out successfully, as expected, Chinese writers and artists will be able to promote the cause of literature and art under better conditions and in a more unrestricted environment. In other words, if the reform is not carried out smoothly, the Chinese people will encounter great difficulties, and so will Chinese writers."

There Have Always Been Many "Tendencies" in Literature and Art Circles

When talking about China's current policy on literature and art, he hoped that the reporters would not study China's policy on literature and art merely through materials gathered from the newspapers and leaders' speeches.

Although these materials are very important, they are not the most important. The most important thing is real life (referring to literary life), vivid life. He pointed out that since the third plenary session, the literature and art circles have become animated. On the whole, emancipation of the mind, opening up, blazing new trails, and bringing forth new ideas have been encouraged. Of course, there are also many controversies over differeing literary opinions. He said: There have always been many "tendencies" in literature and art circles. Fortunately enough, over the past 6 or 7 years, these tendencies have only been insignificant, rather than serious, and none have been disastrous.

Then he changed his subject to relations between literature and politics in China. He said: "Chinese literature has a strong political and social sense. This was not started by the Communist Party, but has existed since the Confucian period. Confucius attached great importance to the social effects and role of information and the education of poetry. Through folk songs, a statesman might know whether the society is in good order or not; by examining poems, an emperor might know whether the people had lots of complaints about him and whether there were many corrupt officials in the society."

Wang Meng said that this is a long-standing tradition, but has been further developed in recent years. The main reason is that over the past century since the Opium War, China, an ancient closed country with a distinctive civilization, has made its weakness, poverty, ignorance, and backwardness known to the world...It could hardly live on. Chinese society is now in the course of violent changes. The writers have an especially strong social and political sense. Under such conditions, it is impossible for the people to consider the concept of pure literature. The destiny of all literature and writers is inseparable from the political life of their times.

He said: "Just now, when I said 'since the third plenary session, things have developed so and so,' I thought in very few countries would an accomplished writer say things in this way. For example, U.S. writers would not have said, since a certain meeting of the Republican Party we have...and British writers would not have said, since Mrs Thatcher assumed office, our literature creation has so and so. In those countries, literature creation has little to do with political parties. However, in China, when Jiang Qing was in power, I even threw away my pen...The destiny of Chinese writers and literature creation are too closely related to politics. As a matter of fact, Chinese writers had no freedom and there were no new creation or new literary missions until the third plenary session."

He hoped that the current situation of stability and unity can be maintained. Thus, the influence of politics on literature creation would be reduced, because the people will have manifold demands and needs. He said: "Along with the increase in the people's living standards, their level of reading and appreciation of literature will also be increased. Thus, they will have manifold needs for literature, which will provide more opportunities for the development of the literature cause toward diversification."

TA KUNG PAO PONDERS PRC LITERATURE, ART MOOD

HK010558 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in English 1 May 86 p 2

["The Past Week" column]

[Text] "Rustle in the Trees"

Speaking at a recent congress of musical workers, the newly-appointed chief of the CPC Propaganda Department, Zhu Zehou, made a point that most certainly carried much weightier implications than can be gathered from the scant reports published outside China.

In his assessment of the prevailing mood in the field of art and literature, Zhu observed that the "lively situation" was not without "gentle rings of ripples".

Comparing the ripples to the aftershocks of an earthquake, Zhu pointed to the fact that there are still those in art and literary circles who remain overly sensitive. "Weak-minded persons still get flustered at the slightest rustle in the trees". "Although this is not exactly a good thing," he said, "the ripples are indications that we have yet to get rid of remnants of grievances."

There have been two cases in different fields recently which seem to confirm Zhu's allusion to "ripples" and "rustling in the trees". Both, unfortunately, reminded many of the "sticks" and "hats" in the ten sad years.

The most recent "rustle" occurred in the field of theoretical research in literature caused by an article by no less than the director of the Institute of Literature under the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, Liu Zaifu. Concurrently a member of the CPPCC and a probable Chinese candidate for the Nobel Prize in theoretical research, Liu's recent postulations include what might loosely be translated as the dual personality of characters, e.g. that one personality contains both strong points and weaknesses, and other original thinking which has attracted a great of deal of interest in Chinese literary and theoretical circles.

Liu believes that in present day China there is a tendency for literary research to detach itself from the economic base and the superstructure, such as politics and the author's world outlook. Instead, according to Liu, the emphasis in theoretical research seems to have been diverted into what he calls the "inner laws" of creative works by which he means their aesthetic qualities and the disciplines governing the different genres. "In a nutshell, the tendency is to return to literature itself."

Liu's analysis brings a new dimension to creative works. For instance, it can be inferred that great writers and, indeed, the characters they create, need not be morally better than the rest of humanity.

But recently, Liu's views have been taken to task by a critic writing in the theoretical journal RED FLAG. Proclaimed this critic: Liu's postulations are quite alien to Marxism and dialectical materialism. This is by means a small question, he lashed out, but one that concerns the "destiny" of Marxism as well as the whole edifice of socialist art and literature in China.

The matter might have rested here if the critic, Chen Yong, was seen to be giving his personal opinion. But there are fears that this may not be the case as Chen is a leading cadre in the policy-research office at the CPC Secretariat.

Be this as it may, there is a consensus that brandishing a big stick is never a good policy. In theoretical matters, especially, progress is never derived from old ideas alone but rather from the impact of new thinking and fair discussions thereof.

'Much Ado About Nothing'

The clampdown on Liu Zaifu calls to mind the tough handling five months ago of a treatise on economics by the pseudonymous Ma Ding published in BEIJING REVIEW on 9 December 1985. But it is of interest that in this case, the author was castigated not because of any fault of his article but because of what foreign press reports said about it. Entitled "Ten Major Changes in China's Study of Economics", the article drew wide attention for its assertion that not all Karl Marx's writings apply to present-day economics.

"Marxist political economy faces different tasks in different historical periods," it says. But in the 20th century, after socialism has changed from a scientific theory to reality, the main task confronting Marxist political economy is no longer to criticize the old capitalist world but to facilitate the more strenuous historical task of building a new socialist world...For these questions, no ready answers can be found in 'Das Kapital.'"

After pointing out that Marx, Engels and Lenin not only critically assimilated classical economics but also affirmed the "rational and valuable elements" of contemporary bourgeois economics, the article also gives a list of contemporary Western economic thinking which it considers "should not be ignored". These included J.M. Keynes' method of macro-analysis and his theory of using fiscal and monetary expansion to activate circulation and consumption, and the analysis made by the neo-laisser-faire school on the market mechanism and the harm done by excessive state interference in economic activities, etc.

As it transpired, Ma Ding's applecart was upset by two foreign newspapers. The first was YOMIURI SHIMBUN which, in a report on 12 December 1985 misinterpreted the article by reporting that its author had written that "Das Kapital" had lost its validity in an appeal "to boldly adopt the fruits of contemporary Western economics".

Taking its cue from YOMIURI SHIMBUN, the second was the CHUNG newspaper based in New York, which then sounded a warning against the emergence of what it called "academic ultilitarism" in China. In an editorial published on 19 December 1985, it cautioned Chinese economists against "indigestion from gobbling down foreign theories".

But the cycle of falsification was completed by a third party, this time, from China itself. This was the economic reference published in Beijing which joined the fray by blindly parroting the CHUNG newspaper's fairy tale without checking Ma Ding's article. The pompous editorial the CHUNG newspaper carried was entitled "Marxist Economics Has Great Vitality" -- as if Marx had really been seriously challenged by Ma Ding.

The upshot was the scandalous "mini-storm caused by Ma Ding". That this "storm", which had no cause whatever in the first place, actually wreaked considerable havoc among academics in Beijing can be seen not only from the outpouring of criticisms against Ma Ding, but also from the fact that a special meeting called by the CPC Propaganda Department in March devoted half its agenda to setting the record straight.

It was not surprising, therefore, that some incisive observations were made by Chinese economists at this meeting. Zhu Shaowen, a research fellow at the Economic Institute, observed that China watchers seem to have a penchant for seizing upon any development on the theoretical plane as a negation of Marxism. Other views expressed, however, were more self-critical, e.g., woe to him who becomes a subject of foreign comment, favourable or unfavourable.

The latter observation calls to mind a passage in Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on China's 7th Five-Year Plan delivered at the recent NPC: "At present, our research in economic theories lags behind the reform and economic development...we should continue to uphold the principle of integrating theory with practice and give encouragement to those who dare to pioneer in theory and practice. In the meantime, we should learn from all other countries, including the developed capitalist countries, by drawing on their advanced methods of economic management, which reflect the laws governing large-scale, socialized production."

[Text] Beijing, May 7 (XINHUA) -- General Secretary Hu Yaobang of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee will pay an official visit to Britain, Federal Germany, France and Italy from June 9 to 23, announced a Foreign Ministry spokesman at today's weekly news briefing. Hu has been invited by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Chancellor Helmut Kohl of the Federal Republic of Germany and Chairman Willy Brandt of the Social Democratic Party of Germany, President Francois Mitterrand of the Republic of France, and Prime Minister Bettino Craxi of the Republic of Italy. Hu will also pay a return visit to the Italian Communist Party during his visit to Italy at the invitation of Alessandro Natta, general secretary of the Communist Party of Italy, the spokesman said.

Comments on ASEAN Statement

[Text] Beijing, May 7 (XINHUA) -- China appreciates the position taken in the joint statement by the foreign ministers of the ASEAN countries, a Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman said at the weekly news briefing here today. He said that China appreciates ASEAN's effort to seek a political settlement of the Kampuchean question and active support of the eight-point proposal put forward recently by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea.

Asked about the situation along the Sino-Vietnamese border, the spokesman replied, the Vietnamese authorities have never ceased their military provocations against China along the Sino-Vietnamese border and the Chinese border troops have made necessary counter attacks.

Commenting on the recent reshuffle of the Afghan regime, he said that the key to a political settlement of the Afghan issue lies in the withdrawal of Soviet troops from that country.

REPORTAGE ON TOKYO ECONOMIC SUMMIT

XINHUA News Analysis

OW061238 Beijing XINHUA in English 1216 GMT 6 May 86

["News Analysis: Summit Proceeds With U.S. Views Prevail (by Zhao Zijian)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Tokyo, May 6 (XINHUA) -- As the three-day Tokyo economic summit draws to an end, results yielded so far show that the U.S. views have prevailed in economic matters as well as in political issues discussed at this meeting, the 12th of its kind.

On the exchange rate issue, Japan had indicated earlier to the U.S. that the desirable level of the yen against the dollar was 180 to one. However, resisted by the U.S. side, Japan backed down a little by favoring the current level of about 170 yen to one dollar, although Federal German Chancellor Helmut Kohl had assured Japan of his support to Japan's request. Federal Germany is, too, worried about its Deutsch mark's rise against the dollar.

The United States on the other hand has insisted, as Treasury Secretary James Baker indicated during the summit, that the dollar's desirable level is that decided by the market force, which partly contributed to the continued slide of the dollar so far.

The United States also had its influence on policy coordination among major industrialized nations, which is part of the reason why the summit is called annually. Policy coordination, now a fashionable term among the major industrialized countries, requires the governments to confer with one another when needed to correct certain undesirable development such as currency rates fluctuations. It also calls for intervention in the financial market and the outcome of the interventions by the G-5 nations under their "plaza agreement" reached in New York last September only showed that the United States is the most benefitted from such actions.

Last night, the United States also played an important part in including Canada and Italy in the finance ministers' club of the Group of Five. The European Community and Federal Germany had resisted the idea of adding Canada and Italy in the club for different reasons. The EC holds that the currency matters should be consulted in a large group incorporating countries in the Group of 10 of the IMF, while Federal Germany believes the Group of Five makes consultations easier and more effective. With the U.S. and Japan supported adding the two countries in the group, Canada and Italy threatening to oppose the final economic decision of the summit if they were not let in. [sentence as received] The deal finally got through, and, as a compromise, the Group of Five will remain in a "quieter" manner, to use the words of British Chancellor of Exchequer Nigel Lawson.

Of course, not all the economic punches at the summit came from the United States. During the meeting, France called for reforms in the international monetary system, more aid to developing countries and adding agricultural issues to the agenda of the next round of global trade talks under the General Agreement of Tariffs and Trade (GATT).

Economic Declaration Roundup

OW061432 Beijing XINHUA in English 1404 GMT 6 May 86

["Roundup: Tokyo Summit Ends With Economic Declaration, by Zhao Zijian" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Tokyo, May 6 (XINHUA) -- The 12th Economic Summit of the Seven Industrial Countries concluded here today with an economic declaration that calls for further coordination of economic policies among the summit nations and for helping the developing nations through cooperation with multilateral institutions.

The six-page declaration, announced here this afternoon by Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone, said, "Developments since our last meeting reflect the effectiveness of the policies" the summiteers have adopted since the last summit in Bonn, Federal Germany.

Observers interpret the declaration to mean that there will be continued tightening of fiscal measures in some countries to prevent resurgence of inflation while loosening to a certain extent of monetary controls to promote economic growth and to lower unemployment.

In accessing the current world economic situation, the declaration said, "There has been a significant shift in the pattern of exchange rates which better reflects fundamental economic conditions."

Together with the drastic drop in oil prices, which will save the industrial countries about 10 billion dollars in energy costs this year, "these developments offer brighter prospects, and enhance confidence in the future of the world economy," it said.

Overviewing such problems, as high unemployment, large domestic and external imbalances, world debt, and the uncertainty of oil prices, the declaration calls for policies that take into account medium and longer term considerations and deal with the "structural problems" of large trade imbalances, labor market constraints and industrial reforms.

The declaration refrained from pointing out the disruptions to the world economy by large U.S. fiscal deficits that have absorbed world capital. Instead, it referred in general terms to the present tight fiscal policies in some industrial countries.

On the touchy question of policy coordination, especially of financial policy, the declaration approved the expansion of the Group of Five -- United States, Britain, France, Federal Germany and Japan -- to include Italy and Canada. The leaders of the industrial countries also agreed to strengthen multilateral surveillance of their economic policies according to nine indicators, namely GNP growth rates, inflation rates, interest rates, unemployment rates, fiscal deficit ratios, current account and trade balances, monetary growth rates, reserves, and exchange rates. Last month, the Group of 10, a caucus of industrial countries in the International Monetary Fund (IMF), asked the IMF to study the kind of indicators needed for policy surveillance. The nine indicators endorsed by the summit leaders would eventually be applied in cooperation with the IMF.

On issues concerning developing countries, the declaration insisted on a "case-by-case" approach toward the international debt problem, in opposition to the demands by developing countries for a general package. It endorsed the initiative of U.S. Secretary James Baker last September that calls for providing 29 billion dollars in new lending to 15 major debtor countries over the next three years on conditions that these countries reform their policies.

However, the declaration said the the leaders "attach great importance" to an early capital replenishment of the International Development Association (IDA), which is affiliated to the World Bank but concentrates on assisting the world's poorest nations through concessionary terms.

The summit leaders also indicated their willingness to a general capital increase of the World Bank and to start the World Bank's investment guarantee scheme designed to encourage investment in developing countries, but added the words "when needed" to its commitments.

The declaration said that the summit countries are ready to assist in resolving the hunger problem in Africa, focusing on medium- and long-term economic developments in the countries that need help.

Leaders of the industrial countries repeated their commitments to halt trade protectionism, but failed to mention specific measures to solve the issue, leaving it to the September ministerial meeting.

The declaration showed disagreements among the summit leaders over the timing of a new round of global economic negotiations. It says simply that the summiteers will work "to make decisive progress in this direction" at the September OECD ministerial meeting in Uruguay.

Agricultural trade is dealt separately in the declaration. The only encouraging word is that, in regard to surpluses, "action is needed to redirect policies and adjust the structure of agricultural production in the light of world demand."

The declaration also emphasizes the need to increase oil stocks as prices are low, the need for better scientific and technological cooperation between the industrial countries and the need to protect the environment.

Today's declaration is the fourth during the May 4-6 Tokyo summit. The first is a political declaration demonstrating the common stands of the major industrial countries, followed by two statements on international terrorism and on nuclear power safety.

The next summit will be held in 1987 in Italy.

PRC 'Diplomatic Sources' Quoted

OW061252 Tokyo KYODO in English 1246 GMT 6 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 6 KYODO -- Chinese diplomatic sources Tuesday unofficially criticized the Tokyo summit nations for naming Libya in a statement on international terrorism. The sources said the U.S. bombing raid against Libya on April 15, which they claim was a violation of both territory and sovereignty, cannot be justified among world society. However, they appreciated the summiteers' attitude of attaching importance to the Asian area. In particular, the sources welcomed the reaffirmation in the statement that industrial countries could not see sustained and stable development without fostering the development of the developing countries.

Referring to economic issues, the sources expressed their keen interest in calls in the Tokyo summit economic statement calling for the strengthening of multilateral economic surveillance and expansion of the original Group-of-5 finance ministers to include those of Canada and Italy.

Reagan: 'Triumph in Tokyo'

OW070632 Beijing XINHUA in English 0627 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] Tokyo, May 7 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan today described the just-concluded economic summit as "a triumph in Tokyo", saying that the summit had opened the way for a new round of trade talks. Speaking to reporters shortly before boarding the presidential jet for home, Reagan said the meeting with leaders from Japan, Federal Germany, Britain, France, Canada, Italy and the European Community was "constructive" and was "the most successful of the six that I have attended." He said the summit has given "a green light" to a new round of multilateral trade talks under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).

Because of opposition from France and the European Community, the summit leaders failed once again to set a starting date for the talks and have left "decisive progress" to be made at the ministerial meeting in September in a bid to reduce protectionist pressures. "One danger to the common prosperity that we all recognize is the spectre of protectionism, that vain search for security behind tariff walls and in closed markets," he said.

The president said another agreement reached by the summit participants would help ease the trade imbalance between the United States and its trading partners and promote greater stability in exchange rates.

He also said the summit would lead to concerted action against terrorism." "We are going to treat with it on a united front," Reagan said. Propelled mainly by the United States, the three-day economic summit adopted a statement on combatting international terrorism in which summit leaders, after ironing out disagreement on matters of "wording", criticized Libya by name for "sponsoring" and "supporting" terrorist activities.

ENVOY TO UN ON DISARMAMENT COMMENTS ON ARMS RACE

OW070819 Beijing XINHUA in English 0751 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] United Nations, May 6 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Ambassador for Disarmament Fan Guoxiang, depicting the present disarmament situation, said today, "On the one hand, the general atmosphere has somewhat improved, offering a bit of optimism. On the other, nothing has been achieved in the concrete implementation of arms reductions." He made the remarks when reviewing the development of disarmament in the past year at the 1986 substantive session of the United Nations Disarmament Commission. The annual session of the Disarmament Commission, which began yesterday and will last four weeks, will focus on various aspects of the arms race, particularly nuclear disarmament.

The newly-appointed Chinese ambassador for disarmament noted that though the United States and the Soviet Union, which possess the largest nuclear arsenals, undertook some responsibilities for disarmament during the past year, their arms race was still continuing and even extending into a new sphere -- the outer space.

Fan reiterated the Chinese Government's nine-point basic position and views on disarmament, which were outlined by Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang last March at a rally in Beijing marking the International Year of Peace.

The basic position and views include: The United States and the Soviet Union should take the lead in halting the testing, production and deployment of all types of nuclear weapons and drastically reduce all types of nuclear weapons they have deployed anywhere inside and outside their countries and destroy them on the spot; the ultimate goal of nuclear disarmament should be the complete prohibition and thorough destruction of nuclear weapons; all nuclear-weapon states should undertake not to be the first to use nuclear weapons in any circumstances; along with nuclear arms reduction there should be a drastic reduction of conventional arms; an international agreement on the complete prohibition of space weapons should be concluded through negotiations as soon as possible; and all countries should enjoy equal rights to participate in the discussions and settlement of problems related to disarmament.

The position and views, he stressed, had been formulated after taking into account the desire of all the peoples in the world and the position of all the parties concerned. "We are convinced that they constitute a practical approach towards a genuine disarmament and a lasting peace."

Fan noted that disarmament is not the only issue affecting world peace and security. In international relations, he said, all countries, big or small, should strictly observe the principle of equality and refrain from interfering in the internal affairs or encroaching upon the sovereignty of other countries in any form. The question of nuclear and conventional disarmament involves the matter at the core, he said, adding "The key issue to its solution remains the same -- whether the two superpowers have the goodwill for disarmament and whether they undertake their responsibilities for disarmament."

The Chinese ambassador reiterated that China is consistently opposed to the arms race and stands for disarmament, nuclear disarmament in particular. "Like other countries in the world, China is concerned about the progress in disarmament negotiations," he said.

U.S., USSR SEEK TO REDUCE NUCLEAR WAR RISKS

OW070410 Beijing XINHUA in English 0051 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 6 (XINHUA) -- U.S. State Department spokesman Charles Redman announced today that the United States and the Soviet Union met this week to discuss establishing centers to reduce the risk of an accidental nuclear war. The two-day meeting, held Monday and Tuesday in Geneva, was called for in the communique signed last November at the Geneva summit meeting between U.S. President Ronald Reagan and Soviet Leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

If established, the centers in Washington and Moscow would exchange information about American and Soviet military operations and discuss each other's military doctrine, thereby reducing the chances of an unintended military confrontation. Redman said the discussions were between experts in the field and were "exploratory" in nature. He refused to say whether the recent Soviet nuclear reactor accident in Kiev was discussed.

PARTICIPATION IN SEOUL OLYMPICS HAILED

HK021355 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE in Chinese 1157 GMT 1 May 86

[Commentary by Yao Wang: "It is a Pleasure to Learn of China's Decision to Participate in the Asian Games and the Olympics to be Held in Seoul"]

[Text] Hong Kong, 1 May (ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE) -- Newspapers recently reported that China had officially decided to participate in the 10th Asian Games to be held in Seoul in September this year and the 24th Summer Olympic Games to be held in the same city in 1988.

Strictly speaking, China's decision to participate in the Asian Games and the Olympics is nothing new. This is because China has participated in several successive Asian Games and the outstanding performance of Chinese athletes has been appreciated by all. Also, China has along played a part in the Olympic Games. What is particularly remarkable is that during the Los Angeles Olympics, the first Olympics in which China participated since it regained its membership in the Olympic movement in 1979, China made not just a breakthrough in emerging as a new medalist but also won at one stroke 32 medals, 15 of which were gold medals. All Chinese around the world were overjoyed with the splendid achievements made by the Chinese athletes and felt an upsurge of emotion on learning the news.

After the site for the next Asian Games and Olympics was set, a question that worried people, because there are no diplomatic relations between China and South Korea [nan han 0589 7281], was whether China would participate in these games or would rule out the possibility of participating in them in view of certain factors? There were repeated boycotts at several previous Olympics. These were regrettable and cast a shadow on the sacred Olympic movement.

Pierre de Coubertin, founder of the modern Olympics, said: "What is important in the Olympics is not to win but to participate." Truly, the important thing is to participate. If a country is apt to boycott, withdraw from, or refuse to participate in the Olympic Games, and thus deprive its athletes of the opportunity to compete in sports, how can the motto of the Olympics -- "faster, taller, and stronger" -- be achieved? How can the goal of the Olympic movement -- "to cultivate and foster friendship among athletes of different nations" -- be fulfilled?

China's decision was a wise one. this is not only because China, as a member of the Olympic movement and the Asian Games organization, has to meet its obligations, of course, but also because Chinese athletes will have the opportunity to "participate" and to try hard to "win" in the games, thanks to this decision. In addition, this decision will lend the Chinese people an opportunity to contribute to promoting friendship with different peoples.

JAPAN TO EXTEND LOAN TO PRC IN FISCAL 1986

OW021613 Beijing XINHUA in English 1543 GMT 2 May 86

[Text] Tokyo, May 2 (XINHUA) -- The Japanese Government decided today to extend 80.6 billion yen (about 474 million U.S. dollars) in a loan to China in fiscal 1986, the JIJI press reported today. The loan will be mainly used for seven projects in China, including the expansion of the railway between Shengyang and Guangzhou in the south and of the Qinhuangdao Harbor on China's eastern coast. China, Indonesia and Thailand are three top recipients of Japanese loans.

HU YAOBANG MEETS SINGAPORE ECONOMIST

OW061342 Beijing XINHUA in English 1332 GMT 6 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 6 (XINHUA) -- Chinese leader Hu Yaobang said here today that China would continue to introduce the talented personnel from abroad. At a meeting with Dr. Goh Keng Swee, a Singaporean economist, Hu, general secretary of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, said, "While attaching importance to the training and use of our own skilled people, we also need to turn to the world for help.

"China has many talented people. In the past few years we have promoted many knowledgeable and capable people to leading posts," he added. Hu said, as China has limitations in its understanding of the present world, "That is why we need to introduce talented people from abroad," he said. Hu called this a strategic policy, adding that it is China's long-term task to learn from foreign experts.

The Chinese leader thanked Dr. Goh for the work he has done since he accepted the Chinese Government's invitation to serve as economic advisor for the development of China's coastal areas and tourism advisor last year. He hoped Dr. Goh would give his suggestions and opinions on China's economic construction in a wide-ranging areas.

The Singaporean economist said over the past four years, the world economy has developed slowly, but the rate of China's economic development has increased by more than ten percent each year." This is terrific," he added. He considered China's policy of opening to the outside world to be "perfectly correct", as China has imported the technology it required and built needed industry.

He hoped Chinese economic management personnel would not only be familiar with the law of the development of China's economy, but also with that of the world economy and international markets. He also suggested the close integrity of science and technology and production, as well as the strengthening of training talented personnel and vocational education.

Present on the occasion were State Councillor Gu Mu and Chairman of the Port of Singapore Authority Lim Kim San who is accompanying Dr. Goh on the visit. Dr. Goh arrived in Beijing May 2, and Gu Mu met and gave a banquet for him yesterday. He is due to visit Nanjing, Yangzhou and Suzhou for a field study of tourism.

NPC DELEGATION WELCOMED IN AUSTRALIA

OW061912 Beijing XINHUA in English 1839 GMT 6 May 86

[Text] Canberra, May 6 (XINHUA) -- Australian parliamentary leaders gave a grand reception here today in honor of the visiting Chinese National People's Congress (NPC) delegation led by Peng Chong and Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincain, vice-chairmen of the NPC Standing Committee.

In a welcoming speech, Douglas McClelland, president of the Senate, said that Australia views its relationship with China as being very important. "We are delighted that you have accepted our invitation to visit Australia," McClelland said, adding, "I believe mutual understanding of the economic, social and political systems of our respective countries is greatly enhanced by visits of this nature."

Speaker of the House of Representatives Joan Child said the Chinese NPC delegation's visit further indicates the importance which China attaches to its relationship with Australia.

Australian Prime Minister Bob Hawke also made a welcoming speech. He said that parliamentary exchanges are a most important element in developing people-to-people contacts between the two countries. "I am looking forward to my visit to China in just under two weeks time, when I will be able to renew my valued friendships with senior Chinese leaders," Hawke said.

Opposition leader John Howard also warmly welcomed the Chinese delegation to visit Australia.

In his speech, Peng Chong said that China and Australia share the desire to safeguard world peace and develop their economies. He said that the delegation has come with the desire of seeking friendship, enhancing understanding and drawing on Australia's experience. Peng expressed the belief that the Australian prime minister's forthcoming visit to China will surely push the Sino-Australian relations to a new high.

The Chinese delegation flew in yesterday and was received by Australian Governor-General Sir Ninian Stephen and Lady Stephen at the Government House later.

SINGAPORE FINANCE MINISTER RECEIVES CHEN HUA

[Text] Singapore, May 6 (XINHUA) -- Singapore Finance Minister Richard Hu Tsu Tau held talks here today with Chen Muhua, Chinese state councilor, and president of the People's Bank of China (PBC). Hu briefed Chen on the role and management of Singapore's financial institutions and discussed with Chen cooperation between the two nations in finance and other fields. Lee Hisen Loong, acting minister of trade and industry, also met Chen today. Chen arrived here on May 3 for an official visit, the first by a PBC president

LANGE 'CONFIDENT' OF PACIFIC NUCLEAR FREE ZONE

OW061459 Beijing XINHUA in English 1129 GMT 6 May 86

[Text] Wellington, May 6 (XINHUA) -- New Zealand Prime Minister David Lange remains confident of the realization of a South Pacific nuclear free zone in spite of opposition from U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, the local press reported today.

"THE NATIONAL TIMES," an Australian journal, reported last week that Weinberger had "bluntly" told senior Australian Government members that the U.S. Government believed Australia's initiative to establish the zone would directly benefit the Soviet Union's global objectives. These views, which Weinberger expressed during talks in Canberra three weeks ago, were apparently reaffirmed during the visit of Australian Prime Minister Bob Hawke to Washington, the journal said.

Lange told reporters yesterday he was not at all surprised to read Weinberger's views about the zone. "Weinberger has been consistently opposed to anything which he sees could be a fetter on the United States capacity to respond to what he calls Soviet expansionism.

Australian Prime Minister Hawke supported the South Pacific nuclear free zone proposal at the South Pacific forum in Tuvalu in 1984. A treaty of the South Pacific nuclear free zone was adopted by leaders of 10 South Pacific countries in Rarotonga, capital of Cook Islands, in August last year.

SINO-PAKISTAN BORDER PASS OPENED TO THIRD COUNTRIES

OW031740 Beijing XINHUA in English 1452 GMT 3 May 86

[Text] Urumqi, May 3 (XINHUA) -- The Khunjerab Pass on the Sino-Pakistan border has been opened to personnel of third countries as from May 1, with the approval of the Chinese and Pakistan Governments. The pass, on the Pamirs, is along the ancient "silk road". China and Pakistan opened it to each other on August 1982. A ceremony was held at the pass on May 1 to mark its opening to third countries. Speaking at the ceremony, both Chinese and Pakistan officials expressed the belief that it will help the two countries expand their foreign contacts and trade. After the ceremony, over 100 foreign tourists entered the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region via the pass.

INDIAN ASSOCIATION CALLS FOR UNITY WITH PRC

OW051014 Beijing XINHUA in English 0947 GMT 5 May 86

[Text] New Delhi, May 5 (XINHUA) -- India-China unity "is a key task" before India, the National Conference of India-China Association declared here yesterday at its concluding session. In a resolution adopted at the session, the association expressed its satisfaction over the fact that certain measures had been taken by the two governments towards the normalization of relations.

A report by the general secretaries of the association, which was also adopted at the session, stressed the need to improve relations between India and China "in the fields of trade, commerce, culture, science and technology. The report said that "the day is not far off when the old slogan of Hindi-China Bhai-Bhai (Indians and Chinese are brothers) will echo and re-echo in the length and breadth of both countries. B.B. Mandal was re-elected President of the association.

U.S. MINIMIZES IMPACT OF KARMAL RESIGNATION

OW050654 Beijing XINHUA in English 0627 GMT 5 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 4 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. State Department said in a statement today that the Reagan administration "will not attach undue importance to the changeover in the leadership" in Afghanistan. In reaction to the resignation of Babrak Karmal as head of the ruling People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan, the statement said, "The identities of those who hold leadership positions are of less significance than the continued presence of 120,000 Soviet troops in Afghanistan." The Soviet military presence, it said, "keeping the Afghan people from expressing their will through a government of their own choosing."

Afghan state radio reported that Karmal had resigned for health reasons and was replaced by the former head of the state secret service Mohammad Najibollah who is believed here as a staunch ally of Karmal.

The State Department noted in the statement that the change in the leadership in Afghanistan "may be connected with the next round" of the U.N.-sponsored negotiations on Afghanistan scheduled to be held in Geneva on May 5. "The important issue is what hard proposals regarding withdrawal of the Soviet forces from Afghanistan are put forward in Geneva," it stressed. The United States strongly supports "the U.N. efforts to find a negotiated settlement in accordance with the terms of the seven U.N. resolutions passed by overhwelming majorities in successive sessions of the U.N. General Assembly," the statement said.

HU QILI MEETS VISITORS FROM ARGENTINA 6 MAY

OW061408 Beijing XINHUA in English 1400 GMT 6 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 6 (XINHUA) -- Hu Qili, member of the Political Bureau of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, met Sergio Montiel, secretary of the National Committée of the Argentine Radical Civic Union and governor of Entre Rios, and his party here this afternoon.

Hu, also member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, said the Chinese Communist Party and the Argentine Radical Civic Union established relations several years ago. "Our two parties have shared similar views on many important issues," he added. He expressed the hope that China, Argentina and other developing countries should undertake South-South cooperation for common development on the basis of equality and mutual benefit.

Montiel said the two parties have been working for state sovereignty and the dignity of mankind in accordance with their own countries' concrete conditions.

Since its founding more than 90 years ago, the Argentine Radical Civic Union has persevered in the policy of striving for and safeguarding peace, he said. The purpose of their visit to China is to seek for cooperation and explore into the possibilities of expanding bilateral trade. Hu said he hoped for the constant growth of bilateral cooperation in economic, trade and cultural fields.

MULRONEY ANSWERS QUESTIONS ON COMING PRC VISIT

OW060837 Beijing XINHUA in English 0737 GMT 6 May 86

["Canadian Prime Minister on His Visit to China (by Cai Shuqi)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Vancouver, May 6 (XINHUA) -- Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney says his visit to China will be "one step further in an already strong relationship" between the two countries. Mulroney will make a five-day official visit to China from May 8 to 12.

In a written response to questions from XINHUA released on the eve of his departure for the Tokyo economic summit, Mulroney said his first official visit to China will continue the process of political and economic exchanges between Canada and China and open new sectors of cooperation between the two nations.

"Canada-China relations are excellent," the Canadian leader said, "this model relationship will continue to develop even further because it has always been based on mutual respect and trust." He said the "Canada-China relationship is also based on a broad convergence of views on international affairs. We share common objectives for peace and security, arms control and stability throughout Asia."

Mulroney said both Canada and China wish to improve the quality of life for their citizens, and added that China's plan for economic modernization "brings to light another aspect of our relationship; our economic complementarity."

He noted "the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA) has developed a major program in China since 1981. It concentrates on agriculture, forestry, energy and education. This program is working very well and we wish to increase our level of assistance in the near future." Mulroney said Candada's large Chinese community has made "a very positive contribution to Canada's cultural mosaic. Canada also welcomes over 1,000 students from China every year."

Mulroney praised Chinese President Li Xiannian's visit to Canada last July and Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang's visit to the country in 1984. "My visit to the People's Repblic of China will bring us one step further in an already strong relationship between our two countries."

"I look forward to my visit and my discussions with Premier Zhao and other Chinese leaders. I hope to learn more about the results of the National People's Congress which took place in April and the directions of China's new Five-Year Plan."

The Canadian prime minister said China's leaders will be interested in hearing his views on the outcome of the Tokyo summit of seven industrialized nations. "People-to-people contact facilitates discussions and my visit to China will not only enable an important exchange of views on the world situation but also promote increased bilateral relations between our two countries."

Mulroney said Canada and China will sign several agreements during his visit, and cited the recent opening of a Canadian Consulate General in Shanghai and the future direct air link between Shanghai and Vancouver as examples of the expanding Canada-China relationship.

Asked about the role of the Pacific rim in the economic development of the world, Mulroney said that the Pacific has emerged as a leading force in the world economy. The newly industrializing countries of the Pacific and most of the developing countries, including China, continue to achieve higher growth rates than most industrialized countries, he noted.

He said his visit to Asia is a "most telling demonstration of the importance" he attaches to this region. "During my visit, I will be promoting increased economic, commercial cooperation and exchanging views on a variety of international issues with my Asian friends," he added.

The Canadian Government has launched important trade initiatives in Asia and the Pacific and has decided to increase its presence in Asia by opening new consulates and trade offices, he said. With the new Consulate General in Shanghai and an increase in the staff at its Embassy in Beijing, Canada will have doubled its trade personnel in China this year, he added. The Canadian Prime Minister stressed the Chinese people can count on Canada being a reliable partner in their "new long march" to modernization.

RENMIN RIBAO ON PROFESSOR PAVING WAY FOR OTHERS

HK061134 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 28 Apr 86 pp 1, 4

[Newsletter by reporter Gao Xinqing: "He Is Quiet But Attractive -- a Portrait of Professor Shen Shuyong, Who Is Little Known at Home"]

[Excerpts] I accepted the suggestion -- "You reporters should write more about intellectuals like this one!" -- and visited a little-known professor.

"I am an Ordinary Man"

"This is Professor Shen." I was introduced to Professor Shen, who reached out his hand and firmly shook hands with me. He was around 1.65 meters tall with one hollow eye, which was obviously blind, and a thin face. He was wearing an old Chinese-style unlined gray upper garment and looked like an accountant of the old days. I doubted in my heart: Is this Professor Shen Shuyong of the Beijing Post and Telecommunications Institute?

During his 30-year teaching career, Professor Shen has four times changed specialities: In the 1950's, he specialized in circuit theory and electronic survey technology; in the 1960's, he specialized in electronic technology and meters; in the 1970's, he specialized in digital communications and logical designing; and in the late 1970's and early 1980's, he specialized in computer science. Although his different specialities are very close to one another, each has its own research field, independent theoretical system, and knowledge structure. So each time, Professor Shen had to take great pains to shift from one speciality to the next. However, each time, Professor Shen quietly accepted the task according to the teaching requirement and organizational arrangement. Professor Shen studied assiduously and explored arduously. Each time Professor Shen shifted from one speciality to an other, he became proficient in the new speciality so that he gradually became the "authority" in it. Professor Shen told me: "I have changed specialities several times in my lifetime. I changed my speciality for the last time when I was nearly 60 years old. I studied computer science, which was then developing very fast. Both physically and mentally, I felt that it was a hard nut to crack. However, when thinking that the 1980's is characterized by fast upgrading of knowledge, and old specialities will surely be eliminated by rapid scientific and technological development if they are not replenished with new knowledge. I felt that it would not do to rest content with old specialities and old knowledge. I felt that I must do all I can to catch up and study hard!" With such a striving spirit, Professor Shen has overcome one difficulty after another in teaching and in scientific research and has made great achievements.

As far as computer science is concerned, within 2 to 3 years, Professor Shen wrote "Software Basic," "Computer-Aided Logical Design," "E -- 80 Collection of Program Designs," "P A S C A V Programming Language," and some other teaching materials. Professor Shen has also read many of his theses at the annual meetings of the Association of Computer Science and the digital systematic designing and automation group. During this period, "applied 32-head output combination for logical design software" and "combined and time-serial logical design programme," products of Professor Shen's study, won the second-class prize for scientific and technological achievements of Beijing City and the prize for scientific and technological progress of the Ministry of Posts and Telecommunications, respectively. People say that as long as Professor Shen continues to work and study hard, he will surely be able to make more scientific and technological achievements and win more prizes.

Professor Shen has compiled a lot of teaching materials, but none is a long monumental work. People felt extremely sorry for him and said that he should have written volumes of monumental works because he has a profound foundation of knowledge and a wide range of specialities.

In 1979, the Beijing Posts and Telecommunications Institute decided to buy a medium-sized general Romanian-made computer with plans to establish a computer center. The institute also decided to send abroad a group of people headed by Professor Shen to study and do research on the software and hardware technologies of the computer. Upon accepting the task, Professor Shen began to think: I have never been abroad. It is a good opportunity to head a team to go abroad to do research and studies, but I am the head of the computer center, and the work of capital construction and other preparatory work of the center have just begun. Is it good to leave the entire work to deputy head Xu Yizhen, a woman comrade? ... I should stay here! The next day, Professor Shen went to see the leader of the institute and suggested that Xu Yizhen lead the team abroad and he stay behind to take care of the work of capital construction and the preparatory work of the center. He had an argument with Xu over this, but finally, Xu agreed to replace Professor Shen as head of the team. Seeing that Professor Shen was so sincere, the leader of the institute agreed to Professor Shen's suggestion. Recently, the institute again decided to let him head a team to go to Japan to do research, but Professor Shen again declined and gave the opportunity to the "younger comrades." Professor Shen has still not gone abroad. However, he has written many recommendation letters for others who have gone abroad to study and do research.

In 1984, the Beijing Posts and Telecommunications Institute imported some minicomputers. Since the institute had only the English version of the relevant computer materials, it was impossible to widely popularize and use the computers. Professor Shen was worried. In the name of the computer faculty, Professor Shen put up a poster: The computer faculty is planning to hold a short-term training course on the use of minicomputers. All teachers and students are welcome to join the course. Immediately, over 200 people applied for the course. The minicomputers are something completely new for Professor Shen. However, he has a wide range of knowledge and a strong ability to acquire knowledge through practice. While translating and studying the materials, Professor Shen operated the minicomputers and learned their use by comparing with the original materials in English, and then compiled the relevant teaching materials. When Professor Shen gave his first lecture on the use of minicomputers, the lecture room was filled. He had to use the meeting hall of the institute in order to give his lecture. By operating the computer on the spot, Professor Shen explained the use of the minicomputers in great detail. All the comrades who listened to Professor Shen's lecture later praised him in great admiration for his vivid and lively explanation of the use of the minicomputers. In order to enable more people to attend, Professor Shen always gave lectures in the evenings. Every time, he spoke for 3 to 4 hours. When our teachers gave lectures in their spare time, they always charged various fees to the audience. However, when Professor Shen gave lectures in his spare time, he only collected fees for buying the teaching materials and paper. His colleagues asked him to charge more fees, and the institute also wanted to pay him for his lectures, but Professor Shen said: It is my duty to give lectures; how can I arbitrarily collect money from the audie ce?

While Professor Shen is very strict with his students, he also shows great concern for them.

For decades, Professor Shen has "paved the way" for one batch of students after another and made the qualified personnel.

Professor Shen has been paving the way for others in his ordinary teaching post. However, his spirit has attracted and moved many of his students and colleagues.

Commentator's Article

[Commentator's article: "Write More About Intellectuals of This Kind!"]

[Text] In our newspaper today, we introduce Professor Shen Shuyong as a person who has immersed himself in hard work and is known by few people. Those close to him told the reporters: "Intellectuals like him should have been written about long ago!" There are advanced people who were first admired and praised by people who did not work with them, but there are also many advanced people who are admired and praised both the people they work with and those who they do not work with. In the past 30 years and more, Shen Shuyong has taken indefinite pains to teach and bring up young people. He has worked diligently with no thought of fame or gain. His noble spirit of "stepping stones" is indeed praiseworthy.

People admire eminent people, but they also respect those who work hard and are unknown to the public. Anyone who has made outstanding contributions to the motherland and the people is our example, irrespective of whether he is known to the public. Our cause needs famous people, but it needs people who work quietly for it all the more. The sports field, for example, needs people to win gold medals and cups and to become champions, but it needs even more people to act as "stepping stones" for those who are on their way to becoming champions. "Stepping stones" may not be glamorus, but they make concrete contributions.

Famous people are admired by others, by young people in particular. They can encourage others to press forward. The reason they have become famous is that they have made special contributions to society through arduous work. It is only natural that they are admired. Some people are afraid that others may become famous. They are jealous of those who have become famous and even oppress those who may become famous. Such thoughts and acts are wrong and harmful to our cause. We must understand that there are too few and not too many famous people in China. We must make efforts to create conditions for the emergence of more eminent people. People who work quietly and are unknown to the public should also be duly honored.

Of course, known heroes are the minority and unknown heroes the majority in the society as a whole. This is also true of the ranks of intellectuals. With the division of work in a society, there are many work posts at which people can obtain little or no fame and gain. However, such posts badly need to be filled. People work in different fields and have different opportunities. As a result, some will become famous while others remain unknown. Any intellectual with noble ideas should think first of the needs of the country and the people and not of personal fame and gain in doing his work. How can a person work wholeheartedly for the interests of the people if he hankers after personal fame and gain? Fame and gain are a test for each intellectual.

At present, spring for intellectuals has arrived. All heroes have places for displaying their prowess, and all patriots can well serve our motherland. History makes correct judgment and the people have feelings. Anyone who has made contributions to the society will be respected by the people no matter at which post he works. Professor Shen Shuyong is a representative of thousands upon thousands of those who work quietly for the society. We should give greater publicity to these unknown heroes!

JINGJI RIBAO URGES CADRES TO EXCHANGE IDEAS

[Commentator's article: "An Important Method for Resolving Inner-Party Contradictions -- on Strengthening the Exchange of Ideas Among Comrades"]

[Text] It is one of the good traditions of our party to encourage comrades to exchange ideas and opinions among themselves, which is also an important condition for normalizing inner-party life.

Now, some contradictions which were originally easy to solve still exist in some party organizations and leading bodies and have not yet been solved. One of the reasons is that our comrades have not frankly exchanged ideas and opinions among themselves for the purpose of jointly carrying out the building of the four modernizations. When there is a misunderstanding among them, none of them takes the initiative to dispel the misunderstanding. And when there are disagreements in the work, none of them takes the initiative to exchange opinions with others. Instead, they are often swayed by personal feelings and prejudices and gossip about others behind their backs. Some comrades either irresponsibly speak ill of others by adding inflammatory details to what they say or complain to the higher authorities about others. Sometimes, at a meeting, they even cross verbal swords and stick to their respective positions to the end without reaching any agreement. If we do not resolutely change this situation, the unity within our party, the construction of the leading bodies, and the leading role of our party in the carrying out the construction of socialist modernization will all be damaged.

Contradictions within the party objectively exist, disagreements among party members and comrades are normal, and disagreements between superiors and inferiors are also normal. The question is how we should correctly look at and deal with these problems so as to strengthen unity within the party and strengthen the combat effectiveness of our party. Usually, the disagreements between comrades within the party are caused by their different understandings of and views on the same thing, and some are caused by misunderstandings between each other or left over from the history. No matter what has caused the disagreements between comrades within the party, we must advocate the exchange of ideas and opinions among our comrades, which is doubtlessly helpful to solving these problems.

When there are disagreements between leading members, between superiors and inferiors, or between ordinary comrades, the worst thing is to practice liberalism, speak ill of others behind their backs, or gossip about things after the meeting so as to counteract each other's efforts. A leading comrade of the CPC Central Committee once pointed out: "We must ban all kinds of practices of making comments outside the party organizations and most oppose liberalism." The reason we ban and oppose these practices is that these practices are not helpful in solving the problems, but instead, are detrimental to solving the problems, and detrimental to individual party members, to our cause, and our party, and to those comrades who engage in these practices. All just party members should be open-hearted and aboveboard, and should be disgusted with two-faced practices. So all just party members should take actions to eliminate these malpractices by starting with themselves.

So long as our comrades are frank and straightforward toward one another, openly and frankly discuss things, and exchange ideas and opinions with one another, and solve their contradictions in the spirit of "sticking to the truth and correcting mistakes" and according to the party's organizational principles and processes, our inner-party life will surely be further normalized.

The exchange of ideas must be aimed at distinguishing right from wrong, and must not become unprincipled disputes. We should continue to develop such a good style of "adhering to principle on major issues and being good at making concessions on minor matters." On major issues, we must stick to principle and urge our comrades to reach a unified and correct understanding. Some units have principled problems in appraising cadres because the comrades in those units do not speak frankly at the meetings. Instead, they gossip about others after the meetings. At meetings held within the party, the comrades only "look at one another and talk about something else." This practice violates our party's organizational discipline. On matters concerning the interests of the party and the people, every party member should have a clear-cut stand and resolutely defend principles, and should never make concessions to avoid trouble or barter away principles by yielding to wrong words and deeds. However, when defending principles, we should adopt an attitude of equality and consultation, present facts, and reason things out so as to convince others by reasoning. On minor matters, we should not demand that all comrades reach a unified understanding, but instead, we should develop the spirit of making concessions to one another. However, we must make sure that all sides make concessions, and not just one side makes concessions while the other side reaches out for a yard after taking an inch. Otherwise, it will cause endless disputes, which will run counter to our original purpose of letting our comrades exchange ideas and opinions.

In order to exchange ideas among comrades, we must stick to the principle of "unity -- criticism and self-criticism -- unity." This requires us to look at things fairly and completely. We should neither affirm nor negate everything. For example, when we criticize things, we should not think that "they are worth nothing," but instead, we should criticize them fairly and try to avoid doing things one-sidedly and doing things in absolute terms.

We must sincerely give advice to our comrades and criticize their mistakes in their presence with the intention of helping and taking good care of them. When criticizing our comrades, we must seek truth from facts and proceed from the facts. And our criticisms should not have subjective factors and should not proceed from any personal feelings of gratitude or resentment or personal prejudices. We must be kind to our comrades and try to convince them by reasoning. We must not sneer at, mock at, speak sarcastically of, or even hurt our comrades. When being criticized by our comrades, we should be good at absorbing the constructive aspects of their criticisms. We must not be afraid of being misunderstood by our comrades. In particular, we must not get excited at some irresponsible and incorrect opinions and remarks. If the misunderstandings can be cleared away at once, we should calmly explain to our comrades. As to some misunderstandings which cannot be cleared away at once, but which do not affect the overall situation, we should leave them for the future because we are confident that we will surely be able to clear away those misunderstandings some day in the future. We must not "set a pin against an awn" and simply "oppose" the ideas of others when others "oppose" our ideas.

Very often, when exchanging ideas, some comrades argue excitedly and finally part on bad terms. The reason is that they are not good at using the weapon of "criticism and self-criticism." It is also because both sides must "the other side to make concessions," and think that "the other side is wrong." This can only increase the antagonism between both sides.

Practice has shown that whether the comrades of a certain unit can frankly exchange ideas and opinions with one another depends on whether the unit can well implement the principle of democratic centralism or not. If all the members of the leading body of that unit can act according to the principle of democratic centralism, speak frankly and openheartedly at meetings, and then correctly centralize the opinions and finally make decisions for all members to carry out, many problems will certainly be solved. So, the exchange of ideas and opinions among comrades requires the joint efforts of all the comrades.

CENTRAL LEADERS GREET NATIONAL NURSING CONFERENCE

OW060333 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1314 GMT 5 May 86

[By reporter Xu Jiling]

[Excerpts] Nanjing, 5 May (XINHUA) -- With International Nurses' Day around the corner, Hu Yaobang, Zhao Ziyang, Li Xiannian, Chen Yun, and other leading comrades have written inscriptions or letters to the nation's nurses, hailing their noble work and encouraging them to provide good nursing services.

During the First National Nursing Conference, which opened in Nanjing today, the representatives were greatly moved on listening to the leaders' greeting messages read at the meeting.

Hu Yaobang's greeting message to the nurses reads: "Noble profession, beautiful souls."

Zhao Ziyang says in his greeting letter; "Nursing is a noble job, which should be respected by all society." He hopes that, "nursing, as a branch of learning, develops more quickly so that it can provide the people better health care."

Li Xiannian points out in his greeting letter: "Modern nursing science is an important and independent science serving human health. We must energically support its accelerated development and strive to improve and modernize nursing techniques so that they can catch up with advanced world level and meet future needs."

In his greeting message, Chen Yun encourages the vast number of nurses to "love nursing and provide good nursing services."

Peng Zhen, in his greeting message, acclaims "nursing as a science and a glorious job providing diligent, careful, and responsible services to the people."

Deng Yingchao in his greeting letter expresses the hope that "relevant departments have a deeper understanding of the importance of nursing. The vast number of nurses should love their work, respect their own profession, carry forward the revolutionary spirit of saving the dying, caring for the wounded, and serving patients wholeheartedly, strive to improve their political consciousness and professional proficiency, be determined to reform their operation and advance with an exploratory spirit, and strive to rejuvenate nursing and create a new situation for the development of nursing services.

Kang Keqing says sincerely and earnestly in her greeting message: "Nursing is most important, as the recovery of health depends 30 percent on treatment and 70 percent on nursing care."

Lu Dingyi greets the forthcoming Nurses' Day with this message: "Being a nurse is a noble profession, because a nurse serves the patients with the spirit of saving the dying and caring for the wounded."

Delivering a report entitled "Earnestly Summing Up Our Experiences, and Working Hard To Rejuvenate Nursing Services," Gu Yingqi, vice minister of public health, pointed out at the opening ceremony: The nation, which has now a contingent of 630,000 nurses, has made much headway and achieved remarkable successes in developing its nursing services since the founding of the country. However, owning to repeated frustrations in the development of nursing services and shortage of competent nurses, insufficient medical and nursing services are still a salient problem. He stressed that, instead of holding the job of being a nurse in contempt, people should understand the important nurses in various ways, and speed up the development of nursing services in China.

The 4-day conference will examine the development of the nation's nursing services since the founding of the country, and discuss a 5-year plan for training nurses and restructuring the services' management.

WANG MENG COMMENTS ON WRITERS' VIEWPOINTS

HK301331 Hong Kong AFP in English 1309 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 30 (AFP) — Chinese writer Wang Meng, due to be officially named China's culture minister, said Wednesday that Chinese writers "cannot conceive of writing as a duty imposed by the government."

Mr Wang, speaking to foreign journalists in his capacity as vice-president of the Writers' Association, added that the state "should not force the writers to write what it thinks is necessary for the cause it is defending."

The 51-year-old writer, considered a supporter of China's top leader Deng Xiaoping, was dispatched to a northern Chinese province for 1958 to 1976 because of his "rightist behavior."

"It is evident that all Chinese writers do not share all the viewpoints of the government," he said, but added he would liken the differences to "light breezes, not true storms."

He said, however, that Chinese writers "must support" the policy of opening up to the outside world established by Mr Deng in 1978.

Mr Wang, who has been a member of the Chinese Communist Party since he was 14, maintained that the party "never stops encouraging the freedom of creation" and that "there are no censorship bodies in China."

When asked about certain books or films which had run into difficulties when it came to being published or screened, Mr Wang said that he had either not read them, not seen them or that "this deserves consideration."

His nomination as culture minister, known in official Chinese circles for over two weeks, is due to be made public shortly, sources in his entourage said.

CIRCULAR URGES STUDY OF CIVIL CODE PRINCIPLES

OW040503 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1244 GMT 2 May 86

[Text] Beijing, 2 May (XINHUA) -- The Central Propaganda Department and Ministry of Justice recently issued a joint circular on studying and publicizing the General Principles of Civil Code. The circular urges propaganda and justice departments in all localities to include the General Principles of Civil Code in their popularization of legal knowledge and to widely and thoroughly publicize it among the people.

The circular points out: "The General Principles of Civil Code of the People's Republic of China" has been examined and adopted by the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC and promulgated by the president of the PRC. The Civil Code is an important basic law of our country. The enactment of the General Principles of civil code is an important event in the development of our country's legal system. Protecting the legitimate rights of the citizens and legal persons, meeting the needs of reform, opening to the outside and invigorating the economy, using legal means to manage the economy, ensuring and promoting a smooth procession of reform in the socialist economic structure and economic development, further harmonizing the relations among the people, and maintaining political stability and unity are of great significance.

The circular calls on all localities to organize the study of and publicity on the following main points in consideration of reality and difficult quarters' different requirements in the course of popularizing the General Principles of Civil Code: 1) the basic principles and the limits to the readjustment of China's civil code; 2) the qualifications for a legal person; 3) the norms for cvil legal conduct; 4) the civil rights and civil responsibilities of citizens and legal persons; and 5) the application of laws governing civil affairs between Chinese and foreigners.

STATE COUNCIL ISSUES CIRCULAR ON USING SEDANS

OW041149 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0230 GMT 3 May 86

[Text] Beijing, 3 May (XINHUA) -- The State Council pointed out that some departments and units overemphasized the special characteristics of their work and demanded allocation of sedans for their bureau or lower level units for operational use in disregard of the state's financial power and the people's living condition. The expenditures for automobiles were to be disbursed by the local financial departments. This practice is not right and must be corrected.

The General Office of the State Council recently issued a circular in this connection. It says: According to reports, in the past 2 years, some departments under the State Council dispatched documents to lower level units and asked those units to allocate sedans to organizations under the jurisdiction of those departments, and the expenditures for purchasing automobiles were in the main paid by the localities. Various localities have received a lot of complaints about this matter. They held that this practice not only created financial difficulties for the localities but also caused competition among various departments in a chain reaction. It also created contradictions among various departments and between departments and localities and was unfavorable to curtailing administrative expenditures and improving workstyle. They asked that this matter be solved.

In order to solve this problem, the General Office of the State Council has set the following rules:

1. In view of our country's current financial capability and situation of supply, with the exception of those departments which have been approved by the State Council to allocate automobiles to units under those departments for operational use, no other departments should allocate sedans to units of those departments at county bureau level without considering necessary conditions. Still less should units under county bureau level be allocated sedans for operational use.

2. A small number of departments may have to allocate automobiles to some county bureau level units under those departments for operational use due to the special characteristics of their work. However, this must be approved and handled according to the capability of financial and supply this in various localities. If units directly under those departments need automobiles, those concerned departments should ask the State Planning Commission, the Ministry of Finance, and the State Supply Bureau should examine those cases seriously and control them in a strict manner. If local units under the jurisdiction of various departments need automobiles, the local authorities are to take the overall situation into consideration and handle those cases. The departments having jurisdiction over those units must not dispatch documents to the local authorities and ask the latter to solve such problems for the units.

3. If individual departments have an actual need to obtain specialized automobiles equipped with special facilities, they should first obtain concurrence from the Ministry of Finance and other departments concerned. Concurrence must first be obtained from the localities if the expenditures are to be disbursed by local financial units when those departments want to allocate specialized automobiles to units under their jurisdiction in various provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities.

MINISTRY TO ISSUE PERMITS FOR TV DRAMAS

OW300415 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1234 GMT 29 apr 86

[Text] Beijing, 29 Apr (XINHUA) -- The Ministry of Radio, Film, and Television recently issued a circular concerning the system of issuing permits for producing TV Dramas, which will come into effect on 1 June this year.

For the undertaking of TV dramas to flourish, to improve quality, and to strengthen the supervision over production, the ministry has decided to put into effect the "Provisional Regulations Regarding the System of Issuing Permits for Producing TV dramas" in China. According to the regulations, a production unit must obtain a permit when providing (selling, exchanging, or presenting) TV dramas to the Central Television Station or local TV Stations, otherwise the TV dramas may not be accepted and broadcast by the Central Television Station and local TV stations nor published and distributed by audiovisual tape publishing units. TV dramas coproduced with foreign countries should be reviewed and approved by the ministry. Currently preparations for issuing "permits for producing TV dramas" have been basically completed.

These provisional regulations are a statute for supervising the production of TV dramas. The circular called on all relevant units in the country to contact local government radio and television administrative departments and apply for the permit according to the regulation when the time comes. Propaganda and cultural units subordinated to the central authorities may directly contact the Central Television station's cinema and TV department and apply for the permit

CIRCULAR ON FOREIGN-FUNDED AGRICULTURAL PROJECT

[Text] The State Economic Commission recently issued a circular on reviewing the performance of agricultural projects funded by foreign caital during the Sixth 5-Year Plan.

The use of foreign capital for agriculture has developed rapidly from nothing in recent years. Foreign capital that has been used or will soon be used exceeds $1.5 billion. This has greatly promoted the modernization of agriculture. To sum up the experience of utilizing foreign capital for agriculture and to promote broader and deeper econoic, trade, and technological exchanges with other countries with emphasis on enhancing our capacity to earn foreign exchange through exports, the State Economic Commission circular urged departments concerned to review the projects in the following four categories undertaken since 1980: bilateral cooperation, multilateral cooperation, direct use of foreign capital, and use of state capital. The major points of the review should include the necessity and rationality of the projects, the rate of progress, project management, and whether the projects have yielded the expected economic and social benefits. The review should be conducted mainly by the project partcipants themselves with the participation of the various competent units or departments concerned.

COLLECTED WORKS OF MARX, ENGELS PUBLISHED

OW060911 Beijing XINHUA in English 0626 GMT 6 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 6 (XINHUA) -- The entire collected works of Karl Marx (1818-1883) and Friedrich Engels (1820-1895) have been published in Chinese over the last 30 years.

The 50 volumes were translated from the second Russian edition and the original German version by the Communist Party Central Committee's Translation Bureau and published by the People's Publishing House. The completion of their publication in a country with a population of well over one billion was "an important thing in the history of the dissemination of Marxism," said Zhu Houze, chief of the Propaganda Department of the Party Central Committee, at a meeting marking the event on Monday.

Zhu stressed the importance of combining Marxist theory with the realities of China. Since 1956, China has printed 4.3 million copies of works by Marx and Engels, according to the People's Publishing House.

ECONOMIC GROWTH, EXPORT RATES EXAMINED

Exports Rise in 1st Quarter

HK060755 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 6 May 86 p 2

[By staff reporter Zhang Jianmin]

[Text] China's foreign trade started the year impressively with exports in the first quarter rising in value nearly 14 per cent and imports dropping less than 1 per cent.

According to Zheng Tuobin, minister of foreign economic relations and trade, exports in the first three months were valued at $5.87 billion. Imports came in at $6.3 billion.

Zheng, speaking on Sunday to delegates attending the first congress of members of the China Council for the Promotion of International Trade, called on foreign trade entities to work hard to fulfill the goal set by the Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-1990).

He said every effort must be made to enhance China's foreign currency earnings through exports.

Zheng, quoting Premier Zhao's report on the Seventh Five-Year Plan, said that enhancing China's foreign currency earnings export is an important element in the nation's strategy to develop trade and tecnological relations with foreign countries.

It also affects the scale and course of domestic economic construction, he said.

The Seventh Five-Year Plan stipulates that by 1990 the country's export and import volume should reach $83 billion, an increase of 40 per cent over 1985.

Exports account for $39 billion of that figure, a 47.3 per cent increase over 1985.

China's own policy, he said, will ensure stable growth of the national economy and provide the country's foreign trade with a solid material base.

Zheng said the expansion of exports must start with production. It is urgent, he said, to establish production centres specially geared toward production of export goods.

Other measures he cited included: accelerating improvement of product quality, shifting the commodity structure from export of raw materials yo finished products and export of high quality finished machinery products.

He said the ministry will continue to grant large and medium-sized industries the power to deal directly in foreign trade.

Closer working relations between domestic foreign trade companies and between domestic companies and foreign producers must be strengthened, he said.

Meanwhile, Zheng said, overseas sales should be increased, with focus on Japan, Western Europe, North America, Hong Kong, Macao and Oceania.

He said foreign currency to be spent on technology imports will amount to 10 to 12 per cent of China's foreign currency expenditures in the 1986-1990 period.

Imports will concentrate on software, high technology and key production equipments.

The country will also continue to invite more foreign specialists to work in China, which Zheng called bringing in "living technology."

First Quarter Growth Noted

OW171312 Beijing XINHUA in English 1254 GMT 17 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 17 (XINHUA) -- China maintained an all-round and coordinated growth during the first quarter of this year in industrial and agricultural production, capital construction, circulation and consumption, according to the State Statistical Bureau here today.

The bureau's spokesman Zhang Zhongji told reporters that China has seeded summer grain crops to 28.8 million hectares this year, 157,000 hectares more than the average of last year. He said that this ended the continuous shrinkage of the acerage under grain crops over the past few years. The crops are growing well in most places throughout the country, he added. At the same time, the acerage under peanuts, sesame and other oil-bearing crops, and sugarcanes has been enlarged by ten percent this year.

More materials, funds and technical assistance have been sent to the rural areas, and the peasants themselves have increased their input into land. He said that the first quarter of 1986 saw a 4.4 percent increase in total industrial production than the same 1985 period, itself a period of a quite high growth rate.

He said that marked growth was achieved in the production of energy, raw materials, those light industrial and textile commodities welcomed on the domestic market, and manufactured goods for export. The efficiency in transportation was also raised. Ports along China's coasts handled 9.1 percent more goods in the quarter.

He said that the total investment of the public sector in the transformation of the existing enterprises surpassed the growth in capital construction in the three months. Investments increased by 110 percent in projects to save energy, increase commodity varieties, raise quality and control pollution.

The domestic market was relatively stable and the consumers were more selective again. Official statistics showed that during the first quarter the prices of pork, eggs and vegetables maintained the December level of last year. The country's overall retail prices rose by 8 percent over the same 1985 period. With the expansion of production and circulation, the domestic state revenues rose fairly fast and the banks recovered more money during the quarter, the spokesman said.

'Appropriate' Growth Rate Urged

HK280946 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 28 Apr 86 p 4

[By Huang Qing]

[Text] Central economic departments are calling on the nation's industries to aim for "an appropriate growth rate" in the second quarter of the year.

Chinese industry registered a 4.4 quarter, slower than the planned annual rate.

The central government is apparently expecting that rate to pick up slightly later this year.

But Tong Dalin, deputy minister in charge of the State Commission for Restructuring the Economic System, told CHINA DAILY: "The first quarter slowdown in the growth rate is not a big surprise. It is still possible to attain the planned average growth rate of 7.5 percent."

In Premier Zhao Ziyang's report to the National People's Congress on the Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-1990) in March, the projected annual growth rate for industry was adjusted from 8 percent to 7.5 percent.

Deceleration in the growth rate in the first quarter, especially when compared to the 23.5 percent registered last year, has aroused some doubts that industry can attain the 7.5 percent target by year's end.

According to the Shanghai-based WORLD ECONOMIC HERALD, that city's output value increased 0.5 percent in January and 0.1 percent in February over the same two months a year earlier. The output of collectively owned business fell by 2.9 percent in the first month.

National output value in the first two months of 1986 went up by only 3.4 percent, and negative growth was recorded in some provinces and cities.

There are many reasons for this slowdown:

Last year's 23.5 percent first-quarter rise has made it difficult to achieve a much bigger leap.

Macro-economic control has curtailed galloping growth by cutting back on loans to industrial development.

Restrictions and defaults on loans has led to a "chain reaction" in capital supply, reducing the funds available for the expansion of production.

Rises in workers' salaries and the cost of raw materials has pushed up prices and reduced profits.

The annual Spring Festival holiday reduced industrial production.

The slowdown carries the omen of a continued downward spiral. The rise of industrial production in the second quarter must be promoted in a rational way by speeding up growth of stronger industrial sectors and exerting appropriate pressure on the weaker ones.

Authorities must also credit those major sectors, such as steel, non-ferrous metals and building materials industries, that performed well and maintained appropriate growth rates earlier this year.

One good side-effect of the current slowdown is stable prices. Supplied of raw materials remain normal, saving the country's foreign exchange spent to import goods from abroad.

Pressure from markets and government policies can be expected to work in tandem, spurring orderly growth throughout the rest of the year.

Foreign Deposits Increase

HK061240 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0401 GMT 6 May 86

[Report: "The Amount of Foreign Currency Deposits by Individuals in China Totals Over U.S. $200 million"]

[Text] Beijing, 6 May (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- A Bank of China official today told our reporters that since implementing the policy of letting people freely deposit and withdraw foreign currency in the country, the amount of foreign currency deposits by individuals in China has been increasing very fast. The amount of foreign currency deposits by individuals in China now totals over U.S. $200 million, an increase of over 20 percent over that at the end of last year.

The amount of foreign currency deposits by individuals in Guangdong Province now totals over U.S. $70 million, which ranks first in the whole country. Beijing, Shanghai, and Fujian rank second in the whole country, each with over U.S. $20 million in foreign currency deposits by individuals.

During the first 10 days of April this year, the rumor that circulated in some areas of Guangdong Province that China would soon change its regulations concerning foreign currency deposits led to a bank run in those areas. However, after the Bank of China news spokesman declared that no change would be made in the regulations concerning foreign currency deposits, the tumult soon subsided.

The Bank of China official believes that the Bank of China has great potential to attract foreign currency deposits by individuals. The bank has expanded its deposit service network. The Shenzhen Branch of the Bank of China has also provided computerized service, while the Zhuhai branch recently started the automatic currency withdrawal service and the credit card business.

SURVEY SHOWS GRAIN ACREAGE TO EXPAND IN 1986

[Text] Beijing, April 28 (XINHUA) -- This year's acreage sown to grain will be larger than that of last year, but still less than in 1984, according to a survey conducted among 745 of the more than 2,000 Chinese counties.

The survey made among 84,000 rural households shows that grain acreage will be increased by 1,860,000 hectares this year, compared to last year.

The areas of early rice and winter wheat increased by 0.2 to 0.6 percent while sorghum, corn, middle-season and late rice and soya bean will increase by 2.1 to 13.9 percent.

PROSPECTS FOR SPRING FARMING 'ENCOURAGING'

OW030514 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1225 GMT 2 May 86

[By reporter Zhou Yichang]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 2 May (XINHUA) -- Since right after the arrival of the first spring of the Seventh 5-Year Period, the nation's rural areas have been busily engaged in production. Distinctive characteristics of this year's spring production are that local as well as central authorities all have a clearer concept of agriculture as the foundation of the economy, the peasants have become more enthusiastic about producing food grain, and spring production as a whole is proceeding in an encouraging and coordinated manner.

At present, the nation's 28.8 million hectares of summer cereal crops are growing and ripening well. The wheat crop in such major grain-producing regions as Shanghai, Hebei, Henan, Shanxi, Sichuan, and Hubei is better than last year. Although the growth of the 4.7 million hectares of rapeseed is not as good as last year because of unsatisfactory conditions for sowing last winter, the sown acreage is over 400,000 hectares more than last year's acreage. It is expected that this year's total output of rapeseed will at least equal last year's.

This year, while planning the acreage of various crops, all localities have attached great importance to food-grain production. At the same time, they have also taken active steps to diversify their production according to the actual situation. To assure that the production of cash crops will not be affected, all localities have attended to raising the multiple crop index. While southern China has expanded the acreage of double-cropping rice, northern China has expanded the acreage of summer corn and sweet potatoes. It is estimated that 110 million hectares of cereal crops will be sown throughout the country this year, or some 2 million hectares more than last year. This year, the acreage of cotton and the acreage of other economic crops such as jute, ambari hemp, castor and peppermint, whose output has exceeded the demand, have been reduced. However, the acreage of peanuts, sesame, rapeseed, and cucurbit crops has increased by at least 10 percent, and the acreage of fruits, ramie, sugar-bearing crops, and tobacco has either increased somewhat or remained the same as last year.

Although the nation's output of food grain and cotton dropped last year because of natural disasters, compared with 1980, the total grain output nevertheless increased by more than 58 million metric tons, cotton output increased by 53.8 percent, the output of oil-bearing crops increased by 100 percent, and the peasants' per capita income doubled, reaching 397 yuan. This spring, except for a few economically undeveloped places which still suffer temporary food shortages, supply in the vast rural areas is generally abundant, and consumer food prices are stable. According to a survey of 196 country fairs, the average price of a jin of rice or wheat in early April was 4 to 6 fen higher than during the same period last year; and the prices of such nonstaple foods as pork, eggs, and vegetables during the first quarter were basically the same as those of late last year.

To consolidate the agricultural foundation and in addition to allocating more than 400 million yuan to support disaster-stricken areas, the state has also planned to invest an additional 900 million yuan in agriculture this year. The government is also ready to spend 120 million yuan in the next 3 years on setting up 113 bases in 27 provinces, autonomous regions, municipalities directly under the central government, and the 7 cities with provincial-level economic decision-making authority.

These bases will produce quality agricultural goods and other commodities and increase the output of 67 types of quality commodities, including rice, wheat, tangerines, lichi, longan, yangtao, famous teas, and flowers to satisfy the needs of exports to earn more foreign exchange as well as the needs of the people.

Ministries and departments under the State Council have also considered supporting agriculture and spring farming a major project. The Ministry of Water and Electric Power has instructed all power departments to ensure the electricity supply for spring irrigation and summer harvesting, sowing and plowing. The Ministry of Commerce has been actively ordering means of agricultural production from all sources to ensure production needs. The machine-building industry is actively producing farm machines and parts to ensure the needs in spring farming. The communications and railway departments have urged all localities to facilitate agricultural production by making timely delivery of fertilizers, pesticides, and other means of agricultural production to the rural areas. The Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry, and Fishery has considered leadership over spring farming its responsibility. Headed by the minister and vice ministers, one-third of the ministry's cadres have organized themselves into over 20 groups and have gone to various parts of the country to guide spring farming. All provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions have also taken measures to intensify their leadership over agricultural production and have increased their agricultural investment.

AGRONOMISTS STRESS SCIENTIFIC CULTIVATION

OW040447 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0740 GMT 2 May 86

[By reporter Pu Liyi]

[Text] Beijing, 2 May (XINHUA) -- Agricultural experts called for close attention to the study and promotion of science and technology in crop cultivation in order to ensure that the goal of 900 billion jin in total grain output is reached during the "Seventh 5-Year Plan."

According to incomplete statistical data provided by the recently convened national academic meeting on crop cultivation and the founding meeting of the cultivation Research Committee of the China Crops Association, during the "Sixth 5-Year Plan" scientific and technical personnel engaged in crop cultivation undertook daring research closely connected with production in 112 projects commended by departments at provincial and higher level, of which 5 were awarded state level prizes. The experiences of those projects were applied to more than 600 million mu of farmland, playing a significant role in boosting grain output. For instance, the "index control method for wheat" has paved the way for using indices to manage wheat production. This was extended to a total of 45.5 million mu of farmland in 10 provinces and municipalities from 1980 to 1984 and received the state's second prize for technological progress. Besides, because of the key measures to improve cultivation technology the total acreage of hybrid rice was expanded from 70 million to 110 million mu and yield per mu rose from 500 jin in the 1970's, when hybridization was first extended in China, to more than 700 jin.

The 129 agricultural experts, professors, and scientific and technical workers from 28 provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions attending the meeting held that the study of crop cultivation science has not been duly stressed in various localities. Some units have "problems in deciding subjects, obtaining funds, and evaluating results" in the study of crop cultivation and some units cannot find adequate success indicators for studying crop cultivation science and technology.

The participants hoped that the situation would be improved as quickly as possible in order to insure the fulfillment of the goal of increasing grain production by 30 million jin each year during the "Seventh 5-Year Plan."

TIAN JIYUN PLEDGES MORE AGRICULTURAL INVESTMENT

OW260934 Beijing XINHUA in English 0909 GMT 26 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 26 (XINHUA) -- China must not treat grain production lightly but should keep increasing it steadily, said Vice-Premier Tian Jiyun.

From a long-term point of view, Tian said, grain is not overabundant in China but it is insufficient. China should continue to pay great attention to grain production and continue to promote the overall development of agriculture.

He said at a national work conference on the chemical industry that "it will be difficult for China to accomplish the modernization program if China, which has a one-billion population, does not lay solid foundations for agriculture and grain production, or solve eating and clothing problems first."

In the first four years of the Sixth Five-Year Plan (1981-1985) the annual increase rate for grain was 21 million tons.

In 1985, the total grain yield still reached 378.98 million tons despite severe natural calamities and reduction in grain acreage.

Tian Jiyun said China will invest more in agriculture in order to produce more. He pledged that China will increase investment in the production of chemical fertilizer and pesticide to ensure the steady growth of agricultural production. He urged the chemical industry to develop more weed killers and germicides, improve quality and guide peasants to use pesticide properly.

In order to accelerate the development of the chemical industry, the Chinese Government has put the raw materials industry -- which includes the chemical industry on the same plane as energy and transport in the Seventh Five-Year Plan period (1986-1990).

RURAL AGRICULTURAL CENTERS TO BE ESTABLISHED

OW040653 Beijing XINHUA in English 0602 GMT 4 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 4 (XINHUA) -- Agricultural colleges operated by the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fisheries have offered to set up centers in poor areas to show local peasants how to develop agriculture.

According to the ministry, all the nine colleges under its administration have offered to undertake development and research in poverty-stricken areas. Although great changes have taken place in China's countryside in the past several years, some areas are still poor due to natural conditions and other reasons.

The aid-the-poor drive was started by the Hebei Agricultural College, whose teaching, research and agrotechnique popularization center in the poor Taihang Mountain area has proved to be very helpful among local peasants.

The ministry has decided to appropriate 200,000 yuan to support their development projects and promised to continue the financing over the next five years. The Beijing Agricultural University plans to set up a development demonstration center on the outskirts of Beijing.

The South China Agricultural University has already set up a development demonstration center in the mountainous area in Yingde County, Guangdong Province. Other demonstration centers will be set up in Jianping County and Jinxi County in Liaoning Province, around Huaiyin City in Jiangsu, the Dabie Mountains area in Anhui and Danfeng County in the Qinba Mountainous area in Shaanxi and Guangan County in Sichuan.

Four land reclamation schools and four aquatic product schools will also undertake some research and development projects in some land reclamation and fishing areas. Feasibility studies will be carried out in June and all the projects are expected to be put into execution in July or August, said the official from the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fisheries.

LAND RECLAMATION STRUCTURE TRANSFORMATION NOTED

[Commentator's article: "Persist in Carrying out Reforms To Realize the Transformation of the Land Reclamation Economic Structure"]

[Text] The CPC Central Committee and the State Council recently issued a notice on approving the circulation of the report of the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry, and Fishery on the issue of the reform on the land reclamation economic structures, demanding that the land reclamation department and its affiliated departments build a vigorous socialist land reclamation economy with Chinese characteristic in the reform. This notice, which points out the fundamental direction for the reform of the land reclamation department and its affiliated departments is a programmatic document guiding the overall reform of the land reclamation economy and opening up new prospects for the work of land reclamation.

Over the past few years, the land reclamation department and its affiliated departments have implemented the financial contract system, comprehensively carried out agricultural, industrial, and commercial operations, and established household farms so that the rigid operational structure has begun to be smashed, the vigor of enterprises has gradually been strengthened, and the reform has achieved marked success. Because the reform of the land reclamation economic structure was started much later than the reform of the rural economic structure and there are many problems in the land reclamation department and its affiliated departments which need to be solved, the reform of the land reclamation economic structure is much more difficult.

Since the transformation from the old economic structure to the new economic structure has just started, the state of "deadness and poverty" has not yet been fundamentally changed and the advantages and great potential of the enterprises of the land reclamation department and its affiliated departments have not yet been brought into full play. As far as the country as a whole is concerned, the land reclamation department and its affiliated departments have accomplished the task of large-scale land reclamation and farm construction and have entered the new historical period of transformation into specialization, commercialization, and modernization. In order to meet the needs of this new situation and bring into play the exemplary role of the land reclamation economy in the construction of the socialist agricultural modernization, our present task is to firmly grasp the reform of the economic structure to the new economic structure, and to further clear away the obstacles that hinder the development of farms.

In the past we changed the management structure of the land reclamation many times, including relaxing the control and then tightening the control again or tightening the control and then relaxing the control again. These changes, however, concentrated only on the administrative relations of the enterprises of the state farms built on reclaimed wasteland and did not change the economic structure in which the enterprises "eat from the same big pot of the state" and workers "eat from the same big pot of the enterprises." The basic orientation of the reform of the land reclamation economic structure is to greatly develop the diversified economy and horizontal economic cooperation and replace the old economic structure with the new one on the basis of giving more decision-making power to the farms. Separating the functions of the government from those of enterprises, simplifying administration, delegating more decision-making power to enterprises, and establishing household farms are all aimed at arousing the enthusiasm of enterprise operators by giving more management decision-making powers to the enterprises. More decision-making power should not only be delegated to the farms to enable the farms to become economic entities with independent accounting systems and with vigor and responsibility for their own profits and losses, but should also be delegated to the household farms to enable them to become economic entities which are linked with big farms and which are self-managed and responsible for their own profits and losses. While changing the internal economic relations, a diversified economy should also be developed in order to change the internal production structure. In a sense, the development of a diversified economy is the key to solving the issue of land reclamation. Without a diversified economy, it will be difficult for the land reclamation economy to develop greatly. In order to further carry out the reform of the land reclamation economic structure, we should also develop horizontal economic cooperation. Farms and household farms can also establish various kinds of economic contacts with local state-owned enterprises, collectively-owned enterprises, specialized households, and so on, so that they will be able to infiltrate into, depend on, and benefit from one another, develop together, and become economic combines with various levels and management methods. The above reforms in various aspects will link with one another and push one another forward. The core and basis of these reforms are to delegate more decision-making power to the farms and households farms and to arouse the enthusiasm of the enterprises and the workers. Only when the reforms in various aspects develop in a coordinated way and from top to bottom and when the internal relations and external contacts become vigorous can the land reclamation economy really be invigorated.

Some comrades are worried that dividing big farms into small ones (establishing household farms) and carrying out cooperation with various units will eventually break up the original state farms, thus making the state farms exist in name only. This worry is unnecessary. Dividing big farms into small ones conforms with the needs of economic development and will eventually expand the state farms and bring the role of the state farms into full play. We must not let the word "state-owned" bind our hands. The state farms, as the name suggests, are basically run by the state. However, in the state farms, the form of household management, collective economy, individual economy, and various types of ownership can also exist. The state farms can be big or small, state-run or privately-run, or jointly run by both the state and individuals so long as these methods can contribute to the development of the productive forces. Basically, the state farms should not be confined to the system of ownership by the whole people.

The reform of the land reclamation economic structure is a component part of the reform of the entire economic structure of our country, so the CPC committees and people's governments at various levels should strengthen their leadership over the reform. In particular the leaders at various levels of the land reclamation department and its affiliated departments who are facing the heavy arduous, and complicated tasks of carrying out the reform, implementing the policy of opening up and invigorating the economy, should strengthen their leadership over the reform, look at and guide the reform with a completely new outlook, and continue to explore and work in a down-to-earth manner so as to realize as quickly as possible the transformation of the land reclamation economic structure.

REEDUCATION WORK CAMP CONDITIONS EXPLORED

HK060635 Hong Kong AFP in English 0332 GMT 6 May 86

[By Pierre-Antoine Donnet]

[Text] Beijing, May 6 (AFP) -- The prisoner hesitates, embarrassed to state why he is here, then says "I am a pimp and I sold the services of four prostitutes between 15 and 20 years old for clients in Beijing before the police came and arrested me."

Zhang Chunxiao, 33, says he is happy to be where he has been for the past three years: The Tuanhe Re-Education Work Camp in a Beijing suburb. Since a national anti-crime drive began in 1983, pimping is often punished with a bullet in the back of the neck.

But the re-education camp solution may seem unjust for Liu Qinxi. Caught by police while trying to steal 120 yuan (37 dollars) from a Beijing bus, he is spending two years on this "model farm" where hard work is the route to pardon.

None of the prisoners here had a trial or benefit of an attorney. Their sentences were handed down by administrators of local police stations, said Liu Shili, who describes himself as the camp's "political commissar."

China's detention system is generally closed to foreign visitors, and the number of prisoners is not released. But Western legal experts here say up to 20 million are estimated to be in prisons, re-education camps and the more severe reform work camps.

For those considered delinquents and sent to camps for "re-education" through work, there's no need to embarrass oneself with a trial or pronouncement by a judge.

The police can pass sentences amounting to one year to three years, with up to an extra year for bad conduct.

A handful of journalists were able to visit re-education camps recently, including the Tuanhe facility, but none have been in the reform camps where the detainees, hardened criminals and an unknown number of political prisoners, can remain for life.

"Seventy-six percent of our residents, all men, are youths less than 25 years old, guilty of robbery, rape, indecent assault and hooliganism, said Mr. Liu, a Communist Party member since 1950. "Some are sons of cadres, the youngest are 16 and the oldest more than 50."

They sing patriotic songs or tunes they have composed to prepare for the day when they can leave, he said.

Fifty-one percent are workers; 28 percent are unemployed youth, eight percent secondary students, 1.6 percent university students and the others peasants and odd job holders, he said.

They are watched by 241 so-called "cadre-educators" in police uniform.

As in all the other camps and most of the prisons in the country, Tuanhe functions as an economic entity contributing to China's economic edification. As in civilian life, a responsibility system links revenue to production.

Prisoners are separated into work teams cultivating 3,000 hectares (7,410 acres) of grapes for a Sino-French firm producing white wine under the Dynasty label for sale in Chinese stores catering to foreign residents and tourists and for export to Asian countries.

The grapes reaped a 326,000 dollar profit for the camp in 1984, of which 60 percent went to the state; 80 percent of the rest was allocated to the guards and the remainder to the detainees.

The camp has a long sad history evidenced by the now unplugged electrified barbed wire, said the camp director, who has been there for 30 years.

Built in 1955, the camp harboured numerous arts personalities during the anti-rightists campaign launched in 1957 by Mao Zedong. Cong Weixi, vice president of the Writers Association of Beijing, was one of the inmates there along with several other leading writers.

During the Cultural Revolution and the ensuing radical period of 1966-1976, hundreds of cadres and leaders spent years here raising pigs.

The recent anti-crime campaign has added to the number of detainees: 2,400 in 1983 in 1984 and 2,700 last year. Eight percent of those who left Tuanhe went back to their old ways, despite 500 hours a year in political and "cultural" re-education, according to officials.

A poster near the front door at Tuanhe reads: "It is not permitted to enter or leave without the permission of the chief." When an AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE correspondent finished interviewing one prisoner, a guard told the man, "now you go make a complete report in writing of what you told him."

RENMIN RIBAO URGES SUPPORT FOR PRC-BUILT PLANES

[Article by Xu Bingxuan: "We Must Support the Production of Good Airplanes, the Prototypes for Which Have Been Accepted"]

[Text] The "Yun-8," a medium-range transport plane with a maximum average speed of 662 kilometers per hour and a maximum flight range of 5,612 kilometers, is produced by the Shaanxi Aircraft Corporation. The plane, with a cargo capacity of 20 tons, can fly north to south and from east to west of our country. The prototype of the plane was accepted in 1980, and the plane went into batch production in the same year.

The "Yun-8" is a good plane whose prototype has been accepted. The "Yun-8" has the following characteristics:

1. The "Yun-8" is safe and reliable. The planes produced over the past few years have flown to various cities and provinces all over our country. The plane has weathered high altitudes, high temperatures and extremely cold climates. Last year, on the eve of celebrating the 20th anniversary of the founding of the Xizang Autonomous Regional Government, two "Yun-8" planes undertook the task of transporting high-grade goods to Xizang. The planes flew to Xizang twice and successfully accomplished the task of transporting dozens of tons of goods and several hundred people to Xizang. The "Yun-8" planes have also undertaken tasks of transporting large quantities of military materials, providing disaster relief, rushing to deal with emergencies, and training paratroopers without a single accident.

2. No sophisticated technology is required to build runways for the "Yun-8". Since the "Yun-8" planes are equipped with the multiple-wheel and low-pressure-tire system, they can safely take off and land at our country's existing military and civil airports and even some simple airfields.

3. The price of the "Yun-8" is relatively low. Although the C-130, which is the same type of plane as the "Yun-8," is more advanced than the "Yun-8," its price is almost three times higher than the "Yun-8." What is more, we have to spend foreign exchange to buy C-130s and spare parts for them, and have to train the relevant personnel and so on.

4. The "Yun-8" can be used in multiple roles. The "Yun-8" can be used in both military and civilian role. The basic prototype of the "Yun-8" has been successfully reconfigured as a "maritime patrol airplane" and the "Black Eagle helicopter transport airplane." The development of the "Yun-8" has not only increased our country's types of military planes, but also saved a lot of foreign exchange for our country. The "Yun-8" can also be configured into an inflight refuelling plane and some other types of planes. After being successfully reequipped with pressurized cabins, the "Yun-8" can be used for a lot more purposes and can also be exported to the Third World countries.

The modernization of our country's national defense needs the "Yun-8." In the world today, the only planes which belong to the same type as the "Yun-8" are the C-130 produced by the United States and AN-12 produced by the Soviet Union.

The development of communications and transport undertakings needs the "Yun-8." As far as cargo is concerned, along with the development of the economic construction, more and more agricultural and industrial goods as well as domestic and foreign goods need to be transported by air so more transport planes are needed.

At present, some provinces, cities, and relevant departments are planning to establish air transport companies. The China Tenglong Air Transport Company has taken the first step by buying two ordinary "Yun-8" planes for transportation business. This shows the prospects for using the "Yun-8." As far as passenger transport is concerned, after being reequipped with pressurized cabins, the "Yun-8" will be able to carry 99 passengers.

The "Yun-8" is a good plane. After being reequipped with pressurized cabins and advanced avionics and after further increasing the "Yun-8's" durability, the "Yun-8" will certainly be used for a wide range of purposes and will have broader prospects. However, the development of the "Yun-8" must be properly protected by the state and strongly supported by the relevant departments.

1. Use tariffs to protect the "Yun-8."

2. Do not discriminate against Chinese-built planes and actively buy and use the Chinese-built "Yun-8."

3. The relevant departments should support the newly-established air transport companies. If more and more units use Chinese-built planes, the development of Chinese-built planes will surely be accelerated.

The China Tenglong Air Transport Company was established at the beginning of 1985. It has spent most of its time on going through the relevant procedures which have yet to be completed. The two "Yun-8" planes are still parked at the airport. The insurance premiums for the "Yun-8" are several times higher than for imported foreign-made planes.

Since the state and the people have paid a high price to manufacture the Chinese-built airplanes, and the Chinese-built planes are needed to build the four modernizations and to build a strong socialist country, all the relevant departments should show concern for the Chinese built airplanes and support their development. Only with the joint effort of all sides can Chinese-built airplanes continue to be developed.

BO YIBO ATTENDS HUNAN MAY DAY RALLY 29 APRIL

HK301215 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Recorded report on the May Day rally held at the Hunan Provincial CPC Committee Hall in Changsha on 29 April]

[Text] Attending the rally [at the Hunan Provincial CPC Committee Hall] are Bo Yibo, vice chairman of the Central Advisory Committee; Zhou Li, former member of the Central Advisory Committee; Wang Shitai, member of the Central Advisory Committee; as well as provincial party, government, and military leaders including Mao Zhiyong, Xiong Qingquan, Liu Zheng, Liu Fusheng, Wan Da, Jiao Linyi, (Chen Xinren), Shi Xinshan, and Jiang Jinliu. Liu Yue, chairman of the provincial federation of trade unions, is presiding over the meeting.

Amid warm applause, Comrade Bo Yibo, vice chairman of the Central Advisory Committee, makes a speech. Comrade Mao Zhiyong also delivers a speech. Following the conclusion of the rally, professional and part-time literary and art workers of Changsha will give a good performance.

Vice Chairman Bo Yibo stressed in his speech: We must uphold reforms, be good at studying, and struggle in a down-to-earth manner.

Bo Yibo said: The working class of Hunan has a glorious revolutionary tradition and has made profound contributions for the reunification of the motherland. Over the past 30-odd years since the founding of the state, the working class, together with the people of the whole country, has made great contributions to building socialism. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the CPC Central Committee has formulated the principles and policies on opening up to the outside, stimulating the domestic economy, reforming the economic structure, and so on. The most important task for us at present is to carry out reforms which is another revolution that will affect China's future and destiny . The reforms will also play a decisive role in China's development for decades to come. Undoubtedly, the reforms are the prime task of the working class currently. They are also the cause of immediate concern for themselves and where their interests lie. In the course of carrying on the reforms, the working class should function as the major force. We should be ready at any time to meet and overcome problems that develop during them. At present, we live in a period in which the old system is gradually being replaced by the new one. It is inevitable that contradictions, frictions, and conflicts develop, but the major trend of the reforms must not be changed. Instead, we must resolutely uphold them. In order to achieve this, we must act in the spirit of innovating, and mut be good at probing for new ways. We should proceed with caution and summarize our experience so as to make constant progress. This will therefore require us to, first, uphold the reforms and be bold in innovating and, second, be good at studying and combining basic Marxist-Leninist theory with the actual conditions of China's reforms. We should study and support the study of the world's advanced technology and knowledge, as well as enterprise management skills. At the same time, we must always bear in mind studying methods which have proven to be effective for building socialism. Third, we must struggle in and carry forward the spirit of acting in a down-to-earth manner.

At the rally, Mao Zhiyong, secretary of the provincial CPC committee, in his speech urged all members of the working class and the working people of the province to actively devote themselves with political enthusiasm to the great practice of the reforms and economic construction so as to make new and greater contributions to invigorating the province.

Comrade Mao Zhiyong said: Under socialist conditions, the working class is the master of the enterprises, the state, and society. Therefore, we must take the undertakings of the enterprises, the state, and society as our own. We must give full play to our enthusiasm, initiative, and creative abilities. We should take the lead in mastering our own affairs. We must always bear in mind the lofty ideals of communism and uphold the communist attitude toward work.

Mao Zhiyong said: This year is the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Both the workers and all comrades of the province must resolutely give priority to reforms and strive to increase our gross industrial and agricultural output value to beyond 50 billion yuan. Under the prerequisite of improving economic results, the industrial front should strive to accomplish the goal of increasing the gross industrial output value to the level of 30 billion yuan. We must uphold the practice of grasping the two civilizations simultaneously, and ensure that there is a notable turn for the better this year in party style and the general mood of society.

Comrade Mao Zhiyong said: The provincial CPC Committee and the provincial government hope that all workers of the province will carry forward the glorious tradition of the working class, will strengthen their sense of undertaking an historical mission, of responsibility, and of honor. They should uphold the four basic principles and be united so as to contribute to accomplishing the Seventh 5-Year Plan and promoting a higher level of industrial production this year.

YAO YILIN ADDRESSES 3 MAY TRADE CONGRESS OPENING

OW031038 Beijing XINHUA in English 0935 GMT 3 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 3 (XINHUA) -- Vice-Premier Yao Yilin extended congratulations on behalf of the State Council to the first member Congress of the China Council for the Promotion of the International Trade (CCPIT), which opened here today. Yao Yilin said at the opening ceremony, CCPIT had played a very important role in promoting China's foreign economic relations and trade since it was set up in 1952. He said, the general aim of the CCPIT work should through the non-governmental channel, develop the economic relations and contacts of friendship between the people of China and various countries and promote the foreign trade. It should become a capable assistant to the Chinese Government in its work of foreign affairs and foreign economic relations and trade, he added.

Present at the opening ceremony were also Vice-Premier Tian Jiyun and Minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Zheng Tuobin.

As a non-governmental organization, CCPIT now has business contacts with more than 350 foreign organizations in over 160 countries and regions. After pursuing the membership system, CCPIT will provide services to China's economic entities as well as the governmental departments, localities and enterprises in their economic and trade activities with foreign countries, according to a CCPIT official. CCPIT now has 230 members, of them 102 are enterprises, including banks, insurance companies, foreign trade corporations, and coal, motor vehicle, iron and steel, and petro-chemical complexes, 42 organizations and 86 individuals. The programs of the two-day Congress include discussion and adoption of CCPIT constitution and election of its leading organ.

JINAN MILITARY HOLDS RALLY TO RELAY NPC GUIDELINES

SK012220 Jinan SHANDONG RIBAO in Chinese 20 Apr 86 p 1

[Text] On the morning of 19 April, the Jinan Military Region held a rally at Bayi Auditorium to relay the guidelines of the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC. Leading comrades of the military region, including Li Jiulong, Gu Hui, Xu Chunyang, and Xu Sheng, some retired veteran comrades, and comrades who have retreated to the second line, as well as cadres and fighters of the PLA organs stationed in Jinan, totalling some 1,500 people, listened to the relay.

Rao Shoukun, NPC deputy and former commander of the Jinan Military Region, introduced the grand situation and the guidelines of the NPC, and relayed the main contents of Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the "Seventh 5-Year" Plan. He said: The "Seventh 5-Year" Plan adopted at the NPC session reflects the desire of the people of various nationalities in our country. It is a programmatic document for China's socialist modernization construction in the coming 5 years.

Li Jiulong, commander of the Jinan Military Region, also spoke at the rally. He called on the PLA leaders at all levels to fully understand the great significance of this rally and to realistically relay and implement the NPC guidelines. He pointed out: In order to understand the NPC guidelines and to unify our thinking, we should particularly stress the importance of correctly understanding the situation, treating reforms, and firmly fostering the idea of subordinating to the overall situation of the country's ecnomic construction.

He said: Subordinating the building of the army to the overall situation of the country's economic construction is a strategic policy decision of the CPC Central Committee and the Central Military Commission. Through studying documents, we should further understand the relationship between building national defense and the country's economic construction. Only by doing a good job in the country's economic construction can we have a solid foundation for building up national defense. Our country's overall situation is to realize the "Seventh 5-Year" Plan. We should consciously submit ourselves to this overall situation. Our military region has done much in this regard and has scored very good achievements. In the future, we should make persistent efforts to actively participate in the construction of key state projects and to make greater contributions to safeguarding and building the motherland.

Gu Hui, deputy commander of the Jinan Military Region, presided over the rally.

JIANGXI GOVERNOR ATTENDS ECONOMIC REFORMS MEETING

OW301403 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Excerpts] The Jiangxi province-wide meeting on urban economic structural reform concluded today in Nanchang. The meeting had been called to implement the guidelines set by the National Conference on Urban Economic Structural Reform; analyze the situation in Jiangxi in conducting urban reforms, work out this year's tasks in this connection, and earnestly study the issue of strengthening lateral economic ties.

Jiang Zhuping, Standing Committee member of the provincial CPC Committee and vice governor of Jiangxi, presided. In his summing-up report, delivered at the meeting, Ni Xiance, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and Governor of Jiangxi, dwelled on the issue of persistently carrying out urban economic reforms and of further invigorating the provincial economy.

He said: To carry out urban reforms is new. Leading cadres at all levels must creatively implement the principle and policy, as well as various measures for reform set by the central authorities; give top priority to reform, and carry out their work in a creative manner.

Ni Xiance said: We must help various entrprises create necessary conditions, appropriately adapt to specific conditions, and boldly and reliably carry out reforms within their own authority. While meeting the general requirements of the state, we must allow various prefectures and cities to adopt more flexible economic policies.

On promoting lateral economic ties, Ni Xiance pointed out: It is urgent to tap the abundant natural resources in the province, further improve management in industrial and agricultural production, and develop a diversified economy and township industries. In old liberated areas, people must be helped to banish poverty and prosper as soon as possible. In achieving all this, we must vigorously promote lateral economic ties. We must adopt various measures to do this among various enterprises, and coordinate extensively between specialized departments to turn out more high-quality famous-brand products.

Ni Xiance also called on governments at all levels to strengthen their leadership over economic work, concentrate their efforts on carrying out production even more vigorously during the second quarter of this year, stir up the enthusiasm of people in all walks of life for production, increase production steadily, and ensure that all the semi-annual production targets are fulfilled by the end of June this year.

Liu Fangren, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, also delivered a speech. He discussed how to strengthen party leadership and triumphantly carry out reforms. Liu Fangren said: In order to carry out reforms effectively, leading cadres at all levels must thoroughly conduct investigation and study, profoundly understand the situation, and help solve problems whenever they are discovered. It is necessary to adhere to the principle of seeking truth from facts, and creatively carry out our work. We must vigorously support those engaged in reform, give them proper guidance and enthusiastically help them.

Liu Fangren said: To proceed from the actual situation in the province and develop lateral economic ties is of great importance in rejuvenating the economy in our province. We must foster mutual benefit to the extent of giving up our own benefits for others. As long as we can develop the economy in a whole area, we must do so even if we have to lose our benefits to others. We must act from the strategic point of view, and pay attention to long-term economic results. Otherwise, it is impossible to develop lateral economic ties.

On correcting party style and carrying out reforms, Liu Fangren said: A central leading comrade pointed out that it is impossible to carry out reforms without a correct party style. In correcting party style, all party organizations throughout the province must strengthen their education on party style, spirit, and discipline. The broad masses of party members must forever keep in mind the goal of wholeheartedly serving the people. Particularly, leading cadres at all levels must play their exemplary role. Leadership at all levels must dare to handle difficult, major, and important cases. At the same time, we must pay full attention to policy, distinguish the demarcation line between errors and unhealthy trends, and stir up the enthusiasm of the masses of cadres in promoting socialism. Liu Fangren said: With their emphasis on reform, the party organizations at all levels in the province must actively develop their ideological and political work, and vigorously propagate the general policy of the party Central Committee on reform. It is essential to educate people on fostering lofty ideals, moral integrity, education and a sense of discipline in the course of carrying out reforms. We must help people solve problems they may possibly encounter in the course of carrying out reforms with positive education and proper guidance.

At the same time, we must enthusiastically commend the advanced personages who have distinguished themselves in the course of carrying out reforms; encourage people to effect reforms; and build a mighty contingent of ideological and political workers. We must help political workers become more competent in doing their work, to fulfill our goal of carrying out reforms. Attending today's meeting were party, government and army leaders Jiang Zhuping, Wang Baotian, Zhu Zhihong, Liang Kaixuan, Qian Jiaming, (Sun Xiyue), (Chen Guideng), and Liu Jianhua.

RUI XINGWEN ATTENDS SHANGHAI MUNICIPAL CONGRESS

RUI XINGWEN ADDRESSES SHANGHAI CPPCC SESSION

OW042057 Shanghai JIEFANG RIBAO in Chinese 30 Apr 86 p 1

[Text] The 8-day Fifth Session of the Sixth Shanghai Municipal CPPCC Committee successfully concluded on the afternoon of 29 April amid the majestic strains of the national anthem after completing all the items on the agenda.

The meeting, held in a lively atmosphere, gave full expression to democracy. All of the delegates spoke out freely, voicing their respective views and offering many good recommendations. The members were emotionally exuberant, thus imparting a truly harmonious and upbeat mood to the meeting. The closing session was ceremonially held at the Huxi Worker Theater at 1430 on 29 April. Seated at the rostrum were municipal CPPCC Committee Chairman Li Guohao and Vice Chairmen Mao Jingquan, Yang Shifa, Yang Kai, Zhao Chaogu, Xu Yifang, Ye Shuhua, Tang Junyuan, Dong Yinchu, Wu Wenqi, Zhou Bi, and Zhang Ruifang.

Also seated on the rostrum on invitation were National CPPCC Committee Vice Chairman Liu Jingji; leading municipal party, government, and military comrades Rui Xingwen, Jiang Zemin, Zhao Xingzhi, Liu Nianzhi, Shu Wen, Xie Lijuan, Wu Quangyu, and Pan Qihuai; and comrades Song Richang, Wang Zhizhong, and Yang Xuanwu. Officials of concerned departments, committees, offices, and bureaus were also present on invitation. Municipal CPPCC Vice Chairman Mao Jingquan presided over the meeting. With a show of hands, the members adopted a resolution approving Municipal CPPCC Committee Secretary General Fang Zhengfu's request for resignation, and elected a vice chairman, a new secretary general, and Standing Committee members to the Sixth Municipal CPPCC Committee. Thunderous applause greeted the newly elected Vice Chairman Yang You, secretary general, and Standing Committee members as they took their seats at the rostrum. Vice Chairman Yang You, aged 68, is a member of the Jiusan Society Central Standing Committee, the chairman of the society's Shanghai Municipal Committee, and a professor and the director of Jiaotong University's Shipping and Oceanography Research Institute. The meeting then adopted a political resolution of the Fifth Session of the Sixth Muncipal CPPCC Committee's Proposals Handling Panel on the proposals submitted during the session.

Speaking at the meeting, Rui Xingwen, secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee, said: This meeting has been a great success. The members offered excellent opinions and proposals on Shanghai's material and spiritual civilizations and future tasks. In carrying out our future tasks, we will study and implement these opinions and proposals. Rui Xingwen gave the members a detailed explanation of the situation of and the tasks for transforming and invigorating Shanghai as well as building the material and spritual civilizations. He also discussed the current situation and future development trends, and voiced his hopes in connection with the people's political consultative work. Rui Xingwen hoped that the Shanghai Municipal CPPCC Committee will continue to carry forward the fine tradition of political consultation and democratic supervision, and make greater contributions to building Shanghai into a modern socialist city which is open, multifunctional, industrially sound, scientifically and tecnologically advanced, and highly civilized. On the matter of the great cause of national reulnification, he noted: The concept of "one country, two systems" is our basic national policy. In the course of enforcing this concept, the Shanghai CPPCC Committee has all the conditions for playing a more important role in reunifying the motherland and invigorating China.

Municipal CPPCC Committee Chairman Li Guohao also spoke at the meeting. He said: Shanghai's Seventh 5-Year Plan envisages a rosy prospect for a modern socialist Shanghai. New plans and tasks have provided the municipal CPPCC Committee with a new field of activity. We should expand our ties and cooperation with all quarters; intensify investigations and studies on special subjects; forge ties with compatriots from Taiwan, Hong Kong, and Macao, as well as Overseas Chinese; give full play to our role of political consultation and democratic supervision; fully exploit our comprehensive talent pool; and make fresh contributions to invigorating Shanghai and reunifying the motherland.

ZHEJIANG: TRANSFER OF PEOPLE'S ARMED FORCES PLANNED

OW021253 Hangzhou ZHEJIANG RIBAO in Chinese 25 Apr 86 p 1

[Dispatch by correspondent Zhao Renchun]

[Text] The provincial CPC Committee, the provincial People's Government, and the provincial Military District held a meeting from 23 to 24 April to make specific plans for transfering the People's Armed Forces departments over to the local authorities. The meeting urged military and local authorities to coordinate their efforts to ensure a smooth transfer.

Liu Xinzeng, member of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee and political commissar of the provincial Military District, and Wang Hungyi, deputy secretary general of the provincial People's Government, spoke at the meeting. Li Qing, commander of the provincial Military District, read the order of commendation for 89 cadres of the People's Armed Forces departments who had performed remarkably in facilitating the transfer.

So far the military and local authorities have been very concerned about the action and have made many preparations in this regard. Cadres of the Armed Forces departments in 89 counties and cities in the province have been assigned in the main. The newly assigned cadres of the Armed Forces departments look more spirited, and are younger, more professionally proficient and more knowledgeable. In dealing with the problems left over from history, the military and local authorities have followed the principle of yielding to and understanding each other. This has resulted in satisfactory solutions for problems that had remained unsolved for years and has laid a sound groundwork for the transfer of control of the armed forces departments.

The meeting noted that transfering the People's Armed Forces departments over to local authorities involves work in many aspects and demands a good understanding of the related policies. It is a complicated and systematic program that requires the military and local authorities to earnestly strengthen leadership. At present, the following work should be done successfully: 1) It is necessary to become reeducated by restudying the documents of the central authorities in light of the actual ideological situation and to make the transfer a process for strengthening the reserve forces for national defense; 2) It is necessary to stress unity and style, and strive to satisfy all parties involved in the transfer; 3) It is necessary to further straighten out the relationships in all aspects, and ensure a smooth channel of communications.

After their transfer over to the local authorities, the People's Armed Forces departments should sincerely follow the leadership of the county party committees and governments. Local party committees and governments should incorporate the work of People's Armed Forces departments into their normal scope of work. They should boldly exercise leadership over the People's Armed Forces while respecting their peculiar nature. The People's Armed Forces departments themselves should seek self-improvement, consciously maintain and display the fine traditions of the people's army, and firmly foster the idea of devoting themselves to strengthening the reserve forces for national defense. They should remember that although they are under the jurisdiction of the local althorities, their work is still military in nature and their workstyle should resemble that of a regular army.

GUANGXI'S WEI CHUNSHU STRESSES PROMOTING REFORMS

[Excerpts] Chairman Wei Chunshu said in his report: The key to fulfilling the region's construction tasks for the Seventh 5-Year Plan lies in continuing to carry out deep going and systematic reform of the economic structure. During the period of the plan we should focus on the following items of work in our economic structural reform:

1. Continue to relax the policies. The leaders and departments at all levels must mentally establish the notion of the whole of Guangxi as a place practicing nationality autonomy. Apart from resolutely carrying out the central policies on economic reform, we must also implement the nationality regional autonomy law and the series of special regulations on economic and cultural development in nationality autonomous regions.

2. Streamline the administration and delegate powers, and further invigorate the enterprises.

3. Actively develop the socialist commodity market and gradually perfect the market setup. We must actively develop commodity circulation spanning different areas and departments.

4. Vigorously develop lateral economic ties and do still better in opening up to other parts of China and to the world. We must vigorously promote lateral economic ties spanning different areas and departments. The towns must dare to make market concessions and diffuse technology, capital, and information to the rural market areas. The rural areas must dare to make resource concessions and apply favored treatment policies to boldly attract capital, technology, and talent to help them develop. Guangxi must dare to make concessions on some of its interests to attract capital and technology from other provinces and regions and strive to obtain their help in helping the region to exploit its resources and develop its economy. We should continue to promote different sizes of open-style urban-rural cooperation zones, with the medium and small towns as their props, and do a good job in transferring technology, talent, and products.

5. Gradually change the government's management functions. We must change the previous practice of devoting our main energy to setting targets, approving projects, and distributing bonuses and materials, and gradually shift to focusing on making all-round plans, grasping the policies, organizing coordination, providing services, applying economic regulatory measures, and strengthening supervision and inspection. It is necessary to increase economic legislative and judicial work.

6. Get a good grasp of this year's reforms. This year the region must follow the unified arrangements of the central authorities, properly implement the principle of consolidation, digestion, replenishment, and improvement, and consolidate and develop the fruits of reform. We should also make preparations for a relatively big stride in reform next year.

HENAN SECRETARY ATTENDS MILITARY DISTRICT MEETING

HK301235 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] On 26 April, Yang Xizong, secretary of the Provincial CPC Committee and first secretary of the Henan Military District CPC Committee, spoke at the Sixth Plenary meeting of the Seventh Henan Military District CPPCC Committee, demanding that all PLA units throughout the military district make concerted efforts to forge ahead, strengthen the building of the PLA units and militia, and contribute to invigorating Henan's economy.

In his speech, Comrade Yang Xizong fully affirmed the achievements scored in all aspects of work since the Henan Military District carried out its streamlining and reorganization. He emphasized: The current tasks of building the PLA units and militia are very arduous. We must concentrate our energy, give prominence to the foci, and do well in grasping several aspects of the main work:

1. It is necessary to take the lead in realizing a fundamental turn for the better in party style. He said that in response to the central authorities' and Military Commission's call that the Army should be a vanguard example of straightening out party style, the comrades of our Henan Military District must take effective measures, work in a down-to-earth manner, realize a fundamental turn for the better in party style as soon as possible, and set a good example for the whole province.

2. It is essential to penetratingly carry out militia work reform and to seriously implement the CPC Central Committee's and Central Military Commission's principle on strengthening the building of the reserve forces for the new period. While adhering to all systems of militia work, we must vigorously organize and mobilize militiamen to participate in the reform of the economic structure, to develop commodity production, to complete the task of [words indistinct], to maintain the militia with productive labor, and to really build the militia into a powerful force which builds the two civilizations under party leadership.

3. It is imperative to seriously do a good job in changing the Armed Forces departments at the county level into local establishments. Proceeding from the overall situation and adhering to the spirit of mutual understanding and concessions, cooperation, and full consultation, the Army and localities must successfully complete the transition.

4. It is necessary to further strengthen the unity of the Army and localities and the unity of the Army and people. He demanded that the CPC committees and governments of the localities must carry forward the excellent tradition of the party commanding the Armed Forces, strengthen leadership over the People's Armed Forces work, and promptly help them solve problems. People's Armed Forces departments at all levels must conscientiously respect and obey the leadership of the CPC committees and governments of the localities, ask for instructions and make reports on their work on their own initiative, and act as assistants of the CPC committees and governments of the localities. They must vigorously take part in and support local reform activities and devote their energy to the development of the Henan's excellent situation.

FURTHER ON HENAN GOVERNOR 5-YEAR PLAN REPORT

HK030001 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] In his report on our province's Seventh 5-Year Plan, Governor He Zhukang pointed out: We must persist in relying on policies and science, and continuously strengthen agriculture -- the foundation. Governor He said: During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, it is essential to continuously implement the principle of never relaxing grain production while vigorously carrying out diversification and to regard grain production as a major task. It is planned that total output of grain during the 5 years will be 24.1 million tons more than in the Sixth 5-Year Plan period. It is imperative to set up a large number of commodity production bases and to develop agriculture which can earn foreign exchange. In particular, we must increase the building of a large number of base counties for high-quality and high-yield commodity wheat. At the same time, we must take measures suited to local conditions to develop industrial crops. The province's output of cotton must be stabilized at 600,000 tons. Output of oil-bearing crops must reach 1.17 million tons by 1990. It is necessary to speed up the development of herbivorous livestock.

Gross output of meat by the end of 1990 must be 1 million tons, output of fresh eggs 600,000 tons, and output of aquatic products 120,000 tons. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, it is necessary to complete the task of afforesting the plain and to speed up afforesting the mountainous areas. The whole province's forest coverage rate must reach some 16 percent.

Governor He stressed: In agricultural development, we must rely on policies and science. In the aspect of science, we must lay stress on the development of new strains, new technology, and new machinery which suit our province's agriculture, make achievements in some advanced and practical scientific research as soon as possible, and raise economic results and labor productivity. In the aspect of policies, we must continue to carry out rural economic reform, further perfect the system of contracted responsibilities for agricultural production, lead and encourage the peasants to develop various forms of economic combines in accordance with the principle of voluntariness and mutual benefit, continue to protect the specialized households, maintain the peasants' enthusiasm for production and for selling grain, formulate regulations on encouragement and management as soon as possible, and strictly control capital construction and the building of houses on land in the rural areas.

It is necessary to rationally readjust the investment structure and to efficiently build a number of key projects of superior quality. This was emphatically pointed out by Governor He Zhukang in his report on the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Governor He said: The orientation for the readjustment of the investment structure in our province during the Seventh 5-Year Plan is:

1. We must continue to increase investment in energy resources, the raw material industry, and basic communications facilities and to suitably increase investment in agriculture, science, and education.

2. We must cut ordinary nonproductive projects so as to maintain a proper proportion of investment in both nonproductive and productive projects.

3. We must spend more funds on technological transformation, modification, and extension of existing enterprises.

Governor He pointed out: To meet the state's needs in gradually building central China into an important energy resources and raw material production base of our country, we must concentrate our forces to build a large number of key projects for energy resources, the raw material industry, communiations, and telecommunications. We must especially create conditions for starting as soon as possible key projects which have an important effect on our province's economic development.

On the present basis, it is essential to speed up technological transformation in enterprises, to develop the production of consumer goods, and to vigorously produce products of famous brands and superior quality. These are two aspects which Governor He Zhukang stressed in his report on the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

Governor He said: During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, it is imperative to give priority to technological transformation. All trades and enterprises must work out measures for technological transformation and carry out these measures. The focus in technological transformation must be on the key sectors and products of the machine-building industry, the consumer goods industry, and the raw material industry and on large and medium-sized enterprises which have important effect on the overall situation. More than half of the large and medium-sized enterprises must carry out transformation within this year.

Governor He pointed out: To suit the change in urban and rural people's consumption structure, during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, while continuously doing well in grasping the production of daily necessities, we must vigorously produce products of famous brands and superior quality, develop new varieties, and turn out new products. We must regard food, textiles, garments, leather, and consumer durables as the key points for bringing along the development of the whole consumer goods industry. At the same time, we must suitably develop the production of domestic electric appliances and small commodities.

HENAN SETS 'DEMARCATION LINES' FOR UNHEALTHY TRENDS

HK040241 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 3 May 86

[Text] According to HENAN RIBAO: The general offices of the Henan Provincial CPC Committee and People's Government have issued 10 policy demarcation lines regarding correcting unhealthy trends, in order to correctly and effectively straighten out unhealthy trends, ensure the smooth progress of reform, and promote economic development.

These demarcation lines, issued on 29 April, are as follows: 1) between certain mistakes in reform and unhealthy trends; 2) between the necessary social activities involved in business and spending public funds on feasting, drinking, extravagance and waste; 3) between paid services and improper income; 4) between reasonable remuneration and random payment of bonuses, subsidies, and goods in kind; 5) between diversified operations by state-owned enterprises and violations of law and discipline; 6) between price reform and random price hikes; 7) between correctly selecting and appointing cadres and abusing powers and appointing only acquaintances to posts; 8) between reasonable ways of raising capital and illegal financial activities; 10) between proper exposure of malpractices and making false accusations.

The general offices proposed: All prefectures, cities, departments, and systems can decide on specific regulations and criteria in light of the views of the two offices and in connection with their actual conditions, and gradually perfect them in the course of practice.

GUANGXI SUGAR OUTPUT -- Nanning, April 26 (XINHUA) -- Sugar output of the Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region reached a record 850,000 tons during the 1985-1986 refining season, an increase of 40 percent over the last season. An official in charge of the region's sugar production attributed the record production to government support and the rising enthusiasm for sugarcane production of local peasants. From 1981 to 1985, 21 new large and middle-sized refining mills were built, while 41 old ones were renovated. The daily cane pressing capacity increased to 70,000 tons in 1985 from 36,600 tons 1979. At the same time, the raising of the purchase price of sugarcane stimulated cane production in the region's rural areas, which reported to have sold 7.5 million tons of cane this season -- 2.5 million tons more than last season.

REPORTS, COMMENTS ON TAIWAN PILOT'S DEFECTION

Tian Jiyun Meets Pilot

OW061417 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1133 GMT 6 May 86

[By reporters Yu Jiafu and Zou Aiguo]

[Text] Beijing, 6 May (XINHUA) -- Vice Premier Tian Jiyun this afternoon received Boeing-747 cargo jet pilot Wang Xijue, his father Wang Boxi, and his brothers Wang Mingan, Wang Pingan, and Wang Xishou. Tian Jiyun welcomed Wang Xijue on returning to the motherland and settling on the mainland. He said: "Mr Wang's action shows the common desire of the Chinese people to realize the peaceful reunification of the motherland and conforms to the historical trend. By returning to the motherland and settling on the mainland, Mr Wang reunited with members of his family whom he had not seen for many years. I wish to warmly congratulate the Wangs on their reunion."

Wang Xijue said: "It was my desire for many years to return to the mainland. When I was overseas, I always cherished the beautiful rivers and mountains of the motherland and its age-old culture. Many people in Taiwan miss the mainland like me." He said that since he is now back on the mainland, he would like to tour Sichuan and other localities. From now on, he will exert even greater efforts to serve the compatriots in the motherland and devote himself to the development of the mainland's civil aviation.

Tian Jiyun said: "Mr Wang has said that he wishes to continue to work in the civil aviation field. We welcome you to make contributions to the development of the motherland's civil aviation and to the four modernizations. Tremendous progress has been made in developing civil aviation domestically. From now on, even more impressive developments will be made. I believe that you can do much in this field."

Tian Jiyun continued: "I heard that Mr Dong Guangxing and Mr Qiu Mingzhi who flew to Guangzhou with you wish the return to Taiwan. Our policy is for exchange of trade, mail, air, and shipping services between both sides of the straits, and we affirm that people are free to come and leave of their own accord. We will fully respect their will. We mean what we say. Our deeds will be as good as our words. The way we handle this matter is aboveboard and reasonable. We believe that matters between Chinese should be resolved by Chinese. Since the aforementioned two crew members wish to return to Taiwan, and there are also business matters concerning how to deal with the plane and the cargo, the natural thing would be for China Airlines to have discussions with the Civil Aviation Administration of China."

Tian Jiyun concluded: "In line with the concept of 'one country, two systems,' it is in the interest of the Chinese nation to realize, first of all, the exchange of trade, mail, air, and shipping services and then the peaceful reunification of the country. We wish to use channels acceptable to both sides to actively promote exchange and cooperation in various fields between the two sides of the straits and to work with unremitting efforts for the peaceful reunification of the motherland."

Among those present on the occasion were Wang Shuming, deputy secretary general of the State Council; Hu Yizhou, director general of the Civil Aviation Administration of China; Chen Kaizhi, deputy secretary general of the Guangdong Provincial CPC Committe; Yang Qingshan, deputy head of the General Office of the Guangdong Provincial Government; and Fu Lixian, deputy head of the General Office of the Sichuan Provincial Government.

Beijing Press Conference

HK070828 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 7 May 86 p 1

[Special dispatch from Beijing: "Wang Hsi-chueh Gives Press Conference in Beijing"]

[Text] Beijing, 7 May -- Crew commander Wang Hsi-chueh, who flew a Taiwan China Airlines cargo plane to mainland China and asked to settle down there, gave a press conference in Beijing this morning at which he said that political affairs are rotten and corruption is serious in Taiwan. He also stressed that he made his own decision to return to the mainland of his motherland and this has nothing to do with anyone else.

This morning, Wang Hsi-chueh was still wearing the uniform of a crew commander of the China Airlines at the press conference. He read out a statement and said that although he is a KMT member and his official title is equivalent to a lieutenant colonel in the air force, he is discontented with the rotten political affairs and corruption in Taiwan and that the China Airlines system which he has served, is not sound either.

He stressed that it was his own decision to fly back to the mainland and he had not discussed it with his family in advance. He said, "What I have done is entirely my personal will and has nothing whatsoever to do with anyone else. I hope that the Taiwan authorities will act in the spirit of respecting human rights, freedom, and governing by law, and will not persecute my relatives, commanding officers, friends, and colleagues. They are all innocent." He also said that after returning to the mainland, he has not been rewarded but has only been given some pocket money.

Regarding crew members Tung Kuang-shin and Chiu Ming-chih who were in the same plane with him to China's mainland Wang Hsi-chueh hoped that the government would respect their wishes and let them return to Taiwan soon. Regarding how the cargo plane should be handled, he also hoped that the authorities can also return it to its owner as soon as possible.

Hu Yizhou, director-general of the Civil Aviation Administration of China, was also present at today's press conference.

Further on Press Conference

HK070906 Hong Kong AFP in English 0855 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 7 (AFP) -- Wang Xinjue, the first Taiwan commercial pilot to defect to China, blasted the nationalist government on Wednesday, charging that corruption and crime are rampant on the island. The veteran China Airlines captain, explaining his decision to defect at a news conference in Beijing, said that the communist government in Beijing respects "freedom, human rights and law." Mr Wang, known in Taiwan as Wang Hsi-chueh, said that as a former member of the Kuomintang, Taiwan's ruling party, he was familiar with rampant corruption afflicting the Taipei regime.

"On the political level there are many corrupted officials," the 57-year-old pilot said, adding that there was also widespread corruption in China Airlines (CAL). "The situation of security and public order (in Taiwan) is very bad. There are a lot of crimes, thefts, murders and robbery," he said. "The secret police are everywhere." Mr Wang added that he believed "the law must be very strict" and said he favored executing people convicted of economic crimes.

The CAL pilot diverted a Boeing 747 cargo plane to an airport in southern China on Saturday. On Tuesday, after flying the plane to Beijing, Mr Wang was received by Chinese vice-premier Tian Jiyun in the great Hall of the People. He was assured by Mr Tian that Beijing would respect the wishes of the jumbo jet's other two crewmembers, co-pilot Dong Guangxin and technician Qiu Minzhi, if they wanted to return to Taiwan. Asked how the two crewmembers reacted when they realized the cargo plane was headed for China, Mr Wang said that no fighting broke out abroad the aircraft.

Mr Wang said that he decided to defect on his own and did not tell his wife or three children of his plan. He also appealed to Taiwan authorities not to "persecute" his family. Earlier, Mr Wang had said that his decision to defect was motivated by a desire to see his 82-year-old father, Wang Boxi. The CAL pilot, a native of Sichuan province in central China, left the mainland in 1949. He was reunited with his father and three of his brothers by Chinese authorities at Beijing airport on Tuesday.

Mr Wang also disclosed at the news conference that he had not received any type of reward from communist authorities for defecting, only pocket-money and clothes. Authorities in Beijing and Taiwan have offered rewards in the past to military pilots who defect.

Mr Wang expressed a desire to continue flying and "contribute to the development" of his adopted country, adding that he favored opening telephone, postal and air links between China and Taiwan. "I hope my arrival will represent the inaugural flight" between the Chinese mainland and the Nationalist island claimed by China, he quipped.

China has offered to turn the multi-million-dollar CAL jumbo jet over to a CAL crew, but the Taiwan flag carrier has been reluctant to enter into direct contact with authorities in Beijing. (Taiwan Government spokesman Chang King-yuh said in Taipei Wednesday that Taiwan would not negotiate with Beijing directly for the return of the jet. "The Chinese Communists are a rebellious group and our policy of 'no contact, no negotiations, no compromise' with the Peiping (Beijing) regime will never change," he told legislators. The handling of Captain Wang's plane would be no exception, he said.

CAL has asked Hong Kong based Cathay Pacific Airways to act as its representative in Beijing. Beijing authorities have not yet officially indicated whether they are prepared to accept this arrangement, saying that the affair is an "internal" one that should be worked out "between Chinese." The Kuomintang Party now ruling Taiwan fled there after they were defeated in China by the communists in 1949.

No Conclusions Reached on Incident

OW061656 Taipei CNA in English 1507 GMT 6 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 6 (CNA) — China Airlines said it contacted the Hong Kong-based Cathay Pacific Airways Tuesday and learned that Cathay has not achieved any substantial success with the Peiping authorities in handling the case of the CAL cargo jet that was diverted to Canton on the China mainland last Saturday. No conclusions have been reached for the moment, CAL spokesman L. C. Lin said. CAL has engaged Cathay and given it full authority to negotiate with the Peiping regime for the return of the plane, crewmen and cargo. Cathay did not mention that the Peiping authorities have refused to accept its mediating role in the case as foreign wire services have reported, Lin said.

In Taipei the family of China Airlines pilot Wang Hsi-chueh, who flew a cargo jet to Canton last Saturday, asked the Peiping authorities Tuesday to allow the crewmen to meet the press in Hong Kong so that they can speak out their real wishes freely.

Meeting reporters at their house in Taipei Tuesday, the pilot's eldest son, in a statement, appealed to the international mass media to use their influence to push the Peiping authorities to release the three crewmen to Hong Kong. The junior Wang said he and his family absolutely did not believe that his father was willing to go to the mainland. He said he earnestly hopes that the Peiping authorities will let his father and the other two crewmen go to Hong Kong to tell the press their true intentions in a free atmosphere.

Meantime, Ku Cheng-han, secretary general of the Red Cross Society of China, said he has received formal requests from family members of the three stranded crew members asking the International Red Cross to help their husbands and fathers return home as soon as possible. Ku promised that he and all staffers at his society will do their best to accomplish the mission.

Communications Garbled Over Deal

HK070227 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 7 May 86 p 3

[Text] Is there a Beijing-Taipei standoff over the US$60 million jumbo jet which landed in Guangzhou on Saturday? A China Airlines official said yesterday it had conveyed a message to Chinese authorities through Hong Kong-based Cathay Pacific Airways (CPA). Sources in Beijing, however, say no such thing has happened. Cathay Pacific declined to comment. The same sources reiterated that any bid by CPA to mediate would be unacceptable.

In Taipei yesterday, a China Airlines official, Larry Lin, told the STANDARD that CPA sent them two reports in the morning and informed them that "action has been taken." But Mr Lin declined to elaborate while CPA officials in Hong Kong remained silent. Mr Lin also named two other possible mediators, the International Red Cross and the aircraft's insurance company. Chinese Government sources told the the STANDARD that CPA did not approach them.

The director of the Civil Aviation Administration of China [CAAC], Mr Hu Yizhou, said: "Our own affairs should be handled by our own selves" when he welcomed the defecting Taiwanese pilot. Earlier, the CAAC said it would appoint its Hong Kong office to start talks with China Airlines in Hong Kong. But the CAAC's Hong Kong office declined comment.

The STANDARD yesterday witnessed the arrival of three aviation officials from Guangzhou at the Hong Kong office, located at Gloucester Tower, Central. One of the officials said they were from Xiamen and had nothing to do with the affair. The local China Airlines office maintained that it would not deal directly with Chinese representatives, even if they were in Hong Kong.

ZHU HOUZE'S PROPAGANDA DEPARTMENT POLICIES ANALYZED

HK051500 Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 5 May 86 p 7

["Special dispatch" from Beijing by Keng Chun: "Zhu Houze's Speeches on Policies Have Evoked Strong Repercussions Among Intellectuals"]

[Text] Some Beijing University students who have always been active and very sensitive to trends in the ideological field recently called Zhu Houze, head of the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department, expressing their agreement with and support for the main spirit of his speeches made on many occasions. Zhu Houze, now 55, was originally secretary of the Guizhou Provincial CPC Committee. He was appointed head of the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department in August last year. His appointment as head of the Propaganda Department immediately drew the attention of intellectuals, who were expecting from him an early "notice to reassure the public." But unexpectedly, Zhu Houze rarely aired his views on ideological work, apart from making occasional public appearances at meetings and theaters.

Recently, however, Zhu Houze finally broke silence. From 18 April to 2 May, the Beijing press published four of his speeches, arousing strong repercussions among intellectuals. Some learned persons appraised his speeches on policies as having a "widespread impact." They said that Zhu Houze objectively and squarely answered some sensitive questions.

By the end of last year, some people on the mainland pointed out that following the implementation of the policy of opening to the world, there was a decline in social conduct and morality in spite of a rise in the economy and material production. Zhu Houze was very much dissatisfied with this comment, which was similar to the ultraleftist assertion during the Great Cultural Revolution that "although the satellite has gone up, the red banner has fallen down." He said: "I am included to this view; not only is our economic life full of vitality, an unprecedentedly lively situation has also emerged in the fields of theory, academy, literature, and art. Taken as a whole, literary creation is shaping much better than in any period in the past." He emphasized: "Opening to the world and introducing foreign technology will help promote not only China's economic construction, but also its ideology and culture. In the world today, no country or nation can monopolize the most excellent ideological, cultural, scientific, and technological achievements. Therefore, China must receive the fine historical and cultural heritage of other nations in the world as well as their advanced ideological, cultural, scientific, and technological achievements.

This newly-appointed head of the Propaganda Department described the storms that arose in the ideological sphere last year as "local" and of a "small-scale" nature. He said that some of these storms involved criticism in literature and art circles and discussions in the academic field and that others were arguments about the quality of literary works, in which inaccurate methods, wording, and reasoning were used. He suggested that to discard misgivings in intellectual circles, party and government departments in charge of cultural and artistic work as well as officials responsible for academic work should understand more the feelings of writers and artists for the people and make frequent contacts with people in intellectual circles so as to increase mutual understanding and trust. He pointed out that it was necessary to create a harmonious atmosphere, a lively and relaxed environment for airing views and launching competition among different styles and schools, and a climate for discussion and mutual criticism in the course of exploring and creating new things. He particularly stressed the necessity for independent thinking and for allowing different viewpoints to contend.

It was reported that Zhu Houze recently delivered a speech to all personnel of the Propaganda Department. He drew a parallel between work in the ideological sphere and Chinese medical treatment, saying that it was not appropriate to build up our health with "too much" ginseng and antler or to "release our bowels" with bezoar but that "mild nutritions" were recommendable. He pointed out that the method of making a radial turn should be encouraged, as a right-angled or abrupt turn was detrimental to the country and the people.

Zhu Houze keeps in touch with people who hold different views on the question of reforms. Wen Yuankai once told him that reformers had the feeling of being hit by arrow and falling from their horses. Zhu Houze encouraged him to carry out propagation on reforms among people who hesitate about and even oppose reforms, instead of disseminating reforms merely among those who favor reforms. It was reported that Zhu Houze recently invited Wen Yuankai to make a report in the Propaganda Department. The report was well received by department personnel. Some well-informed sources revealed that Zhu Houze made his speeches without a text or note. It was obvious that he was fully prepared for his speeches. It was not accidental for Zhu Houze to break silence under such circumstances, as his speeches represented the new views and trend of the CPC high-ranking leaders.

YANG SHANGKUN REPORTEDLY HEADS CPC HONG KONG SECTION

HK050850 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 5 May 86 p 7

[By Yau Shing-mu]

[Text] A top military expert and close aide to Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping is in charge of Hong Kong affairs in the Chinese Communist Party. He is 79-year-old Yang Shangkun, who leads a caucus called the Taiwan, Hong Kong and Macao Group. He is also a member of the Politburo which makes all the important party decisions. The party caucus is different from that of the state. The Director of the Hong Kong and Macao Affairs Office (HKMAO) under the State Council, Mr Ji Pengfei, is widely known to Hong Kong people as the man in charge. He is the highest ranking government official overseeing policies concerning Hong Kong. But within the party, Mr Ji is only a member of the caucus led by Mr Yang.

In China, the Communist Party is usually regarded as the supreme body above the state, and if views of the two bodies clash, it is the party caucus led by Mr Yang which will carry more weight than Mr Ji's one in deciding policies towards Hong Kong. Mr Yang is also the permanent vice-chairman and secretary-general of the Party's Central Military Commission which is headed by Mr Deng. He was the second party secretary of Guangdong Province when Hong Kong's party affairs were within the provincial domain. Mr Yang was recently seen with Mr Deng when the Chinese leader met Mr Fu Chao-chu, the president of CENTRAL DAILY NEWS, a Hong Kong based newspaper with a widely-read American edition.

Also a member of the party caucus is the Director of XINHUA news agency's Hong Kong branch, Mr Xu Jiatun. The agency's director is always the head of the party's organisation in Hong Kong, which is called the Hong Kong and Macao Working Group. Because Mr Ji and Mr Xu have equal status in the party, their operations are independent of each other, but they do co-ordinate. The caucus was formed when Beijing upgraded the status of the local XINHUA office and put Mr Xu in charge in 1983, just before the Sino-British negotiations on Hong Kong's future began. Another prominent figure in the caucus is Madam Deng Yingchao, the widow of late Premier Zhou Enlai, though she retired from the Politburo last September. The daily business of the caucus is looked after by Mr Yang Side whose background is unknown. But it is Mr Deng, who still sits on the Politiburo, who has a final say on all policies concerning Hong Kong.

PART II: WANG MENG DISCUSSES PRC LITERATURE, ART

HK050727 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 2 May 86 p 3

[Second and last installment of "Special Interview" by reporter Liu Min-yi from Beijing, 30 April: "Wang Meng on Reform Of Literature and Art"]

[Text] A reporter asked him whether works of an entertaining character should also be subjected to the requirements of socialism and the four modernizations. He indicated that in the course of his creation, as a serious-minded writer, based his works on his understanding of life and his pursuit of art and truth, rather than submitting himself to any orders imposed from outside. If he subordinated his literary creation to orders from outside, he would not be able to produce either serious work or work of an entertaining nature. He said: "Can we still amuse ourselves under orders? If you are assigned a task to laugh, can you really laugh? However, he also indicated that in our country's present conditions the Chinese writers have high hopes that the country's modernization could be achieved, the reforms could be successful, and the objective of building socialism with Chinese characteristics could be attained. He believed that all Chinese writers including Bai Hua and Liu Binyan also had such hopes.

Our Culture Has Vitality

Wang Meng did not agree with some people's appraisal that the level of modern Chinese literature and art was not high. He said: "Seen from historical traditions, China has an aged-old, rich, profound, and unique cultural tradition and, with the exception of the Han nationality, no other nationalities in the country can preserve their own integral and unique cultures at this time. This proves that our culture has vitality. However, it must be noted that a prolonged cultural stagnation has done damage to the country's various cultural undertakings including painting, music, and art. Our culture is in a difficult situation particularly because the cultural level of the whole population is not high and illiteracy can be found almost everywhere. The works of our writers, including Ba Jin and Ai Ging who are literarily most accomplished, have a limited readership among the peasants. If you go to the countryside, you will find that the peasants are still reading the libretto of "The Saga of the General Yang Family" and "The Eastern Expedition of Xie Rengui." After 1949, the writers were attacked and left in a secluded environment. This also contributed to a certain extent to the above-mentioned situation in the countryside.

As for the question of when higher-quality works will appear; Wang Meng held that more often than not, good works are not produced amid loud cries and profound works can be expected to appear when the people have calmed down. To put it briefly, he has great confidence in China — both in the Chinese culture and in the intelligence of the Chinese people. He said China has a strange character. It is said that China is tightly closed to international intercourse but sometimes, it is highly flexible in this regard. It sometimes rejects and sometimes accepts everything. It has managed to absorb India's Buddhism and Marxism well. It is also capable of receiving the newly-developed school of new art. This proves that our culture has the ability to meet any contingency and is well positioned to reach a higher level. As far as the cultural level is concerned, he thought that China's current level of poetry could not be considered low.

He Has Not Heard That the Central Authorities Have Ever Criticized the Novel "New Star"

Wang Meng has his own analysis about why no one in China has ever won the Nobel Prize for literature so far. He believes that impediments in language and ideology are the main causes of the state of affairs.

He said: Generally speaking, the Nobel Prize for literature is given to writers in the Orient exceptionally rarely. It can be said that together only two and a half prizes have ever been given to them. They were to India's Rabindranath Tagore, Japan's Yasunari Kawabata, and Israel's Shamuel Yosef Agnon. It is difficult to remove abstractions in language. After being translated into a second language, the works may become tasteless. If ancient Chinese poems are translated into free verses written in the vernacular, they may be changed or distorted beyond recognition. In addition, ideology also plays an important role in the appraisal of literary works by members of the selection committee, although they do not intentionally stress it.

Wang Meng indicated that he had not heard that any central leaders had criticized the novel "New Star" depicting the deeds of reformers, which attracted much notice and had some social effect after being adapted into a television drama and shown elsewhere. He said: The central authorities have never had any intention of criticizing "New Star." There have long been divergent views on the novel in the community. The proponents of the novel contend that the novel depicts the reforms, the struggle against bureaucratism, and the practices of adhering to conventions or old ways, which are existent in Chinese society. Those who are critical of the novel maintain that the novel oversimplifies life and art. The divergent views started when works were being selected for the Mao Dun Prize for Literature. "New Star" was among the nominated works and it was almost certain that it would win the prize. Finally it turned out that it failed, but the number of votes it got was second only to the prize-winning work. He said: This has never affected Ke Yunlu, the novel's author. He leaves for a visit to Los Angeles via Hong Kong tomorrow morning (1 May).

Liu Binyan Enjoys Considerable Popular Support

On the appraisal of Liu Binyan, he said that Liu is a highly popular writer. However, more often than not, he simplifies things into black and white. With regard to what he considers right, he will act as an eloquent defending attorney and with regard to what he considers bad and wrong, he will launch a destructive assault against it. However, he (Wang Meng) thought Liu Binyan lacked a sufficient, updated understanding of the world and life. For instance, in foreign countries, it takes at least several months to investigate and to begin court proceedings for sophisticated cases before any conclusions are reached about them. However, after making investigations and reaching his own conclusions on such cases, Liu Binyan publishes the cases in his articles with great confidence and in a clear-cut and quite affirmative manner. This causes the persons involved in such cases to take reaction, each having his own complaints. Crying and clamoring, some of them contend that he confuses the fact. Therefore, it is extremely difficult for the writers association to make any judgement in such circumstance and the only thing it can do in dealing with such cases is to make no judgement

On the Question of Jin Ping Mei [The Golden Lotus]

With regard to rumors circulating abroad and in Hong Kong in recent years, rumors skeptical that China has different ways in dealing with this work; that is, an expurgated edition for the people and the original edition for "high-ranking cadres" to read. Today Wang Meng formally clarified some facts and said that after liberation New China had never published the original edition of "Jin Ping Mei." By way of explanation, he said that under specific Chinese conditions, people believed widely that the description of sex in the work was extremely immoral and harmful. It is very difficult to explain this problem. He also admitted that the departments concerned criticized Zhang Xianliang in a comradely manner for his description of sex in his work "Half of a Man Is a Woman."

PRC TIES WITH JAPAN SECONDARY TO OVERALL POLICIES

HK300501 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 30 Apr 86 p 10

[By David Chen]

[Text] China's relations with Japan, which assumed a high priority for many years, are gradually taking a back seat as Beijing moves to establish a more balanced global diplomacy. This move, which comes belatedly, indicates a maturing of policies on the part of China's leadership and coincides with a perceptible cooling in Sino-Japanese relations. Long before the two countries established diplomatic ties in 1972, with the visit to Beijing by the then Japanese Prime Minister Mr Kakuei Tanaka, Beijing maintained a special relationship with Japan which few non-socialist countries could match. At the so-called people-to-people level, exchanges of visits with the Japanese were the most numerous and trade between the two countries proceeded at a steady pace, well ahead of that beween Beijing and countries of the West. The Tanaka visit brought bilateral ties to a new level and trade and other aspects of co-operation boomed as never before, though always much in Japan's favour. With the visit of Mr Deng Xiaoping to Tokyo in 1979 and later Mr Hu Yaobang's follow-up visit five years later, the "special relationship" that as the envy of many other nations apeared to be sealed for years to come. Nevertheless, the reawakening of sentiments reminiscent of the war years of more than four decades ago, first among the general populace and later voiced by the student population, has compelled the leadership to take a second look at Japan. One of the trigger points was the alternation of Japanese school textbooks which China and other nations in the region saw as an attempt to whitewash the history of Japanese military aggression in the 1930's and 1940's. The ensuring uproar resulted in the Japanese Education Ministry retracting some of its "amendments." Last year's official visit to the Shinto shrine by the Prime Minister, Mr Yasuhiro Nakasone, on the 40th anniversary of Japan's surrender, prompted yet another uproar on the mainland. While such sentiments were on the upswing, it became clear on the economic front that China's "special relations" with Japan had resulted in a trade imbalance heavily against China. Beijing was also disappointed at the sluggish rate of much-vaunted technology transfer. The debacle of the Boshan Iron and Steel Mills was a classic warning to China not to commit itself to major projects that look good on the surface but turn out to be white elephants. But it is the huge deficits China has chalked up in trade with Japan that forced the leadership to take steps to redress the issue. According to official statistics, China saw a deficit of 3.2 billion yuan (about HK$7.68 billion) in 1984, 5.22 billion yuan (about HK$12.53 billion) last year and for the first two months of this year, 845 million yuan (about HK$2.03 billion). At this rate, the trade imbalance with Tokyo for the year would amount to $5.26 billion yuan (about HK$12.62 billion).

It is small wonder that at the recent National People's Congress, the Government announced steps to curtail imports from Japan. At the same time, successive Chinese leaders have called on Japan to honour its promise of technology transfer. A week ago, a State Councillor, Mr Gu Mu, called on Japan to exchange views in order to reach a consensus for solving problems in their economic co-operation, trade, technology transfer and establishment of joint ventures. Such a call is timely if a slide in Sino-Japanese relations is to be halted. They have been dented by what China perceives as a series of slights or provocations. And if nothing is done, the ill-feeling that can be detected among the general population cannot be ignored by the leadership. The steps taken, then, by the Beijing authorities could be far more drastic than the cancellation of conracts a few years ago. And however friendly, many present leaders may feel towards Japan, they will be compelled to act now out of their own personal likes or dislikes but in what they consider to be the interest of the nation.

REAGAN ASKS USSR TO FULFILL ARMS TALKS COMMITMENTS

OW080730 Beijing XINHUA in English 0715 GMT 8 May 86

["Reagan Calls on Soviet Union To Implement Mutual Commitments" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Washington, May 7 (XINHUA) — U.S. President Ronald Reagan today called on the Soviet Union to "get down to business" at the next round of arms control talks to be started on May 8 in Geneva and fulfill its commitments made by Mikhail Gorbachev at the U.S. -Soviet summit last November. In a statement issued after his return from the economic summit of seven major Western industrial nations in Tokyo, Reagan said that during the last round of talks, "little progress" was made. He blamed that on the Soviet Union, which he said has failed to act on the pledges made to him by Gorbachev in Geneva last November. The Soviet Union has not provided "a constructive response" to U.S. proposals concerning strategic arms reductions and space weapons, Reagan said.

"It is high time now for the Soviet Union to get down to business by addressing seriously with us in Geneva the practical implementation of the mutual commitments which Mr. Gorbachev and I made at the summit," Reagan said. He added, "If the Soviets truly join us in this vital effort, real progress in nuclear arms reductions is clearly within our reach."

Meanwhile, a senior government official told reporters that the U.S. aim in the coming round of talks is three-fold: to press the Soviet Union for an agreement on verification measures, to move closer to an agreement on medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe and to "get the Soviets off the dime" [as received] on strategic weapons.

U.S., SOVIET ARMS NEGOTIATORS TRADE CRITICISM

OW071403 Beijing XINHUA in English 1347 GMT 7 May 86

Kampelman said the Soviet negotiators remarks were "an evident reference and direct criticism" of the U.S. air raids on Libyan cities on April 15. "A regime, with 120,000 of its troops invading and subjugating Afghanistan and its people, is in no moral or political position to feign outrage when we defend ourselves against Libya's undeclared war," he said. The U.S. negotiator said his delegation is always ready to go ahead with nuclear disarmament and he called on the Soviet side to proceed with serious negotiations.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON VISIT OF PLA CHIEF YANG DEZHI

Holds Talks With Weinberger

OW070746 Beijing XINHUA in English 0736 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 6 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. Defense Department today said in a prepared statement that the meeting between visiting Chinese People's Liberation Army (PLA) Chief of Genreal Staff Yang Dezhi and U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger centered on the progress of "military technological cooperation programs." During the meeting at the Pentagon, Yang and Weinberger exchanged views on the current international situation and issues of common concern. The statement described the talks as "cordial and friendly."

Yang was accompanied by Han Huaizhi, deputy chief of general staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army, Chinese Ambassador to the U.S. Han Xu, and Zhang Wutang, defense attache of the Chinese Embassy.

Richard Armitage, U.S. assistant secretary of defense for international security affairs, and Lieutenant General Richard Burpee, a U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff director, joined Weinberger. Yang arrived here yesterday afternoon at the invitation of Admiral William Crowe, chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff. Crowe and Yang also met today.

Conversation With Bush

OW080731 Beijing XINHUA in English 0708 GMT 8 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 7 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Vice President George Bush met with visiting Chinese People's Liberation Army (PLA) Chief of General Staff Yang Dezhi at the White House today. They had a friendly conversation. Also present on the occasion were Han Huaizhi, deputy PLA chief of general staff, Han Xu, Chinese ambassador to the United States, and Zhang Wutang, defense attache of the Chinese Embassy. Among those on the U.S. side was Admiral William Crowe, chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff. Yang is here for a visit at the invitation of Admiral Crowe. He and his party had talks with John Whitehead, U.S. acting secretary of state, and General John Wickham, chief of staff of the U.S. Army, this afternoon on international issues.

This evening, Han Xun hosted a return dinner at the Chinese Embassy for the occasion of Yang's visit to the United States. At the dinner, Yang and Crowe toasted for a further development in the friendship between the two peoples and friendly contacts between the armed forces of the two countries. Yang will leave here tomorrow to tour other parts of the country where he will visit some military establishments.

BAKER TO SINO-U.S. JOINT ECONOMIC MEETING

AFP Views Visit

HK060620 Hong Kong AFP in English 1213 GMT 6 May 86

[By Lawrence Macdonald]

[Text] Beijing, May 6 (AFP) -- U.S. Treasury Secretary James Baker is to question Chinese officials about their tightening of foreign exchange restrictions and the effect on foreign businesses during economic discussions here this week, Western diplomats said.

In addition to meetings with Mr. Wang, Mr. Baker was expected to see Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang, President Li Xiannian and other Chinese leaders, said the diplomats, who added that they did not know if top Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping would receive the treasury secretary.

Mr. Wang and other Chinese officials were expected to seek detailed information on U.S. macroeconomic management including the social security and the Federal Reserve systems, for reference in designing ongoing Chinese reforms, the sources added.

The United States is China's third largest trading partner after Japan and Hong Kong, with 1985 bilateral trade up 27 percent to eight billion dollars, and U.S. businesses are second only to Hong Kong in the size of their investments here, U.S. figures showed. But the Sino-U.S. economic relationship is dogged by Beijing's dissatisfaction with alleged U.S. protectionism and U.S. dissatisfaction with Chinese investment conditions, including foreign exchange restrictions and lack of access of domestic markets, analysts said.

Recent foreign currency restrictions have hurt some U.S. interests here, with one company, and American Motors Corporation joint venture, forced to curtail assembly of its jeeps for two months due to lack of foreign exchange for imported parts, analysts said. China moved to re-centralize foreign currency expenditures late last year after a flood of consumer imports pushed the country towards a record 14-billion-dollar annual trade deficit.

Diplomats said Mr. Baker would seek to learn how long the foreign currency squeeze would continue and what plans China had for resolving the problem, but cautioned that a breakthrough on this or any other issue was "non-imminent." Mr. Baker was also expected to raise the U.S. desire to expand a 1983 joint maritime agreement by granting the United States greater access to China's shipping market in exchange for expanded Chinese access to U.S. ports and a reduction in tonnage tarrifs, the diplomats said.

The two sides would in addition discuss multi-lateral economic issues including the upcoming General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) talks, the diplomats added.

U.S. Embassy officials said the JEC meeting would be followed next week in Washington by the fourth session of the Sino-U.S. Joint Commission on Commerce and Trade (JCCT), a body formed by the U.S. Commerce Department and the Chinese Foreign Trade Ministry, which would further discuss questions raised during Mr. Bakers's visit.

(In Washington, THE WASHINGTON POST reported last week that Chinese Vice Premier Yao Yilin would represent the Chinese side at the opening and closing of the JCCT during an as-yet-unannounced visit to the United States.)

Both commissions were expected to reaffirm the desire of China and the United States to conclude a bilateral investment treaty but no significant progress was expected, Western diplomats said.

Differences over expropriation procedures, third party arbitration and "national treatment" have brought talks on the treaty, now in their third year, to an impasse, the diplomats said. "National treatment" would guarantee U.S. firms and joint ventures in China access to state-controlled material equal to or better than that enjoyed by domestic firms.

China has signed investment treaties with 15 developed trading partners and is unwilling to make special concessions to the United States, while Washington considers that extensive U.S. trade and investment interests here require further protection, analysts said.

Mr. Baker, who was to arrive here from Tokyo, was to hold two days of talks and meet members of the U.S. business community and reporters before returning to the United States on Saturday, U.S. Embassy officials said.

Wang Bingqian Hosts Banquet

OW071446 Beijing XINHUA in English 1442 GMT 7 may 86

[Text] Beijing, May 7 (XINHUA) — Chinese State Councillor and Minister of Finance Wang Bingqian gave a banquet here tonight in honor of a U.S. delegation here to attend the sixth meeting of the Sino-U.S. Joint Economic Commission. The delegation is headed by Treasury Secretary James A. Baker.

Speaking at the banquet, Wang said that at the meeting delegates from both sides will introduce the economic development and economic policies of their respective countries, exchange views, and discuss and seek solutions to problems existing in Sino-U.S. economic cooperation. He expressed his belief that through cooperation and joint efforts by the two delegations the meeting will surely achieve results.

Baker said that both sides share the responsibility for seeking ways to improve their economic and commercial relations. The U.S. delegation arrived here this afternoon to attend the 6th meeting of the commission, to be held in Beijing from May 8 to 10.

Discussions Begin 8 May

OW080956 Beijing XINHUA in English 0942 GMT 8 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 8 (XINHUA) — The sixth meeting of the Sino-United States Joint Economic Committee opened in Beijing today. It will last for three days.

Finance Minister and State Councillor Wang Bingqian, who is head of the Chinese side on the committee, and U.S. Treasury Secretary James Baker, head of the American side, co-chaired today's opening session. In opening speeches they dealt with bilateral economic development in both countries.

Wang said trade between China and the U.S. had expanded last year. Quoting Chinese statistics, he said total bilateral trade had been worth 7.3 billion U.S. dollars — 20 percent more than in 1984. He said he was pleased the United States had taken some steps to relax restrictions on the transfer of technology to China over the past two years.

China and the U.S. had made new progress in investment over the past year. Bilateral co-operation was moving toward larger projects, and had expanded from tourism and light industry to many important industrial, scientific and technological areas, such as coal, oil, hydroelectric power, nonferrous metals, aviation and electronics. By the end of 1985, the negotiated value of direct U.S. investment in China had reached 2.1 billion dollars, and more than 130 Sino-U.S. joint ventures had been approved by the Chinese Government. This was 5.7 percent of all Sino-foreign joint ventures in China. Wang said this direct U.S. investment in China, although less than that of Hong Kong and Macao, was now greater than any other country's, both in terms of total value and number of projects.

Baker said that despite the great expansion of bilateral economic ties over the past few years, much more needed to be done to fully realize the potential. He noted that trade volume had grown again last year, and that the price and quality of Chinese goods had proven competitive compared with imports from other countries. Ever since the relaxation of controls on U.S. high-tech sales to China in 1983, the volume of U.S. high-tech exports to China had shown a marked increase, he said. Last year, U.S. investment in China had totalled more than one billion dollars.

He believed that China's recently-approved Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-1990) and the continued economic restructuring offered great hope to the diligent Chinese. Later, the joint committee held group discussions on macroeconomic control, investment and trade.

PRC TO CONTINUE NUCLEAR POWER DEVELOPMENT

OW080123 Beijing in Russian to the USSR 1800 GMT 6 May 86

[Text] Jiang Shengjie, director of the PRC Nuclear Safety Administration noted on the 3 May that the accident at the Chernobyl Nuclear Power Plant in the Soviet Union near Kiev will not influence the progress of nuclear power development the PRC has stated.

Jiang Shengjie remains head of the Science and Technology Commission the PRC Ministry of Nuclear Energy. He was the chief engineer of the largest nuclear plant in northwest China, and was in charge of building the largest nuclear reactor in China.

Jiang Shengjie noted that, in the design of nuclear power plant reactors, China has been helped by foreign experience and has adopted the safest design programs. At the Daya Wan and Taishan nuclear plants in our country, three solid protective screens have been constructed to ensure safety, preventing radioctive gases from escaping into the atmosphere, even in the event of a similar accident as that in the Soviet Union.

WASHINGTON-MOSCOW HOT LINE DUE FOR UPGRADING

OW011118 Beijing XINHUA in English 1050 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Washington, April 30 (XINHUA) -- The crisis communication link between Washington and Moscow, or "hot line" as is commonly called would soon be upgraded, reported the ASSOCIATED PRESS (AP) here today.

Robert Ribera, U.S. assistant secretary of state for communications, told AP that the three-day talks (April 23-25) between U.S. and Soviet technical experts had decided to improve the hot line "sometime this year." Ribera was head of the U.S. delegation at the talks.

This happened at a time when U.S.-Soviet relations registered a slump because of the U.S. air attack on Libya in mid-April and the Soviet Union's cancelation of the meeting between U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Shevardnadze for preparation of a second Reagan-Gorbachev summit.

A State Department official also told AP that despite the issue of Libya, the possibility of a second summit was being discussed in a tentative way through diplomatic channels, and that in late May or early June the rescheduling of the Shultz-Shevardnadze meeting would start.

NPC'S PENG CHONG LAUDS SINO-AUSTRALIAN TIES

OW071852 Beijing XINHUA in English 1825 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] Canberra, May 7 (XINHUA) -- Peng Chong, vice-chairman of China's National People's Congress (CNPC), said today that marked results have been achieved in economic cooperation, scientific, technological and cultural exchanges between China and Australia.

Peng, the leader of the visiting NPC delegation, made his remarks at a dinner held for Duglas McClelland, president of the Australian Senate, Speaker of the House Joan Child, and other members of Parliament.

Referring to the international situation, Peng said that both the Chinese and Australian Peoples "need peace and share the desire to develop our respective economies and build up our countries in an international environment free of the threat of war and particularly the threat of a nuclear war."

President McClelland replied that the delegation's visit "has demonstrated the importance of further stregthening the relationship between Australia and China."

In conclusion, Peng invited the Senate president and speaker of the house to visit China.

SINGAPORE PRIME MINISTER MEETS CHEN MUHUA

OW071347 Beijing XINHUA in English 1332 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] Singapore, May 7 (XINHUA) -- Singapore Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew told President of the People's Bank of China Chen Muhua here this afternoon that he hoped the two countries could further strengthen exchange in financial circles. Lee said he encouraged financiers of Singapore and China to promote their cooperations through exchange of views and personal visits.

During the meeting, Chen Muhua, who is also Chinese state councilor, expressed her admiration for Singapore's economic developments in recent years. Chen will conclude her visit in Singapore tomorrow morning and fly to Kuala Lumpur for an official visit to Malaysia.

PACIFIC RIM SYMPOSIUM TO OPEN IN AUSTRALIA

OW072100 Beijing XINHUA in English 1517 GMT 7 May 86

[Excerpt] Hong Kong, May 7 (XINHUA) -- The emergence of China as a major economic power in the Asian-Pacific region will be a key topic for discussion at a coming international trade, finance and investment symposium in Perth, Western Australia, the symposium organizing committee chairman Gary Pearce announced here today.

He told a press conference that the symposium, which will be held from November 17 to 19, "is attracting strong interest from countries bordering the Pacific Basin." More than 200 requests have been received for priority registration from North America, Europe, Asia and Australia, he said.

The three-day symposium, he said, will devote a half-day session to China and its growing impact on the economy of the region. It is planned to have U.S. President Reagan and Australian Prime Minister Robert Hawke to open the symposium on November 16 in a satellite hook-up between Perth and Washington, Pearce added.

LI XIANNIAN MEETS GUINEA-BISSAU PARLIAMENTARIANS

OW061524 Beijing XINHUA in English 1508 GMT 6 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 6 (XINHUA) -- President Li Xiannian said today that people all over the world, including those in the Soviet Union and United States, demanded peace and opposed war and hegemonism. Li was speaking at a meeting with a delegation from the National People's Assembly of Guinea-Bissau, led by Assembly President Carmen Pereira, at Beijing's Great Hall of the People.

Pereira said Guinea-Bissau and China, both developing countries, should strengthen their friendly co-operation and make joint efforts to safeguard world peace. She said she had been greatly impressed by the developments she had seen in cities and rural areas during her current visit to China.

Li said China had experienced some setbacks, mainly due to "leftist" concepts, but the country was now heading in the right direction, and the peasants were very happy with the introduction of the responsibility system which rewards effort. Some people were beginning to prosper before others, but there would not be a polarization of wealth because of the dominant position of public ownership in the economy.

Present at the meeting were Wang Hanbin, secretary-general of the National People's Congress Standing Committee, and Luo Qiong, a Standing Committee member. The Guinea-Bissau delegation left Beijing for home tonight.

HU YAOBANG MEETS ZAIRIAN OFFICIAL 7 MAY

OW071421 Beijing XINHUA in English 1353 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 7 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang said here today that the 20th century is, to a great extent, the history of the peoples of Asia, Africa and Latin America. Hu made this remark during a meeting with a delegation from the Zaire Popular Revolutionary Movement headed by Gambembo Fumu Wa Uladi, member of the Central Committee of the Zaire movement and general secretary for relations with friendly parties of the movement's Central Committee.

Hu noted that this century has witnessed the awakening of the peoples of most countries in Asia, Africa and Latin America as they have won their national independence. Hu said that these countries have succeeded in defending their independence and developing their economies, and play an important role in international affairs. The economic development of these countries, including China, is not very satisfactory because of the poor economic base resulting from exploitation by imperialism and colonialism, abnormal economic relations between developed and developing countries, he added. Hu said the newly independent countries need solid support from their peoples in their economic construction and national defense against external aggression and subversion.

Sharing Hu's view, Gambembo Fumu Wa Utadi said that Zaire holds that the economic construction of a country should serve its people. He said that Zaire is willing to strengthen its unity with other Third World countries so as to promote South-South cooperation.

Both sides held that the two countries should develop their friendship and that their economic cooperation has a bright future. Among those present was Zhu Liang, head of the International Liaison Department of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee. The delegation arrived here April 28 at the invitation of the Chinese Communist Party.

ZHANG JINGFU TO KUWAIT FOR INVESTMENT TALKS

Delegation Arrives 3 May

OW031645 Beijing XINHUA in English 1446 GMT 3 May 86

[Text] Kuwait, May 3 (XINHUA) -- Chinese State Councillor Zhang Jingfu arrived in Kuwait today at the head of a Chinese economic delegation to take part in the China-Kuwait investment talks. Among members of the delegation are 28 Chinese business executives representing 70 Chinese firms. They will negotiate with representatives of 56 firms of Kuwait and other Gulf countries for foreign investment in China. Talking to reporters on arrival, Zhang Jinfu said that during his visit to Kuwait, he would discuss with Kuwaiti leaders ways to promote mutual understanding and friendship between the two countries.

During the investment talks, the Chinese delegation will brief the businessmen of the Gulf states on China's laws and regulations governing foreign investment in China and help those businessmen who are interested in making investment to contact the relevant Chinese enterprises, Zhang said. He hoped that the economic cooperation between China, Kuwait and other Gulf states can set an example for the South-South cooperation.

Kuwaiti Minister of Finance and Economy Jasim Muhammad al-Khurafi welcomed the Chinese delegation at the airport.

Gulf Representatives Attend

OW050050 Beijing XINHUA in English 0015 GMT 5 May 86

[Text] Kuwait, May 4 (XINHUA) -- A China-Kuwait symposium on investment opened at the headquarters of the Kuwait Fund for Economic Development here Sunday afternoon. Chinese State Councillor Zhang Jingfu, Kuwaiti Minister of Finance and Economy Jasim al-Khurafi, representatives from 70 Chinese companies and enterprises and 56 companies in Kuwait and other Gulf countries were present at the symposium.

Speaking at the opening ceremony, Al-Khurafi, who is also the head of the Kuwaiti delegation, said that relations between Kuwait and China have constantly developed over the past two decades and crystalized by the conclusion of the commercial agreement by the two countries in October 1980. The agreement signed between China and Kuwait in November 1985 to encourage and protect investments aims at creating frameworks and systems for encouraging Kuwaiti investors to operate in China, he noted.

The present symposium, Al-Khurafi said, is aimed at acquainting investors in Kuwait and other Gulf countries with the investment environment and chances in China and offering an opportunity to exchange views so that they can know better the economic situation and the possible investment fields in China.

Zhang Jingfu, head of the Chinese delegation, said that there exist great potentials for the economic cooperation between China and Gulf countries. The rich oil resources in the Gulf region have accumulated a tremendous amount of funds for the Gulf countries to make their investment abroad and the giant Chinese market provides a good opportunity for China to absorb foreign capital, he said.

The Chinese official stressed that both sides should integrate their respective advantages into a new and more formidable force in order to make contribution to the flourishing of our respective countries, the revitalization of the Third World, the promotion of the South-South cooperation and the boom of international economy. He proposed that more official or non-governmental channels be established by both sides to study the tasks and working methods of the would-be established coordination organizations.

At the three-day symposium, the representatives from 56 companies and enterprises in Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, Qatar, Bahrain and the United Arab Emirates will hold concrete discussions with the 28 Chinese representatives. The Chinese delegation will acquaint investors from Kuwait and other Gulf countries with the Chinese economic policies and the laws on foreign investment.

Meets With Crown Prince

OW051926 Beijing XINHUA in English 1830 GMT 5 May 86

[Text] Kuwait, May 5 (XINHUA) -- Kuwaiti head of state expressed the hope today that the friendly relations between Kuwait and China can reap more plentiful fruits. Receiving the visiting Chinese State Councillor Zhang Jingfu, who led a Chinese delegation to attend the China-Kuwait investment talks, Amir Jabir al-Ahmad al-Sabah said that the exchange of visits between leaders of the two countries would contribute to the development of the relations.

Zhang Jingfu told the amir that the cooperation between Kuwait and China in petrochemical industry would be an example of South-South cooperation. He also renewed Chinese Chairman Li Xiannian's invitation to the amir for a visit to China at a suitable time and Jabir express his wish to visit China again.

In his meeting with Zhang Jingfu, Kuwait Crown Prince and Premier Sa'd al-Abdallah al'Salim al-Sabah praised today the Chinese Government's stand for the support of the Arab cause, particularly the just cause of the Palestinian people.

Zhang Jingfu expressed his gratitude to the crown prince for his concern over the strengthening of economic cooperation between the two countries and help given to the convening of the investment talks.

Briefs Symposium

["Chinese Official on Foreign Investment in China (by Tong Jizhan)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Kuwait, May 4 (XINHUA) -- China has utilized 21.6 bullion U.S. dollars of the foreign capital by the end of 1985 and more than 6,300 equity joint ventures, contractual joint ventures and enterprises with exclusive foreign investment have been established within the Chinese territory a senior Chinese official said here today. Visiting Chinese State Coundillor Zhang Jingfu said that more than 2,000 of 6,300 projects have gone into operation, 90 percent of which have gained profits, he added.

Zhang made the remarks here today at the opening ceremony of a three-day China-Kuwait investment symposium which was attended by representatives from 70 Chinese companies and enterprises and 56 companies in Kuwait and other Gulf countries.

Zhang said that during the Seventh Five-Year Plan period, China will encourage foreign businessmen to invest in the key lines of new technology-developing industries such as energy exploitation, transportation and communications, construction of harbour and wharf, metal materials, new type of building materials, post and telecommunication, high grade precision machinery, electronic parts, refined chemical industry, light industry, food industry, agriculture, animal-husbandry and fishery. "We especially encourage foreign investors to put their money on technology-intensive projects and those whose products can be exported and earn foreign exchange," Zhang emphasized.

The Chinese state councillor, who visited Kuwait in March last year, praised the friendly cooperation between China and Kuwait in the past years, and said that the cooperation between China and Kuwait is a new form of cooperative relation falling in the category of South-South cooperation based on "equality, mutual benefit, stress on practical results, diversity in form and achievement of common development."

Zhang said that the rich oil resources in the Gulf region have accumulated a tremendous amount of funds for Kuwait to make investment abroad and the giant Chinese market provides a good opportunity for China to absorb foreign capital. "We should integrate the advantages on both sides into a new, more formidable force in order to make contribution to the flourishing of our two countries, the revitalization of the Third World, the promotion of South-South cooperation and the boom of international economy," he pointed out.

Zhang the hope that the Chinese entrepreneurs and the financial and business circles from Gulf countries will work jointly to make the cooperation between them the model for the South-South cooperation and to promote the friendship between China, Kuwait and other Gulf region countries.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES ENFORCEMENT OF TAX LAW

HK071533 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 3 May 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Safeguard the Solemnity of the Tax Law"]

[Text] Since the measure of substituting tax payment for profit delivery was adopted, most of the state revenue has come from taxes. Effective tax management and tax collection work will ensure replenishment of the state treasury. On the other hand, if there are loopholes in our tax management and collection work, the state will lose substantial tax income from various tax items and from various localities. Therefore, we must safeguard the solemnity of the tax law and readily strengthen our tax management and collection work. This is of great significance.

In recent years, although our tax management and collection work has been strengthened, tax evasion by collectives and individuals was still rather common. Some people used every possible means to evade taxes in violation of the tax law in order to seek extra gains for their small collectives or for themselves. Some people even openly refused to pay taxes and committed violence against tax collection personnel. A small number of localities and departments violated the tax mangement system by granting tax reductions or exemptions without authorization. Last year, the general tax and financial examination of the whole country found large amounts of taxes evaded by means of all descriptions, and the tax evasion cases involved many units and individuals in various fields. Apart from the weak sense of the legal system and the erroneous ideas of selfish departmentalism, a main reason for the occurrence of these tax evasion cases was that there were still many loopholes in our tax management work. In particular, the tax management and collection system was not sound enough, and the tax law was not enforced strictly enough. This gave many opportunities to people who tried to evade taxes and enabled them to escape legal punishment after breaking the law. This state of affairs not only affected state revenue, but also disturbed reform and corrupted our party style and public conduct.

Article 56 of the PRC Constitituion stipulates: "It is the duty of citizens of the People's Republic of China to pay taxes in accordance with the law." Our existing tax law also clearly specifies the tax items and tax rates for all kinds of units and individuals. The "tax management and collection regulations" recently promulgated by the State Council further stipulate the procedures, systems, and methods of tax payment. All taxpayers should strictly follow these tax laws and regulations. Thus, they will not pay more taxes than they should and can protect their legitimate economic benefit; at the same time, they will be prevented from evading taxes that they should pay so that the state's economic interests can also be ensured. A person may act against the interests of the state and the people and may also harm his own interests if he does not understand the tax laws and does not pay taxes according to these laws. Many enterprises and individual businessmen now lack sufficient knowledge of the tax law. Some even do not know that they are doing wrong as they violate the tax law, and some change the state tax policies and regulations at will and even regard this practice as "reform." They do not understand that the tax laws and regulations are laid down by the state authorities and must be strictly enforced throughout the country without exception. Henceforth, cadres at all levels and all taxpayers should often study the relevant tax policies and regulations laid down by the state so as to improve their legal knowledge, to better abide the law, and to ensure the healthy development of all undertakings within the limits prescribed by the law.

Strict enforcement of the tax management and collection regulations is the key to improving our tax management and collection work. Once a law is promulgated and comes into force, all organizations and individuals must absolutely abide by it, and those who violate it must be punished. The regulations clearly stipulate that people who have direct responsibility for cases of evading or refusing to pay taxes, and people who support, abet, and harbor other people who evade or refuse to pay taxes must be subject to economic sanctions, and if necessary, should be brought to court for trial. Overdue taxes must be paid and a fine shold be imposed on them. Those who offend the criminal law should also be sentenced to imprisonment.

The tax management and collection regulations also stipulate that no local authority, department, unit, or individual is allowed to make any decision that goes against the tax law and the tax management system. This is an important principle emphasized repeatedly by the state in recent years. Governments and departments concerned at all levels, as well as all tax-paying units and individuals, must act within the limits prescribed by the relevant tax laws and regulations laid down by the state, and must not adopt any private countermeasures against the state tax policies. They should all consciously safeguard the tax law, exemplarily enforce the tax law, and promote the smooth development of reform and construction.

SOCIALIST DEMOCRACY IN MODERNIZATION STRESSED

HK080505 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese 8 May 86 p 2

[Commentator's article: "There Can Be No Socialist Modernization Without Socialist Democracy"]

[Text] At a forum recently held by this paper, a comrade engaged in grass-roots trade union work remarked that in the course of straightening out party style, it is essential to bring into full play the role of the masses as the masters of the house, perfect the relationship between the master and the public servants, and step up the masses' democratic supervision of the cadres. We hold that this view is correct and that it involves an extemely important issue: It is essential to strengthen the building of socialist democracy in the course of the socialist modernization drive.

More than 7 years ago, the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, which was of great historic significance, assigned a very important place to bringing socialist democracy into full play and raised this to the plane of being related to the success or failure of socialist modernization. All the important party meetings held since then have repeatedly reiterated bringing socialist democracy into full play; and "a high degree of civilization and democracy" has been included in the goals of modernization. We have done a lot of work in the past 7 and more years in developing socialist democracy, including reforming the cadre system, putting democratic centralism on a sounder basis, developing economic democracy, consolidating and strengthening the powers of people's congresses, and gradually strengthening and improving the legal system. As Comrade Deng Xiaoping summarized when meeting foreign guests once last year: Of the series of new policies proposed by our party since and 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, "which are the most important in terms of domestic policies: One is developing political democracy, and the other is carrying out economic reform while simultaneously promoting reforms in other fields in society." Democracy and reform are precisely the two indispensable themes reflecting each other in the symphony of socialist modernization.

It is the party's unswerving guiding principle to develop socialist democracy and stimulatesocialist modernization. However, building socialist democracy is an extremely arduous historical task that cannot be accomplidhed in one move. In particular, the pernicious influence of a thousand years of feudalism and the rampant spread of feudal fascism during the 10-year catastrophe have left behind serious obstacles to building socialist democracy. It is essential to stress again today in the new situatuion of reform and in the process of strenghtening out the party style that there can be no socialist modernization without socialist democracy.

Socialist modernization is the cause of the millions of the masses and can only be accomplished if their initiative and creativity are brought into full play. Many of our comrades have a unanimous understanding on this point, but on the question of how to mobilize the masses' initiative and creativity, some comrades neglect an important principle: Bring socialist democracy into play and put democratic activities inside and outside the party on a sound basis. Only socialist democracy can release the latent initiative and creativity among the masses and turn them into the most fundamental motivation propelling the cause of modernization. The masses' initiative should first be expressed as an upsurge of their political fervor and a display of their spirit of initiative. This is an inexhaustible source of ever-increasing zeal in labor. The people are the masters of a socialist state, and their initiative can only be brought into play and ultimately turned into material force if they indeed play their role as masters of the house in political economic, and all social life. We must therefore diffuse democracy into all aspects of social life. Only through correct centralism on the basis of a high degree of democracy can we formulate and execute correct policies and exercise correct leadership.

Socialist democracy also confers on the masses the right to criticize and supervise, thus ensuring the flourishing vitality of the cause of socialist modernization. In every undertaking, we act according to the people's will; all our cadres must be responsible to the people. Only by relying on the people and seeking their judgement can we have the strength to overcome all difficulties on the way ahead, including internally produced defects and obstacles. Malpractices such as abusing power for private purposes, and persistent ailments such as bureaucratism must, in the final analysis, be solved through relying on political democratization. The most elementary thing here is to allow the masses to speak out and to listen to their views. Comrade Deng Xiaoping has pointed out many times: "A revolutionary ruling party fears being unable to hear the voice of the people, and the most fearful thing is that there is no sound there to hear." The practice of the past few years has proven that if we allow the masses to speak out and if we find out the true state of things, our policies will be correct, we will make fewer mistakes in work, such mistakes can be corrected sooner, and there will be an atmosphere of solidarity, concord, and mutual understanding and trust between our party and the masses; things cannot by run well in any unit or department that is afraid of the masses speaking out and where the true state of affairs cannot be reported to higher authority.

Anyone who cannot see or acknowledge this point, enthusiasticaly practices "one person alone having the say" and the "patriarchal work style," and cannot hear the views of the masses may come a cropper and cause losses in work. Our party has been in power for a long time and has so many cadres and su great powers. It is all the more particularly important for us to listen to the cries of the masses, ensure the people's democratic rights, and spontaneously accept supervision by the people.

The continual improvement of the masses' political, ideological, and cultural quality is a fundamental condition for the healthy development of socialist democracy. Without such improvement, democracy will either be empty talk or else a kind of tumult. In neither case can democracy attain its original lofty goal. This kind of internal constraint determines that building socialist democracy is a long-term task. It also demands that the whole body of the people strengthen their sense of responsibility as the masters, transform the subjective world while transforming the objective one, continually renew their concepts, improve their quality, learn how to correctly exercise their democratic rights in the practice of democracy, and properly integrate democracy with centralism, with discipline, and with the legal system. As the masses' quality continually improves and the socialist legal system is gradually put on sounder basis, it can be predicted that socialist democracy will be brought into increasingly fuller play and will thus promote the vigorous development of socialist modernization.

STATE COUNCIL REGULATIONS ON EDUCATION SURCHARGE

OW072353 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0718 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] Beijing, 7 May (XINHUA) — China will levy an educational surcharge beginning 1 July 1986. In this connection, the State Council recently issued "Interim Regulations Governing the Collection of Educational Surcharge."

The State Council's regulations said: The purposes of collecting an educational surcharge are to implement the "Decision of the CPC Central Committee on Reform of the Educational System," accelerate the development of local educational undertakings, and expand their financial sources. Units and individuals, paying product, appreciation, and business tax, will pay an educational surcharge, except for units who pay the rural educational surcharge according to the "State Council Circular Concerning the Raising off Funds for Running Rural Schools."

The "regulations" said: An educational surcharge shall be computed on the basis of product, appreciation, and business tax paid by all units and individuals. It shall be 1 percent of these taxes and paid along with them. The educational surcharge should be collected and supervised according to relevant regulations concerning product, appreciation, and business tax.

The "regulations" emphatically pointed out: Educational surcharges collected by local governments should be handled as special-purpose funds. Local educational departments should map out a comprehensive plan for distributing the funds and, after consulting with financial departments at the same level, use of funds to improve school buildings and teaching facilities in primary and middle schools. The funds should not be used for the welfare or bonuses of staff and workers.

Educational surcharges collected by local governments should be kept and used locally. Local educational departments at various levels should regularly submit annual reports on revenue and expenditure of the educational surcharge to local people's governments, educational departments at the next higher level, and financial departments.

The "regulations" said: A unit running a school for the children of its staff and workers should pay an educational surcharge, which may be returned by the local educational department, after reviewing the condition of the school, as a subsidy to that school. No unit should close or scale down the school under the pretext that it has to pay an educational surcharge.

The State Council's document also clearly stated: After the regulations come into effect, local educational departments and schools at various levels will not be allowed to collect funds from parents and units in any name, nor to turn down students under any pretext.

Educational departments at the next higher level should check any violation of the regulations and take disciplinary action against those directly responsible for the violation. Units and individuals have the right to refuse to pay an educational surcharge.

The Ministry of Finance will be responsible for interpreting the "Interim Regulations Governing the Collection of Educational Surcharge."

RAILWAYS MINISTER ON REFORM EFFORTS IN WORK

OW070458 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1410 GMT 6 May 86

[Text] Beijing, 6 May (XINHUA) -- Minister of Railways Ding Guangen said at a national conference of railway bureau directors today: In practicing the system of economic contracted responsibility to the state, railway departments should always keep firmly in mind the interests of the state and an overall point of view, give first consideration to social benefit, and contribute to accelerating railway construction and promoting the comprehensive reform of the economic structure.

Ding Guangen pointed out: In practicing the economic contract system, railway departments must not seek profits only for themselves. They must correctly handle the relaship between local interests and the interests of the whole and between immediate and long-term interests. To effectively reform this economic management system, all railway departments throughout the country should observe the following three rules: 1) It is necessary to adhere to the socialist orientation, to have the people's railways serve the people, to give first consideration to the interests of the state and social benefit, and not to do anything only beneficial to a department or locality but not beneficial to the state. 2) It is necessary to uphold the principles of "doing careful calculation and strict budgeting, cutting down investment funds, improving management, and increasing the transport volume," to broaden sources of income and reduce expenditures, to build railways through thrift and hard work, to realize returns on investments, and to check extravagance and waste. 3) It is necessary to strictly enforce discipline, to carry out orders, to observe bans, to be honest in performing ones's official duties, and to abide by the law and regulations; and it is strictly forbidden to arbitarily raise prices or collect fees, to use railways to seek personal gain, and to indiscriminately issue bonuses. Ding Guangen stressed: All railways workers and staff must observe these three rules, and whoever violates the rules will be punished.

Ding Guangen said: To successfully practice the economic contracted responsibility system, all railway workers and staff should bring about a change in their thinking, a change from the practice of eating from the same big pot to the practice of the economic contracted responsibility system. Work should be done by contract within railway departments, and tasks may be contracted out to various units, workshops, shifts, or teams. It is necessary to shoulder heavy loads, to take some risks, and to make contributions at each level. At the same time, efforts should be made to reform existing operating and managing methods, rules, regulations, and the organization and structure of railway departments.

Unhealthy Practices Criticized

OW070648 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1426 GMT 6 May 86

[By reporter Zhang Jinsheng]

[Text] Beijing, 6 May (XINHUA) -- Speaking to this reporter today, an official of the Ministry of Railways said that the nation's railway workers should learn a lesson from the incident concerning the "railway overlords" of Shaanxi's Lintong and Changan railway stations, and firmly combat the unhealthy practices in railway departments of "seeking personal gains with railway cars." With regard to society's criticism of the railway departments, he said, all leading railway organs should strive to improve the cargo and passenger transportation services by promptly handling all problems that have been discovered, without avoiding them or covering up the shortcomings.

The official pointed out: The railway departments' most noticeable unhealthy practices are the rough handling of cargo and passengers and their unwarranted surcharges. These problems are essentially misconducts in "seeking personal gains with railway cars." Since the railway transportation capacity cannot meet the increasing demand, the cargo owners are in need of the railway departments' help. Since railway cars have become "commodities" in short supply, some people within the railway departments have taken the advantage of the situation to seek personal gains at the expense of their clients and passengers. Such things as making unwarranted price increases or imposing surcharges still occur every now and then, especially when industrial and mining enterprises are in need of service. Although we have intensified the education in this regard and have handled some cases, some units and people still deliberately break the rules and continue to do things their way. Not long ago, for example, the Jinan Railway Bureau again found that the Shanjialin Railway Station was charging additional freight fees and demanding a profit-sharing percentage, service charge, and even "bribes," taking advantage of the opportunity of delivering the tailings from a coal mine. We will handle such incidents seriously as soon as they are discovered, and by no means will we be soft-hearted.

The official added: A new but common problem has recently occurred within the railway departments; namely, the theft of cargo by some railway workers. As the number of cases concerning railway cargo theft is increasing, railway workers have been caught involved in some major thefts. Under such circumstances, we have decided to take effective measures to stop this unhealthy trend of stealing railway cargo. In educating railway workers on stopping theft during the second and third quarters of the year, we will strike at major criminals, destroy their burglary rings, and pay special attention to the work of punishing the criminals, preventing crime, and educating the people, so that the problem can be dealt with in a comprehensive manner and so that the cargo owners' interests will be protected.

The official stressed: The State Council recently authorized the railway departments to accept economic contracts. To make this reform a success, we must emphasize the need to understand the overall situation, provide better service, and heighten our sense of discipline. Railway workers must have a proper concept of the interests of the state, the enterprises, and themselves, and must consciously resist the inroads of the extremely egoistic bourgeois thinking of putting money and personal interests above everything else, so as to destroy the ideological foundation of such unhealthy practices as the rough handling cargo and passengers, collecting unwarranted surcharges, and seeking personal gains with railway cars. They should foster civilized professional ethics, and promote a new order of providing passengers courteous, warm and attentive service and of handling cargo carefully, so that the people will be satisfied and have nothing to worry about.

COMMUNICATIONS MINISTER ON UNHEALTHY TENDENCIES

OW300141 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1143 GMT 29 Apr 86

[By reporter Zhang Jinsheng]

[Text] Beijing, 29 Apr (XINHUA) — In an interview with reporters today in connection with the "road lords" incidents, in which transportation supervisory personnel in Shaanxi's Lintong and Changan Counties abused their power in flagging down cars for personal rides, Minister of Communications Qian Yongchang urged communications departments throughout the country to draw lessons from the incidents and use them as reference in light of the actual situation in each department to resolutely check the unhealthy tendency of power abuse in the transportation service.

Qian Yongchang said: The erroneous behavior of the transportation supervisory personnel in Lintong and Changan has also occurred elsewhere. The acts of "road lords" are against the regulations of the Ministry of Communications and the professional ethics of transportation supervisory personnel; they have produced adverse effects. The Shaanxi Provincial Communications Department should duly handle this power abuse case after completing investigation and verifying facts. The Ministry of Communications will then circulate a notice on the case among all communications departments in the country. Communications departments at various levels should draw lessons from the incidents and hold discussions in the light of the actual situation in each department in order to thoroughly check unhealthy tendencies in the transportation service.

Analyzing some manifestations of power abuse for personal gain in communications departments, Qian Yongchang said: Besides the acts of "road lords," some individuals in communications departments have sullied the reputation of their departments by using vehicles and berths for selfish interests or scalping train and boat tickets for profit. Despite our efforts to tackle shortcomings in this regard over the last few years and the emergence of a number of civilized units and individuals, quite a few problems, some quite serious, still exist in communications departments throughout the country. As the department in charge of communications, the ministry will pay close attention to this incident, earnestly step up education, and take firm action to correct unhealthy tendencies in the transportation service. Results of investigations of serious cases will be made public.

Qian Yongchang said: The staff and workers of communications departments should eliminate the "special privilege" mentality, foster the idea that supervision means service, and serve the people wholeheartedly. Qian Yongchang also encouraged the mass media and various quarters of the community to offer constructive criticisms on unhealthy tendencies in communications and transportation departments and to keep the work of the departments under surveillance.

JINGJI CANKAO DISCUSSES PRICE REFORM, TRENDS

HK050311 Beijing JINGJI CANKAO in Chinese 22 Apr 86 pp 1, 2

[Reporter's commentary: "Last Year's Price Reforms and This Year's Price Trends"]

[Text] How were price reforms carried out in 1985? What will be the price trends in 1986? These are questions with which the people are generally concerned.

Last year, an important step was taken in accordance with the arrangements made by the CPC Central Committee and the State Council in the country's price reforms.

Regarding the prices of farm products, we put an end to the state monopoly for the purchase of major farm products and applied the system of ordering and purchasing goods by contracts. In addition, we also lifted restrictions on the prices of pork and some other fresh or raw non-staple foodstuffs and adjusted the buying and selling prices of grain in the rural areas.

Regarding the prices of industrial products, we lifted restrictions on the prices of the means of production for heavy industrial production uncalled for by the plans, enlarged regional and quality-based price differences for coal, and allowed enterprises to fix the prices of some light industrial products.

Regarding communications and transportation, we raised the charges for short-distance railroad freight and passenger transportation.

These changes have produced, and are producing, positive effects in the development of the national economy. Last year's price reforms highlighted the lifting of restrictions on the prices of pork, vegetables, and other fresh or raw non-staple foodstuffs. Last year, the State Council decided to readjust the policy regarding the purchase and price of pigs, to replace the monoply for the purchase of goods by the system of ordering and purchasing goods by contracts, and to make centrally fixed prices the guiding prices. Over the past year, initial success has been scored in quickening the slow pace of development in pig production and, thanks to the involvement of state-owned units, collective units, and individuals in this business, the circulation of pigs has been invigorated. In 1985, pork was sold freely in the urban and rural areas and retail sales of pork increased by 7.6 percent. Thanks to increases in the supply of fresh pork, many urban dwellers have been able to change their diets by eating less frozen meat. Because of the increase in expenditure by urban dwellers resulting from increases in meat prices, various localities have given them price subsidies depending on circumstances.

In recent years, price restrictions on beef, mutton, eggs, and aquatic products have been successively lifted. Last year, Beijing, Tianjin, Shanghai, and a few other large cities simultaneously lifted restrictions on the price of pork and the above foodstuffs. As a result, production of most products developed rapidly, supply improved, and the price of some products went down.

Last year, some large and medium cities also lifted restrictions on the price of vegetables. Generally speaking, the results were quite satisfactory. The increase in the price of vegetables has aroused the peasants' enthusiasm for growing vegetables and led to an increase in variety. The types of vegetables on sale in many cities increased from about a dozen to 20 or even 30. More high-grade vegetables were sold on the market, their quality improved, and more of them were edible. Thanks to all this the number of urban fair trade markets increased from more than 6,000 in 1984 to over 8,000 and the masses could buy things more easily. Of course, there were some problems. For example, the people complained bitterly about the enormous increase in the price of vegetables in some cities. In view of this, the State Council promptly ordered departments concerned to hold work meetings on the supply of vegetables and to adopt appropriate measures to stabilize vegetable prices.

Last year, the changes in the policy regarding the buying, selling, and pricing of grain in the rural areas highlighted the elimination of the state monopoly on the purchase of grain; the application of the system of ordering and purchasing grain by contracts; the delegation of greater decision-making power to the peasants and the replacement of state purchase prices and above-quota purchase prices of grain by a "3.7" plan, which means that 30 percent of the grain produced was purchased at the old state purchase price and the remaining 70 percent was purchased at a higher above-quota purchase price. The amount of grain purchased last year did not differ significantly from that in previous years. In addition to changing the way in which grain is purchased and the way in which prices are set, the state also raised the buying and selling prices of grain in the rural areas, so that they were on a par with the state purchase price, by continuing to give operation subsidies and thus tentatively changing the practice of buying grain at high prices and selling it at low prices in the rural areas.

Last year, by raising the charges for short-distance freight and passenger transportation, the state diverted traffic from the railroads to the highways and waterways, thus making the distribution of transportation facilities more rational. According to statistics compiled by the Ministry of Railways, in the 5 months following the adjustment of charges, the number of short-distance passengers transported by the railroads was down by 18.7 percent and the volume of short-distance freight transportation was about one third smaller than in the 5 months prior to the adjustment of charges. Thanks to all this, we could use the transportation capability thus made available for long-distance transportation, thus making the best use of our railroads.

Last year, we also fruitfully explored reforms regarding the price of the means of heavy industrial production.

Last year, the overall retail price index rose by 8.8 percent, with price reform a accounting for 5.4 percent and other factors accounting for 3.4 percent. The retail price index in the urban areas rose 12.2 percent, which is quite a large increase, and that in the rural areas rose 7 percent, which was slightly lower than the overall figure. Last year, it was mainly the prices of fresh or raw non-staple foodstuffs, which are very important to the masses, which caused the price increases. The average retail price ofnon-staple foodstuffs in the cities was 23 percent higher than in 1984. The price of meat, poultry, and eggs went up 23.5 percent; the price of vegetables was 34.5 percent; and the price of aquatic products 37.4 percent.

Last year, since retail prices on the market went up rather significantly, the increase in the masses' income was partly offset by price increases. According to a survey, in 1985, the peasants' per capita net income exceeded that in 1984 by 11.8 percent, or 8.4 percent if price increases were factored in, and the average income of urban dwellers exceeds that of 1984 by 23.8 percent, or 10.6 percent if the cost of living increase was factored in. The living standards of those whose income either increased very little or did not increase, were affected somewhat. Generally speaking, the increase in the people's income was greater than the increase in prices, and the livelihood of the majority of people improved to varying degrees.

We should be able to see that because of the accumulation of many irrationalities in the country's pricing system, the general price level naturally went up a little in the course of the reforms.

When one examines the state of the reforms, in addition to taking note of price increases, one must take the development of production into account and, in addition to taking note of the immediate effects of the reform measures, one must take into account their long-term effects on the harmonization of various economic relations. The prices of fresh or raw non-staple foodstuffs, such as meat, vegetables, eggs, and so on, and the prices of grain in the rural areas are sensitive and extremely knotty problems in the course of price reforms. We have been trying to solve them for many years without any success. Last year, we carried out these reforms smoothly. These are of great long-term significance as far as reform of the economic structure is concerned. They have begun producing desirable consequences.

In 1986, people are generally concerned about the principles underlying the country's pricing work and about measures for stabilizing prices. In his report on the Seventh 5-Year Plan to the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC, Premier Zhao Ziyang points out that so far as reform of the country's economic structure is concerned, we must make a success of consolidating, digesting, replenishing, and improving the measures adopted, promote what is beneficial and eliminate what is harmful, and solve the problems resulting from the reforms. In addition, we must also make adequate preparations for the next important step during the next 2 years. This is the principle underlying this year's reform of the economic structure and pricing work.

Generally speaking, the present price situation in the country is quite satisfactory. On New Year's Day and during the Spring Festival, the supply of non-staple foodstuffs was plentiful in most parts of the country, with increased variety and improved quality, and the prices were about the same as those in the fourth quarter of last year or even lower. However, we should be able to see that the step we took last year was quite bold and that people have yet to adapt themselves to it. This year's price reforms will not be characterized by major price adjustments. Only unreasonable prices will be adjusted somewhat. In order to maintain basic price stability in the market, the state is making an effort to control overall price levels; to bring about an increase in grain output by applying the price lever; to keep the prices of non-staple foodstuffs and industrial products basically stable; and to strengthen price inspection.

Price reforms are the key to the success of economic structure reform. It is important party and state policy to maintain the basic stability of market prices in the course of reforms. It is also the common duty of all localities, departments, enterprises, and institutions to do this. The masses should enthusiastically support price reforms and consolidate and improve on the reform measures that have been adopted. It is hoped that departments concerned will make proper preparations for price reforms in the future and that they will continue to contribute to the healthy development of the national economy and to improving the people's livelihood.

STATE BUREAU URGES VIGILANCE ON VEGETABLE PRICES

OW070350 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1213 GMT 6 May 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 6 May (XINHUA) -- The State Bureau of Commodity Prices recently transmitted the Liaoning Commodity Prices Inspection Department's "Opinions of Planning the Work of Launching Vegetable Price Inspection," and urged commodity price departments in all localities to take effective measures to stabilize vegetable prices on the market by consulting Liaoning's experiences.

The Liaoning Commodity Price Inspection Department's "opinions" consist mainly of the following five measures:

Checking the prices of the major types of seasonal vegetables -- We should attach special attention to controlling the intermediate transactions of major varieties. The checking should be made in planned manner and on a seasonal basis. The inspection of vegetable prices during the four major festivals should receive top priority. When abrupt changes occur on the market, such as sharp rises or steep falls of certain seasonal varieties, and when the local governments have set the price limits or the basic protective prices, the commodity price inspection departments in all localities should act immediately and go all out to check and control vegetable prices. If necessary, they may also intervene with administrative measures to maintain the integrity of price onctrol and make sure that the higher or lower price limits are observed.

Intensifying the control of vegetable prices charged by individual vegetable traders at country fairs -- Any trader who purchases his vegetables from a state-run wholesaler must resell according to prescribed prices. Those who purchase from retailers and resell at higher and higher prices at each transaction level must be strictly handled. The commodity price inspection departments should also work in coordination with the business administrative departments in striking at such unlawful conduct as bullying other traders, coercive buying or selling, cornering the market, adulterating the merchandise, and driving up vegetable prices.

Enforcing the price regulations -- Any state, collective, individual operator, and any unit operated by an enterprise or institution, must follow the guiding prices or price limits set by the state, as well as the local regulations governing profit rates and profit differentials for import, wholesale, and retail. Anyone violating the guiding principles, guiding prices, price limits, and profit differentials may be punished for violating price policies.

Intensifying publicity work and education -- We should attach special attention to giving positive guidance to all operators, especially the individual operators, in order to help them voluntarily observe the party's policies on commodity prices.

Effectively strengthening the organizational leadership over the inspection of vegetable prices -- Each city should designate a leading member to form a full-time inspection group composed of full-time staff to carry out year-round inspection. It should work in coordination with the business administration, taxation, public security, urban construction, and communications department to do the work. Special attention should be attached to full mobilizing the workers' commodity price monitoring stations and volunteer inspectors to work together and share the responsibility of controlling vegetable prices under the leadership of local governments at all levels.

SONG PING INSPECTION TOUR OF SHANDONG PROVINCE

SK260759 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Song Ping, state councillor and concurrently chairman of the State Planning Commission, made an inspection tour of Shandong Province from 17 to 23 April. He emphatically inspected the construction of coal, electricity, port, and other energy and transport projects.

During his inspection tour of Qingdao, he was accompanied by Li Changan, deputy secretary of the Shandong Provincial CPC Committee and governor of the province, who made a special trip from Jinan to Qingdao.

While inspecting the Xinglongzhuang Coal Mine, the Zouxian Power Plant, the Shijiu Harbor, the Lanshantou Harbor, and the Qingdao Qianwan Harbor, Comrade Song Ping highly appraised the province's energy and transport construction.

He said: During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, Shandong Province scored great achievements in building energy and transport projects, which played an important role in promoting economic development. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, the energy and transport projects remain the priorities in development. Because Shandong has favorable conditions for developing energy and transport industries, the state has arranged the construction of many key projects in the province. The province should economize on investment, shorten the construction period, and accelerate the construction pace in an effort to further promote the sustained, steady, and coordinated development of the national economy.

Comrade Song Ping stressed: The Qianwan Harbor of Qingdao is a key project covered by the state's Seventh 5-Year Plan. We must complete the construction of this harbor by 1990. He called on the province and Qingdao City to vigorously support the construction of this harbor from various fields in order to create conditions for its smooth construction.

While inspecting Qingdao and Rizhao cities, Comrade Song Ping offered many important suggestions for developing these two port cities. He said: As a port city, both Qingdao and Rizhao cities should regard the port areas as their greatest superiority, and should consider the harbor construction as a basic condition and foundation for accelerating the urban economic development. Therefore, they should define the guiding ideology of serving the port construction, should define the urban development plans in line with the port construction, should develop economic relations with foreign countries, should expand foreign trade and export, and should attend to the tourist trade. He said: If we actually achieve success in these fields, we will be able to promote the development of the urban economy as a whole.

During his inspection tour, Comrade Song Ping repeatedly stressed the necessity of treasuring the land. Both the urban and rural areas should map out plans for making good use of land. In addition, Comrade Song Ping inspected the Huang He flood-control project, the Qingdao Economic and Technical Development Zone, and some plants and enterprises; held discussions with responsible comrades of the province and the pertinent cities, prefectures and counties; and put forward many important opinions on the provincial economic construction and the work in other fields.

Also accompanying Comrade Song Ping on his inspection tour were Huang Yicheng, vice chairman of the State Planning Commission; Liu Peng, vice governor of Shandong Province and secretary of the Qingdao City CPC Committee; and Liu Yong, secretary general of the Shandong Provincial People's Government.

YU QIULI ADDRESSES POLITICAL WORK MEETING

OW210330 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 19 Apr 86

[Text] In his speech at a political work conference of the National Defense University this morning, Yu Qiuli, deputy secretary general of the Central Military Commission and director of the General Political Department, pointed out: Political cadres should strive to improve their quality in order to adapt themselves to the new situation.

Yu Qiuli stressed: Political cadres should firmly foster the idea of serving education and scientific research, study hard to improve themselves, and increase their abilities by working in basic units and involving themselves in education and scientific research. In addition, they should also set an example with their own conduct and play an exemplary role.

In his speech, Yu Qiuli also dealt with the role of political work in ensuring and serving the fulfillment of other work.

NI XIANCE DELIVERS REPORT AT JIANGXI CONGRESS

OW061301 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 5 May 86

[Text] Discussing Jiangxi's implementation of the Sixth 5-Year Plan in his report to the Fourth Session of the Sixth Jiangxi Provincial People's Congress, Governor Ni Xiance said: During the Sixth 5-Year Plan, the major tasks and targets specified under it as approved by the First Session of the Sixth Jiangxi Provincial People's Congress were either fulfilled or overfulfilled 1 or 2 years ahead of schedule, and encouraging results were achieved in economic and social development as well as in other areas. These achievements were manifested in the following six aspects:

1. The economic structure improved significantly, with the ratios among major economic activities becoming more reasonable. Economic strength further improved. The two short legs of diversified agricultural production and village and town enterprises became longer, expediting the industrial production of consumer goods and promoting the fairly rapid development of the tertiary industry. The ratio between accumulation and consumption became more rational. During those 5 years, the installed power capacity increased by 610,000 kw, an equivalent of half of the total installed power capacity in the preceding 31 years, while coal-mining capacity rose by 2.71 million metric tons. The Anhui-Jiangxi railway was built, as were 2,110 kilometers of highways. A total of 1,455 kilometers of highways were rebuilt. Production capacities of sugar and cement rose by 120,000 and 1.59 million metric tons respectively. A 70,000-metric ton copper production capacity covering the entire process from mining to smelting was attained. Compared with 1980, 1985 saw a onefold increase in steel output, a 1.1-fold rise in chemical fiber output, a 1.7-fold gain in plastics production, a 65-percent increase in the output of chemicals and medicines, and a 93-percent growth in the output value of machine-building and electronic industries.

2. Economic work took the path of emphasizing better economic results. Accordingly, economic efficiency rose steadily and local financial revenues increased substantially. Jiangxi led the nation with a score of 90 in the 1984-85 national assessment of overall industrial and economic performance. Many economic indicators in construction and circulation chalked up varying degrees of increase. Jiangxi's financial revenues climbed by 100 million yuan in 1983, 200 million yuan in 1984, and 430 million yuan in 1985 to reach 1.95 billion yuan. Nonbudgetary funds amounted to about 2 billion yuan or so in 1985.

3. The rural economy transformed itself from self-sufficiency or partial self-sufficiency to a commodity economy while agricultural production developed rapidly in an unprecedented way. The average annual increase in agricultural production from 1981 to 1985 was 8.7 percent, a much higher figure compared with the preceding 28 years. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan, grain output rose by an average 4.3 percent annually, and considerable increases were registered for other agricultural and sideline products. The massive increase of specialized households and villages promoted the vigorous growth of the rural commodity economy. The rate of agricultural commodity production rose from 41 percent in 1980 to some 50 percent in 1985.

4. With major breakthroughs in opening to the outside world, Jiangxi's economy changed from a closed to an open one. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan, Jiangxi established friendly and cooperative ties with Yugoslavia's Macedonian Republic, Federal Germany's Hesse Land, and the U.S. State of Kentucky. It also initialed agreements on establishing friendly and cooperative ties with the U.S. State of Utah and Japan's Gifu Prefecture, and signed economic cooperation contracts with Australian and Canadian states. Last year, Jiangxi held its first trade fair on economic and technological cooperation and sales exhibition of export goods in Hong Kong, and set up a window for dealings with the outside world. The total export volume of commodities during the 5-year period was $1.066 billion, 2.2 times that of the Fifth 5-Year Plan.

In 1985 alone, 121 technological imports involving $64.88 million were effected. Forty-eight Sino-foreign joint or cooperative enterprises and compensation trade establishments were set up, bringing in more than $32 million in foreign capital. Lateral economic ties with fraternal provinces and municipalities were further expanded. More than 1,700 projects were launched with other provinces as part of such lateral economic ties. New progress was also made in forging cooperation among various districts, trades, and enterprises within the province.

5. Considerable headway was made in scientific and technological development and in tapping intellectual resources, and a thriving prospect has emerged in various social programs. The strategic viewpoint of attaching importance to scientific and technological progress and intellectual development was fostered throughout the province. Emphasis was laid on integrating economic, scientific and technological, cultural educational, and other social developments, and funds for science education were increased.

6. With coordinated progress in production, construction, and the improvement of people's livelihood, the consumption level of people in cities and towns rose swiftly. The average net per capita income of peasants in Jiangxi was 377 yuan in 1985, up some 200 yuan form 1980, and the average per capita incone of city dwellers was 558 yuan, up 53 percent from 1980. With increases in the people's income, the people's consumption level and pattern underwent marked changes. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan, the living conditions of urban and rural residents improved substantially, and their bank savings increased significantly. Improvements were also made in municipal construction and the living environment in cities and towns.

Ni Xiance noted: With our endeavors during the Sixth 5-Year Plan, we have initially discovered a new way of economic development suitable for Jiangxi. In summing up our work in economic and social development during the Sixth 5-Year Plan, we can elicit the following five fundamental principles:

1. steadfastly implementing the central authorities' principles of carrying out reform, opening to the outside world, and enlivening the domestic economy; and concentrating efforts on carrying out reform and the open policy;

2. persisting in seeking truth from facts and working out policies suitable for Jiangxi;

3. switching our focus from blindly increasing output value and volume to improving economic results;

4. giving full play to our initiative and learning from our brothers with an open mind; and

5. making solid efforts to fulfill all these tasks.

SHANGHAI CPPCC COMMITTEE POLITICAL RESOLUTION

OW050221 Shanghai JIEFANG RIBAO in Chinese 30 Apr 86 p 2

[Political resolution adopted by the Fifth Session of the Sixth Shanghai Municipal CPPCC Committee on 29 April 1986]

[Excerpts] The Fifth Session of the Sixth Shanghai Municipal CPPCC Committee was convened not long after the closing of Fourth Sessions of the Sixth NPC and the Sixth CPPCC National Committee and under the favorable situation in which all the people throughout the city are implementing the guidelines set by the two sessions and uniting as one and working hard to fulfill the Seventh 5-Year Plan with full confidence. On the basis of the principle of "treating each other with all sincerity and sharing weal and woe," the CPPCC members shared all their thoughts without reserve, freely airing their views. An atmosphere of democracy, unity, and vigorous reform prevailed at the session.

The session heard and examined Vice Chairman Ye Shuhua's report on the work of the Standing Committee of the municipal CPPCC Committee and Vice Chairman Yang Kei's report on how motions have been handled since the Third Session of the Sixth Municipal CPPCC Committee. The session endorsed the two reports and made proposals on how to further develop CPPCC work. The session also heard and discussed the report delivered by Vice Chairman Zhang Ruifang on publicizing the guidelines of the Fourth Session of the Sixth CPPCC National Committee. The session was greatly inspired by the tremendous achievements China achieved in all fields over the past year.

The CPPCC members attended the Fifth Session of the Eighth Shanghai Municipal People's Congress as observers and heard the "Report on Shanghai's Seventh 5-Year Plan for Economic and Social Development (Draft)" by Mayor Jiang Zemin, the "Report on Shanghai's Draft Plan for Economic and Social Development in 1986" by Vice Mayor Li Zhaoji, and the "Report on Shanghai's Final Municipal Accounts for 1985 and the Draft Municipal Budget for 1986" by Vice Mayor Ye Gongqi. After earnest discussions, the CPPCC members unanimously endorsed and supported the three reports and made many unique proposals on carrying out structural reforms in the fields of economy, science and technology, and education; implementing the policy of opening to the outside world and invigorating the demestic economy; strengthening urban infrastructure; improving the environment for investments and living; making full use of foreign investments and promoting exports; expanding economic and technical exchanges with foreign countries; quickening the pace to promote technical progress and train more qualified people; bringing about economic rejuvenation and new developments in various undertakings; and strengthening socialist spiritual civilization in Shanghai.

The session held that as an organization of the patriotic united front, the People's Political Consultative Conference constitutes an important organizational form which gives full play to socialist democracy in China's political life and an important force for building socialism. Under the leadership of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee, the current CPPCC session must center on the basic requirements for fulfilling the "Seventh 5-Year Plan"; play its role well in holding political consultations and providing democratic supervision; supply the nation with more qualified personnel; carry out various CPPCC activities in a down-to-earth manner; and offer advice on reforming and rejuvenating Shanghai and opening the municipality to the outside world. While developing socialist material civilization, we must also vigorously promote socialist spiritual civilization and conduct education on fostering lofty ideals, moral integrity, higher education, and a sense of discipline; we must also strengthen the legal system. We must study even harder united front theories and the current situation and policies and make contributions toward correcting party style and bringing about a fundamental change for the better in social ethics. We must make full use of the favorable conditions created by CPPCC members and people of all walks of life in strengthening ties with Taiwan, Hong Kong, and Macao compatriots and Overseas Chinese; make more friends and develop friendship; expand the patriotic united front in the new period; and realize the concept of "one country, two systems" to reunify the motherland and rejuvenate China.

In order to fulfill the glorious but arduous tasks, the current session must continue to bring into full play the fine traditions and work style of the People's Political Consultative Conference; maintain close ties with the relevant government departments; strengthen cooperation with various democratic parties and mass organizations; stir up the enthusiasm of CPPCC members and people of all walks of life; display the spirit of "the foolish old man who moved the mountain"; work hard with one heart and one mind; and unite as one to realize the "Seventh 5-Year Plan" and build Shanghai into an open, multifunctional, and highly developed socialist modern city!

YUNNAN GOVERNOR ON SEVENTH 5-YEAR PLAN TARGETS

HK300117 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Excerpts] The general demand on Yunnan's economic and social development during the Seventh 5-Year Plan is to persevere in all-round reform, harmonize the economic relationships, improve economic results, maintain the growth rate, strengthen the agricultural foundation, establish township enterprises, exploit various resources and form them into strong-point pillars of the economy, get a good grasp of key construction projects, step up the development of reserve strength, vigorously grasp the training of talented people, spur the progress of science and technology, speed up the pace of opening up to the world, expand foreign exchange earnings from exports, build the two civilizations, and speed up the work of enriching the people and building up the border regions. Governor He Zhiqiang said this in his government work report delivered at the fourth session of the sixth provincial People's Congress.

He Zhiqiang said: Yunnan should and can maintain a certain growth rate during the Seventh 5-Year Plan in light of its weak foundation, low base figures, great resources potentials, and relatively good energy conditions. The province's main targets of endeavor have therefore been set as follows: Under the premise of continually improving economic results and social benefit, the province's total industrial and agricultural output value should exceed 30 billion yuan by 1990, rising at an annual average of 8 percent; gross domestic product should reach 23 billion yuan, rising at an annual average of 8.7 percent; financial revenue should reach 4 billion yuan; grain output should reach 23.5 billion jin; total income of the township enterprises should reach 6 billion yuan; some 230,000 specialized technical personnel of all categories should be trained; natural population growth rate should be kept below 15 per 1,000; and the consumption level of urban and rural inhabitants should rise at an annual average of about 5 percent.

Governor He Zhiqiang stressed in his report: It is almost impossible to solve the food and clothing problem in poor areas unless grain production is improved. Moreover, there will be great constraints on the readjustment of the rural production structure, and the economy of the whole province will find it hard to take off. We must attach great importance to grain production during the Seventh 5-Year Plan and strive to attain basic self-sufficiency in grain.

On the question of taking advantage of resource strong points, He Zhiqiang said that during the Seventh 5-Year Plan, while taking further advantage of its strong points in tobacco, sugar, and tea, Yunnan should speed up the development of its eight major sectors: mining and mineral processing, with the focus on non-ferrous metals; tropical crops and their processing, with the focus on rubber, spices, medicinal herbs, and fruit; the chemical industry, with the focus on the province's phosphate resources; the food inustry; forestry and the forestry chemical industry; construction and the building materials industry; tourism; and tertiary industries such as commerce, transport, telecommunications, and finance. He Zhiqiang said: We must make still greater effort during the Seventh 5-Year Plan and be resolved to solve the food and clothing problem for the masses in poor areas.

YUNNAN MILITARY CORRECTS 'UNHEALTHY PRACTICES'

HK051041 Kunming YUNNAN RIBAO in Chinese 19 Apr 86 p 1

[Report by Wu Jinhua and Hu Jinghua: "The Party Committee of the Provincial Military District Takes the Lead in Rectifying Unhealthy Practices"]

[Text] The party committee of the Yunnan Provincial Military District is bold in acknowledging its own problems and rectifying the unhealthy practices of buying sedans at will, promoting cadres in violation of regulations, and cadres doing business. The party committee has taken the lead in correcting party conduct, thus bringing about a rapid change for the better in the party style of military district organs and solving some long-standing problems.

In the course of carrying out the central authorities' instructions on rectifying party style, the military district party committee conscientiously examined its own unhealthy practices which had emerged in the previous period. Members of the party committee maintained that, to rectify party conduct, the party committee should set a good example for others, should be bold in acknowledging its own problems, should not be afraid of losing prestige, should encourage units at the lower levels and the masses to make suggestions, and should be resolute in giving up individual and small-group interests. After sizing up the situation, the party committee decided to hold an enlarged meeting of its Standing Committee in mid-February. Leaders of various subordinate army units and military subdistricts as well as cadres at the sectional levels and above were invited to the meeting to help the party committee rectify unhealthy practices. At the meeting, Zhao Kun, secretary of the party committee and political commissar, took the initiative in exposing the party committee's problems such as buying sedans at will, promoting cadres in violation of regulations, cadres going into business, and leading cadres enjoying excessive hospitality when carrying out inspection in units at the lower levels. He put forward detailed measures for solving these problems and demanded that the participants help discover problems relevant to its party conduct and boldly make criticisms and suggestions on correcting its problems. Secretary Zhao Kun and Deputy Secretary Wang Zuxun called about 10 leading cadres at the departmental and sectional levels to a discussion for the purpose of soliciting their opinions. Aware of its honesty and resolution in exposing its problems, the participants boldly aired their views and made dozens of suggestions to the party committee. The Standing Committee of the party committee convened a special meeting to further study and analyze its problems. The meeting worked out specific measures for solving the party committee's problems, and demanded that units at the lower levels supervise the party committee.

After listening to the opinions of the participants, the Standing Committee of the party committee decided to give away to the reception house the sedans which had been bought, to stop delivery of the four sedans which had been ordered, to abolish the instructions for promoting cadres in violation of regulations, to dissolve all business offices and their subordinate companies, and to terminate economic contracts signed with the localities. Inspired by the party committee, organs under the headquarters, the political department, and the logistics department immediately started straightening out their problems, thus bringing about a turn for the better in the party conduct of the military district organs.

FURTHER REPORT ON DEFECTED TAIWANESE PILOT

Official on 'Peiping' Actions

OW071445 Taipei CNA in English 1412 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 7 (CNA) -- Chang King-yuh, director general of the Government Information Office, said Wednesday that the Peiping regime should send back the three crewmen and cargo aboard the China Airlines [CAL] along with the plane to the Republic of China [ROC] according to international practices. The CAL cargo jet was diverted to Canton on the China mainland last Saturday on its way from Bangkok to Hong Kong. Up to now, the three crewmen have not been able to appear in public, showing there are some things which cannot be revealed to the public, said Chang.

Chang made the statement in reponse to interpellations by legislators Liao Fu-pen and Hung Chao-nan at a joint meeting of the Legislative Yuan committees on education, internal and foreign affairs. Chang also said both the government and people here are very concerned about the case, and the ROC Government will adopt any possible measures to gain the return of the plane, cargo, and crewmen. The ROC will still uphold the consistent principles of no talks, no contacts, an no compromise in dealing with the Peiping regime on this case, Chang said, because the Chinese Communists are a rebellious group against the Republic of China.

Red Cross Asked to Aid

OW071417 Taipei CNA in English 1354 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 7 (CNA) -- The Red Cross Society of China has asked the Geneva-based Red Cross International to help the China Airlines Boeing 747 cargo plane and its crew members that were diverted to an airport on the mainland to return to the Republic of China.

In an urgent cable to Jean de Courten, delegate general for Asia and Pacific to the Red Cross International Wednesday, the Red Cross Society said that since the aircraft landed at a Canton airport May 3, all the family members of Wang Hsi-chueh and Tung Kuang-hsing, pilot and co-pilot of the plane and its flight engineer, Chiu Ming-chih, have been very concerned about the welfare of the three. The society, on behalf of the family members of the crew, asked Red Cross International to "kindly render assistance in this matter" and help the crew members and the aircraft return as soon as possible.

CAL Spokesman Statement

OW071524 Taipei CNA in English 1501 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 7 (CNA) -- China Airlines had not yet heard any news from Cathay Pacific Airways about its handling of the stranded CAL cargo jetliner and crew members as of 6 p.m. Wednesday, CAL spokesman Lin Liang-chih said Wednesday evening. He said the ROC flag carrier is currently trying to retrive its Boeing 747 B198 cargo jetliner, three crew members and cargo on board through three different channels. The plane, on its way from Bangkok to Hong Kong, landed at the Paiyun Airport in Canton, Kwangtung Province, May 3.

Besides entrusting Hong Kong-based Cathay Pacific, Lin said CAL has entrusted the British Lloyd's Insurance Corp with the negotiations with the Peiping regime for the release of the cargo jetliner. Families of the three stranded crew members Wednesday formally requested the Red Cross Society of China to help the ill-fated crew return home at an early date, he added.

CHENG MING ON BACKGROUND OF WANG MENG APPOINTMENT

HK060531 Hong Kong CHENG MING in Chinese No 103, 1 May 86 pp 12-13

["Word From the Capital" by special correspondent Chang Chuan: "Deng Xiaoping and Hu Yaobang Forced Wang Meng To Become a Minister"]

[Text] During the recent NPC session, the fact that Wang Meng would be put in charge of the Ministry of Culture became front-page news in overseas newspapers and magazines. This was very unusual.

From the spreading of the rumors to the official announcement, the news that Wang Meng would become a minister was very dizzying and confusing. Reporters from Hong Kong covering the NPC session in Beijing became very busy trying to prove it but still failed to grasp the main points.

First, Deng Youmei, CPC secretary of the Writers' Association, acted in a slick way by making some equivocal and superficial remarks. Feeling unsatisfied, several Hong Kong reporters went to Wang Meng's home; in answering, Wang Meng said that he was at the moment writing a serial novel. Only two other writers, Zhang Xianliang and Feng Jicai, disclosed some information.

Willing To Be in Charge of the Ministry of Culture, Gao Di Can Only Be a Deputy

What is so mysterious and unfathomable about Wang Meng's appointment as the minister of culture? What exactly went on behind the scene?

It is really unbelievable that "Wang Meng did not want to be an official." Nevertheless, it is true that Wang Meng did not want to be the minister of culture. A friend of mine in Beijing told me that there we two main reasons for Wang Meng's unwillingness to be the minister of culture. First, politically, it is not an easy job to occupy this post. Second, too many things fall under the jurisdiction of this department. Notwithstanding that the awful mess of the cinema is now under the administration of the Ministry of Radio and Television (headed by Minister Ai Zhisheng), there are still too many problems and things to mind, which will surely and seriously affect his writing.

However, of these two reasons, the former is the most important, as the Ministry of Culture not only takes care of cultural issues but also is very sensitive politically. Therefore, if the work is not handled well, he might be dismissed from office and blamed. Moreover, the second reason is still important. That is why Deng Youmei said that "if this job was given to me, I would never be able to write in my whole life." This also accounts for why Tianjin's Jiang Zilong recently asked determinedly not to be "an official" in the Writers' Association in Tianjin.

"Notes on a Northern Journey" in this January's issue of CHENG MING reported that Wang Meng was among the list of "candidates" for the post of minister of culture. Higher levels once prefered Xu Huaizhong, a middle-aged writer and author of "A Ruthless Lover," but Xu did not take the job. Another name on the list was Gao Di, secretary of the CPC Committee of Jilin Province. Moreover, Gao Di accepted the appointment with pleasure around the time of this year's Spring Festival. Therefore, Wang Meng once said that he absolutely would not be the minister of culture.

However, there were some changes afterwards. Important officials at higher levels maintained that it would be more correct to let Gao Di be a deputy minister of culture and Wang Meng be the minister. Here Wang Meng's troubles began.

Hu Qili Was Convinced by Wang Meng

The CPC Central Secretariat decided to appoint Wang Meng as minister of culture. When the CPC Central Organization Department solicited Wang Meng's opinion, he raised his objections and said he would be unable to accept this appointment. In order to shirk this thankless task, Wang Meng even personally went to the CPC Central Secretariat to persuade Hu Qili to find someone better.

As Hu Qili had been ordered to pass on the central authorities' intentions to Wang Meng and bring him around, a small "argument" arose at the meeting between Hu Qili and Wang Meng. Wang Meng upheld that he had to write and would not give up his advantage, as he could play a greater role than a minister could in the literature and art circles by making use of this advantage. Wang Meng spoke rationally and convincingly, and Hu Qili was convinced in the end.

This is exactly Wang Meng's forte. Although having a glib tongue, even Hu Qili lost the upper hand to Wang Meng and could not force him to become the minister of culture. Therefore, Hu Qili had to report his failure to General Secretary Hu Yaobang.

Xi Zhongxun Gave the Order on Behalf of Deng Xiaoping and Hu Yaobang

After all, being a member of the second echelon, Hu Yaobang was very experienced, quite unlike Hu Qili who, like Wang Meng, belongs to the third echelon and could do nothing about this "young man from the Organization Department." It was once widely rumored in the literature and art circles in Beijing that he sent for Wang Meng and asked at the very start of the meeting: "Are you a member of the Communist Party?"

Wang Meng replied: "Yes."

Hu Yaobang asked: "Shoud a communist member obey the orders of the organization?"

Before Wang Meng could answer the question, Hu Yaobang said that "members of the Communist Party should even sacrifice their lives. Should they fear being a minister of culture? You should accept the appointment first."

Upon checking, we found this version of the story to be incorrect. It was Xi Zhongxun who spoke to Wang Meng. As soon as he met Wang Meng, his first sentence was "on behalf of Deng Xiaoping and Hu Yaobang, I am calling on you and am passing on their opinion to you." In the face of the order from Deng Xiaoping and Hu Yaobang, Wang Meng could argue no more.

Wang Meng Belonged to the Communist Youth League System

Therefore, Wang Meng had to wait for the official NPC appointment and take up the job. In this period, writers in Beijing and representative writers attending the NPC session specially held a "farewell" tea party in celebration of his promotion. Before taking his "farewell," it is said that Wang Meng was still not optimistc about this high post and did not resign his position as the editor in chief of RENMIN WENXUE which, in fact, he can no longer occupy, thus leaving himself some leeway.

Some people in Beijing said that the reason Hu Yaobang forced Wang Meng to take charge of the Ministry of Culture is that Wang Meng has a background of work in the Communist Youth League system. Before becoming a "rightist" in the 1950's, Wang Meng was once a CYL cadre in a district in Beijing.

However, my friend in Beijing said that this was only one of the reasons. More importantly, he is the most ideal person to adjust the relationship between the party and the writers. It is said that this point is also generally acknowledged by the contingent of writers. Personages in the literature and art circles in Beijing hope that with the direct backing of Hu Yaobang, Wang Meng will adopt a more open attitude toward literature and art issues and do more work in truly realizing the freedom of creation.

MA DING CASE SPARKS CPC THEORETICAL DISPUTE

HK061055 Hong Kong CHENG MING in Chinese No 103, 1 May 86 pp 14-15

[Article by special correspondent Hsiao Chung: "The 'Ma Ding Case,' Which Shocks CPC Theorists"]

[Text] In recent months, the CPC theorists have been very active in discussing economic theories. Some young theorists are eager to express their ideas and viewpoints, and this has brought about clashes of opinion with the orthodox theorists.

In the past few years, orthodox theorists were always on the defensive to guard their authoritative interests in the theoretical field. They rigidly stuck to all the dogmas of Marx and Lenin, holding that nothing in the theory of Marxism-Leninism is debatable. However, they could not launch an effective counterattack against the challengers. Recently, they have taken the opportunity to stage a major offensive and this has heated up the split in the theoretical circles to a red-hot degree. It was the "Ma Ding incident" which shocked the entire theoretical circles.

The Real Facts of the "Ma Ding Incident"

The so-called "Ma Ding incident" was a theoretical storm caused by an article written by "Ma Ding." This lengthy signed article was published by GONGREN RIBHO on 2 November 1985, and was later relayed by the English version of BEIJING REVIEW. This article commented on the 10 major changes in economic studies in China in recent years and pointed out the development orientation for future economic studies.

The theoretical circles reacted favorably to the publication of this article. A dispatch issued by the Japanese JIJI News Agency on 11 December reported this news and the Japanese newspaper ASAHI SHIMBUN also reported on this article. On 19 December, CHUNG PAO in New York in the United States published an editorial entitled "Eliminating Utilitarianism -- on the Correct Attitude in China's Economic Research," criticizing the academic utilitarianist tendency and the practice of swallowing foreign theories without digesting them in China's present economic studies.

In this "optical and electonics" era, the information was relayed back to mainland China over the next 2 and 1/2 months. It became a "powerful weapon" for the orthodox theorists to counterattack the reformist theorists, saying: Even overseas scholars have made these criticisms, so how can you explain it?

On 4 March 1986, the daily JINGJI CANKAO compiled and published by the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY carried excerpts of the New York CHUNG PAO editorial. Then, some journals controlled by the orthodox faction and some authoritative people came out to kick up a big fuss. They criticized some theorists in China for "swallowing foreign things without digesting them" and denounced Ma Ding's article as a demonstration of "spiritual pollution of a high level." They even organized a number of critical articles. As is known, however, these authoritative people had not really read Ma Ding's article and did not know the truth when they kicked up a fuss. They just believed the editorial of the New York CHUNG PAO, which itself was a foreign article that they swallowed without digesting, and reached a reckless conclusion.

The Japanese Report Misled CHUNG PAO

The New York CHUNG PAO said in its editorial on 19 December 1985: Some economists in Mainland China now think that "Das Kapital" cannot provide "ready answers" for present questions, so the book's theory has "become invalid." Therefore, their attitude in economic studies has turned to utilitarianism, and they cannot treat the conclusions of the Marxist theory from a viewpoint of development. The newspaper also criticized some Chinese economists for only being keen on introducing Western economic theories but neglecting the influence of Marxism on Western economics, and called this a tendency to "swallow foreign things without digesting them." In fact, the criticism made by CHUNG PAO was untenable, because it drew an erroneous conclusion from some misrepresented materials.

Among the 10 issues in Ma Ding's article, the first, third, and fourth issues were controversial. Their topics were: "Ready answers cannot be found in 'Das Kapital'"; "From rejecting to analyzing and applying modern economics in the West"; and "Western theoretical schools should not be neglected." However, the article did not say that "Das Kapital" has lost its validity, as the CHUNG PAO editorial claimed. CHUNG PAO's charge was based on a news report dispatched by the Japanese. Ma Ding's article said: The political economy of Marxism has different tasks in different historical periods. In the 19th century, its task was to criticize the old capitalist world, while its present task is to promote the building of a new socialist world. Therefore, for many present economic issues, no ready answers can be found in the classical works of Marxism-Leninism. But the article still emphasized that China's economists should make use of Marx's stand, viewpoints, and methods to develop economic science in line with China's practice in building socialism. Then it drew a conclusion from this point for the third issue: As Marx, Engels, and Lenin critically absorbed the useful essence of classical economics and fully affirmed the reasonable part of vulgar economics, we should also criticize, analyze, and apply the achievements of various Western modern economic theories to enrich the economic theory of Marxism and to build socialism with Chinese characteristics.

In Ma Ding's article, there are no remarks about such a concept as Marxism "has lost its 'validity.'" It did not give people the impression of "swallowing foreign things without digesting them." As some scholars in Beijing, Shanghai, and Anhui pointed out, it is an important article which the authorities should allow to be published. Although it has shortcomings, it is still a good article.

In the battle, the orthodox conservative theorists in the CPC have picked the wrong target and introduced the wrong weapon from abroad. Their action has backfired on them.

The Central Propaganda Department's Role

Ma Ding is the pen name of Song Lonxiang, a young lecturer in the Nanjing University philosophy department. This time, he was not submerged in the storm. In 1983, when some people stirred up a storm of "eliminating spiritual pollution," Zhou Yang's articles about humanism and alienation were criticized for spreading "spiritual pollution" carried a terrible label of "at the high level," but Ma Ding, as a nobody in China's power structure, passed safe and sound....some gratifying changes have occurred in the balance of strength between the two factions in the CPC theoretical circles. The voice calling for "academic freedom" has been surging up.

The CPC Central Propaganda Department, when it was headed by Wang Renzhong or Deng Liqun, was always playing the role of containing ideology. After Zhu Houze took office, the Central Propaganda Department for the first time acted in line with public feelings, and it took popular measures to handle the "Ma Ding incident."

For the first time, the Central Propaganda Department made a good impression on the people. The "Ma Ding incident" was warmly discussed by people in the theoretical and cultural circles in Beijing. Some theoretical workers even said: "The 'Ma Ding incident' marks an exciting point for theoretical workers."

RENMIN RIBAO's Counterattack

In this incident, the reformist theoretical workers took the initiative in their hands rather than waiting passively for the Central Propaganda Department to pass judgment and allow free discussion. This time, they counterattacked promptly.

On 4 March, JINGJI CANKAO reprinted excerpts of CHUNG PAO's editorial. On 14 March, or 10 days later, RENMIN RIBAO published Deng Zhiwei's article entitled "The 'Breakthroughs' in the Study of Marxism," which was bolder than Ma Ding's article in pointing out the existence of some "outmoded' points in Marxist theory and saying that only by acknowledging this can one be regarded as having a Marxist attitude. Deng point out that Marx's viewpoint that commodity production should not exist in socialist society is not realistic, but this fact was not faced squarely until the 3d Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee decided to open the door of commodity production.

The article said: Marxism is developing continuously. If theory in the new stage is merely the simple continuation or extension of theory in the old stage and there is no breakthrough and negation, how can the doctrine be developed? The author called for making greater breathroughs in the theory of Marxism. He said: If breakthroughs are made even on some minor points, then this idea will be accepted even by the dogmatists. Breakthroughs cannot be made at will. If time, place, and conditions do not change or do not change substantially, the essence of the theory which reflects such specific conditions will not become outmoded; but if time, place, and conditions change greatly, then the theory, no matter how great and sacred it might be, will certainly become out moded. It is incorrect to regard something which still holds as outmoded; and it is also incorrect to deny the fact that something is indeed outmoded. Neither is a Marxist attitude.

What the "Ma Ding Incident" Exposes

What a wonderful counterattack it was. It was indeed a "major change" in China. Many people in the West are called "Martin," including a Sinologist in West Germany. So the "Ma Ding incident" may easily be misunderstood and be regarded as an incident related to some foreigners. After BEIJING REVIEW published Ma Ding's article, SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO carried the excerpts of the translation of 3 March (maybe, the editor did not know that the Chines orginal of the article was published in GONGREN RIBAO). Then WENZHAI BAO, a newspaper jointly published by GUANGMING RIBAO and the National Association of Journalists, quoted some remarks from the article and added that the remarks were uttered by a "foreign scholar." All of a sudden, Nanjing's Song Lonxiang, a Chinese "Ma Ding," was changed into a "foreign scholar. In fact, Ma Ding's article repeatedly used such terms as "our country" and "we" when talking about things in China. From these terms, editors could tell that Ma Ding was not a foreigner. This shows that editing work is not good enough and China's media organs are not well-informed and lack background information.

As a matter of fact, China's reporters and scholars will never suffer the disease of "swallowing foreign things without digesting them," because they cannot easily get access to foreign things. A few years ago, Shanghai's WEN HUI BAO published an article entitled "Information and the Development of Human Resources," which said: "Many scholars in China cannot find the books and data they need and have no opportunity to visit foreign countries to carry out academic exchanges. Under these circumstances, it is very difficult to conduct research and develop theories.

Everyone is leading a kind of "lonely" life. There is no competition, no information, no exchange, like a solitary boat in the sea on which there is no food, no fresh water, and no oar with which to row ashore. This is a good description of the situation in China's academic circles. Deng Weizhi, who published an article in RENMIN RIBAO to counterattack the CHUNG PAO editorial, is an active scholar. In recent years, he was published many good articles advocating the emancipation of people's minds in ZHONGGUO QINGNIAN BAO and WEN HUI BAO. In the title of one of these articles, he asked: "Why Are There So Few Schools of Thought in China?" He called for developing new theoretical schools and called for the media organs to be more courageous in paving the way for the development of new theoretical schools. It is to be hoped that through the "Ma Ding incident," the light of dawn will really appear in China's theoretical circles.

EDITORIAL CRITICIZES TAIWAN REFUSAL TO CONTACT PRC

HK080331 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 8 May 86 p 12

[Editorial: "Towards Jumbo Diplomacy?"]

[Text] There seems to be no early end in sight to the incident which has erupted over Saturday's defection to the mainland of a veteran Taiwan pilot, complete with a China Airlines cargo plane and two reluctant crewmen. Both the Communist Chinese Government and the Kuomintang authorities in Taiwan have stood their ground firmly, waiting for the other to budge. Beijing has insisted that the matter can be resolved easily if Taiwan sends a representative to the mainland. While this is not an unreasonable demand, it is obvious Beijing is exploiting the incident as an opportunity to push Taiwan into a dialogue. The jumbo and its crew have therefore taken on a role greater than their intrinsic importance. They are now figuring in the equation of China's historical search for a solution to the country's reunification. It is with this in mind that China has explicitly declined offers of third party mediation.

Any delay in resolving the issue will certainly add to the agony of the hapless crew members who steadfastly refuse to follow Mr Wang Xijue in his political leap across the Taiwan Strait. And while China may consider the two crew valuable bait to get Taiwan to talk, their enforced stay on the mainland could become a political liability for Beijing if it drags on in the face of the communists' promises to respect their wishes to return home.

On the other hand, Taiwan's stubborn refusal to enter into direct discussions for the return of the jumbo [jet] and crew leaves many people puzzled, especially when the other side made it plan they would return all that belongs to the KMT Government, except the defector. By sticking to their 1950's policy of "no talk, no communication and no contact" with the mainland, the KMT authorities have raised doubts about their ability to cope with contingencies that arise in the 1980's. The question now is whether changing circumstances call for a review of the "three no's" policy -- and whether this particular incident should be the catalyst.

It is no secret in Taiwan that communications between the island the mainland through third territories such as Hong Kong have been going on for years. Visits by Taiwan residents to the mainland have been on the increase, again through third territories. The KMT Government has acted humanely by not prosecuting all cases drawn to its attention. But it cannot always expect its political face to be salvaged by the existence of buffer zones such as Hong Kong, and certainly not Hong Kong after it reverts to China in 1997. At some stage Taiwan and its ageing leadership must bite the bullet and accept that more contacts with China are a fact, as Mr Wang's dramatic defection has highlighted. Not even the bitter memories of the civil war can wipe out the desire of families to be reunited.

[Report: "China and Portugal Are Discussing Time and Place for Talks on Macao Issue" -- ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Beijing, 7 May (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- China and Portugal are discussing the time and place for the talks on the Macao issue. Ma Yuzhen, a Foreign Minister spokesman, said the above in reply to the question raised by a reporter at this afternoon's news briefing.

At today's news briefing, three reporters asked about Captain Wang Xijue, who flew a CAL Boeing 747 cargo plane to the motherland. Ma Yuzhen did not give them a direct reply. He said: The Civil Aviation Administration is responsible for handling this issue. Please ask the Civil Aviation Administration.

A reporter asked what China comment had on the change of the head of the Afghan Government. This spokesman said: We have only one remark to make. That is, the key to the political settlement of the Afghan issue lies in the withdrawal of Soviet troops from the country.

PRC 'WORKING PAPER' URGES DISARMAMENT TALKS

OW090554 Beijing XINHUA in English 0539 GMT 9 May 86

[Text] United Nations, May 8 (XINHUA) -- China today said that arms reduction talks should not be "monopolized" by a few big countries, and multilateral deliberations and negotiations should take a "central role" in disarmament. "As the question of disarmament concerns the security of all countries, it should not be monopolized by a few big powers. Disarmament agreements between them must not jeopardize the interests of other countries," said a working paper China submitted to the U.N. Disarmament Commission today. The paper stressed that "all countries, big or small, militarily strong or weak, should enjoy equal rights to participate in the discussions and settlement of problems related to disarmament."

The working paper was addressed to Ambassador Henning Wegener of Federal Germany, chairman of the 1986 session of the commission, by Fan Guoxiang, Chinese ambassador for disarmament affairs and head of the Chinese delegation to the commission. The paper pointed out that multilateral disarmament deliberations and negotiations and bilateral, small-scaled or regional disarmament negotiations should be complementary and promote each other. But, "as compared with the latter, the former has the central role and primary responsibility," it emphasized.

The document urged the participants in bilateral negotiations to take an active and constructive part in the U.N. disarmament deliberations and multilateral negotiations. Negotiators in bilateral talks "should not overlook or hinder multilateral negotiations on the pretext that similar disarmament issues are being tackled in the bilateral negotiations," it added.

The participants in bilateral, small-scaled or regional disarmamaent negotiations, it said, "should constantly keep the United Nations and the multilateral negotiating body informed of the developments in their negotiations. It should be more so when the subject matter of their negotiations concerns the wider interests of other countries beyond those of the participants." The document urged all states to strictly abide by the provisions of the U.N. Charter, refrain from actions which might adversely affect the disarmament efforts, and display a constructive approach towards arms talks and the political will to reach agreement.

It is noted that the United Nations has a central role and primary responsibility in disarmament, and should encourage all disarmament measures and be kept informed of all disarmament efforts and developments, whether unilateral, bilateral, regional or multilateral, without prejudice to the progress of negotiations.

The United Nations is entitled to consider all international disarmament issues and the implementation of its rights should not be limited or obstructed, it added. It said that the United Nations should constantly oversee the implementation and observance of international disarmament agreements and take prompt and necessary actions against non-compliance. The U.N. Disarmament Commission began a closed-door session on Monday that will continue until the end of this month.

FOREIGN EXPERTS DISCUSS ASIAN ISSUES

OW081721 Beijing XINHUA in English 1540 GMT 8 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 8 (XINHUA) - Scholars from 13 Asian countries and regions gathered here to discuss the area's development experiences and perspectives at a conference which opened today. Topics to be discussed during the four-day conference, which is sponsored by the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences (CASS) and the United Nations University, include the forming of social and economic development strategies which are suitable to a country's concrete conditions and present international environment, the solution to agricultural development issues, and the role of the state, and science and technology in development. Also to be discussed are the potential and perspectives for regional cooperation.

Chinese representatives have presented five papers to the conference, dealing with such topics as rudimentary experiences and existing problems in China's agricultural development, and the advancement and experiences of the current reforms of China's economic structure.

In his opening speech, Li Shenzhi, vice-president of CASS, said that Asia has great potential for economic development and regional cooperation. "Asian countries have obtained many valuable experiences in the issues to be touched on at the conference. I am sure that the conference will contribute to further progress in economic development and regional cooperation among the Asian countries." he said. Also speaking at the opening ceremony was Kinhide Mushakoji, vice-president of the United Nations University.

U.S. SOVIET ARMS TALKS RESUME IN GENEVA

OW082016 Beijing XINHUA in English 1740 GMT 8 May 86

[Text] Geneva, May 8 (XINHUA) — The fifth round of U.S.-Soviet talks on reducing nuclear and space weapons opened at the Soviet mission here today with both sides sticking to their previous divergent positions. Speaking to reporters just minutes before the first plenum of the negotiations, Viktor Karpov, head of the Soviet delegation, said that the U.S. "star wars is the stumbling block" in the arms negotiations and he envisaged that the negotiations here would be difficult. The Soviet chief negotiator also dismissed Western press claims that the accident at the Soviet Chernobyl nuclear power plant cast doubt over the verification of Soviet nuclear disarmament. "I do not see any connection between the decisions we can reach in Geneva and Chernobyl." he said.

Karpov announced some personnel shuffle in the Soviet delegation. Karpov, who has been responsible for strategic arms talk, will take charge of the space weapons talk and will negotiate directly with U.S. chief delegate Max Kampelman.

Taking over for Karpov is Alesksey A. Obukhov, who had headed the talks on medium-range missiles and will be replaced by his former deputy, Lem A. Masterkov.

Since negotiations on the nuclear and space weapons started on March 12, 1985, no substantial progress has been achieved. The two superpowers are as far apart as ever, despite agreement to accelerate the talks reached by U.S. President Ronald Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev last November. Since the end of the fourth round of negotiations in January, Moscow has called for the elimination of all nuclear weapons by the end of this century, while Washington has suggested the abolishment of all medium-range missiles by 1990. But neither has accepted the others proposal. On the space weapons issue, the Soviet Union has been vehemently opposing the U.S. "star wars" programs ever since it was revealed. So, the talks resumed in an atmosphere clouded by mutual accusations of blocking progress in separate statements issued by Kampelman and Karpov on their return to Geneva Tuesday.

Karpov charged the United States with doing "virtually nothing" to break the stalemate. There "has been no real progress" since the talks first started, he said.

Kampelman said Washington is still waiting for the Soviets to get down to "serious negotiation" and to respond to U.S. proposals.

Observers said that the present round of negotiations, scheduled to last seven or eight weeks, are unlikely to make any breakthrough, although both sides might provide new arms reduction suggestions.

RENMIN RIBAO ON CURRENT U.S. -SOVIET RELATIONS

HK080903 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 6 May 86 p 6

["Commentary" by Zhang Liang: "The Disquiet U.S. -Soviet Relations"]

[Text] In the past few months of this year, U.S. -Soviet relations have been very irregular, one wave rising after another. The U.S. -Soviet summit in November last year has improved the political atmosphere in the relations between the two countries, their economic relations and trade have begun to ease up, and the two sides have maintained the momentum of holding dialogue. However, the two countries differ greatly on many issues and have endless disputes over them. Moreover, unexpected incidents have occurred from time to time, causing confrontation and markedly dispersing the atmosphere of relaxation.

The U.S. -Soviet relations have recently become strained. This is manifested first in the serious opposite stands of the two countries on disarmament. No progress was made at the fourth round of U.S. -Soviet talks on limitations of weapons in Geneva this year. The leaders of the two countries put forward one after the other new proposals on disarmament in January and February this year, but they stressed different things. Gorbachev proposed that by the end of this century, all nuclear weapons should be eliminated from the world. He particularly stressed that neither side should develop space weapons for attacks and that both sides should stop nuclear tests. On the other hand, Reagan proposed that the two sides should first reach agreement on medium-range missiles and stressed that the United States and the USSR should eliminate all medium-range nuclear missiles within the coming 3 years. Since these two proposals on disarmament differ greatly in many specific aspects, they have been the major topics of dispute between the two sides. The question of stopping nuclear tests in particular has caused fierce struggle between the two sides. On 6 August last year, the USSR unilaterally declared that it would temporarily stop nuclear tests and asked the United States to do the same, but the United States rejected this proposal. On 15 January and 31 March this year, the USSR against expressed that it would extend the period for temporary stoppage of nuclear tests so that the United States might respond.

However, the United States not only ignored the Soviet proposal, but acted in a diametrically opposite manner and carried out three underground nuclear tests in March and April.

The USSR has regarded stopping nuclear tests as "the most realistic way to stop the arms race," and that the current deadlock on nuclear disarmament may be broken if an agreement on stopping nuclear tests can be reached. However, the United States held that since the USSR has gained the upper hand in some aspects of nuclear arms, temporary stoppage of nuclear tests "does not tally with the security and interests of the United States, its friends, and allied countries" and that "appropriately conducting nuclear tests is indispensable for maintaining the reliability of our nuclear deterrent strength." As a matter of fact, the reason the United States and the USSR dispute over the question of stopping nuclear tests is because this question involves an important aspect of the contention for military superiority between the two sides. As pointed out by Western newspapers and magazines, the reason the USSR demands stoppage of nuclear tests is to prevent the United States from improving its nuclear weapons and developing space weapons, and the reason the United Sates does not want to stop nuclear tests is that it wants to strengthen its nuclear deterrent strength and promote its strategic defensive research. Therefore, faced with the uncompromising U.S. stand, the USSR announced on 11 [April] that it would no longer commit itself to temporary stoppage of all nuclear tests. Western diplomats in Moscow remarked that confrontation between the United States and the USSR on the question of nuclear tests has caused a new atmosphere of tension in U.S.-Soviet relations.

Second, the United States and the USSR have not yet agreed on a definite date for the second summit. Originally, both sides agreed in principle during the summit in November last year that Gorbachev would visit the United States to attend the second summit this year. However, because of differences between the two sides on disarmament and other issues, the date for the summit has not yet been fixed. In the beginning, Gorbachev proposed at the 27th CPSU Congress in February that concrete results must be obtained at the new summit in the most important aspects of arms restriction and reduction, and that at least understanding must be reached on stopping nuclear tests and eliminating U.S. and Soviet medium-range missiles in Europe. Public opinion in the West holds that the USSR in fact regards disarmament as the prerequisite for the summit. In this way, the date for the meeting may be postponed a long time. If the meeting cannot be held in June and July this year, it cannot be held when the United States is busy with the mid-term election either. Whether the meeting can be held in November after the election remains uncertain. The United States expressed that "it is impossible" to link the U.S.-Soviet summit with disarmament talks. It even held that it is precisely because there are differences between the two sides that a new summit is all the more necessary. Through negotiations, the United States and the USSR decided to hold a meeting of the foreign ministers of the two countries to prepare for the summit. However, a storm may arise from a clear sky. Not long ago, after the United States attacked Libya on the grounds of opposing terrorism, the USSR declared canceled the planned meeting of the foreign ministers of the two countries. Gorbachev expressed: "If the United States continues to act in this way to poison the atmosphere, it will cast a shadow over the meeting in the future." This again added difficulty to the summit. As some U.S. analysts thought, although to date the plan for holding the summit this year has not been officially canceled, ill omens have shown that the atmosphere in U.S.-Soviet relations has cooled.

Third, the strain in U.S.-Soviet relations is also manifested in bilateral relations and regional conflicts. A conspicuous instance is that on 7 March this year, the U.S. Department of State demanded that the USSR reduce its permanent personnel to the United Nations from 275 to 170. In its statement, the U.S. Department of State said that the enormous Soviet diplomatic mission to the United Nations has "constituted a threat to U.S. national security" and that the United STates has made this decision because the Soviets have engaged in activities that have nothing to do with the affairs of the United Nations, including espionage. The USSR held that the United States took "an imperious and groundless move" and expressed its "resolute protest." It also pointed out that such acts "cannot but most seriously affect" U.S. -Soviet relations. Besides, on 13 March, two U.S. warships purposely entered the territorial waters south of the Soviet Crimea peninsula to "probe the defensive strength of the USSR." The USSR lodged a protest saying that this U.S. act is "of the nature of putting on a show of force" and has a "clear provocative purpose." As far as regional conflicts are concerned, U.S. -Soviet confrontation has also apparently been intensified. Old problems remain and new ones have emerged. On 15 April, the United States launched an air raid against Libya and attacked the Soviet missile base in Libya. This made the dispute between the United States and the USSR become fierce once more. The USSR not only "resolutely denounced" the U.S. aggresive banditry, "but also demanded that the United States immediately stop such acts, else the USSR "be compelled to draw a conclusion with more far-reaching significance." Besides, this year, the United States will for the first time provide Angolan and Afghan guerrillas with several hundred advanced Stinger missiles and will continue to provide military aid to the Nicaraguan antigovernment armed forces. The U.S. WASHINGTON POST held that all this indicates "an important change in U.S. policy" to strengthen its offensive in regional conflicts.

Regarding U.S. -Soviet relations at present, a large number of commentaries in Western newspapers and magazines hold that while bothsides continue to stress the necessity of holding dialogue, the coloring of confrontation has increased. Some say that since the beginning of this year, the USSR has stressed a peace offensive and has put forward a series of proposals on disarmament. In view of West European countries' worries and anxiety about the balance of military forces in Europe, the USSR has also put forward the proposal of reducing conventional forces and dissolving both the Warsaw Treaty Organization and NATO. The purpose is to gain the initiative in the public opinion, to try to reach some disarmament agreements with the United States, and to compel the United States to give up the "star wars" program. Many Western diplomats also held that the reason the USSR is acting in this way also because it wants to gain time to implement its "accelerated development strategy" in order to invigorate its national strength. Therefore, it has to maintain the momentum of holding dialogue with the United States. On the other hand, the United States wants to make use of the present opportunity to compel the USSR to make some concessions in disarmament and to strengthen its offensive in regional conflicts.

In short, as viewed from the recent U.S. -Soviet relations, U.S. -Soviet relations will continue to be sometimes relaxed and sometimes strained while following the general pattern of contention and confrontation.

LI XIANNIAN MEETS U.S. TREASURY SECRETARY

OW081223 Beijing XINHUA in English 1157 GMT 8 May 86

He said China has achieved remarkable progress in various aspects since the open policy was implemented in 1979 and is summing up its experiences in order to overcome shortcomings and solve existing problems. Speaking on the relationship between China and the United States, Li held that, though progress has been made over the past few years, there are still issues to be solved. He hoped for a further development of the bilateral relations.

Baker said the U.S. and China have attained substantial progress in improving their bilateral relations over the past four or five years, adding that the two countries have much work to do in this field. He hoped to see more investment in China by U.S. entrepreneurs. "This will not only benefit the Chinese people but also the American people," he said.

Among those present were Wang Bingqian, state councillor and minister of finance, and Winston Lord, U.S. ambassador to China. Wu Xueqian, state councillor and foreign minister, had earlier met the U.S. visitors.

YANG DEZHI PREDICTS SUCCESS FOR U.S. VISIT

OW081824 Beijing XINHUA in English 1816 GMT 8 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 8 (XINHUA) -- Yang Dezhi, visiting chief of the general staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army, said here Wednesday evening that his current 16-day visit to the United States will be successful. At a dinner hosted by Chinese Ambassador to the United States Han Xu, General Yang expressed his hope that the friendship between the Chinese and American peoples and the friendly contacts between the armed forces of the two countries will continue to develop.

Yang's visit is at the invitation of Chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff Admiral William Crowe. The visit is in reciprocation of a visit to China by former Chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff Admiral John Vessey last year.

Yang and his party left here this morning for New River, North Carolina, at the end of their three-day visit to Washington. During his stay in Washington, Yang met with U.S. Vice President George Bush, U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger and Acting Secretary of State John Whitehead. He also held talks with Admiral Crowe and other members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff on issues of common concern. Yang and his party will visit several U.S. military installations during their tour, which will also take them to Florida, Utah, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Hawaii.

U.S. ADVISER ON ARMS CONTROL TALKS WITH USSR

OW90214 Beijing XINHUA in English 0055 GMT 9 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 8 (XINHUA) -- A top U.S. arms control official said today that the United States does not want the ongoing U.S.-Soviet arms control talks in Geneva to be disturbed by events like the U.S.-Libya conflicts and the Chernobyl nuclear plant accident.

Appearing on CBS's Morning News program, special arms control adviser, Paul Nitze said, "We try to make these negotiations as serious as we possibly can. We want to have an agreement. We want therefore to isolate, to the extent that is possible, the serious negotiations from outside things that might disturb them."

Asked whether there is some room for real progress, Nitze replied, "If the Soviets were to come to the conclusion that they really seriously want to make progress toward an outcome, I think it would be possible to move rapidly and positively toward a useful, concrete result." He pointed out, "It remains to be seen whether or not the Soviets really want to do that. At the moment, the indications are that they are more interested in the public opinion aspects, the pressure they can put upon us to make unwarranted concessions through their propaganda campaign." Nitze said that the United States would not lose patience. Rather, it is going "to continue the effort."

LIAOWANG ON U.S. 'WORLD HEGEMONY' OBJECTIVE

HK061524 Hong Kong LIAOWNAG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 18, 5 May 86 pp 28, 29

[Article by Wan Guang: "The U.S. Comeback Strategy"]

[Text] All from its determination to carry out the "star wars" plan to its recent actions to pursue "Reaganism" to step up regional contention shows that the long-term strategic objective of the U.S. authorities is to regain world hegemony. What is the historical background of this U.S. strategy? What is the essential content of this strategy? What difficulties will this strategy encounter? People are interested in these questions.

In the first few years following World War II, the world hegemony of the United States, reached its peak. However, the Soviet Union also developed rapidly in the postwar period, and some allies of the United States also recovered from the destructive effects of the war. In particular, the rise of the Third World caused a series of setbacks for the United States. After the failure in its aggression against Korea and the failure in the war of invading Vietnam from the 1960's to 1970's, coupled with the disastrous effects of economic crises, the United States declined sharply.

In 1971, then U.S. President Nixon said: "Compared with our status in the days immediately following World War II, the United States is now facing challenges we have never before imagined." Nixon's doctrine was to seek a balance of strength between the United States and the Soviet Union to prevent the Soviet Union from gaining superiority. Nixon began the "era of restoring talks" with the Soviet Union. He tried to use "detente" to contain the expansion of Soviet influence and gain time for his country to rebuild strength. From Nixon to the early period of the Carter administration, the United States made strategic retreat from some Asian areas. Under the influence of the "sequel of the Vietnam war," Carter said he would "use water to fight fire" and would avoid "using fire to fight fire." That is, he concentrated on using economic means to contend for the sphere of influence with the Soviet Union and tried to avoid taking military action in overseas areas.

On the other hand, the Soviet Union took advantage of the decline of the United States and adopted an "offensive strategy" in the 1970's under the "detente" environment to expand its sphere of influence. In particular, the Soviets sent troops to occupy Afghanistan in 1979 and extended their sphere of influence close to the Persian Gulf. This forced Carter to announce that he would carry out armed interference in the Gulf region in order to check the Soviet Union's southward offensive.

Reagan won two terms of the presidency by raising the slogan of "making America strong again." In his first term of office, Reagan rebuilt his country's military strength; intensified military deployment in Europe, the Middle East, and the Asia-Pacific region; and conducted direct military intervention in the Middle East and Central America. In the early 1980's, after passing a serious economic crisis in the West, the U.S. economy recovered rapidly, greatly strengthening its economic position in the capitalist world.

At that time, Washington changed its assessment of the balance of strength in the world. Its new viewpoint can be found in the remarks uttered by Secretary of State Shultz in 1985. He said: "In the past 4 years, the basic things in U.S.-Soviet relations have obviously changed." "The United States is restoring its military and economic strength and at the same time restoring its self-confidence." "On the contrary, the Soviets are facing profound structural economic difficulties and a turbulent situation regarding its allies and its diplomatic activities.... they are now on the defensive in many areas of the world. So, we have every reason to believe that the balance of strength is to our advantage."

The U.S. authorities formulate policy according to this assessment of the situation. In Shultz' words, the current President of the United States will have to reassume "an active leading role."

In his 1984 State of the Union message, Reagan said: The United States will "demonstrate its leading position in the field of technology" and will develop "our next border: outer space."

In his 1985 State of the Union message, he said: "We have reassumed our historical role of being the leader of the free world," and we will usher in "the second revolution, which will bring hope and changes to the United States, a revolution which will advance the boundary of knowledge and space and will raise our progress to a new high." This year, he said in his State of the Union message: "Now it is time for the United States to give full play to its capabilities." The United States will "enlarge the big family of the free world."

The long-term strategic objective that Reagan will pursue in his second term of office is to make full use of the country's technological and economic advantages, especially the country's leading position in the new technological revolution, to rebuild its world hegemony. It will not only seize the military strategic superiority over the Soviet Union, but will also develop its superiority over other developed countries and developing countries.

The "star wars" plan pursued by the Reagan administration serves this precise strategic purpose. Execution of this plan will break through the current basic equilibrium of military strength between the United States and the Soviet Union. By developing space weapons -- to be deployed by the end of this century or in the next -- the United States will gain military strategic superiority. This plan will also promote the country's technological development and consolidate its leading position in the technological revolution, and will stimulate economic growth in the United States. Therefore, it is a plan to seize comprehensive hegemony and to win military, technological, and economic advantages.

The strategic purpose of the United States is also reflected in "Reaganism," a doctrine that the Reagan administration is pursuing. On 14 March, Reagan said in his State of the Union message: The United States has "duties and security interests" in all parts of the world outside its own boundary, so it will exercise "powerful and effective leadership." His message emphasized that regional conflicts form "a key link in U.S.-Soviet relations," because "the Soviet Union cannot continue to pursue its policy of the 1970's."

He said that the Soviet advance in the past is not irreversible. The United States is now changing tactics to consolidate its current positions and will take more offensive actions in the Third World to expand its positions. The State of the Union message also said: Because of its limited strength, the United States will use various means to assist and support local military forces. Reagan recently set up a secret "208 commission" to coordinate affairs in this regard. The United States will strengthen its ability to participate in "low-intensity" conflicts so as to conduct armed threats, attacks, and interference against Third World conutries.

In February this year, Reagan and the U.S. naval authorities announced that the United States will hold control of 16 straits and waterways that are the key passages linking various major seas and oceans in the world.

Obviously, the U.S. strategic objective of regaining world hegemony will not be realized within Reagan's tenure of office. So Reagan said in this year's State of the Union message: At present, we will "determine the line for the remaining years of the 1980's, or in fact, for the remaining time of this century." So, the strategy formulated by the Reagan administration is aimed at a future period extending into the next century. From the angle of U.S. history, this stragegy represents its efforts to stage a comeback to regain world hegemony, which was once shaken.

However, the development of the world situation in the decades since World War II and the development of various factor -- including the Third World, the Soviet Union, the allies of the United States, and the domestic situation of the United States -- have made it impossible for the United States to regain the absolute world hegemony it enjoyed in the early postwar years. Indeed, the United States has improved things in some aspects in recent years, but the overall conditions show that it has not fundamentally reversed the decling tendency of its ability to control and infulence the world.

The United States is now faced with many difficulties. First of all, the foundation of the U.S. economy is not solid enough. In redent years, the United States relied on the policies of high budget deficits, high interest rates, and high exchange rates of the U.S. dollar to support its economy, but these policies have brought about adverse consequences. In 1985, the growth rate of the U.S. economy slowed down, and it is likely that a new economic crisis may occur in the comming years. In 1985, the country's foreign trade deficit reached nearly $150 billion, and foreign funds flowing into the country totalled some $1,000 billion. For the first time since 1914, the United States has become a net debtor country. In fiscal year 1985, its financial deficit reached $212.3 billion. By 1 April 1986, the total amount of national debt had topped $2,000 billion. Its economic eapacity will seriously affect the pace of its arms expansion.

Since Reagan come to power, the extensive peace movement which involves all social strata has been surging in the United States. The domestic peace movement in the United States and the mass antinuclear and peace movements in other parts of the world echo each other and form strong pressure on the U.S. authorities. Its "Reaganist" policy of assisting the Nicaraguan antigovernment armed forces and its Central American policy have also encountered opposition at home.

The tendency of independence is growing among West European countries, which not only have political and military strategic differences with the United States, but also compete intensely with the United States in the economic and technological fields.

The United States is trying to collapse the Soviet economy through a new round of comprehensive arms race, and is also trying to force the Soviets to make concessions in arms negotiations by relying on its strength. However, the U.S. authorities have also admitted that the Soviet Union under the leadership of Gorbachev is a tough rival.

The development of the tendency of independent and self-determination among Third World countries and their strong opposition to the U.S. policies toward the Middle East, southern Africa, and Central America pose the hardest difficulties for the United States as it tries to launch offensives in the Third World. The recent incidents in Haiti and the Philippines show that many pillars on which the United States is relying are not at all reliable.

All this shows why Reagan said he had to adopt a policy of combining "restrained containment" with "restrained detente" in his second term of office. The United States still needs time to put its home in order and to consolidate and expand its overseas positions so as to gain advantages.

This is the background situation in the new period in which the United States has to continue the confrontation and the dialogue with the Soviet Union at the same time.

'U.S. AIM WAS TO GET RID OF AL-QADHDHAFI'

HK021015 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 17, 28 Apr 86 pp 24-25

[Article by contributing LIAOWANG reporter Mu Guangren: "U.S. Air Raid on Libya -- The Biggest U.S. Military Operation Since the War in Vietnam"]

[Text] On 15 April, the U.S. air raid on Libya shocked the whole world. It was the biggest irony of 1986, designated the "International Peace Year" bu the United Nations.

According to the Pentagon spokesman, more than 100 military planes were sent out in this action. They included 18 FB-111 bombers which took off from a base in Britain, 28 KC-10 and KC-135 tankers which refueled the bombers en route, and 5 EF-111 electronic warfare planes which were responsible for jamming the Libyan radars. In addition, 26 A-6, A-7, and A-18 [as published] fighters and at least 24 support planes took off from the two carriers which were in the Mediterranean. There were a total of 160 warplanes on the two carriers -- the Coral Sea and the America and some of these planes took part in the air strike. Another 18 warships were on the alert nearby.

The U.S. Defense Department acknowledged that the air strike on Libya was the largest military action of the United States since the end of the Vietnam war.

What was the aim of this large-scale action which involved such a large force? Washington is still trying hard to describe this air strike as a "major operation" to remove the malignant tumor of terrorism. In order to justify this action, Washington showed intelligence it had collected through advanced technical means about the bombing of a discotheque in West Berlin and abut plans which the terrorists might soon carry out. However, Al-Qadhdhafi flatly denied any connection with these things.

The U.S. decision was much more important than the intelligence. As a matter of fact, the United States was bent on dealing a blow at Al-Qadhdhafi, no matter whether it could find some excuse or collect some reliable intelligence, as in its invasion of the Gulf of Sidra in March, when the United States had decided to do something no matter whether or not Libya fired at the invading American warships and warplanes. The U.S. decision was to make Al-Qadhdhafi the first target of attack. Collecting intelligence about terrorists and provoking Libya to open fire were merely the means that could create the condition, or give it some pretext, to execute the decision.

"The drinker's heart is not in the cup." Obviously, Washington had ulterior motives. Getting drunk would be a good excuse for creating a disturbance to realize one's scheme. Therefore, "antiterrorism" was a good wine for Washington to drink.

The U.S. aim was to get rid of Al-Qadhdhafi, and the Americans did not conceal their intention. The air raid was made just 3 weeks after the U.S. Navy's invasion of the Gulf of Sidra on 24 March, or merely 102 days after the Coral Sea was ordered to sail close to Libya on 3 January. So the air raid was just part of the serial play aimed at getting rid of Al-Qadhdhafi lives were one of the five targets of this air strike. In the raid was just part of the serial play aimed at getting rid of Al-Qadhdafi by armed force. The Al-Aziziyah barracks where Al-Qadhdhafi lives were one of the five targets of this air strike. In the raid, Al-Qadhdhafi's 15-month-old adopted daughter was killed, and two of his sons were wounded. Al-Qadhdhafi himself narrowly escaped death.

It was rumored that a few days after the air raid, armed conflicts occurred inside some barracks in Tripoli, and Washington did not conceal its delight at this rumor by hailing "well done." It even openly claimed that the U.S. military action also served the purpose of supporting the anti-Al-Qadhdhafi forces in Libya. This may be regarded as a move to "stir up a munity through military interference."

Cairo's AL-AHRAM reported that the United States three times asked Egypt to send its ground forces to fight against Libya in coordination with the U.S. military action, but Egypt turned down these requests. The United States was trying to "murder with a borrowed knife."

In January this year, the United States called for its West European allies to join hands in applying economic sanctions against Libya encountered difficulties caused by the fall in oil prices so as to bring down Al-Qadhdhafi. This was an attempt to "drop stones on someone who has fallen into a well." However, the West European allies also turned down the U.S. proposal. All these stratagems served one single purpose, that is, to get rid of Al-Qadhdhafi.

The Americans who decided to get rid of Al-Qadhdhafi have their reasons: They regard Libya as the "headquarters" for all the world's terrorist activities. However, more American people think that the use of violence in retaliation will just stimulate an escalation of terrorist activities. Most of the European allies also hold the second viewpoint.

The United States is trying to get rid of Al-Qadhdhafi not only because it hates him. It has another logic, the logic of a superpower. When the crisis in U.S.-Libyan relations appeared, Libya invited the Soviet Union to install seven SAM-5 missile bases. Washington holds that the existence of the Al-Qadhdhafi regime gives the Soviet Union a chance to increase its influence in the southern Mediterranean region

Because the United States is contending for dominance over the Mediterranean Sea with the other superpower, the Pentagon's combat schemes for attacking Libya included many strategic considerations.

On 18 April, the Pentagon's spokesman Sims described the air strike as a "nearly perfect military action" which was "unprecedented in U.S. military history". He said that it was a deep night operation far from base under extremely difficult conditions.

His words may include the following meanings:

-- The United States for the first time used its advanced weapons of the 1970's and 1980's in a real battle. These weapons included the improved model of F8-111 fighter-bomber which has the capacity to fly a long distance, the EF-111 electronic warfare plane which can jam the enemy's radar, and HARM missiles which are used to destroy the enemy's radar. In the battle of the Gulf of Sidra, the United States also used the Harpoon antiship missile. These are all weapons used in coordinated battles in modern warfare.

-- The United States for the first time successfully employed the tactics of using the FB-111 long-distance bomber. The FB-111S were put into service in the late 1960's. The planes were used in the Vietnam war, but their operations were not quite successful. Afterward, the planes' properties were improved. This time, the FB-111S took off from an air base in Britain and flew along the eastern coast of the Atlantic Ocean, because France and Spain did not allow the planes to fly through their territorial airspace. They passed through the Strait of Gibraltar and flew at a very low altitude. According to Sims, the planes flew only 150 meters above the sea surface en route to raid Tripoli. This showed that the Pentagon intended to test its post-Vietnam war long-distance bombing capacity.

-- The United States for the first time fought a large-scale sea and air battle against a distant Mediterranean country completely on its own. After World War II, in the Korea war, the Vietnam war, and other minors the United States mainly helped its proxies to fight, but this time it fought all by itself.

I am not a military expert, and the accuracy of my argument is not certain. However, these things all show the U.S. strategic considerations, and this obviously goes behond the limits of coping with terrorism.

A related question is: Will the United States follow the old disastrous road? After drawing a lesson from the painful experience of the Vietnam war, isolationism rose again in the United States. Nixon and other people sadly admitted that the United States had passed the peak in the postwar period. So in the past more than 10 years, the Americans did not recklessly involve themselves in military conflicts in any part of the world. However, since Reagan came to power, the United States has restored its strength. Its rival -- the Soviet Union -- is busy dealing with economic difficulties and power transfers. Under these circumstances, President Reagan seems bolder in taking military action overseas.

The White House does not fear the Third World. In its eyes, the air raid on Libya would just evoke some protests, which would not do any actual harm to the United States.

The West European allies were all seeking better relations with the Middle East countries, and they all had interests in Libya. So they did not want to see the escalation of the U.S.-Libyan conflict. Then, the United States decided to go its own way and fight the battle on its own.

It seems that the drinker has indeed gotten drunk. Washington is somewhat intoxicated with its successes in the few rounds of fighting, with the cheers of thousands of Americans who called the White House after the air raid, and with the dream of the "revival of the American century."

Such intoxication will give rise to a latent crisis. It may prevent the White House from soberly realizing that not every American agrees with its military adventure, because this adventure will eventually endanger the security and fundamental interests of the American people. It may also prevent the White House from seeing the centrifugal tendency among its allies developing along with its adventures and from seeing the mainstream of the world's people who demand peace. It is possible that some people may become tipsy and lose their bearings, and finally backtrack to the old road of pursuing a new gunboat policy to seek hegemony in the world. However, will the American people allow them to repeat the painful historical experience?

ROUNDUP VIEWS U.S. MANEUVERS IN CENTRAL AMERICA

OW072032 Beijing XINHUA in English 1748 GMT 7 May 86

["Roundup: U.S. Conducts Series of Military Maneuvers in Central America (by Hu Tairan)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, May 7 (XINHUA) -- The United States has held a series of large-scale military maneuvers in the Caribbean and Central America since the beginning of this year, which were apparently directed against Nicaragua.

Since February, four joint exercises have been staged by U.S. and Honduran forces in six of the ten provinces of Honduras, one of which was carried out only 25 kilometers from the border of Nicaragua.

The newly-concluded maneuver, codenamed "Cabanas-86," was conducted in the country's Gracias a Dios Province, which borders on Nicaragua. In addition to the 2,000 soldiers involved in the exercises, the United States also sent 96 engineers and 450 tons of materials there to build a military airport for the Hercules airfreighters 20 kilometers from Nicaragua. Meanwhile, two U.S. warships cruised on the sea near the country, and 50 engineers were dispatched to Costa Rica to construct a runway for the Hercules 30 kilometers from Nicaragua.

The United States participated in the 4,000-soldier "General Tosta" military maneuvers in Honduras late in March. It mobilized 18 helicopters to send 600 Honduran troops to the border to resist the "aggressors" on the pretext that Nicaraguan forces had invaded Honduras. This increased the tension along the border of the two countries and was thought to be the "first U.S. combat exercise" near Nicaragua and an "escalation of its military action" in Central America. It has also sent a large number of military adivsers to Honduras to train the anti-government forces of Nicaragua there, according to the Nicaraguan government.

To the serious concern of the world, however, the United States started a series of large-scale amphibious military excercises late last month. The war game involved nearly 10,000 U.S. marines, one aircraft carrier and more than ten other warships as well as about 170 paramilitary personnel from Jamaica, Antigua, Dominica, Grenada, St. Kitts-Nevis and St. Lucia, six English-speaking island nations in the Caribbean.

The manouvers, codenamed "Ocean Venture '86," began with a mock landing on Puerto Rico's island of Vieques and will end up with another on Grenada on May 11. The United States claimed the game would strengthen their ability of offering emergency "military aid" to the Caribbean in case some of the island countries should fall into the hands of "radicals."

The Latin American peace-loving forces, represented by the Contadora Group, are seeking to sign the draft of Central American peace treaty to solve the crisis in the area, and the countries concerned there have all expressed their wish for peaceful resolution.

But the U.S. Government, while urging the Congress to approve the bill of 100 million dollars aid to Nicaraguan anti-government forces, have subsequently carried out military exercises in the Caribbean, which apparently runs counter to the efforts by the Contadora Group and the will of the Central American people. The attempt of U.S. actions and their possible consequences cannot but cause great concern in Central America as well as the rest of the world.

JI PENGFEI REAFFIRMS HONG KONG EMPLOYMENT POLICY

OW081233 Beijing XINHUA in English 1153 GMT 8 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 8 (XINHUA) -- State Councillor Ji Pengfei today expressed the hope that expatriate civil servants working in Hong Kong will remain at their posts after 1997. Ji, who is also director of the Hong Kong and Macao Affairs Office under the State Council, was speaking during a meeting with Wation Masters, president of the Hong Kong Overseas Civil Servants Association, and his delegation.

Ji said that the policy of the Chinese Government toward expatriate civil servants working in Hong Kong will not change. Ji said that all the foreigners working in Hong Kong, if they wish, may retain their posts, which, Ji said, has been specified in the Sino-British Joint Declaration on Hong Kong and will be included in the Basic Law of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region. Ji hoped that overseas civil servants in Hong Kong will feel at ease and continue to make their contributions to Hong Kong's development and prosperity. There are more than 2,900 overseas civil servants in Hong Kong, including 1,300 who are members of the Hong Kong Overseas Civil Servants Association.

Masters said that many of the overseas civil servants in Hong Kong from Britain and other countries welcomed the signing of the Sino-British Declaration on Hong Kong and the younger among them are willing to work in the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region after 1997. The Hong Kong visitors arrived here May 6 as guests of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions.

LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION ON CAMBODIA ISSUE

HK081103 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 18, 5 May 86 p 30

[Article by Tang Tianri: "Obstacles to Resolution of the Cambodia Issue"]

[Text] The 8-point proposal of the CGDK [Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea] on politically resolving the Cambodia issue is justifiable, reasonable, and feasible. It is welcomed and supported by the international community as a whole. However, the Vietnamese authorities took the unreasonable stand of rejection and developed obstacles to peaceful resolution of the Cambodia issue.

Over the past month and more, the Vietnamese authorities put forward this and that reason through their propaganda and diplomatic offensive to defend their position of opposing this proposal. Two typical reasons were put forward by Vietnamese Foreign Affairs Minister Nguyen Co Thach in a press interview held in Bangkok on 20 April.

Nguyen Co Thach said: One of the reasons Vietnam rejects the 8-point proposal is because it does not recognize the Heng Samrin regime as the legitimate government but asks Vietnam to recognize the CGDK. It is widely known that the CGDK is not only the legitimate government supported by the Cambodian people, but is also the legitimate government of Cambodia recognized by most countries in the world. It is the mainstay in the fight against the Vietnamese invaders. It and Vietnam are the two directly belligerent parties. The key to resolving the Cambodia issue politically lies in complete withdrawal of Vietnamese forces from Cambodia. This issue can only be resolved through negotiations between the two belligerent parties -- that is, between the CGDK and Vietnam.

It is proceeding from just this fact that the CGDK made the 8-point proposal and called for holding talks with Vietnam on the process of withdrawing the Vietnamese forces from Cambodia. Moreover, it allows them to complete the withdrawal in two stages within a specified time. This is justifiable and reasonable. However, the response of the Vietnamese authorities of refusing to hold talks with the CGDK and opposing the 8-point proposal can only show that it has no intention of withdrawing its forces from Cambodia.

The other reason of the Vietnamese authorities is that the Heng Samrin regime "has put the whole of Cambodia under its rule," but the 8-point proposal calls for the formation of a coalition government comprising four parties and gives only one-fourth of the power to Heng Samrin. Nguyen Co Thach said: Cambodia can be likened to a piece of cake, of which only a quarter is given to Heng Samrin. But this whole piece of cake is in Heng Samrin's pocket. Therefore, this CGDK proposal is meaningless, and so forth. As a matter of fact, over the years, this Cambodian "cake" has been trampled upon by the 200,000-strong invading Vietnamese Army. The Heng Samrin regime is a puppet made by Vietnamese bayonets and is a political plaything in Vietnam's pocket. Without the support of the invading Vietnamese forces, the regime would collapse in a month. Thus, how could the regime "put the whole of Cambodia under its rule"?

Acting in the spirit of great national unity and national liberation, the 8-point CGDK proposal suggests that following the completion of the first stage of Vietnamese troop withdrawal, Heng Samrin and his group attend the CGDK talks on forming a 4-party coalition government led by Prince Sihanouk which would appoint Son Sann as prime minister. The four forces would have the right of being the political forces of Cambodian society. This reflects the CGDK's breadth of vision. Obviously, the Vietnamese authorities are not satisified with the suggestion of including the Heng Samrin group as one of the four political forces of Cambodian society. Rather, they want it to become "the only legitimate representative" of the Cambodian people and force the people to accept it. Thus, they could eliminate the patriotic force of Democratic Kampuchea. Vietnam has attempted to put Cambodia under its long-term control and occupation in the name of the Heng Samrin regime, which was created by Vietnam itself.

The Vietnamese authorities have repeatedly claimed that the "strategic alliance" of the three Indochinese countries "is of vital importance to the life-and-death strategic goals of the three countries" and "is not negotiable." What the Vietnamese authorities pursue is to make Cambodia is an independent country which is united within its integral territory, free, democratic, peaceful, neutral, and does not enter alliance with other countries. It is also a country in which no foreign forces are present. This is of course not the point that interests Vietnam.

Judging from the recent propaganda and diplomatic activities of the Vietnamese authorities, we can see that Vietnam did not change its position and goal of invasion, though it constantly changes its methods and strategies. Vietnam chants the slogan of "loving peace" and "being willing to resolve the Cambodia issue politically." In fact, it still stubbornly clings to the practice of long-term occupation of Cambodia through military means. In the Vietnamese authorities' own words, "We resolve the crucial points of issues by fighting, and we negotiate in order to work against time, to make the opposite side slacken its vigilance, and to magnify the internal contradictions of the opposite side." Therein lies the crux of the problem that Vietnam uses this and that reason to reject the CGDK's 8-point proposal.

CPC CONGRATULATES ROMANIAN PARTY ON ANNIVERSARY

OW080556 Beijing XINHUA in English 0547 GMT 8 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 7 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Communist Party Central Committee today warmly congratulated the Romanian Communist Party on its 65th founding anniversary. In a message to its Romanian counterpart, the CPC Central Committee praised the Romanian party as the country's staunch political leading force, which has carried forward the revolutionary traditions of social and national liberation and faithfully defended national independence, state sovereignty and people's interests.

The message said, the Romanian Communist Party, under the leadership of its Central Committee headed by General Secretary Nicolai Ceausescu, has led the Romanian people to great achievements in the country's socialist construction by applying consistently the fundamental principles of scientific socialism to the concrete conditions of Romania, formulating and carrying out the strategy and policies which tally with the actual situation of the country. The Romanian party and people are now striving to implement the resolutions of the party's 13th congress, to fulfill the 1968-1990 economic plan and the development program through the year 2000. The attainment of these goals will surely bring the country greater prosperity, the message noted.

The message also paid high tribute to the unremitting struggle waged by the Romanian Communist Party for easing the international tension, safeguarding world peace and supporting the just cause of world peoples, in line with the principle that relations between states must be established on the basis of respect for national independence and state sovereignty, full equality of rights, mutual benefits, restraint from interference in others' internal affairs, from the use or threat of force.

The Romanian party's principled stand and actions in dealing with relations between parties have been a valuable contribution to the smooth advance of the current international communist movement, the message said.

The CCP Central Committee expressed satisfaction with the growth of its traditional friendship with the Romanian party. It believes, the message said, that the friendly cooperation developed between the two countries on a long-term, stable and all-around basis, will be further strengthened and consolidated.

ROMANIA'S DINCA IN BEIJING FOR EXHIBITION

Meets Zhao Ziyang

OW071417 Beijing XINHUA in English 1406 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 7 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang met Ion Dinca, first vice-premier of Romania, and his party here today. Dinca is in China to attend the opening ceremony of the Romanian industrial exhibition which was held in Beijing yesterday.

Zhao said the exhibition shows the tremendous achievements made by the Romanian people in their socialist construction under the leadership of President Nicolae Ceausescu. He considered that the exhibition will give the Chinese people a chance to become more familiar with and to learn from Romania.

Dinca expressed his thanks to Zhao for China's hospitality in hosting the exhibition.

Zhao told him that China is working hard for implementation of the Sino-Romanian trade agreement signed during President Ceausescu's visit to China in 1985. He expressed his belief that the agreement will be reached by the joint efforts of the two countries in an energetic, frank and down-to-earth spirit.

Dinca noted that the implementation of the agreement will be assisted by the opening of new channels for cooperation. He also gave Zhao a brief account of Romanian economic construction. State Councillor Song Ping met and feted the Romanian friends here this evening.

LIAOWANG VIEWS DEVELOPMENT OF SINO-YUGOSLAV TIES

HK061235 Beijing LIAOWANG in Chinese No 16, 21 Apr 86 pp 11-13

[Article by Zhu Minzhi "Push Sino-Yugoslav Friendly Relations to a Higher Level -- President Vlajkovic's Visit to China"]

[Text] Radovan Vlajkovic is the first president of the Presidency of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to have visited China since Sino-Yugoslav relations entered a period of overall and steady development. China and Yugoslavia are both in the process of reform. Both parties are exploring and opening up the path of construction and development in light of their own national conditions and are continuously advancing along this path. This visit is an event of great importance in the history of Sino-Yugoslav relations. It has made a new contribution to pushing the steady, friendly, and cooperative relations in all fields between China and Yugoslavia to a higher level.

Invaluable Friendship

In recent years, political relations between the two countries have developed smoothly and there have been frequent high-level exchanges. President Vlajkovic's visit to China amply shows that many new features have developed in Sino-Yugoslav relations, namely, that both parties have a common language and a unanimous view on a series of major issues at home and abroad and that a friendly and cooperative relationship of mutual respect, trust, and study and joint exploration in all fields has developed between the two countries. In their conversations with President Vlajkovic, the Chinese leaders, including Hu Yaobang, Deng Xiaoping, Zhao Ziyang, and Li Xiannian, spoke highly of the Sino-Yugoslav relations, saying that the friendly and cooperative relationship in all fields between China and Yugoslavia is invaluable in the world today and that it is not an ordinary relationship. The Chinese party and government highly cherish this relationship and, as always, will strive for the long-standing, stable, and all-round development of Sino-Yugoslav friendly relations. Vlajkovic also sincerely indicated that Yugoslavia has consistently made great efforts to constantly improve Yugoslav-Chinese friendly relations.

Yugoslavia initiated a reform over 3 decades ago. After effecting numerous reforms, it has accumulated rich experience and can be regarded as the forerunner of reforms among socialist countries. China has always paid close attention to, studied, and used Yugoslav experience. During Vlajkovic's visit to China, both parties exchanged experiences in smashing fixed patterns and following their own paths of socialist construction in light of their own national conditions.

Vlajkovic explained to the Chinese comrades that Yugoslav leaders have consistently adhered to the strategic policy of development, i.e., the socialist system of self-government, which they jointly laid down with Comrade Tito. Three years ago Yugoslavia approved a long-term plan for stabilizing the economy and last year it approved a 5-year development plan and a 20-year long-term plan for social and economic development.

The League of Communists of Yugoslavia will hold its 13th Congress next June. The meeting will define Yugoslavia's major policy for stabilizing the economy and developing self-government in light of the current problems in the country.

Mutually passing on experiences in reforms constitutes an important component of the all-round cooperation between the two countries. Their reforms have an outstanding feature in common, that is, they face up to reality and the existing problems. The Yugoslav comrades told the Chinese comrades that Yugoslavia has many good points, as well as many weak points. Yugoslav leaders have never covered up their problems and the Yugoslav people are determined to spare no efforts in firmly safeguarding Yugoslavia's socialist self-government. In their briefings, the Chinese comrades said: China has implemented the policy of opening up to the outside world and invigorating the domestic economy for 7 years in light of its own conditions. We have basically achieved many successes but there are also a few problems. The national economy is now developing steadily and proportionately.

The Chinese side fully praised the Yugoslav comrades for passing on their experiences to the Chinese side sincerely and without reserve, calling Yugoslavia China's comrade-in-arms cherishing the same ideals and following the same path. President Vlajkovic cited China as a great country which is bold in making new breakthroughs for its vigorous development.

President Vlajkovic is very much interested in the progress of China's economic structural reform. He toured Xian, Guangzhou, and the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone, visited some construction projects, and noted the reform achievements. After visiting Shenzhen, he said: A reform conducted by such a great country as China will exert a very important influence on all countries and the development of human society.

For a Common Objective

During President Vlajkovic's visit to China, both parties expressed a jointly pursued objective, that is, striving for peace and development. This will enable each country to become prosperous more rapidly in a peaceful environment and, at the same time, give impetus to the enconomic development of developing countries. Peace and development are the two outstanding issues in the current international situation. The contention for hegemony between the two superpowers has strained East-West relations. The irrational international economic order has seriously undermined the economic rights and interests of developing countries and affected world stability.

In their conversations with the Yugoslav comrades, the Chinese leaders stressed: China is now concerned with how to carry out construction at home and pursue peace abroad. As far as China is concerned, it will be impossible to attain development and to realize the grand objective of the four modernizations without a peaceful international environment. China hopes to be strong and regards itself as a force for safeguarding peace. During his talks with President Vlajkovic, President Li Xiannian reaffirmed China's determination to devote itself to the cause of safeguarding world peace and development. He stressed: China supports whatever is beneficial to peace and construction. We shall develop state relations so long as they are in keeping with the five principles of peaceful coexistence, including developing our relations with the United States and the Soviet Union. Vlajkovic indicated Yugoslavia's desire to adhere to its nonaligned foreign policy, to vigorously seek world peace and development, and to build itself into a rich and powerful country. He said: The irrational economic relationships in today's world have stalled the development of various countries and made it impossible for many countries to give scope to their creative ability in their own interests and those of the world.

These countries have the right to ask the developed countries to further open their markets and to use appropriate capital in development in order to promote the economic growth of developing countries.

As an important political force on the current international stage, the Nonaligned Movement has made an important contribution to the peace and development process of the people of the world. And Yugoslavia is indeed a founder of the Nonaligned Movement. It steadfastly adheres to the nonaligned policy and strives to ease international tensions, to work for world peace and stability, and to set up an equitable and rational new international economic order. President Li Xiannian said to the Yugoslav comrades: With China pursuing an independent foreign policy and Yugoslavia pursuing a nonaligned policy, our objectives are identical.

The Steadily Developing Economic Cooperation

President Vlajkovic's visit has not only strengthened cooperation in international affairs between the two countries and stimulated the development of their friendly relations but will also promote the steady development of their cooperation in the economic field.

On this occasion, the parties especially held talks on economic cooperation. The results of the talks showed that both parties attach great importance to, and are interested in, developing economic and trade relations and that there is potential for developing economic cooperation.

The economic and trade relations between the two countries have constantly developed since 1983 and reached their highest level last year. The two countries also signed a 5-year long-term trade agreement and order. The two countries have also achieved many new results in production cooperation in recent years. They have signed many contracts, most of which have been signed in the last 3 years. Since the regular meeting of the Sixth Sino-Yugoslav Mixed Committee on Industrial Cooperation last October, both parties have signed new contracts. The local authorities of the two countries have also energetically developed economic and trade relations by signing many agreements. Relations between six pairs of friendly provinces or cities have been established since 1980.

Both parties indicated that they will try by every possible means to tap potentials in order to speed up the economic and trade development of the two countries. To date, they have adopted a series of measures. Both parties held that, in order to fully tap the potential for economic cooperation between the two countries, it is feasible to adopt numerous flexible methods, including barter trade and cooperation in production, science, and technology. To promote the development of economic and trade relations between the two countries, Yugoslavia will also hold a Yugoslav-Chinese trade week activity and so on.

Both parties held that, although the Chinese and Yugoslav economies have attained new developments, they still leave something to be desired. Both parties indicated that they will continue to adopt positive measures to stimulate the further development of their economic and trade relations in line with the principles of equality, mutual benefit, and each supplying what the other needs. Looking into the future, the prospects for Sino-Yugoslav economic cooperation are very bright.

After winding up his 7-day visit, President Vlajkovic bade farewell to the Chinese comrades at Guangzhou airport. Before his departure he told Chinese reporters: We attach great importance to this visit to China. We wish the Chinese people greater successes in economic construction and social development.

CANADA'S PRIME MINISTER ARRIVES IN BEIJING

[Text] Beijing, May 8 (XINHUA) -- Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and Mrs. Mulroney arrived here tonight by special flight for a five-day official visit at the invitation of Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang. Among his entourage are Richard V. Gorham, Canadian ambassador to China, Bernard Roy, principal secretary to the prime minister, J.A. Doucet, senior advisor to the prime minister, and Derek Burney, associate under-secretary for external affairs. The Canadian guests were greeted at the airport by Mo Wenxiang, Chinese minister of aviation and industry.

Holds Talks With Zhao Ziyang

OW090733 Beijing XINHUA in English 0647 GMT 9 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 9 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney today expressed the desire to further develop cooperation between the two countries. The two prime ministers held talks this morning in the Great Hall of the People.

Zhao Ziyang said Sino-Canadian relations in terms of politics, econmoics, and trade and technology have been satisfactory ever since the two countries established diplomatic relations. Recent years have witnessed new developments in their economic and technological cooperation, which has great potential, he said. China is ready to explore new ways to expand cooperation with Canada in agriculture, animal husbandry, energy, aviation industry, communications and light industry, he said. The Chinese premier thanked the Canadian Government and Mulroney for the importance they attach to Sino-Canadian friendship and their support for China's modernization program.

Mulroney assured Zhao of Canada's support for China's economic restructuring and opening to the outside world, and its full cooperation. Developed countries should give more aid to the developing countries and open their domestic markets to provide them with more opportunities to export, the Canadian prime minister said.

Zhao praised Canada's policy in this regard as "far-sighted and wise." Mulroney briefed Zhao on the just-ended Tokyo summit. Zhao explained China's positions on major international issues. Canadian Ambassador to China Richard V. Gorham and Chinese aviation industry minister Mo Wenxiang attended the talks.

Earlier this morning, the Canadian prime minister was accorded a warm welcome at a formal ceremony presided over by Zhao Ziyang in Tiananmen Square. After a 19-gun salute, Mulroney, in Zhao's company, inspected a guard of honor formed by men from the three services of the Chinese People's Liberation Army. Some 300 youngsters greeted the Canadian guests, waving streamers and bouquets. Present on that occasion were Ji Pengfei, Chinese state councillor, Rong Yiren, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress.

ZHAO ZIYANG, LI PENG INSPECT HUBEI, SICHUAN

OW081528 Beijing XINHUA in English 1447 GMT 8 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 8 (XINHUA) -- The key to making mountainous areas become better off is to develop transportation and thereby promote circulation of commodities so as to enliven the economy.

Premier Zhao Ziyang said this upon his return from a ten-day trip inspecting a dozen mountainous counties and cities in Hubei and Sichuan provinces. He was accompanied by Vice Premier Li Peng, vice chairman of th National People's Congress Standing Committee Wang Renzhong, and other officials.

Though the people's living standard has improved considerably in the past few years, the premier said, the rich resources in those areas have not been made the best use of, and the rural per-capita income there is still below the national average. The areas are rich in water resources, minerals, medicinal materials, citrus fruits and pastures. To enliven the economy, further efforts must be made to develop industry and commercial production by tapping these resources, the premier pointed out.

He asked local officials to develop small cement plants, build small hydraulic power stations and open small mines -- all projects which need little investment and can produce quick economic results. The central government will also aid these areas in their development by providing special loans, he said.

As many of the mountainous counties are located near the Yangtze River, the longest in China, the premier instructed that factories and commercial centers should be constructed along the river banks to make good use of this "golden waterway" to ship their goods.

Attention should also be given to speed the circulation of commodities through various channels, including seeking new ways of trade, tightening the connections between agriculture, industry and commerce, and linking production and sales directly.

Inter-regional cooperation with coastal industrial cities like Shanghai, and large and medium-sized cities nearby should be further expanded to absorb their technology, which is needed in the development of these backward mountainous areas, he added.

SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO INTERVIEWS MA DING

HK081438 Shanghai SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO in Chinese 21 Apr 86 pp 1, 2

[Article by staff reporter Chen Hongbin, edited by Qin Jianxun: "An Interview With Ma Ding" -- first paragraph is SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO introduction]

[Text] His special article on economic study has aroused quite a storm in theoretical and press circles in Beijing and Shanghai. But he has not flinched because of this but has said that he will be bolder and more careful in making economic explorations. He welcomes criticism of his article for the purpose of going deeper in his study, but hopes that this criticsm will be realistic and based on facts.

A merely casual pen name, "Ma Ding" has become a topic of discussion. Now there are few people in theoretical and press circles in Beijing and Shanghai who do not know this name.

Having learned that Ma Ding teaches in Nanjing University, I happily went to visit him. As I pushed open the door of a room on the quiet campus of the university, a gentle young man ushered me in. This was not what I had expected. Foreign commentators call him a "mainland economist." People in the country mistook him for a foreign academic." But what I saw was just a young intellectual. I could not help laughing.

Nanjing University is a good place to study. The philosophy department, in particular, has turned out many good graduates. Ma Ding's article has aroused repercussions in society, but Ma Ding himself does not have any trouble. He is engaged in his study in a quiet environment.

He enrolled in Nanjing University in 1977 and began to study for a master's degree in philosophy in 1981. Now he is teaching in the university. The reporter noticed that in his room, which is also his study, there were more economics books than philosophical writings. So the reporter directly asked him why he engaged in economic study. Laughing, Ma Ding began to talk about his career.

He said that his interest in the study arose when he was still a student. At that time, he felt that philosophy should not be confined to ideological analysis and concepts but should sum up the studies of the present state and development trend of various scientific branches. Philosophy does not give birth to natural science and social sciences but serves as theoretical soil for their growth and development. Without combining with natural science and social sciences, philosophy will find it impossible to extricate itself from theoretical impoverishment or to change people's feeling of philosophical "crisis" and their distrust of philosophy. Based on this idea, Ma Ding tries to free himself from the confinement of philosophy and to carry forward the study of Marxist philosophy by making economic study and explorations. Marx' "Das Kapital" serves as a teacher in his economic study, guiding him in taking the first step in the field of the economic science. He finished many of his research courses in the economics department of the university. These courses include three volumes of "Das Kapital," the history of economics, modern Western economics, and comparative economics. He passed his graduation test with a treatise entitled "Young Marxist Economic Ideology and its Relationship With Philosophy." His article "Ten Great Changes in the Study of Modern Chinese Economics" was completed last year. Reform is China's second revolution. In this great social change, the swift-developing economic life has put innumerable new questions and sphinx-like riddles before us. It is natural for theoretical workers to consider and explore these questions. During summer vacation last year, Ma Ding began to collect material for his article. He also had discussions with his friends. In the long hot September in Nanjing, he wrote the article, which was sent to Beijing after completion. Not long afterward, GONGREN RIBAO devoted half a page to this article. The writer did not dream that his article would bring about the "Ma Ding incident" and draw the attention of people in theoretical and press circles in Beijing, Shanghai, and abroad. Nor had he thought that his name would be on everyone's lips.

This article is Ma Ding's first work dealing with economic study. Naturally, there are some shortcomings in it. Ma Ding warmly welcomes economists of the older generation, people in the same field, and readers to criticize this article so as to carry forward economic study. But he sincerely hopes that their criticism will be realistic and based on facts. Ma Ding is deeply gratified with the response from people in theoretical and press circles to the storm which has arisen. Chinese intellectuals' courage in adhering to truth and their scientific spirit of exploration keep encouraging this young academic. It does not seem that he will shrink back. Instead, he will be bolder and more careful in concentrating his mind on economic study and explorations. When the reporter bade him farewell, Ma Ding said he hoped that the reporter would convey his sincere thanks to his readers through the press.

PROVINCIAL PETITIONERS INTERVIEWED IN BEIJING

HK080846 Hong Kong AFP in English 0816 GMT 8 May 86

[By Pierre-Antoine Donnet]

[Text] Beijing, May 8 (AFP) -- They have come by the thousands, braving reprisals and brushing aside attempts to dismiss them -- petitioners who hope that the top echelons of China's leadership will help them when local officials won't.

The supplicants arrive from all over the country, many clothed in rags and reduced to begging for food as they cling to the chance that their grievances will be heard by the Communist Party Central Committee.

They tell tales of nightmare marriages, or a son wrongly jailed, or even families murdered by local cadres. The most destitute live on the streets and in the railway station of the capital's poor southern suburb of Yongdingmen.

The right to take your case directly to the Central Committee when you feel local authorities have treated you unfairly is enshrined in the Chinese Constitution.

The central government has even set up a reception office in Yongdingmen where the grievances are recorded, but the petitioners say that more often than not their complaints draw little sympathy there.

So the arrival of a foreign correspondent in Yongdingmen attracted an enormous crowd of people delighted to finally find someone prepared to listen to their tales of personal tragedy.

"I brought my protest to Beijing because a cadre in my area tried to poison my whole family. Two died afterwards. But because of his connections with the local court, the cadre was never tried and leads a perfectly normal life," said a peasant from Anhui, one of China's poorest provinces.

A woman from the eastern province of Jiangsu said she was forced to marry someone 20 years her senior whom she detested. She told of being beaten and several times thrown into jail by local authorities after she asked for a divorce.

A worker from northeast China had been labeled a "counter-revolutionary" at the beginning of the Cultural Revolution of 1966-1976. He said that when he later sought rehabilitation, he was completely ruined having to grease the palms of local officials.

But generally there is no point in taking your case to Beijing, petitioners said. Beatings by police using electric truncheons are frequent and people sent back to their home provinces have often met with severe punishment for "having no confidence in the authorities," they said.

"There are more than 20,000 of us here. Some of us have been here for more than six years and have nothing left. Women are here with babies just a few months old.

"An old man of 85 has been asking for more than two years for the release of his son who was wrongly imprisoned. The sidewalk has been his home ever since," one petitioner said.

According to contemporary accounts, more than 70,000 petitioners demonstrated in Beijing in January 1979 seeking redress of injustices suffered during the chaotic years of the Cultural Revolution and preceding political movements. They clamored for "democracy, bread and work."

One night in August that year, top leader Deng Xiaoping appeared before demonstrators laying siege to the Communist Party headquarters to show his support.

Today the aggrieved do not dare demonstrate in the streets or unfurl their banners as they did then. They fear heavy reprisals.

Instead, they have been reduced to beging in Yongdingmen, several kilometers from the city center and beyond the gaze of foreign tourists.

"I am a peasant from the Pingchuan district (Hebei Province). In 1979, a cadre in my district killed my two children, aged nine and six. The culprit feared nothing because he had connections and money.

"In four years I've met more than 30 times with the secretary of the reception office. My file was never sent. Our leaders are being kept in ignorance about what happens to us," one man said.

Petitioners who still have a little money live in an austere building down an alley in Yongdingmen where a dormitory bed costs five Mao (17 cents).

The building is guarded by members of the Public Security Bureau who strictly prohibit access to foreign journalists.

Officials at the government reception office have refused to respond to a correspondents' questions and denied a request for an interview.

RENMIN RIBAO ON ENTERPRISE SELF-DETERMINATION

HK080827 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 2 May 86 p 1

[Editorial: " An Important Thing Is To Safeguard the Decision-making Power of Enterprises — Third Talk on the Great Significance of Developing Horizontal Economic Ties"]

Enterprises must have decision-making power in operating their own business. This is an important precondition for developing horizontal economic associations. Only by having decision-making power can enterprises act in a dynamic way and can all factors in production be able to freely move and associate with each other according to actual needs so as to achieve the best economic results. If an enterprise has no decision-making power or does not have adequate decision-making power, it will act just like a person whith his hands and feet being bound up and it will not be able to stand on its own feet and stretch its own arms. Under these circumstances, how can they enter into economic associations across regional and departmental boundaries?

In recent years, with the development of the economic strucutral reform, enterprises, have increased their decision making power to a certain extent, but they still do not have adequate decision making power. In some aspects, the power which should be delegated to enterprises has not really been handed to them. In particular, enterprises are not yet free enough to decide their participation in horizontal economic associations. They cannot take the initiative in deciding their cooperation partners, items, time, and forms. In the matter of entering into horizontal economic associations, many enterprises are subjected to the arrangements made by their upper management departments through the administrative channel. At present it is necessary to take effective measures to consolidate, replenish, and implement the measures of expanding enterprise decion making power in the previous period so as to further invigorate the enterprises, especially the large and medium-sized state-owned enterprises. This will lay a solid foundation for the development of horizontal economic associations. Otherwise it is hard to advance horizontal economic associations any further.

Under the conditions of economic ties between various localities and between various departments being severed by their administrative relations and enterprises being directly managed by government departments, some government departments and local governments have organized some cooperation projects between enterprises within thier administrative jurisdiciton. This has played a certain role in coordinating the economic cooperation. However, relations betwen enterprises were still governed by vertical administrative relations and enterprises could not take the initiative in forming horizontal economic associations on the basis of voluntary participation and mutual benefit in light of the objective needs of the commodity economy in a wider scope beyond the administrative limits of their departments or localities. Therefore, such vertical "association" bound by administrative relations has an essential difference from the horizontal economic associations between enterprises in different departments and localities as we advocate now. We cannot regard the economic association "arranged arbitrarily" by administrative institutions as horizontal economic association, because that will deprive enterprises of their decision making power and will enable the adminstrative companies and government departments in charge to meddle in their routine operations and business. Enterprises should be allowed to form economic associations beyond the limits of their localities and departments so long as their economic association is in line with the needs of the commodity economy.

According to the complaints aired by some enterprises, at present obstacles to the development of horizontal economic association between enterprises mainly come from the higher administrative institutions in charge of these enterprises. In recent years we have emphasized the need to "streamline administration and hand over power to enterprises, " which has achieved certain results in changing the state in which economic ties between enterprises in different localities and departments are severed. However, the problem of enterprises being directly managed and controlled by government departments has not been solved yet. For example, some government departments issued administrative orders to set up administrative "companies" which seize the decison making power from enterprises. In some localities and departments, power is more highly centralized than when reform was started. Some central cities tightly bind enterprises within their administrative jurisdiciton under the excuse of giving play to their "central" role, thus forming some new "blocs" which are separated from each other. Facts show that contradictions over the issue of ensuring enterprise decsion making power remain outstanding. The obstacles mentioned above must be removed in order to promote horizontal economic association between enterprises.

Enterprises may encounter varous obstacles in the process of maintaining and strengthening their decision-making power and developing horizontal economic ties. This is not surprising in the period when the old system is superseded by the new system. They must be resolved to advance in spite of the difficulties and must not give up their efforts halfway and backtrack to the old road. Problems encountered in the course of reform can be solved only through further reform. If enterprise self-determination in business operations encounters problems or obstacles in a specific field, then reform should be carried out in that field until enterprise decision-making power is ensured. Recently, the State Council issued a 30-point regulation on developing horizontal economic associations, which emphasizes the need to ensure enterprise self-determination in the matter of horizontal economic associations. That is, enterprises should be allowed to decide whether to enter into a certain economic association on their own and should be allowed to withdraw from the economic association freely. This should be conducted naturally, as things in nature may be "fusion" or "fission." This important principle will safeguard the self-determination position of the enterprises and will effectively and powerfully pound the old management system which formed barriers between localities and departments and lumped enterprise and government functions.

In short, only by firmly safeguarding and consolidating enterprise decision-making power can we really turn all enterprises into fully vigorous and dynamic socialist commodity producers and handlers which operate independently and bear sole responsibility for their profits and losses, and only thus can they develop horizontal economic associations on the basis of voluntary participation and mutual benefit and promote the development of the socialist commodity economy and the social productive forces.

LIAOWANG ON PRC CENSUS RESULTS, APPLICATION

HK081535 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 17, 28 Apr 86 pp 13, 14

[Article by Ren Pu: "China's Census Results and Their Application"]

[Excerpts] An Unprecedented Scale and Outstanding Results

The large-scale third national census of 6 years ended in the spring of this year. All computer-handled data is being gradually made public.

This census is of a scale unprecedented in the world, involving the mobilization of 5.18 million census workers, 1.09 million census supervisors, 130,000 code workers, 4,000 registration workers, and more than 1,000 computer operators. Given the mobilization of so many people and the completion of the counting of a population of 1 billion in a harmonous manner in line with a unified time schedule and unified work arrangements, the magnitude of the task can be imagined.

Important Data Provided for the Formulation of the National Economic Plan

The third national census shows that the whole of China has a total population of 1.03189 billion. The population in the 29 provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities directly under the central government of the mainland and the number of militarymen on active duty total 1.00818 billion. With an area accounting for only 7 percent of the world, China is supporting a population representing 22 percent of the total world population. The average density of China's population is 105 people per square kilometer and is about 3 times the average density of the world population of 34 people per square kilometer.

China has a large rural population and a small area of cultivated land. In 1982, the rural population on the mainland stood at 797.6 million, accounting for 79.4 percent of the country's total population. Of the country's 521.5 million people at work, 384.4 million people are in agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupations, and fishery, representing 73.66 percent. According to data obtained on 2,664 small cities and towns of the whole country, of 32.58 million people of these cities and towns at work, those devoted to tertiary industry accounted for 37.47 percent. The percentage is not only higher than that of 5.13 percent in the countryside but also that of 26.51 percent in major cities. This shows that small cities and towns that act as economic links between urban and rural areas play an important role in absorbing agricultural laborers and developing industries serving urban and rural areas. The Chinese Government has proceeded with the solution of the problem of the flow of China's agricultural population by developing a diversified economy, building more small cities and towns, developing tertiary industry, and so forth. Meanwhile, it is taking note of the need to avoid carrying urbanization too far.

China is also a country with the richest source of labor in the world. Based on the labor age limits (16-59 for men and 16-54 for women) set for China's laborers, the population in the working age bracket stands at 550.87 million, or 54.87 percent of the total population. China now has a population of 521.5 million at work, 188.93 million more than the combined total of the United States, the Soviet Union, Japan, Britain, West Germany, France, Italy, and Canada.

China is the most populus country in the world. Industrial population accounts for 51.95 percent of the total population, or more than half of the total population. This percentage is 8.2 percent higher than that in the United States 4.5 percent than that in Japan, 13 percent higher than that in France, 19.6 percent higher than that in Britain, 4.6 percent higher than that in the Soviet Union, and around 20 percent higher than that in such developing countries as Egypt and Mexico.

Data obtained shows that of China's people at work, those in tertiary industry now account for a small proportion, or only 10.35 percent of the population at work. Compared with various countries in the world, China's percentage of tertiary industry workers in the population at work is lower than not only that of the economically developed countries but also that of other developing countries. China is gradually using such features of tertiary industry as its being various in nature, labor-intensive, knowledge-intensive, highly capable of absorbing large numbers of workers, and so forth to energetically develop tertiary industry and make the most of rich source of labor.

The Basis for China's Population Policy

The growth of China's future population is a problem of universal concern to people. Judging from the accurate data obtained from the current census, in the 10 years from 1963 to 1973, for various historical reasons, China's population rate growth reached a peak. The number of people born per year was 28.23 million at its highest and 22.75 million at its lowest. This meant 4 to 10 million more than in the normal year 1957, or 150 percent more than in the year 1961 with a relatively small number of people born. Given the inertial effect of population reproduction, it is estimated that from 1986 to 1996, the whole country will witness a peak of births. Therefore, given the still not well developed economy of China, it is highly necessary to introduce family planning and bring the population under proper control.

Relative to the matter of fewer births is the problem of the aging population. Population aging is a phenomenon of old people (those age 65 and over) accounting for an ever larger percentage of the population. In such case, the percentage of old people is generally believed to exceed 7 percent. The population is in the category of the old, or is beginning to age. In 1982, China had 49.27 million people age 65 and over, who accounted for 4.9 percent of the total population. The population was in a category undergoing transition from the young to the mature. But in a number of areas, chiefly major cities such as Shanghai, the number of old people 65 and over exceeded 7 percent. The birth rate in these cities was lower than in other areas, while population aging was quicker than elsewhere. A relatively serious problem has been posed. As far as conditions of the country as a whole are concerned, it is predicted that by the year 2000, China's proportion of people age 65 and over will reach 7.07 percent, [with the population] beginning to fall into the cateagory of the old. This matter has received proper attention from the relevant department of the Chinese Govetnment.

Average Life Expectancy of the Population Twice as Long

Data from the third national census also shows that the so-called "sick people of East Asia" of former days have now considerably improved in physique. For the first time in the history of China, the census has brought overall acurate data about the death of people in different age brackets. On this basis, it was calculated that the average life expectancy of China's population in 1981 would be 67.88 -- 66.43 for men and 69.35 for women.

In old China, the people led a miserable life, and were physically weak and liable to disease. They had a short lifespan. According to calculations based on data compiled by the Jinling University in 1936, on about 5,499 deceased men and women in 17 provinces, the then average life expectancy for men was 38.45 and for women 34.63, the average life expectancy for both men and women being 34.74. A comparison between these figures and those of the average life expectancy in 1981 shows that since the founding of the new China, the average life expectancy has doubled, with an average annual increase of a little more than 1 year. This is something rarely witnessed in the history of the development of the world population. The label "sick people of East Asia" can no longer be applied to the Chinese.

SYMPOSIUM TO BE HELD ON CLASSICAL CHINESE NOVEL

OW070807 Beijing XINHUA in English 0631 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] Harbin, May 6 (XINHUA) -- An international symposium on the famous classical Chinese novel, "A Dream of Red Mansions", will be held in this Heilongjiang Provincial capital from June 13 to 18. More than 120 scholars from the Chinese mainland, Australia, France, Japan, Singapore, the Soviet Union, the United States and Hong Kong will attend the symposium, which is being sponsored by Harbin Normal College and the United States University of Wisconsin. Invitations have also been sent to Chinese literary experts in Taiwan.

During the symposium, relics from the Qing Dynasty (1644-1911) will be displayed along with a model of "the grand garden" described in the novel. The book, written by Cao Xueqin in the mid-18th century, epitomizes society in the Qing Dynasty, the last feudal regime in China, by tracing the decline of a noble family. The author weaves together a literary tapestry of Chinese poetry, prose, painting, sculpture, music and architecture. "A Dream of Red Mansions" has become a popular subject of study in recent years, with hundreds of works being published about it.

WAN LI ADDRESSES GEOLOGICAL WORK SESSION

OW280437 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1424 GMT 26 Apr 86

["Excerpts" of speech by Vice Premier Wan Li at the National Conference of Directors of Bureaus of Geology and Mineral Resources on 25 April 1986]

[Text] Beijing, 26 Apr (XINHUA) — I would like to discuss four issues today.

First, the hard work done by geological workers should be respected by all people in society. The development of mineral resources is an extremely important pillar of China's modernization drive. Most of the resources needed for material construction and for the production and accumulation of social wealth come from the development of mineral resources. Today and in the forseeable future, over 95 percent of the energy and over 99 percent of the materials we need will come from beneath the surface of the earth. This situation will remain unchanged for several decades. Although subsurface resources are natural gifts, we need scientific and technological knowhow, especially the hard work and dedication of geological workers, before we can locate them and develop them.

Geological surveying is a highly intensive and complicated work combining mental work and physical labor. It is a glorious job, one to be proud of. Since the founding of the Republic, a contingent of hardworking geological workers who have lofty ideals have been trained and tempered under difficult circumstances. Most of them have worked for long years in high mountains, ravines and jungles. Some have worked against all odds in the Gobi Desert and at sea. Defying untold hardships, tens of thousands -- and even hundreds of thousands -- of geological workers have been devoted to their duties for as long as several decades. They are people who have served the people wholeheartedly, and who are dedicated to the revolution. Following geological surveys over the past 36 years, more than 200 mining towns, including Daqing and Jinchang, and an even greater number of large construction projects have been built throughout the country. The growing output of petroleum, nonferrous metals, gold, electricity, steel, coal, cement, and other major products has substantiated the merits and accomplishments of the nation's geological workers. We can also say that the outstanding achievements of thousands upon thousands of unknown heroes on the geological front can be found in every mine, every major project, and every large or medium-size city in the country. These hereos' exploratory spirit of defying wind and rain and breaking through brambles and thorns certainly deserved the respect of the entire society. The party and the state are thankful for their toil and sweat in national construction, and the people will never forget them. I hope party and government authorities at all levels, all financial and economic departments, and people in the nation's ideological, theoretical literary and art, journalistic, and publishing circles will show concern for our geological workers. As materialists, we should not consider an issue apart from its historical context. Thus, we should not simply see the results of our projects and forget our pioneers' exploratory work.

Geological achievements cannot be separated from the support rendered by leading party and government organs in all localities. Since many geological workers have to work long years in the field, they have more problems and worries than people working in other areas. For this reason, local party and government authorities should care for their hardships, help them solve their problems, and create better working and living conditions for them.

Second, we should expand geological services and further develop their composite effectiveness.

According to the Seventh 5-Year Plan for National Economic and Social Development examined and approved by the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC, we should accelerate the search for and assessment of mineral resources, promote work in hydrogeology and engineering geology, and properly carry out basic geological work and geological research. While this shows the characteristics of geological work as a basic task of an early or nascent stage, it also requires geological work to expand its services and develop their composite effectiveness. This is a major change of far-reaching significance in the strategy for the development of China's geological work.

People often look upon geological workers as mountain climbers or drillers searching for mineral resources. This is a valid, but not complete, observation. The activities and functions of modern day geological work are far more than this. In terms of the scope of geological exploration, geological workers not only have to climb mountains, they must also work in the sky or at the bottom of the sea. China has accomplished a great deal of work in aerial geophysical study, remote sensing survey, and general seabed geological survey.

In terms of the targets or substance of geological work, the search for subsurface resources -- including energy, metallic and nonmetallic mineral resources, and subterranean water — is the primary target. Although China is one of the few countries in the world endowed with rich mineral resources of all kinds, the verified resources still cannot fully satisfy the country's needs in socialist construction in terms of variety, quantity, quality, distribution, and feasibility for development. As such, intensifying our search for mineral resources and ascertaining our underground resources will be a task that will go on for generations. Meanwhile, we must exert our efforts in areas where the best results can be achieved and develop what is most urgently needed. To make the best use of everything, we must, in addition to searching for natural resources, also actively carry out research on processing of resources and on their various uses. This important project for national and local production and construction must be firmly handled without fail.

The environment is the second target of our geological work. The work in this area is both enormous and diverse, and it will be increasingly so as seen from the trend of development at home and abroad. China is a mountainous country, and it faces many natural disasters. Of all the natural disasters, earthquakes and other geological calamities are the most frequent. Sometimes they occur along with meteorological disasters, and the destruction they cause is shocking. Many endemic diseases are also related to geological conditions. Having realized this, an important aspect of China's geological study should be the systematic study and monitoring of the disaster-prone areas, so that we can make early assessments and forecasts and upgrade our scientific level in preventing natural disasters. Since China has a large population and many cities, its ecological problems are serious. These problems include soil erosion and proliferation of deserts caused by large-scale reclamation or logging; cave-ins caused by underground mining; precarious hillsides caused by construction of railways, highways, and open pit mines; the subsiding of urban surfaces caused by excessive tapping of subterranean water; pollution of subterranean water in urban and industrial and mining areas; and so forth. Artificial geological disasters are not any less serious than natural geological disasters. China's environmental problems are for the most part geological problems. To protect the environment effectively, we must attach great importance to improving the environment.

The Ministry of Urban and Rural Construction and Environmental Protection and the Ministry of Geology and Mineral Resources should therefore deal with the problems together by working in close coordination with one another. Furthermore, geological study of construction and tourist sites should also be part of the study of environmental geology.

Geological work in the urban areas is closely related to urban construction and development. Thus, it is obvious that industrial development in the cities must be based on their energy and raw and semifinished material resources. The planning of urban construction, and a city's population capacity have everything to do with the geological conditions and water resources of its location. The reconstruction of an old city will encounter even more problems. We can say that geological work is essential for the construction or expansion of a modern city and the quality of its residents, including clothing, food supply, housing, and transportation services.

Fundamental geological work -- including regional geological surveys, regional geophysical studies, regional geochemical studies, and basic geological studies -- is the third aspect of geological work. The results obtained from fundamental geological work, which indicate the level of a country's geological study, are indispensable information for the country's long-range economic planning, and land development and consolidation. Since the founding of the Republic, China has achieved significant successes and attained a fairly high level in carrying out its fundamental geological work. We must, however, continue to work hard for a long time in order to achieve even greater successes.

In a word, it is necessary to vigorously step up geological prospecting, introduce modern technology, study new knowledge, recruit more capable personnel, and improve the quality of the ranks of geological workers. It is also necessary to expand the scope of geological exploration and service, develop the diversified social functions of geological work, and perfect the multilevel service system in order to meet the growing demands on geological work by the central and local governments.

Third, we should explore a new geological work system suited to the actual situation in China.

In order to fire the enthusiasm of the hundreds of geological prospecting units and hundreds of thousands of geological staff and workers and raise the multiple functions and comprehensive effectiveness of geological work, it is imperative to reform the outdated system of geological work, characterized by two maladies, the practice of "everybody eating from the same big pot" and the barriers between departments or regions. These problems should be largely resolved during the Seventh and the Eighth 5-Year Plans. We should learn from the strong points of other countries while avoiding their weaknesses and proceed from China's basic conditions of a large population and backward technology, while summing up our own experience in order to gradually set up a new socialist geological work system suited to the actual situation in the country and develop the commodity economy in a planned manner.

The basic direction of reform should be toward gradually changing some geological units, mainly those engaged in exploitative geological work that can be sold as commodities, into community-oriented enterprises whose fruits of prospecting work should receive compensation instead of being used free of charge. Such geological prospecting units, which should be separated from government administration, should maintain economic ties and develop lateral cooperation among themselves, and go all out to investigate themselves under macroeconomic control.

Other geological units, mainly those engaged in basic geological work and management work that cannot be sold as commodities, should orient their work even more to meeting the needs of the long-term development of the whole country and society. Based on the operational mechanism of reform, geology and mineral resources departments should get a firm grip on major aspects by gradually changing their managerial functions and setting up effective service and management systems. The geology and mineral resources departments have taken the lead in carrying out reform. They should continue to deepen the structural reform and use it to give impetus to reform in geological work as a whole. The establishment of a geological market is a major reform measure for the transition to "developing large-scale commodity production and setting up community-oriented enterprises." The experience of 1985 has proven that by so doing, we were able to make up, to some extent, insufficient state expenditures for geological undertakings, raise the social and economic effectiveness of geological work, find employment for surplus labor forces, increase revenues for geological prospecting units, and build up their ability to upgrade their technology and expand production. Such experience with multiple advantages should be encouraged and supported. Fees charged by geological prospecting units for performing services and transferring fruits of their work should be reasonable. They should not be blinded by the lust for gain and demand exorbitant remuneration. It is necessary to put service, quality, and reputation above anything else. Preferential treatment should be given regarding the standard and method of collecting fees from projects to assist the poor in old revolutionary bases, regions inhabited by minority nationalities, and frontier and impoverished areas. Entering the geological market on an equal footing, geological prospecting units from all departments should compete with each other while developing cooperation among themselves. It is necessary to clearly define the uniformity and openness of the socialist geological market, which should not be divided by departments through protective administrative means.

It is commendable that the geology and mineral resources departments have taken the lead in the structural reform and explored the road for reform of geological work as a whole. However, the reform should not permanently remain at the department level. All relevant industrial departments should lose no time in carrying out the structural reform in their own departments in order to jointly prepare for the reform in geological work as a whole. Last March, Comrades Zhu Xun and Wang Tao discussed the strengthening of lateral cooperation between the Ministry of Geology and Mineral Resources and the Ministry of Petroleum Industry in a general survey and in prospecting for natural gas, and worked out a preliminary 10-point plan for cooperation between ministries. We hope that they will use the plan as a basis for further developing cooperation.

Fourth, we should earnestly implement the "Mineral Resources Law."

With the promulgation of the "Mineral Resources Law," geology and mineral resources departments at various levels shoulder a heavier responsibility in supervising the exploitation of mineral resources. Through extensive geological prospecting work over the years, a total of 220,000 mineral points have been discovered throughout the country. Most of them are scattered small mines suitable for exploration by the masses. There is a great deal of merit in adopting a policy to help the masses operate mines.

For example, it will be conducive to accelerating mineral exploitation and developing the benefits of resources, seeking realistic economic advantages through combining rich manpower resources with mineral resources, invigorating the rural economy, improving the structure of agricultural production, and in particular, assisting the people in old revolutionary bases, regions inhabited by minority nationalities, and frontier and impoverished areas to eliminate poverty and become well off. However, we must realize that underground treasures are not regenerative resources, and that although China has, generally speaking, rich mineral resources, they are limited. Therefore, while relaxing control, it is also necessary to intensify supervision to guard against damage and waste of resources and prevent accidents in multiple exploitation and environmental pollution. The CPC Central Committee's proposal for formulating the Seventh 5-Year Plan stressed the necessity of paying keen attention to protecting and conserving mineral resources, regarding it as a basic national policy to be pursued for a long time. We must bear in mind this basic national policy.

The "Mineral Resources Law" is a major law among economic statutes. Effective implementation of the "Mineral Resources Law" calls, first of all, for the close attention to obey leaders of all levels. In places with mining activities, the local governments should extensively publicize and hold lectures on the "Mineral Resources Law" through various means so that it will be known to all. Second, a complete set of rules and regulations regarding the "Mineral Resources Law" should be adopted. Third, it is necessary to institute and perfect a system for enforcing and supervising the "Mineral Resources Law." Fourth, it is necessary to clearly define responsibilities and duties in the course of implementing the "Mineral Resources Law."

In short, with scientific leadership and management and a guiding principle of mobilizing the state, collectives, and individuals simultaneously, we should be able to achieve a great advance in China's mining activities in order to contribute more to the country and the people.

LIAOWANG ON COMMODITY GRAIN BASE COUNTIES

HK071145 Beijing LIAOWANG in Chinese No 16, 21 Apr 86 p 5

[Article by Zhou Yichang: "Enlightenment Gained from the Building of Commodity Grain Base Counties"]

[Text] On my desk are some data on China's grain development: It took 14 years to increase the country's total grain output from 300 billion to 400 billion jin; 6 years to top the 500 billion jin mark; 5 years, the 600 billion mark; 4 years, the 700 billion mark; and only 2 years, the 800 mark. However, due to various reasons such as the adjustment of grain-crop-sown area and natural disasters, China's grain output dropped below 800 billion jin in 1985, reaching only 758 billion jin. In the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, China's grain output should reach 900 billion jin in order to meet the basic needs due to population growth and the people's growing consumption. That is to say, our grain output should not only return to the 800 billion jin mark, but also top the 900 billion level in the next 5 years. This is a very strenuous task.

How can we maintain the good momentum of grain production and ensure that the state controls more commodity grain in the Seventh 5-Year Plan period and even beyond? It will do us good to sum up the experience gained in building commodity grain base counties during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period.

In 1983, the relevant state departments and the 50 [illegible] in 8 provinces -- namely Heilongjing, Jilin, Henan, Hubei, Hunan, Jiangsu, Anhui, and Jiangxi -- started to jointly build commodity grain base counties. The state and the local authorities invest at the ratio of one to one and, for every yuan the state invests, the base counties should turn over to the state another 5 jin of commodity grain for 6 successive years.

The results of the joint efforts have been satisfactory. Over the past 3 years, these counties have produced a total of 166.7 billion jin, an increase of 34 percent over the previous 3 years, or 15 percent higher than the country's growth rate over the corresponding period; their per mu grain output has increased by 120 jin, 38 jin more than the country's growth figure over the corresponding period. They have also sold 70 billion jin of commodity grain to the state, an increase of nearly 100 percent over the previous 3 years; the commodity rate has risen from 28 to 42 percent, more than 20 percent higher than the country's growth of commodity rate over the corresponding period. Their grain contribution on a per capita basis has increased from 830 to 1,648 jin, an increase of nearly 100 percent. The gross value of their industrial and agricultural production reached 27.8 billion juan in 1985, an increase of 50 percent over 1982, or 40 percent higher than the country's growth rate over the corresponding period.

There are 3 points in the experience of the 50 counties that we can make use of:

1. We should choose a number of counties with great potentials to increase grain output and grain delivery to the state and build them into commodity grain bases. This is an important way to maintain the steady growth of grain production and to ensure that the state can control more commodity grain. The 50 counties account for only 3 percent of the country in terms of population and only 4 percent in terms of cultivated land, but their output accounts for 7 percent of the total national output and they supply about 12.5 percent of commodity grain. It will not do to have a low output; nor will it do to have a high output but a low commodity rate. For this reason, it is necessary to concentrate on building a number of commodity grain bases. There is also no lack of examples abroad. The United States concentrates on growing more than 80 percent of its corn in five states lying between 40 and 60 degrees north latitude. Although the acreage under corn accounts for only slightly more than 25 percent of the world's total, its output accounts for some 50 percent of the world's total corn output. Corn has become a major U.S. export grain. If the state can put together some capital and build more commodity grain bases during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, we will certainly be able to attain better results.

2. Arousing the initiative of both the central and local authorities, in particular that of the local authorities, is an important guarantee for speeding up the development of agricultural production. In the past, with the state taking care of everything, the state agricultural investments were actually a "supply system." Not only was it impossible for the state to directly control more commodity grain, the investments also led to dependent mentality on the part of some localities. In building the 50 commodity grain base counties, both the central and local authorities made investments and the latter delivered more commodity grain to the former, thus arousing their initiative. In the course of building the commodity grain bases, the 50 counties raised by themselves 330 million juan of necessary capital, which exceeded the total amount of state investments. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, the state will increase its investment in agriculture.

However, due to its limited financial capability, it will be impossible for the state to take care of everything in agricultural construction. We should still rely on the local authorities to build a large number of small and medium-sized agricultural projects. This has been proved by our experience, both positive and negative.

3. We should concentrate our capital and develop in a down-to-earth manner some crucial projects that will greatly boost agricultural development in the localities. The 50 counties concentrated their limited funds on the agricultural technology popularization system, the good strains breeding system, and the construction of small water conservancy works. After 3 years of hard work, they have initially established fairly comprehensive systems for spreading agricultural technology and good strains. They have set up an agricultural technology popularization center and a seed company at the county level, a popularization station and a seed branch company or supply station at the district or township level, and a science and technology demonstration household and a good strains breeding household at the village level. In water conservancy work, irrigation and drainage networks have initially been completed. Over the past 3 years, these counties have trained more than 9.6 million agrotechnical cadres on various occasions, popularized more than 2,700 new technical items, expanded the area with better irrigation or waterlongging-prevention facilities to more than 39 million mu, and popularized 940 million jin of improved strains. All these have rapidly developed into new production capacity in agricultural production. Hit by natural disasters last year, production dropped in some provinces but it slightly dropped, remained the same, or even increased in the base counties. Grain output in Hunan province dropped by 2 percent last year, but, given a 3 percent drop in the sown areas of the six base counties, their total output still increased by 2.3 percent.

To sum up, by popularizing and applying the experience in building commodity grain base counties, the agricultural departments can fully arouse the initiative of both the central and local authorities and ensure the steady growth of grain production.

LIAO HANSHENG ON LEGAL SYSTEM, PUBLIC HEALTH

HK090251 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] From 21 April to 5 May, Comrade Liao Hansheng, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee and chairman of the Central Patriotic Public Health Campaign Committee, successively inspected various Henan cities, including Xinxiang, Luoyang, Zhangzhou, and Kaifeng. He spoke about the building of the legal system and about patriotic public health work.

Regarding the building of the legal system, Comarde Liao Hansheng said: The state's legislative work has yet to be further strengthened and perfected. However, the most important problem now is to solve the problem of not acting in accordance with the law if there is such a law, not strictly enforcing the law, and not investigating and holding accountable those who violate the law. Therefore, in accordance with what Comrade Deng Xiaoping said, we must grasp construction on the one hand and grasp the legal system on the other. He emphasized: Whoever they may be, the whole party must act within the framework of the Constitution and the law. Leading cadres and cadres of the law enforcement departments must especially do this because they have a certain degree of power in their hands.

If they do not study and know the law and fail to work in accordance with the law and regulations, this may have serious consequences. They must especially study and know the law and study more and better.

As for public health work, Comrade Liao Hansheng pointed out: This is a content of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Whether or not to lay stress on public health is one of the hallmarks of civilization. Henan is situated on the central plains and has many tourism spots. Whether its public health work is good or bad not only has a bearing on the health of the people of Henan but also has a great impact on all places throughout our country. He hoped that in connection with the implementation of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, Henan Province will do several practical things every year in this aspect.

CONFERENCE VIEWS CADRES RUNNING ENTERPRISES

OW081729 Beijing XINHUA in English 1545 GMT 8 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 8 (XINHUA) -- Party and government departments and their cadres are barred from running enterprises or going in for commercial activities by taking advantage of their power and positions to further their personal interests, a senior Chinese official said here today.

This is aimed at bringing about a fundamental change for the better in the party's work style and social acceptance, and ensuring the implementation of the policy of enlivening the home economy and opening to the outside world, he added.

Ren Zhonglin, director of the State Administration for Industry and Commerce, said this at a national conference which closed here today.

He communicated Vice-Premier Tian Jiyun's instructions to the conference, overhauling and consolidating the corporations should be regarded as an important task. It is necessary to ban those corporations run by the party or government departments and their cadres with the objective of seeking small group or individual interests, or doing illegal activities by decking themselves out as legal units. Those who are allowed to continue their operations must be overhauled. The administrative departments examined in 1985 more than 200,000 corporations set up in the past few years.

The licences of over 8,700 enterprises run by the party and government departments were revoked, and over 15,000 party- and government-run enterprises were separated from their original units to be operated independently.

However, Ren said, this policy will be more flexibile for enterprises run by Overseas Chinese federations or by former industrialists.

TIGHTER TAX REGULATIONS TO BE INTRODUCED 1 JULY

HK060807 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 6 May 86 p 3

[By staff reporter]

[Text] A new set of rules aimed at improving the State tax-collection system and tightening control on tax evasions will go into effect on July 1, according to a State Council notice released over the weekend.

The Tentative Rules on Tax Collection apply to all taxes in China except customs duties, agricultural taxes and also income taxes payable by foreign enterprises, joint ventures or individuals.

The detailed rules, consisting of 44 articles in nine chapters, cover all aspects of the tax-collection system from registration of taxpayers to control of books and documents, tax inspection and penalties for tax evasions.

All taxpayers must register with the local tax authorities within 30 days after receiving their business licences and become "certified taxpayers," according to the rules. The rules require that all taxpayers "must keep a complete accounting system with all necessary books, documents and bills in good order."

The tax authorities should compile a "tax-collection file" for each of its taxpayers, to be kept "securely and in strict confidence" according to the rules.

The tax authorities should make regular inspections of the taxpayers' books, documents and other related data. Temporary tax-inspection stations may be set up at railway terminals, harbours, airports or traffic junctions with the help of other departments, the rules said.

Taxpayers who have failed to register or be certified, who have not complied with the rules to declare their taxes, keep the necessary books, or who have avoided tax inspections, will be liable to fines ranging up to 5,000 yuan.

According to the rules, those, who have "unintentionally" evaded tax payment, will be fined at a daily rate of 0.5 percent of the amount of taxes overdue; those who are in arrears with payments will be fined at a daily rate of 5 percent of the amount overdue; and those who have "deliberately evaded tax payments" will be fined up to five times the taxes evaded. Individuals responsible for such tax evasion will be liable for fines up to 1,000 yuan.

The tax authorities may collect the overdue taxes directly from the taxpayer's bank account in case the taxpayer fails to comply with the collection orders for taxes overdue, the rules said. In more serious cases, legal action may be taken against violators through judicial authorities, the rules said.

MEETING DISCUSSES LABOR, WAGE SYSTEM REFORM

OW081133 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1321 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] Beijing, 7 May (XINHUA) -- The national meeting of labor and personnel bureau directors, which ended today in Beijing, announced: During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, the focus of reform of China's labor, wage, and personnel systems should be placed on the reform of enterprise wage and hiring systems and state organizational structure. At the same time, we should pay keen attention to reform in other fields in order to lay the foundation for establishing a set of socialist labor, wage, and personnel systems that meet the needs of a planned commodity economy.

The meeting reviewed the progress of reform of the labor, wage, and personnel systems during the Sixth 5-year Plan period: State organs and institutions adopted a structural wage system featuring the idea of wages based on positions; the majority of enterprises based their bonus funds on economic results during the second stage of replacing profit deliveries with tax payments; and all state enterprises simplified their wage scales. The employment system changed from single-channel employment by state enterprises to multichannel employment by state and collective enterprises and individual economic units while the contract labor hiring system was enforced on a trial basis. Structural reform was carried out in accordance with the decision of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council and, regarding the personnel system, exploratory reforms were made in the cadre employment and management systems.

The meeting held: The reform of our country's labor, wage, and personnel systems is only in the beginning stage and still not sufficient to meet the needs of our economic restructuring. Labor and personnel departments at all levels must give top priority to reform of the three systems so that their labor and personnel work will improve in the course of reform.

The meeting put forth the following principles for conducting reform of the three systems during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period:

Reform of the enterprise wage system: Establish a basic formula for wage distribution relations between the state and enterprises; a basic intra-enterprise wage distribution system; wage relations between enterprises, between regions, and between enterprises and various categories of personnel; and methods for overall state control and adjustment of wage funds.

Reform of the labor system: make further efforts to amend the defects of centralized control and adjustment of wage funds.

Reform of the labor system: Make further efforts to amend the defects of centralized control and distribution in labor management and of the "iron rice bowl"; gradually establish a new labor system covering job placement, vocational training, and enterprise hiring that is closely tied to social regulation and adjustment; promote rational flow and use of the labor force; and gradually socialize management of the labor force.

Reform of the personnel system: Under the leadership of the party Central Committee and the State Council, perform well the tasks related to structural reform; reform the cadre employment system and gradually adopt an appointment system, hiring system, and tenure system; enforce the exchange and rational flow of cadres; and strengthen overall control of the contingents of cadres so as to properly cope with developments in the economic, cultural and other fields.

HAO JIANXIU INSPECTS TIANJIN TEXTILE INDUSTRY

OW060255 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0748 GMT 5 May 86

[By reporter Yu Xigui]

[Text] Tianjin, 5 May (XINHUA) -- Hao Jianxiu, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee inspected 13 industrial enterprises in Tianjin Municipality from 21 April to 3 May, during which she held discussions with leading cadres of relevant bureaus, companies, and plants, exchanged views with shop workers, and inspected the design capacity and technological level of the plants. She stressed the importance for the light and textile industries of using their advantages to achieve a breakthrough in increasing exports and earning more foreign exchange during the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

At the Tianjin Municipal Zhenhou Woolen Textile Plant, a newly built woolen mill with the country's largest production capacity, Hao Jianxiu discussed with the plant's leading cadres, engineers, and technicians questions concerning imports of foreign equipment. She affirmed the experience of some departments concerned in importing advanced technological equipment and making economical and rational use of such equipment. She called on enterprises to step up the assimilation of imported technological equipment and their domestic developoment, while raising the managemenet level, intensifying workers' basic training, and improving their professional competence.

During her inspection of the Tianjin Municipal First Woolen Mill and the Tianjin Municipal Woolen Mill, she spoke highly of the efforts by their engineers, technicians, and workers to upgrade their outdated equipment technologically and produce a large variety of quality export commodities. She said: Despite their remarkable achievements, these old enterprises still have great potential for increasing exports and earning more foreign exchange. She urged the enterprises' workers and staff to redouble their efforts to make greater contributions.

At the Tianjin Weaving Mill, the Ornamental Textile Weaving Mill, the No 5 Sheet Factory, and the Scarves Factory, Hao Jianxiu viewed textile ornaments and other auxiliary products turned out by these factories in recent years. She said that our ornamental textile trade is entirely capable of developing and manufacturing auxiliary products needed by guesthouses and hotels, and gradually meeting the needs of domestic and foreign markets for such products in order to conserve and earn foreign exchange for the government. She called on textile departments to study international market information, promote the development of new products, turn out a small batch of products at a time and constantly change their designs, improve product quality, and increase export commodities.

During her discussions with leading cadres of the Tianjin Municipal Textile Industry Bureau and its subordinated companies concerning combination of industry with foreign trade, Hao Jianxiu said that such combinations must be conducive to firing the enthusiasm of both sides, and that they should make joint efforts to promote foreign trade.

Lauds Domestic Industry

OW061441 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Mandarin 2130 GMT 4 May 86

[Text] Hao Jianxiu, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, recently wrote an article for JIXIE BAO [MACHINERY JOURNAL] entitled: "Successful Experience in Developing a Whole Set of Equipment With an Annual Capacity of 15,000 Tons of Polyster Fiber." The article summarizes China's success in designing and developing by itself an entire set of equipment capable of producing 15,000 tons of short polyester fiber annually. It said that this experience is of great significance in the manufacture of large production equipment in China. On the policy of self-reliance, the article pointed out: We must not try to see the policy of self-reliance in terms of small-scale production. We must realize the need to expand our industry to the whole country and meet the needs of the whole society with our 30-odd years of industrial experience. In this way, we will be able to further expand our industry by relying on our own efforts. Our success in developing a whole set of equipment capable of producing 15,000 tons of polyester fiber annually has been achieved by making full use of the advanced technology and the favorable conditions in China and effecting socialist mass cooperation covering may trades, factories, and areas.

The article said: This kind of practice of relying on our own efforts and coordinating with one another in tacking key problems in a well-guided and planned manner fully demonstrates the superiority of the socialist system.

Comrade Hao Jianxiu's article also pointed out: The key to success in the development of important technical equipment is the establishment of a relationship of mutual trust and mutual support between the unit that uses the equipment and the units that design and manufacture the equipment.

The article hailed Polyester Factory No 2 of the Shanghai Petrochemical Complex as a wise user. It pointed out: This factory does not blindly worship products manufactured by foreign countries. It actively uses equipment made in China, fully trusts the units that design and manufacture the equipment, and takes the initiative in coordinating with these units. At the same time, it carefully checks the equipment, making the development of the equipment with an annual capacity of 15,000 tons of polyester fiber a tremendous success.

SONG JIAN URGES GROWTH OF SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH

OW290512 Beijing XINHUA in English 0227 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 29 (XINHUA) -- It is necessary for China to readjust its strategy for the development of science and technology, according to OUTLOOK weekly published here today.

Song Jian, state councillor and minister in charge of the State Science and Technology Commission, said in an interview that the country must speed up the pace of research into new technology from now on and aid the development of new industries.

"We should do our best to follow international development of high technology and strive for breakthroughs.

"In this way, we will be able to meet the target of quadrupling output value by the turn of the century and lay a solid base for technical progress in the next century," Song said.

On the other hand, he said, "We should assist the medium-size and small enterprises and rural factories technically, while tackling key scientific and technological problems for updating large enterprises."

As for the reform of scientific and technological setups, he said this year the country will widely introduce the contract system to replace the old practice of state allocation of funds according to fixed proportions and position appointment system among scientists and technicians.

The reform over the past years has accelerated the pace of application of scientific findings, he said. Now thousands of scientists and technicians have left their institutes to propagate knowledge in medium-size and small enterprises, and the countryside.

GUIZHOU POLICY ON PROMOTING LATERAL ECONOMIC TIES

HK090245 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 6 May 86

[Text] The provincial people's government on 3 May promulgated some regulations on promoting lateral economic ties, calling for a good job in developing lateral economic ties to promote resource exploitation, technological advance, and urban and rural economic invigoration in the province, to speed up economic development and to attain the strategic target of making the people wealthy as soon as possible.

The regulations pointed out that enterprises should develop lateral economic ties on the basis of voluntary participation and in accordance with the principle exercising one's strong points while avoiding weak ones, adopting various forms, benefiting each other, and developing jointly and in disregard of the barriers between areas, departments, trades, and ownership systems. It is necessary to vigorously develop ties between enterprises producing raw materials and enterprises processing raw materials; between production enterprises and scientific research units, including colleges and universities; between civilian and military industrial enterprises; between industrial, agricultural, commercial and trade enterprises; and between railway, highway, water transportation, and civil aviation enterprises. Developing lateral economic ties should focus on the target of the province's Seventh 5-Year Plan and the orientation and essential points in the plans formulated by all sectors. It is necessary to encourage developing economic ties with minority nationality and poor areas, and to accelerate economic and social development in these areas through lateral economic ties.

The regulations pointed out that governments and relevant departments at all levels must further emancipate their minds, respect the decisionmaking power of enterprises, make more efforts to plan, organize, coordinate, and guide service work, and safeguard the decisionmaking powers and legitimate rights and interests of enterprises in developing lateral economic ties.

SICHUAN GOVERNOR VIEWS SEVENTH 5-YEAR PLAN GOALS

HK300243 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Excerpts] Governor Jiang Minkuan said in his government work report at the fourth session of the sixth provincial People's Congress: To vigorously increase the building of socialist spiritual civilization while increasing the building of material civilization is the strategic principle we must adhere to throughout the entire historical stage of socialism. The province's Seventh 5-Year Plan, drawn up according to this strategic principle, is a plan for simultaneously building socialist material and spiritual civilization. We must uphold the four basic principles, bring socialist democracy into further play, put the socialist legal system on a firm basis, and uphold the people's democratic dictatorship. We must strengthen and improve ideological and political work and bring about a fundamental turn for the better in social mood as soon as possible, to ensure the healthy development of economic work.

Jiang Minkuan proposed in his report the following six targets in the draft of the province's Seventh 5-Year Plan:

1. Strive for a sound growth rate centered on improving economic results. By 1990 the province's total industrial and agricultural output value should reach 107.5 billion yuan, rising at an annual average of 7.2 percent. Gross domestic product should reach 82.7 billion, rising at an annual average of 8.2 percent. Financial revenue should reach 9 billion yuan, rising at an annual average of 7.2 percent.

2. Decide on an appropriate size of investment and improve the investment structure. Investment in local fixed assets during the 5 years is set at 14.56 billion yuan, an increase of 75 percent over the figure actually completed during the Sixth 5-Year Plan. The focus must be on agriculture, basic industries, science, education, culture, and public health.

3. Accelerate the exploitation of brain-power and stimulate the development of education and the progress of science and technology. During the 5 years, 320,000 students should graduate from ordinary teritiary institutes, 760,000 from secondary vocational schools, 760,000 from ordinary senior secondary schools, 4.94 million from oridnary junior secondary schools, and 11 million from primary schools. We should also work hard to eliminate illiteracy.

4. Open up new fields in consumption and develop foreign trade. By 1990 retail commodity sales volume should reach 34 billion yuan, rising at an annual average of 7.9 percent. Total export volume in 1990 should reach 800 million, rising at an annual average of 18 percent.

5 Continue to strengthen planned parenthood work and prevent the population from growing too fast. During the 5 years the average natural population growth rate should be kept below 11 per 1,000. The province's population in 1990 should not exceed 107.2 million.

6. Further improve urban and rural living standards and promote environmental protection. The level of per capita consumption should rise at an annual average of 6 percent during the 5 years. Peasant's net income should rise by 8 percent. Workers' wages in local enterprises owned by the whole people should rise at an annual average of 6.7 percent.

Governor Jiang Minkuan proposed the following 10 major guidelines for attaining the Seventh 5-Year Plan targets in the province: 1) Persevere in taking agriculture as the foundation and achieve all-round development of the rural commodity economy. 2) Vigorously develop consumer goods industries to continually satisy the needs of society and people's daily life. 3) Speed up the development of basic industries to ensure reserve strength for economic development. 4) Readjust the structure of investment in fiexed assets and strive to improve the economic results of investment. 5) Further reform the circulation setup and gradually establish and perfect a socialist market system. 6) Do a good job in financial and fiscal reforms, and strengthen the functions of the banks and the fiscal departments in macroeconomic control. 7) Persistently open up to the world and earn more foreign exchange through exports. 8) Speed up the development of education, science, and technology, and train talented people for invigorating the economy. 9) Develop lateral economic ties and further invigorate the enterprises. 10) Change the government management functions and deepen the reforms in the superstructure.

YUNNAN GOVERNOR OUTLINES ECONOMIC TASKS FOR 1986

HK010227 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Excerpts] Governor He Zhiqiang stressed in his government work report to the fourth session of the sixth provincial People's Congress that it is essential to overcome difficulties and work hard to fulfill the tasks for 1986. He said: The main economic goals for this year are: total industrial and agricultural output value 22.2 billion yuan, a rise of 8 percent over 1985; total grain output to exceed 20 billion yuan; income of township enterprises 3.7 billion yuan; financial revenue to exceed 3 billion yuan; and export volume 250 million.

On fulfilling these tasks, Governor He Zhiqiang first stressed that in agriculture efforts must be based on fighting natural disasters to reap bumper harvests. Since last year, three successive harvests have been reduced due to natural disasters. We must brace our spirits and mobilize the cadres and masses to take further action and establish firm confidence in recouping the spring harvest losses in autumn. More methods should be devised to help the masses, especially those in disaster areas, to increase income. We must follow the principle of promoting diversified undertaking without any slackening of grain production, continue to do a good job in readjusting the production structure, take advantage of local conditions, and strive to create a new situation in comprehensive operations and all-round development. We should strive for a 50 yuan per capital increase in peasant's net income.

While continuing to invigorate the small and collective enterprises, the province must focus its work on improving the large and medium enterprises in its industrial production this year. One-third of the large and medium enterprises should be basically invigorated this year. This was proposed by He Zhiqiang in his report. In the future, we must vigorously promote lateral economic ties between enterprises, help them to eliminate obstacles, and develop a variety of combines and groupings under the principle of voluntariness and mutual benefit. We must guide the enterprises to turn their vision inwards and deepen their internal reforms.

We must do everything possible to reverse the low growth rate situation in the first quarter. Under the premise of improving economic results, we should strive to bring the growth rate back to over 10 percent in the remaining quarters of the year. We must maintain synchronous growth in output value, income from sales, and profit and tax delivery.

Governor He Zhiqiang said: We must continue to tap Yunnan's potentials in resources and strive to increase income and earn foreign exchange. We must first tap the potentials in tobacco, sugar, and tea. We must also take new strides this year in exploiting our resources in mining, tropical crops, and the mountain areas.

Yunnan must speed up construction of key energy and communications projects this year. There is a relatively large number of key projects and single projects in this field to be completed this year. The size of year's investment in certain projects is rather large. We must relentlessly grasp the key issues affecting the completion of projects and seriously do a good job in dovetailing, coordinating, supervising, and inspecting the projects.

YUNNAN HYDROPOWER STATION -- Kunming, 1 May (XINHUA) -- Construction of the largest hydropower station in southwestern China started today in Yunnan Province. The Manwan Station, with an installed capacity of 1.5 million kw, is on the middle reaches of the Lancang River. It will have six 250,000 kw generating units. A project is jointly invested by the Ministry of Water Resources and Electric Power and the Yunnan Provincial Government. The first generating unit is scheduled to go into operation in 1991. This is the first of the 15 cascade power stations planned on the 2,266 km long Lancang River. When all are completed, the total generating capacity will reach 20.73 million kw. Yunnan has 6 major water systems, with an estimated water power reserves of 71.16 million kw. The province plans to build power stations with a total generating capacity of 5 million kw during the next 2 decades, quadrupling the present generating capacity. Now under construction are three other big power stations. They are the 600,000 kw Lubuge Power Station, the 600,000 kw Xiaolongtan Power Station, and a 200,000 kw thermal power station on the outskirts of Kunming. [Excerpts] On the morning of 3 May, more than 1,200 young people of all nationalities from different circles in Hohhot joyfully gathered at the railway workers' cultural palace to attend the rally marking the 67th anniversary of the 4 May Movement jointly sponsored by the regional CYL Committee, the regional youth federation, and the regional student federation. All participants pledged to follow the line of proceeding from practices and to make contributions to the four modernizations.

Attending the rally were leading comrades of the regional CPC Committee, government, military district, and CPPCC Committee, including Zhang Shuguang, Bu He, Tian Congming, Cai Ying, Lin Weiran, Zhao Zhihong, and Bayanbatu. The CYL members and young people participating in the rally were very glad that the leading comrades joined the celebrations.

The rally opened amid the magnificent national anthem. (Ba Ke), deputy secretary of the regional CYL Committee and chairman of the regional youth federation, delivered a speech. Tian Congming, deputy secretary of the regional CPC Committee, made a speech at the rally. Also attending the rally were the secretary of the Hohhot City CPC Committee and responsible comrades of the regional Trade Union Council, the regional women's federation, and the regional scientific and technological association.

ZHANG SHUGUANG VIEWS NEI MONGGOL MILITARY DRILL

SK070137 Hohhot Nie Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 6 May 86

[Text] On the morning of 5 May, leading comrades from the regional party and government organs, including Zhang Zhuguang, Bu He, Tian Congming, [words indistinct], Ma Zhenduo, Liu Zuohui, Bai Junqing, and Zhao Zhihong, accompanied by Cai Ying, commander of the regional military district, and [words indistinct], viewed the military technical demonstration drill presented by a certain regiment under the regional military district. Following the demonstration drill, leading comrades, including Zhang Shuguang, and Bu He, went to the cadres and fighters to cordially shake hands with them and had a group photo taken to mark the occasion.

After viewing the demonstration drill, Comrade Zhang Shuguang went by car to the artillery regiment of the garrison division and the training group under the regional military district to inspect their afforestation achievments, personnel dormitories, classrooms, and mess halls, and to inquire about the living conditions of the cadres and fighters.

Answering his questions, cadres and fighters in these PLA units expressed that they will never let the regional leadership down and will certainly make new contributions to modernizing or regularizing PLA units.

NEI MONGGOL'S BU HE OUTLINES 1986 ECONOMIC TASKS

SK040539 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 2 May 86

[Text] In his report on the draft Seventh 5-Year Plan, chairman Bu He said: The region's major work for 1986 should be developed in line with the arrangements of the regional CPC Committee and government. In the latter 8 months of this year, we should pay attention to the following practical tasks:

In line with the principle of consolidation, consumption, supplementing, and improvement, we should attend to the economic structural reform focusing on the urban economy. In particular, we should make a breakthrough in allowing flexibility and invigorating the state-run large and medium-sized enterprises. All powers which should be delegated to enterprises must be delegated. Various reform measures should be carried out in a coordinated and comprehensive manner. We should attach importance to enterprise management, strive to improve the quality of products and economic efficiency, and make great efforts to eliminate all losses caused by poor management within this year. At the same time, we should conduct conscientious investigations and studies in order to prepare for making an important step in the next stage of reform.

The rural and pastoral areas should further consolidate and develop the achievements in the second stage of reform. First, they should stabilize the acreage of grain fields, establish small-scale agro-economic zones in line with local conditions, raise the level of intensive farming, strive to harvest more grain this year than in last year, and vigorously develop diversified occupations. Second, they should ensure a sustained and steady development of animal husbandry, and should basically contract all grasslands to households for management by the end of this year. They should organize and guide the masses to grasp the construction of the foundation for animal husbandry, the construction of grassland in particular, should follow the road of combining construction with livestock breeding, should establish a number of specialized branches for making the land fertile, and should attend to the experiments of combining the rural areas with the pastoral ones. Third, they should actively and steadily develop town and township enterprises in order to effect a new development in this regard.

We should understand and address traffic and transportation work. We should make good preparations for the first phase of the Jining-Tongliao and the Baotou-Dongsheng railways. Actual progress should be made in making plans and preparations for the development of Huang He navigation line. Prominence should be given to highway construction. Construction of several main highways which are already under construction should be accelerated. Meanwhile, we should depend on and mobilize the masses to build more roads in rural areas.

Attention should be paid to the pricing work which the masses are concerned with and sensitive to. We should mainly consolidate and digest the reform measures which have already been initiated, and resolutely maintain the basic stability of the general level of prices. At the same time, we should strenghten the supervision and inspection of market prices, and pay attention to stabilizing market prices and controlling the price hikes of production means not covered by the state plans. Special attention should be paid to stabilizing the prices of the people's daily necessities, as well as vegetables, meat, and eggs.

GANSU'S LI ZIQI ATTENDS MAY DAY CENTENARY RALLY

HK021003 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Excerpts] This morning, the provincial CPC Committee Propaganda Department and the provincial Federation of Trade Unions held a provincial rally marking the centenary of May Day at the provincial Government Hall. Some 1,200 people attended the rally. They included model workers and advanced people from various fronts in Lanzhou, winners of May Day medals, as well as trade unions workers representatives. The rally was presided over by (Dong Henggong), chairman of the provincial Federation of Trade Unions. After the rally opening ceremony, (Wang Xinzhong), vice chairman of the provincial Federation of Trade Unions, announced the Gansu namelist national May Day medal winners.

Amid warm applause, Jia Zhijie, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, made a speech. In his speech, Comrade Jia Zhijie pointed out: The recently concluded 4th session of the 6th NPC is another milestone in the course of building Chinese socialism and carrying out reform. The Seventh 5-Year Plan as well as Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the Seventh 5-Year which were adopted by the session, have projected for us the grand blueprint and bright prospects of China's economic and social development during the next 5 years. They are the guiding principles for the peoples of various nationalities in China.

He said: [Begin Jia recording] In connection with the state's Seventh 5-Year Plan and under the correct leadership and plans of the CPC Central Committee, Gansu must strive to expedite the pace of attaining prosperity. We must promote reforms, base our work on transformation, open our door wide, and become wealthy through development.

We must constantly promote the development of science and technology, constantly improve the economic results, and expedite economic construction as well as the development of various undertakings. We must greatly strengthen the building of socialist spiritual civilization, and constantly promote a turn for the better in party style and the general mood of society. We must strive to double the province's gross industrial and agricultural output value which was proposed by the 12th CPC Congress. The provincial CPC Committe and the provincial government hope that all workers will enthusiastically respond to the recent call by the National Federation of Trade Unions. They should carry forward the spirit of being masters of their own affairs, give play to their role of being the main force of the working class, and will propose suggestions make contributions toward achieving the lofty goals of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. [end recording]

The rally was also attended by leaders of the provincial party, government and military. They included Li Ziqi, Zhao Xianshun, Li Xuanhun, Huang Luobin, Wang Bingxiang, Jia Zhijie, Lu Kejian, Hou Zongbin, Wang Zhanchang, (Yang Julin), (Jie Keru), Ma Jilin, Wang Jintang, Ge Shiying, Liu Lanting, (Zhang Wule), Zhao Yuechi, (Wen Jingyi) and (Wang Zhengqing).

SHAANXI CONVENES PARTY RECTIFICATION MEETING

HK021155 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] On 29 April, the provincial CPC Committee held a meeting on reporting results of inspection of second-stage party rectification among organs directly under the provincial authorities. Responsible people of leading party groups and party organizations of the provincial Building Materials Bureau, Shaanxi Diesel Engine Factory and the (618) Research Institute introduced their experiences of party rectification at the meeting.

Li Xipu, leader of the provincial CPC Committee party rectification guiding group, made a speech. After affirming the achievements of the second-stage party rectification, he pointed out the existing problems. These are that: Some units set demands too low and treat the work leniently when carrying out party member registration; some carry it out in a rush and do not take measures to ensure quality. Some make mistakes during or after carrying out party rectification; some carry out the work perfunctorily so that many problems are left behind; and some do not implement measures for consolidating the achievements of party rectification.

Li Xipu stressed: We must act by proceeding from the requirements of improving party rectification, and voluntarily uphold the principle of strictly enforcing the party discipline, to really promote a remarkable turn for the better in party style. We must assign responsibilities to the people taking care of problems discovered in party rectification. All units that carry out party rectification must implement the responsibility system in which the leading cadres are reponsible for the key units, dealing with major problems, helping units that lag behind in the work, and handling major cases. Therefore, the units can do well in the work in an all-round way, including leadership, measures, time and staff. We must uphold the standards and ensure the quality of the work. We must ensure the quality when examining results of the work of party member registration, handling matters of organizations, and results of party rectification.

We must work hard in studying documents of the fourth session of the sixth NPC, and strive to ensure to promote reforms. Through party rectification, we should promote our understanding of reforms and overcome ideological obstacles concerning reforms. We must strengthen our leadership over the work of party rectification. We must not slacken our efforts or take a relaxed attitude toward the work. The people in charge of the work should be relatively stable and the power of the authorities should not be weakened.

In his conclusion, Li Xipu said: We must keep to the stand of loving the masses and acting on behalf of the interests of the people. We must examine our leadership over the work of party rectification, examine our work of party rectification, and do well in a down-to-earth manner in the second-stage of party rectification among organ the provincial authorities.

SHAANXI: XIAN OFFICIALS HAMPER LATERAL ECONOMIC TIES

HK090255 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 0100 GMT 8 May 86

[Text] According to SHAANXI RIBAO, at a Xian City work meeting on economic structural reform which concluded recently, Comrade Dong Jichang critiicized some Xian functional departments for their poor work style in hampering lateral economic ties.

By citing facts gained from his own investigation, Comrade Dong Jichang disclosed that higher learning institutes, scientific research units, central and provincial enterprises, and city-run and township enterprises have a strong desire for developing lateral economic ties. However, city finance, tax, price, industrial and commercial administration, and banking departments have failed to carry out correspondidng reforms to meet this desire. They have shifted responsibilities onto each other and made things difficult. In the 10 months since the city CPC Committee and government promulgated 10 policies on promoting lateral economic ties last year, the relevant departments have not adopted corresponding meassures and methods.

IMPLICATIONS OF PLA CHIEF OF STAFF U.S. VISIT ANALYZED

OW080525 Taipei International Service in English 0200 GMT 7 May 86

[Station commentary]

[Text] Yang Teh-chih, chief of staff of Red China's Armed Forces, has begun a 2-week visit in the United States as Congress is taking up the question of the proposed $550 million sale of avionics to upgrade Peking's fighter jets. Yang, who fought U.S. forces during the Korean war as deputy commander of Red China's volunteers, is not just making a return call to the 1985 visit by General John Vessey, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The composition of Yang's party indicates the real nature of his visit. It includes the PLA's service chief. He even brought his wife along to show his friendliness. Yang is expected to talk with Admiral William Crowe, Vessey's successor, on issues of common concern and meet other Pentagon officials. The issues of common concern are presumably the alarming Soviet military buildup in the Far East.

It goes without saying that the question of arms sale and transfer of American military technology will be discussed. In addition to the proposed sale of aircraft electronics, the U.S. has also agreed to sell Peking ship turbines, sonar equipment, and other items Peking needs to modernize the Red Navy. However, Peking is unlikely to make very large military purchases for two reasons. First, it does not have the cash to pay for the purchases. Second, it does not want to alarm the Soviets with whom the Chinese communist leadership has been busy building a bridge of friendship. Red China has stated that it is pursuing an independent foreign policy and that its military exchanges with the United States do not constitute any form of alliance. In other words, the once talked about parallel strategic interests with the United States no longer exist.

Even so, Peking will try to get access to U.S. military technology which is essential to the modernization of the PLA. But a modernized PLA will not be able to contribute to the U.S. efforts to checkmate the Soviets. Red China has its own ambitions. Its equidistance diplomacy is designed to further its own goal of eventually contending with both superpowers for world hegemony. So, American eagerness to help beef up the PLA will not in the least serve U.S. interests. On the contrary, it will lead to greater threat to the security of Red China's neighbors, the Republic of China in particular, and will finally give the U.S. itself a powerful adversary aside from the Soviet Union.

The WALL STREET JOURNAL noted that Red China jointed with Moscow in condemning the recent U.S. raid on Libya and described the military action as an act of terrorism. So, the paper raised an interesting question about U.S. foreign policy. It asked, rhetorically, how did the U.S. ever get the idea that its tilt toward Red China and away from Taiwan would be generously rewarded by Peking. It is a good question. We hope Yang Teh-chih's hosts in Washington will try to answer that question before they tilt further to Peking.

PAPERS CAUTION U.S. ON ARMS SALES TO MAINLAND

OW030455 Taipei CNA in English 0352 GMT 3 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 2 (CNA) -- Two sister newspapers in the Republic of China [ROC] lauded several U.S. senators Friday for cautioning the Reagan administration to be wary of the serious consequences of selling arms to Red China and for their support of this nation.

The Taipei-based TAIWAN SHIN SHENG DAILY NEWS and the Kaosiung-based TAIWAN SHIN WEN PAO said in an identical editorial that U.S. Senator Jesse Helms, R-North Carolina, has recently introduced a resolution with Senator Barry Goldwater, R-Arizona, urging the Reagan administration to stop proposed sales of U.S. dollars 550 million worth of weapons to Red China.

The other two senators, Frank Murkowski, R-Alaska, and Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyoming, on the other hand, proposed that the Reagan administration sell F-20 fighters to the ROC to help maintain a military balance in the Taiwan Strait if it insists on selling sophisticated weapons to Red China, the papers said.

The two newspapers said that the United States, as a advocate of justice and a leader of the free world, should draw a clear demarcation line between its allies and enemies. The U.S. should never try to counterbalance the threats from the Soviet Union by beefing up the Peiping regime's military strength, nor should it comply with Peiping's demands by sacrificing the security of the ROC and other Asian nations, the editorial said. The editorial said it believes that the U.S. also knows very well that Red China, while trying to take advantage of the confrontation between the U.S. and the Soviet Union, has never stopped assisting rebels in the Third World countries to topple their governments.

This is why many people in the world feel puzzled over the U.S. motive for selling weapons to Red China, the papers said, expressing the hope that those voices of justice uttered by American senators will be able to convince the executive branch to drop its plan to assist Red China militarily.

CHINA POST LAUDS RESUMPTION OF U.S. ARMS SALES

OW051135 Taipei CHINA POST in English 30 Apr 86 p 4

[Editorial: "U.S. Resumption of Arms Sales to ROC"]

[Text] The United States State Department's recent announcement that the U.S. will continue to sell defensive arms to the Republic of China [ROC] in accordance with the Taiwan Relations Act to enable it to defend itself is a step in the right direction. At the same time, the State Department statement denied Chinese Communist cadre Hu Yao-pang's allegation that the Chinese Communists were not satisfied with U.S. compliance with the 1982 August 17 joint communique. The statement also denied that Washington was violating an agreement with Red China by supplying the ROC on Taiwan with the technology for developing an advanced jet fighter plane.

The Chinese Communist complaints are unfounded as the United States has been extremely cautious in handling the arms sales program with the ROC. As a matter of fact, the resumption of the arms sales program for the ROC has been demanded by many U.S. congressional leaders who visited the ROC recently. They include Senator Barry Goldwater (Rep-Ariz), Senator Alan Cranston (Dem-Calif), Senator Malcolm Wallop (R-Wyo) and 19 other congressmen who have sent a letter of protest to President Ronald Reagan on his decision to sell U.S. $550 million worth of U.S. avionics equipment to Peking. At the same time, 52 U.S. conservative politicians and scholars have also recently appealed to President Reagan to sell the ROC advanced fighters to offset a proposed sale of avionics to Peking.

The appeals and protests must have drawn the Reagan administration's attention, and the recent State Department news release on the arms sales issue provided an initial answer to those appeals.

It is hoped that the American people will not be misled by the administration's responses to popular appeals and protests and urge those responsible for the arms sales to follow up with concrete authorization for the ROC in the form of advanced fighter planes and weapons for its self-defense needs. They should not limit the sales to a reduced value of previous sales but allow a factual estimate of what the ROC needs in bringing up its defense to a new and up-to-date level. The United States should not be limited in its action by the August 17 joint communique as it is in contradiction with the Taiwan Relations Act [TRA] and should not be permitted to stand.

A recent statement by Senator Cranston after his visit to the Republic of China shows his firm belief that the ROC should be supplied with all necessary defensive weapons in accordance with the TRA. Other U.S. congressional leaders should step up their appeals in this regard. At the same time, the U.S. Congress should reject the U.S. Administration's proposal to sell Peking U.S. avionics equipment which will in the end not only threaten the ROC but also other Asian-Pacific nations.

As the Chinese Communists have never renounced their intention of using force to settle the so-called "Taiwan issue" but have reiterated their desire to do so, tension in the Taiwan Strait remains high. Freedom and peace in the Asian-Pacific region remain unstable and require the constant vigilance and attention of all freedom-loving nations.

Chinese communist united front tactics in this regard should not be permitted to succeed. Peking is trying to deny all sales of U.S. arms to the ROC while it attempts to get U.S. arms sales.

We are glad that the United States has not fallen prey to Peking's traps and resolutely announced its readiness to resume its arms sales to the ROC. We only hope that concrete moves will follow the recent announcement.

COMMENTARY VIEWS DEVELOPMENT OF ADVANCED JET FIGHTER

OW021115 Taipei International Service in English 0200 GMT 1 May 86

[Station commentary]

[Text] The U.S. State Department last Friday denied an allegation by Peking's party chief Hu Yao-pang that the United States has violated an agreement with Red China by supporting Taipei with technology for developing an advanced fighter plane.

State Department Deputy Spokesman Charles Redman said the U.S. continued to adhere to the 1982 communique. He said, quote, we consider the sales of defense arms to Taiwan to be a routine matter consistent with U.S. policy since normalization, and the 1982 communique, unquote. Regarding the Republic of China's stand to build an advanced jet fighter, Redman noted that Taipei started the project many years ago, and that it is entirely Free China's domestic project. Published reports that the U.S. is providing technical advice to the ROC in developing such a fighter may be speculated. Even if they were true, it involved only private American companies. Furthermore, the Taiwan Relations Act, which is an American law, stipulates that Washington should provide the Republic of China with weapons sufficient for its self-defense.

In view of the importance of air supremacy and defense of Taiwan, the Republic of China has assigned top priority to the development of sophisticated jet fighters besides requesting the U.S. for the sale of more sophisticaed jets to replace the nation's obsolescent F-5E and F-104 starfighters.

The Republic of China started the indigenous jet fighters project many years ago. According to offficial reports, the plane will not become operational until the early 1990's. The length of the research and development period seems to discredit the reported transfer of U.S. technology in the project. As a matter of fact, the ROC's defense industry has become increasingly sophisticated as evidenced in the recent successful test-firing of the locally-developed ground-to-air missile by the ROC Armed Forces.

In the aeronautics industry, the ROC has been manufacturing its own trainers for over 2 decades. The locally-developed jet trainer, designated as (AT-3), is as advanced as any other of its kind in the world. Besides, the ROC has been cooperating with Northrop for the production of F-5E's in Taiwan for over a decade. Some aspects of the plane-making technology invariably rub off on Chinese engineers and technicians since then. All these are irrelevant [as heard].

What right does Peking have in interfering with the American transaction with the Republic of China? Furthermore, Peking itself has been speeding or buying weapons technology in its own defense research and development, not counting the fact that its main-line jet fighters are all built on Soviet models. What's the fuss even if the ROC has selected the American technology in developing its own jet fighters.

KMT WORKERS URGED TO PROMOTE POLITICAL HARMONY

OW071359 Taipei CNA in English 1346 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 7 (CNA) -- President Chiang Ching-kuo, in his capacity as chairman of the ruling Kuomintang, Wednesday called on party workers to communicate often with civic leaders with sincerity and open mind in an effort to promote political harmony and well-being of the people. Chaing officiated at a central Standing Committee meeting Wednesday to hear reports from party officials on KMT's major work for the year. While giving directives, Chiang specifically asked the policy coordination committee to review some existing social problems.

To lay a more solid foundation for the long-term national development, it is the basic national policy to promote political harmony, maintain social order, protect people's interests and raise their life quality, he pointed out. "They are also the goals that we have strived for over the years," he added.

He stressed that "our determination to carry out the constitutional democracy in this country will never change." However, he said moves which could damage national unity and harmony, threaten national security, and hurt the interest of the people will not be allowed by the law.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON TREASURY SECRETARY'S VISIT

Meets With Zhao Ziyang

OW091803 Beijing XINHUA in English 1742 GMT 9 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 9 (XINHUA) -- China and the United States should make further joint efforts to promote bilateral trade, Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said here today. Addressing a meeting with U.S. Treasury Secretary James Baker and other U.S. visitors, he said Sino-U.S. trade had increased remarkably, but there remained great potential for its further development. He noted that Sino-U.S. trade represented only a small proportion of total U.S. foreign trade, and hoped that the U.S. would import more from China. Zhao hoped that the Sino-U.S. agreement concerning the avoidance of double taxation will be implemented and an agreement on investment protection between them signed at an earlier date. This was important to the development of bilateral economic and trade relations.

Baker, who is here attending the sixth meeting of the Sino-U.S. Joint Economic Commission, described the sixth meeting as a great success, and Zhao said the meeting was of great importance to bilateral relations -- economic and trade relations in particular.

Turning to China's economic reforms, Zhao said they were crucial to China's Seventh Five-Year Plan. He described the plan as a combination of development and reform. China was making preparations for bigger steps in economic reform over the next two years. An important goal in the next two years was to create equal opportunities and conditions for enterprises to compete in. In view of the developments of the past few years, China could avoid major setbacks in its progress, and achieve its goals.

Baker said he believed China's reform had a bright future. The United States welcomed China's opening to the rest of the world, because it was beneficial not only to China, but also to the United States.

Wang Bingqian Attends Reception

OW091435 Beijing XINHUA in English 1420 GMT 9 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 9 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Ambassador to China Winston Lord and his wife gave a reception at the embassy here for the U.S. Secretary of the Treasury James Baker and his party this evening. Baker and his party are here attending the sixth meeting of the China-U.S. Joint Economic Committee held between May 8 to 10. Among the guests at the reception was Wang Bingqian, Chinese state councillor, minister of finance and head of the Chinese delegation to the meeting. Yesterday evening, Baker gave a return banquet in the Great Wall Hotel.

'Trade Talks Successful'

OW100955 Beijing XINHUA in English 0936 GMT 10 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 10 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Minister of Finance Wang Bingqian and U.S. Treasury Secretary James Baker declared the sixth meeting of the China-U.S. Joint Economic Commission, which closed today, a very successful and fruitful one. Wang and Baker were speaking at the closing ceremony of the meeting at the Great Hall of the people here this morning. Wang, who is also a state councillor, said the meeting would contribute to further development of Sino-U.S. economic relations and will also be conducive to solving some specific problems in bilateral economic relations.

As in previous meetings, he noted, the atmosphere of the meeting was very earnest and friendly. The content of the discussions were quite comprehensive. Both the Chinese and American delegations gave thorough and detailed introductions and explanations about the recent economic developments and macroeconomic policies of their countries. He held that, through the meeting, the two sides have deepened their mutual understanding and thus created good conditions for further cooperation. He said that he and Baker, as well as the two working groups, had also frankly exchanged views on some specific problems in Sino-U.S. economic relations. "That is very conducive to the promotion of economic cooperation between the two countries," Wang said.

Baker said that the economic and information exchanges between the two sides would help promote Sino-U.S. economic relations. China is learning from other countries their methods and experience in developing their economies, and the United States will contribute to that, he said. Through his meetings with Chinese President Li Xiannian, Premier Zhao Ziyang, Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian and Wang Bingqian, he added, he had obtained a new understanding of China's economy that will be beneficial to the two countries' cooperation and development.

According to sources at the Chinese Ministry of Finance, in order to make sure that the Sino-U.S. agreement concerning the avoidance of double taxation will be implemented as soon as possible. Wang and Baker discussed the concrete interpretation of some paragraphs and reached agreement. The two ministers signed a protocol concerning the interpretation at this morning's closing ceremony. The U.S. delegation led by Baker left Beijing for home at noon today.

YAO YILIN LEAVES FOR VISIT TO U.S.

OW121212 Beijing XINHUA in English 1203 GMT 12 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 12 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice-Premier Yao Yilin today left here on an official visit to the United States at the invitation of Vice-President George H. Bush. Yao will attend the 1986 world transportation and telecommunications fair to be held in Vancouver, Canada, following the visit to the U.S.A. Yao was seen off at the airport by State Councillor Zhang Jingfu.

YANG DEZHI VISITS KENNEDY SPACE CENTER

OW111451 Beijing XINHUA in English 1442 GMT 11 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 10 (XINHUA) -- Yang Dezhi, China's Army chief of general staff, today visited Cape Canaveral's rocket-launching base and the Kennedy Space Center in Florida. Yang was briefed on U.S. space industry developments and toured launch areas and the Apollo spaceship. He also viewed instruments and equipment that were returned to earth by astronauts from a 1969 moon landing. On May 8, Yang toured New River Naval Base in North Carolina and watched a military maneuver conducted by U.S. Marines. Yesterday, Yang visited the "Saratoga" aircraft carrier and missile frigates and aircraft at Mayport Naval Base in Florida. After leaving Florida May 11, Yang will go to Hill Air Force Base in Utah for a visit.

CHAI ZEMIN ATTENDS SINO-U.S. FORUM IN WASHINGTON

OW120241 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1215 GMT 10 May 86

[Text] Washington, 9 May (XINHUA) -- An academic forum, "China's Modernization and Its Meaning to the World" jointly sponsored by the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs and the U.S. Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies was held from 5 to 7 May at the headquarters of the Aspen Institute in Suburban Washington.

Attending the forum were Chai Zemin, vice president of the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs; and Bu Min, chairman of the board of directors of the Bank of China. The forum, sponsored by the two institutes to explore the impact of China's modernization program on the world, is aimed at enhancing mutual understanding by the peoples of the two countries and at promoting economic, trade, and technical cooperation between the two countries. The first forum was held in Beijing in November last year.

At the forum, Chai Zemin and other Chinese attendees at the forum introduced the situation in China's economic construction and its structural reforms in recent years, and elucidated China's independent foreign policy. Also attending the forum were Robert Anderson, president of the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies, former U.S. Secretary of State Vance; former President of the World Bank McNamara; and others. Chai Zemin and his entourage arrived in Washington on 4 May. They will leave Washington to tour other localities on 10 May.

PRC ROCKETS TO LAUNCH TWO U.S. SATELLITES

[By correspondent Kathleen Connors]

[Text] New York -- Teresat, Inc, a Houston, Texas-based joint venture and the China Great Wall Industry Corp (CGWIC), a division of China's Ministry of Astronautics, have signed a memorandum of agreement to use China's long March-3 rockets to launch two American communications satellites. China's space programme has a "great track record" and since 1972 has launched 16 satellites successfully," said Henry A. Schwartz, president and chief executive officer of Teresat, Inc, in an interview with CHINA DAILY. "All the American experts are convined that the Chinese have the capability to integrate our satellites and launch them properly," said Schwartz.

The two satellites scheduled to be launched are the Palapa B and Westar Vi, both of which were recovered from faulty orbits by the U.S. space shuttle Discovery in 1984 and are currently owned by the insurance consortium Lloyd's of London. "We anticipate the first satellite will be launched using China's Long March rockets no later than December 1987," said Schwartz. A group of 40-50 engineers from the three groups, Great Wall Industry, Hughes, and a division of Teresat, Star Technology and Science Corporation, a space consulting firm composed of former NASA officials, will work together on the "launch campaign."

The "launch campaign," the period of time from delivering the satellite, setting it onto the rocket and getting it up, takes about three months, said Schwartz. Star Technology will handle all space aspects of the venture, providing technical support and payload integration and the Chinese engineers will integrate the satellite into their rocket. China's launch centre is located in Xichang, Sichuan Province.

China will earn "a considerable amount of foreign exchange" for launching each of the communications satellites, said Schwartz. Teresat will own the satellites and intends to have one satellite placed in orbit for service over the U.S. to provide office buildings with "share tenant communications" via satellite. This will allow participating office complexes and industrial parks across the U.S. to have access to high quality voice and video communication, a digital PBX switch, teleconferencing and local area networking. The other satellite will be positioned over the Pacific Ocean and used for a communications link for airlines traffic, said Schwartz.

LIAOWANG ON 'DUAL CHALLENGE' TO GORBACHEV

HK110418 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 18, 5 May 86 pp 29-30

[Special dispatch from Moscow by Tang Xiushan "Gorbachev Faces a Dual Challenge"]

[Text] Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev said in a speech that the Soviet Union is now facing a "dual challenge." He also said that it is now most difficult but also most necessary for every CPSU member and the whole party to understand this challenge fully and respond appropriately. The "dual challenge" refers to, on the one hand, vitalization of the domestic economy and, on the other hand, preparation for an arms race at a higher level.

I

Over the last 2 decades, despite many of its developmental achievements, the Soviet Union also made some serious mistakes. First, the mistake of "subjectivism" and "voluntarism" made in the period of Khrushchev. As a result, the "adventurous attempt" to "impatiently transit from socialism to communism" in contradiction with "the objective law of social development" failed. Afterwards, in the period of Brezhev, because of "failing to make timely political assessment of the changes in the economic situation and understand all the keenness and urgency for the economy to turn to intensive development methods and the achievements in scientific and technological progress to be actively adopted in the national economy," "many economic and social difficulties came up." Therefore, economic growth rates and targets of labor productivity all greatly dropped, several 5-year plans remained unmet, production facilities in the whole country became seriously outdated, most departments did not make rapid progress in science and technology, and product quality failed to meet the standard of the times. The existing production relations, first of all economic relations, can no longer suit the needs of production development, and the phenomena of slack discipline and disorder in production can be found everywhere. As agricultural production has been backward for a long time and grain production has been failing for years running, large amounts of foreign exchange must be spent to import grain from foreign countries. Although the living standard of the people has improved somewhat year by year, this improvement has been slower than in many other countries. Because manufactured goods for daily use and food are in short supply and of low quality, the masses keep complaining.

Meanwhile, internationally, the Soviet Union has also come up with some troubles. In the first half of the 1980's, relations between the Soviet Union and the United States and the East and the West sharply deteriorated, and the military confrontations and arms race between the superpowers constantly escalated. Gorbachev believed that the arms race is one of the "biggest difficulties" confronting the Soviet Union. In particular, he worries that there "might be an irreversible danger" for the arms race to expand to outer space. The nuclear and space arms races are not only very costly but also will affect the smooth implementation of the Soviet Union's economic development plans. Moreover, if the United States forestalls deployment of its space defense system, the Soviet Union will be put in a position to be blackmailed both politically and militarily.

Vitalization of the economy and preparation for the arms race at a higher level are a pair of interrelated and mutually repellent challenges. On the one hand, strengthening arms, in particular space arms, needs a solid economic basis; on the other hand, expenditures on the arms race will surely unfavorably affect the plans to vitalize the economy. Therefore, the task to take up this dual challenge is very arduous.

II

Over the year and more as CPSU Central Committee general secretary, Gorbachev has made great efforts to tackle the domestic as well as the international tasks confronting the Soviet Union. He maintains that it is necessary to "draw the most serious lesson" from the previous mistakes and unhealthy tendencies and take a "turn" in the domestic situation. He pointed out: At present, "the most important task before the Soviet Union is to determinedly reverse the unfavorable trends in economic development so as to make the economy gain the necessary vitality" and "accelerating national and social economic development is a key to resolving all the issues."

In order to realize the turn in the domestic situation, the 27th CPU congress called not long ago approved the strategy of accelerating national and social economic development put forth by the CPSU Central Committee. The principle of this strategy is "to realize a highly organized and efficient economic transition in which the productive forces will be developed overall, socialist production relations will be mature, and the economic mechanisms will be harmonious." The CPSU programs adopted by the congress and the main targets of economic and social development specified by the basic principles are that by the year 2000 industrial output will double, national income will increase by nearly 100 percent, and labor productivity will grow up by 130 to 150 percent. The main means for attaining this strategy is to advance science and technology and carry out a fundamental transformation of the social productive forces. Therefore, the congress put forward a series of specific economic policies and measures.

In the light of the domestic economy and the fundamental tasks of social deveopment as well as the current world situation, the 27th CPSU Congress also decided the international strategy of CPSU. In a political report, Gorbachev pointed out that the main targets of this strategy are "to ensure the people in the Soviet Union are able to work under the conditions of sustained peace and freedom" and that "opposing nuclear danger and the arms race and maintaining and strengthening universal peace remain the main directions for the international activities of the CPSU."

Based on this strategy, the CPSU will continue the diplomatic effort it has made for nearly a year, namely, to continue to hold the banners of "peace" and "disarmament;" extensively hold political talks; strive to improve relations with all countries, work for improvement in Soviet-U.S. relations, East-West relations, and the international climate as a whole; actively promote various disarmament talks; and strive to lower the level of the arms race and in particular prevent the United States from breaking the strategic balance through outer space to establish military superiority. During a period of time in the future, the struggle between the Soviet Union and the United States will center around the issue of arms, and the most important aim of the Soviet Union will be still the prevention of the realization of the U.S. "star wars" plans.

The Soviet Union must now turn those paper and verbal things into actual actions. The Soviet Union has possessed some favorable conditions to realize its strategic economic aims: The Soviet leaders have realistically noticed the existing problems and deeply felt the necessity for reform; the masses expect an improvement in the domestic economic situation; it possesses enormous productive forces, a solid economic and technological basis, abundant natural resources, large scientific and technological contingents, and relatively high scientific and technological levels; and it can make use of the East European countries to make division of labor and carry out cooperation. Meanwhile, the Soviet Union must also overcome many difficulties and unfavorable conditions: As things are carried out on too large a scale, it will be difficult to ensure both funds and resources; as the initiatives of the people have not been mobilized, the prevalent phenomena of being indifferent to social benefits, irresponsible for work, slack in work, and so on will not be readily eliminated; the reform has come across some resistance, as a considerable part of cadres "have lost interest" in reform and the new measures; bureaucracy and inertia have become the "serious obstructions" to economic development and reform; the technological blockade imposed by the Western countries; and the immense military expenditure.

In enforcing the domestic economic strategy, although there is a problem of integrating the subjective desire with the objective feasibility, it is after all easier to gain the initiative to make use of the favorable conditions and overcome the unfavorable conditions. However, in carrying out the planned international strategies, one single country cannot decide everything. On the one hand, the United States expresses willingness to reduce the strategic nuclear arms; but on the other hand, it refuses to give up its "star wars plan" and stop its nuclear tests. Moreover, it has linked the reduction of nuclear arms with the solution of regional conflicts as well as the reduction of the Soviet Union's conventional arms. The United States has also proposed a countersuggestion that both the United States and the Soviet Union dismantle all the medium- and long-range missiles deployed in Europe and Asia. Meanwhile, it refuses to freeze the nuclear arms in Britain and France at the current level.

Judged by the present situation, the positions of the Soviet Union and the United States on arms control are still greatly different and it is not very easy to reach an agreement. It is feared that the aim of the Soviet Union to thwart the space arms plan of the United States cannot be achieved as it wishes. In a period of time in the future, as far as nuclear and space arms are concerned, the Soviet Union and the United States will be in a situation of holding talks while continuing the race the two countries are constantly scrambling for military superiority and exacerbating their regional conflicts, the contradictions between them just cannot be reconciled and the relations between them cannot be fundamentally improved.

CHERNOBYL MISHAP NOT TO AFFECT NUCLEAR PLANS

OW091359 Beijing XINHUA in English 1342 GMT 9 May 86

["Foreign Mishaps Will Not Mar China's Plans for Developing Nuclear Power" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, May 9 (XINHUA) -- China will not change its program for developing the nuclear power industry because of the accident at a Soviet nuclear power plant last month, today's CHINA SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY REVIEW reported.

Jiang Shengjie, director of the state bureau of nuclear safety told the newsaper that the accident which occurred at the Chernobyl plant north of Kiev, in the Soviet Union, would not affect China's nuclear-power development plans. The main part of China's first nuclear power station, in Zhejiang Province, is expected to be completed this year and the country is planning to set up more nuclear plants in Guangdong and Jiangsu Provinces in the near future.

Jiang said the safety measures at the Soviet station were "not ideal", because its graphite-moderated reactor was not adequately housed, considering its size.

Chinese scientists have been closely obvserving the development of foreign nuclear power stations, according to Jiang, a noted nuclear physicist in China.

China will use cold water instead of graphite to slow down radiation and cool the reactors of its nuclear power stations. This is acknowledged as a much safer cooling system by scientists, he said.

This system will be applied at the Daya Bay station in Guangdong. Water will be pumped into the reactor core under great pressure. The reactor core of plant will be housed in three covers designed to prevent the release of radioactive gas. The inner covers will consist of zirconium alloy cladding and the outer one will be a 0.9-meter thick, concrete-walled containment building.

Such protective structures have proved safe at the 42 nuclear generators built by France over the past 25 years, he said.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON VISIT OF CANADA'S MULRONEY

Deng Xiaoping, Li on Health

HK100726 Hong Kong AFP in English 0708 GMT 10 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 10 (AFP) -- Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping said Saturday that while his advanced age prevented him from meeting regularly with foreign guests, his colleagues were taking good care of him. "Since I am rather advanced in years, I do not meet foreign guests very frequently. My colleagues have taken very good care of me. However, you have come to visit China so I have to meet you," Mr Deng, 81, told Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney.

His hand trembling slightly as he lit a cigarette, Mr Deng said: "Like your predecessors, you devote yourself to the further development of friendly relations between China and Canada. You are a friend of China's people." He told the 47-year-old Canadian leader: "Recently there are some young leaders in the world and you are one of them. In comparison with us, you have an advantage."

Mr Deng has said several times that he is too old to handle the day-to-day business of running the country and that he can no longer concentrate on work for more than two hours a day. "When I am in Ottawa, I feel older every day," Mr Mulroney replied. "The longer I stay away from the House of Commons, the younger I feel. So I may stay here for an extended period of time."

Chinese President Li Xiannian, 80, also made reference to his advanced age in a meeting Friday with the Canadian leader: "People like us are almost useless."

Mr. Mulroney, who arrived here Thursday from Tokyo for a five-day visit, met Friday with his Chinese counterpart Zhao Ziyang and Chinese Communist Party chief Hu Yaobang. Canadian diplomatic sources here said that members of the Canadian delegation had raised the issue of human rights with Chinese officials, but that they had received no response to inquiries about Christian priests held in Chinese jails. Despite relaxation of religious policies since 1979, more than 10 elderly priests are still held in Shanghai jails. A handful of dissidents involved in the "Beijing spring" democracy movement of 1978-79 are also serving long prison terms.

In a toast proposed at a welcoming banquet for Mr Mulroney Friday, the Chinese Prime Minister accused the United States and Soviet Union of continuing their escalation of the arms race. "In the face of the grim reality, it is incumbent upon the people of the world to redouble their efforts for realizing the lofty goal of peace and development," Mr Zhao said. "We're demonstrating that countries with differet political philosophies and social systems can work together at building a better world," Mr Mulroney said in reply.

The Canadian leader was due to spend part of Saturday as a tourist, with a visit scheduled to the Great Wall.

Canada offered an interest-free loan of 252 million U.S. dollars Friday to allow China to purchase high-technology Canadian equipment. Ottawa also decided to double over the next five years its economic assistance to China, which Canadian officials said should not total 144 million U.S. dollars. Mr Mulroney is to leave China for South Korea Monday after a final meeting with Mr Zhao.

Deng on Domestic Policy

OW100840 Beijing XINHUA in English 0806 GMT 10 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 10 (XINHUA) -- There are bright prospects for Sino-Canadian cooperation, senior Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping said here today. At a meeting this morning with visiting Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, Deng, chairman of the Chinese Communist Party Central Advisory Commission, expressed his satisfaction over relations between the two countries. Deng called Mulroney a friend of China, praising him for being enthusiastic about promoting Sino-Canadian friendship like his predecessors.

Mulroney extended his congratulations on China's achievements in recent years. Briefing his guest on China's domestic situation, Deng said China has made some progress. But it is only a beginning, he said. Greater and more remarkable changes are expected in another five years. Deng stressed the importance of adopting a down-to-earth attitude and avoiding any tendency to boast about or exaggerate China's modernization program. China's total industrial and agricultural output value in 1988 could probably double that in 1980, laying a foundation for quadrupling it by the end of this century. He attributed this to the policy of opening to the outside world, invigorating the domestic economy and the rural reform. The realization of the goal set for the end of this century, he continued, will depend on the success of the ongoing all-round urban reform, which also involves education and science.

The main objective of China's Seventh Five-Year Plan is the realization of the urban reform rather than an excessively high prodution increase rate, Deng added. China needs to find further impetus for its development from its economic restructuring.

On China's position on foreign investment, Deng said, China has recently issued a law on enterprises operated exclusively with foreign capital aimed at inviting foreign investment. He emphasized that this is China's long-term policy and that the interests of foreign investors will be protected.

Mulroney on Increasing Trade

OW101431 Beijing XINHUA in English 1400 GMT 10 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 10 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney said here today that it is an opportune time for Sino-Canadian trade and his country is ready to buy more products from China. Speaking at the seventh annual general meeting of the Canada-China Trade Council, Mulroney said China with its one billion people is embarking upon a unique experiment, an effort to blend Chinese vigour, socialist planning and Western technology, which he described as "a second long march".

Canada is ready as never before to expand its economic and trade relations with China, he said. Noting that Canada is re-defining its priorities and re-allocating its resources, he said that it is "focussing attention on the Asia and Pacific region, and that "within this region, China is a special priority." The prime minister pointed out many of its competitors are providing concessional financing to China and Canada intends to "meet that competition directly". He disclosed that his government has decided to establish a concessional financing facility with China for 350 million Canadian dollars. "Over the next five years, we will double our development assistance to 200 million Canadian dollars," he said. "I have assured my Chinese hosts that we are ready to help them sell more products in Canada," he said. "We all know that healthy two-way trade provides stability to a commercial relationship." "And stable commercial relations contribute to good political relations," he stressed.

Presided over by Chairman Paul Desmarais of the Canada-China Trade Council, today's meeting was attended by over 100 delegates. They were tradesmen, manufacturers, bankers and consultants. There were also guests from Chinese departments and organizations.

Rong Yiren, chairman of the China International Trust and Investment Corporation, was also present. In his address to the meeting, Rong assured that under the conditions that its sovereignty and laws are respected, "China ensures the lawful rights and interests of foreign investors in this country, and gives preferential treatments to them in taxes and their lawful profits can be remitted out." "China also pays great attention to stepping up its work on economic legislations and protecting the rights and interests of foreign investors according to law," he added.

This afternoon, Mulroney attended the inauguration of a new domestic satellite network on the outskirts of Beijing. Part of its main equipment was procured from Spar Ltd. Co. of Canada. Mulroney and Yang Taifang, Chinese minister of posts and telecommunications, cut the ribbon to open the Beijing earth station for domestic satellite communications. As the country's central earth station, it is now operating through the Intelsat leased transponders in Indian Ocean region satellite to provde daily television transmissions of central television programs throughout the country and the domestic trunk communication circuits between Beijing and the remote areas such as Lhasa, Urumqi and Hohhot.

Funding for High-Tech Equipment

HK091304 Hong Kong AFP in English 1150 GMT 9 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 9 (AFP) -- Canada has offered China a total of 252 million dollars in interest-free loans to allow Beijing to purchase high-technology Canadian equipment, Canadian officials said Friday. The officials said that the loans, discussed during talks between visiting Canadian Premier Brian Mulroney and his Chinese counterpart Zhao Ziyang, will allow Beijing to purchase Canadian telecommunicatins, hydroelectric, agricultural and aviation equipment.

Ottawa has also decided to double its economic assistance to China during the next five years, the officials said, adding that Canadian economic aid to China should total some 144 million dollars between 1986 and 1990.

Mr. Mulroney gave Chinese Prime Minister Zhao a detailed briefing on the results of the just-ended Western econoimic summit in Tokyo, the officials said. Chinese officials were reported to be particularly interested in hearing about the discussions on international terrorism and the causes of the accident at a Soviet nuclear power station in the Ukraine.

Mr. Mulroney is the first of the seven Western leaders who attended the Tokyo summit to visit Beijing. He was given a 19-gun salute during an official welcoming ceremony on Friday. Following his talks with the Chinese Premier, Mr. Mulroney met with Chinese President Li Xiannian and Communist Party Secretary General Hu Yaobang.

Before their closed-door talks began, the Chinese president introduced Mr. Mulroney to Vice Premier Yao Yilin, telling his Canadian visitor that he 69-year-old Chinese official was responsible for running the day-to-day affairs of the country. "People like us are almost useless," the 80-year-old Chinese chief of state joked, referring to his own advanced age and that of China's top leader Deng Xiaoping, who is 81.

Canadian officials said that Beijing planned to use some of the interest-free loan to purchase an unspecificed number of De Havilland aircraft. The loan, the officials said, is an addition to a 1.44-billion-dollar line of credit offered to Beijing by Ottawa several years ago to spur Chinese exports to Canada. Canada enjoyed a 600-million-dollar trade surplus with China in 1985.

The officials said the Chinese Government has also assured Ottawa that Beijing will not reduce the Canadian share of its grain imports, despite a recent rise in domestic production. Canada's chief export to China is grain, but China cut its imports of Canadian grain in half between 1983 and 1985. Textile products make up 40 percent of Chinese exports to Canada.

Mr. Mulroney arrived in Beijing Thursday evening from Tokyo. He is scheduled to meet China's top leader Deng Xiaoping on Saturday before leaving for Seoul. He is expected to sign two agreements during his stay in Beijing -- a pact eliminating double taxation and another which lays down quarantines for agricultural exports. Canada is China's sixth-largest trading partner, with the countries doing about 1.34 billion dollars worth of business in 1985, a jump from 976 million dollars in 1984.

Zhao Ziyang Gives Banquet

OW091532 Beijing XINHUA in English 1513 GMT 9 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 9 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said here tonight that the Chinese Government and people are ready to contribute to the cause of world peace and human progress together with all the peace-loving countries and peoples in the world. Speaking at a welcoming banquet for Canadian Prime Minister Mulroney, Zhao said China and Canada share a lot in common, among which the most important is that we all long for peace and are working for the well-being of our respective peoples through economic development. However, he said, it is disturbing that the international situation confronting us remains turbulent. The spiralling escalation of the arms race between the superpowers is still going on and all the problems of "hot spots" remain unsolved. The just desire of the large number of developing countries to change the inequitable international economic order is still neglected.

"In face of the grim reality, it is incumbent upon the people of the world to redouble their efforts for realizing the lofty goal of peace and development," he stressed.

[Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 1525 GMT on 9 May in a similar report adds the following: He said: The Chinese people, who suffered untold tribulations, are deeply aware of the great importance of peace, knowing that to realize the magnificent goal of modernizing the country, we need a peaceful international environment over a protracted period of time. Pursuing an independent and peaceful foreign policy, China regards opposition against hegemonism, safeguarding of world peace, development of friendly cooperation with other countries, and efforts to promote common prosperity as the fundamental objectives of its work on foreign affairs. As Mr. Prime Minister once said at the United Nations forum, there is nothing more important and pressing than the pursuit of peace.]

Zhao said he fully agrees with Mulroney's view that to better the human condition and to achieve international peace and security, nations acting together could always do much more than nations acting apart. He expressed the belief that "through the joint efforts of the people of the world and the various forces for peace, it is possible to avoid a new world war and maintain world peace and that the future of mankind is full of promise."

Speaking of Sino Canadian relations, Premier Zhao noted that comprehensive and rapid progress have been made since their diplomatic ties were established nearly 16 years ago. Following the setting up of Chinese Consulates-General in Vancouver and Toronto, the Canadian Consulate-General in Shanghai will be formally opened soon, he said. Multi-channel and multi-level economic and technological cooperation has been going on between China and Canada in an ever widening field with more substantial content. Facts have borne out that the development of Sino-Canadian relations promises great potentials and a broad vista, he added.

Mulroney said, since recognition in 1970, the increase in cooperation between Canada and China in all areas of activities has been nothing short of phenomenal. There is a remarkable convergence of views between the two countries on many issues, both international and bilateral. He acknowledged that China's policy of modernization and expanding international contacts presents excellent opportunities for increasing cooperation between Canada and China.

"We're demonstrating that countries with different political philosophies and social systems can work together at building a better world," he said. The two countries shared common objectives: peace and security; arms control; stability in a still-troubled Asian continent; and, above all, improving the welfare of their citizens. Mulroney described the relationship between Canada and China as "excellent," adding that "of course, we can do better."

Among those attending the dinner were Mrs. Mulroney and other members of the prime minister's entourage, as well as Chinese State Councillor Ji Pengfei, and Rong Yiren, vice chairman of the Standing Committee of China's National People's Congress.

Speaks with Hu Yaobang

OW091545 Beijing XINHUA in English 1533 GMT 9 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 9 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang said here today that he hoped that Sino-Canadian friendship will grow year by year. During his meeting with Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, Hu said that the Chinese Government's independent foreign policy of peace is by no means an expedient measure, but a firm, long-standing and unchangeable basic policy. Hu noted that China is willing to develop political friendly relations and economic cooperation with all countries throughout the world. Hu said that China and Canada have no fundamental contradictions but many common languages and hoped that Sino-Canadian friendship will develop further.

Noting that Canada attaches great importance to its relations with China, Mulroney said that as Canadian prime minister he will guarantee the continued deepening, development and enrichment of friendship between the two countries. Among those present on the occasion were Canadian Ambassador to China Richard V. Garham and Chinese Minister of Aviation Industry Mo Wenxiang.

Meets With Li Xiannian

OW091600 Beijing XINHUA in English 1545 GMT 9 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 9 (XINHUA) -- President Li Xiannian met with Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and Mrs. Mulroney at the Great Hall of the people here this afternoon. Mulroney said that Canada attaches great importance to its cooperation with China in such fields as economy, science, technology and energy. This was beneficial to both sides. Li Xiannian expressed his satisfaction with the continued growth of friendship and cooperation between the two countries. Li described Canada as an old friendly trading partner of China, adding that both sides should make further joint efforts to expand China's export to Canada so as to promote Sino-Canadian trade relations.

Sharing Li's view, Mulroney said that Canada would make further consideration of importing more from China. The two leaders exchanged views that peoples of both countries want peace and should strive to safeguard world peace. Present on the occasion were Li's wife Lin Jiamei, Vice-Premier Yao Yilin and Minister of Aviation Industry Mo Wenxiang.

Mulroney Gives Return Banquet

OW101538 Beijing XINHUA in English 1525 GMT 10 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 10 (XINHUA) -- Both Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said here tonight that they will make further efforts to develop friendship and cooperation between the two countries. Speaking at a return banquet he gave, Prime Minister Mulroney said that the Canadians and Chinese have worked together for about a century and this cooperation will continue and will produce great benefit for both peoples. "I assure you that my government is determined to promote our friendship and cooperation with China in all fields possible," he said. "We are already active and have taken concrete steps to work closely together in regard to your modernization program."

"We share common objectives on the world stage: peace among nations, a halt to the arms race, food, clothing, health and education for all people." "Not only can we work well together but we can learn from each other and exchange ideas and experience to our mutual benefit and we can teach the world that peoples of different races, and countries of different social and political systems can overcome those differences and work together for the common good," he added.

Zhao Ziyang said that Mulroney's visit to China is fruitful although it was a short one. Zhao noted that today Prime Minister Mulroney cut the ribbon at the opening ceremony of China's domestic satellite communications network. This network, built with equipment manufactured by both Canada and China, stands as a symbol of Sino-Canadian cooperation, he added.

"The CP Air has formally made the inaugural flight of its regular service to Shanghai, and the CAAC will open its air service to Canada in due course," he said. "Our two sides have also reached agreement on such documents as the agreement on avoidance of double taxation, the memorandum of understanding on plant quarantine cooperation and the memorandum of understanding on Sino-Canadian scientific and technological cooperation, which will be signed soon."

"I want to take this opportunity to express our thanks to the Canadian Government for the positive measures it has taken for the purpose of expanding Sino-Canadian economic and trade relations," the Chinese premier said. Acknowledging that "there exist no obstacles in the way of developing our bilateral relations, he said that to expand friendly cooperation between our two sides and promote prosperity and progress in our two countries serve the interests of not only the two peoples but also the people the world over.

"I am convinced that with the passage of time, the friendly relations and cooperation we have enjoyed will grow even stronger. Let us work together in a fresh effort towards this end," he said. Present also were Vice-Premier Li Peng, State Councillor Ji Pengfei and Vice-Chairman of the National People's Congress Standing Committee Rong Yiren.

Raises Human Rights Issues

HK120749 Hong Kong AFP in English 0742 GMT 12 May 86

[By Pierre-Antoine Donnet]

[Text] Beijing, May 12 (AFP) — Canadian Premier Brian Mulroney said he raised the question of human rights in China in talks with Premier Zhao Ziyang, focusing on the fate of Roman Catholic clergy held in Chinese jails. During a press conference before his departure for South Korea, Mr. Mulroney said that he would also raise the issue of human rights during his stay in Seoul, even though the situations in China and South Korea were "entirely different." Mr. Mulroney said he had raised "a number of specific points" with Mr. Zhao, including the cases of imprisoned Chinese clergy, becaue "this is the kind of subject that can be discussed between friends." The Canadian prime minister — who is a practising Catholic — said he felt it would be "abnormal" for the representative of a democratic country to visit a foreign country without raising the issue of repression. "Our hope is that there will be progress" on this problem, he said, adding that he expected the two governments would have further discussions on the subject.

Asked to comment on Mr. Mulroney's statements, the Chinese Foreign Ministry simply took note of the question. Mr. Mulroney said he also expected to discuss human rights issues when he meets with South Korean leaders, while noting that "I don't draw any parallels between the situation here of course and the one in South Korea."

A report issued in late 1984 by the London-based human rights group Amnesty International said that at least 10 Catholic priests, most of them more than 70 years old, were languishing in Shanghai jails. China severed ties with the Vatican in 1957 and set up a "patriotic church" independent of Rome for China's three million Catholics. A handful of dissidents from the "Beijing spring" democracy movement of 1978-79 are also serving long prison terms for "counter-revolutionary crimes." China regards human rights' issues as internal matters and visiting foreign leaders rarely comment publicly in such detail on the question, observers said. The Canadian prime minister also indicated that a broad convergence of views on Afghanistan and Cambodia had emerged during his talks with Chinese leaders. The Chinese Government raised the issue of "Soviet interference in the region," Mr. Mulroney said, adding that "Cambodia is a classic example." Mr. Mulroney said that, like China, Canada calls for the withdrawal of the estimated 150,000 Vietnamese troops from Cambodia. He said that Chinese leaders nourish "strong apprehensions about Soviet intentions" in Cambodia, Afghanistan and North Korea, adding that the 50 divisions of the Soviet Army lined up along the Sino-Soviet border were "not there on holiday."

On other matters, the Canadian leader said that China had registered concern about its trade deficit with Canada which amounted to about 600 million U.S. dollars last year. During his visit which began Thursday, Canada and China signed draft agreements on scientific and technological cooperation and on the avoidance of double taxation. In another development, a Canadian consulate is to open soon in Shanghai. Canada has also offered an interest-free loan of 252 million U.S. dollars to allow China to buy Canadian high-technology equipment. Ottawa has also decided to double its economic assistance to China which now is to total 144 million U.S. dollars over the next five years. Mr. Mulroney met with top leader Deng Xiaoping, Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang and President Li Xiannian during his stay. He is to travel to Seoul Monday for a four-day visit.

ZHAO ZIYANG INSPECTS SICHUAN, HUBEI POOR AREAS

OW090159 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1318 GMT 8 May 86

[By reporters Xie Bangmin and Huang Changlu]

[Text] Beijing, 8 May (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang, during an inspection tour of impoverished mountainous areas in Sichuan and Hubei, said the key to making mountainous areas better off is to develop transportation and thereby promote circulation of commodities so as to enliven the economy and exploit resources.

From 19 to 28 April, Premier Zhao Ziyang, Vice Premier Li Peng, Vice Chairman of the NPC Standing Committee Wang Renzhong, and some responsible comrades of central departments inspected a dozen mountainous counties and cities in northwestern and western Hubei and eastern Sichuan, covering some 2,000 km. During the trip, they were briefed by prefectural, city and county officials; investigated first-hand forest resources and grassland; inspected a number of village and town enterprises and factories; visited Farm households and roadside vendors; and chatted with gass-roots cadres, workers, peasants, and other people of all walks of life on a wide range of subjects.

It was in late spring, the third month of lunar calendar, when Zhao Ziyang and his party set off from Xianfan and headed for the remote mountainous areas. On the journey, they saw beautiful scenes of luxurious vegetation and blooming rhododendrons on the mountain ridges and smelled the fragrance of rape and wheat flowers. Zhao Ziyang and others noted with satisfaction the remarkable changes in these previously inaccessible and underdeveloped mountainous areas over recent years, with the people having enough to wear, sufficient market supply, and stable commodity prices. Zhao Ziyang said that his impressions throughout the journey were in general better than anticipated. First of all, the production and construction of these areas have developed rapidly, and the people's living standards have considerably improved. Second, the cadres are full of confidence and have a healthy mental outlook. However, the rich resources in these areas have not been fully utilized; most counties are still unable to cover their expenditures with their own financial revenues and have to rely on state subsidies; rural per capita net income is still below the national average; and people in a few mountainous areas still live in poverty and have difficulties in their daily life.

Everywhere they went, Zhao Ziyang and other leaders asked local cadres and people about the development of resources, county financial revenues, and people's livelihood; together they discussed ways to become better off. Zhao Ziyang pointed out: The mountainous areas are rich in resources both under and above ground, including hydroelectric power, minerals, citrus fruits, and medicinal materials, and pastures. Moreover, many counties are located near the Chang Jiang and can use water transportation to develop industry, which is essential for resolving local financial difficulties. Only when a county has beefed up its economic strength, can it help its impoverished peasants become better off. Although assistance given to individual households is important, the key to making them better off is to generally enliven the economy of the county.

Zhao Ziyang told local cadres: In developing industry in the mountainous areas, it is necessary to study their strong points in selecting a project for development and make the best use of the strong points to off set weaknesses instead of blindly following other localities in developing industry.

For example, counties in the Exi Tujia-Miao Autonomous Prefecture and Wanxian Prefecture, which are rich in coal and limestone and located on the Chang Jiang, might develop small cement plants or plants for prefabricated products, and ship them via the waterway. Counties that are rich in water resources might build small hydroelectric power stations and use the electricity generated during the peak water season to develop seasonal high energy consumption industry, such as exploitation of yellow phosphorus, calcium carbide, and ferroalloy, thereby transforming the water resources into something that can be used to harness electricity. The mountainous areas may develop processing industries with their resources. For example, countries rich in fruits might build juice factories, but they should not process all their raw materials. With poor market information and a remote location, the mountainous areas cannot turn out good and competitive products from their factories because of the long transportation distance. Therefore, they should cooperate with coastal cities like Shanghai and large and medium-sized cities nearby such as Wuhan and Shashi in order to benefit each other and achieve better economic results. He said: In developing industry, the mountainous areas should build small plants and mines that require little investment, have short construction periods, and can product quick economic results. In this way, they can accumulate funds to build up their ability to develop themselves. Nevertheless, external assistance is also needed to help these areas start their development. He told Qian Zhengying, minister of water resources and electric power who accompanied him on the tour, that the ministry should select a number of impoverished counties with rich water resources as targets for assistance and appropriate special funds for loans with discount interest rates to help the counties build small hydroelectric power stations. This should be an important measure to assist the poor.

During the inspection tour, Zhao Ziyang was briefed by local cadres on the emergence of commodity production in the mountainous areas. He praised it as a great achievement of the cadres. Zhao Ziyang said: In order to make the best use of resources in these areas and promote commodity production, it is necessary to develop transportation and improve commodity circulation. Without a good transportation system, it is impossible to develop commodity economy. To enliven the economy, these areas should explore the quickest ways to collect and distribute commodities. He told cadres of the Exi Tujia-Miao Autonomous Prefecture that they should not go against economic trends in arbitrarily making the prefectural capital the commodity trading center. From now on, special attention should be given to separating the political center from the economic center in the mountainous areas. In mapping out industry, comrades should strive to shorten transportation distance. It is necessary to set up a number of commodity trading areas on the Chang Jiang with factories and commercial organizations located along the banks. Without utilizing the Chang Jiang and its main tributuaries, it is impossible to develop the mountainous areas. In developing transportation, priority should be given to highway, not railway, construction. It is necessary to make good use of the "golden waterway" of the Chang Jiang.

In Yesanguan, a small mountainous town in Badong County, Zhao Ziyang saw with delight clear streets as well as thriving stores and vendors. He urged Guan Guangfu, secretary of the Hubei Provincial CPC Committee, to study Yesanguan's experience. Transportation and circulation are related but do not equal each other. Some localities that have good transportation lack an effective circulation system. Therefore, it is necessary to devote special attention to improving commerce in these areas. State-run commerce should undergo reform to enliven its management.

Grass-roots supply and marketing cooperatives should become real economic entities with independent management, and individual traders should be allowed to make up for deficiencies of rural commerce. It is also necessary to explore new forms of commerce, such as commercial undertakings with independent management jointly set up by counties, districts, or townships. State-run commercial enterprises, supply and marketing cooperatives, specialized households, and peasants should be allowed to become stockholders of such joint commercial undertakings that combine production with marketing, agriculture with commerce, and agriculture with industry, and that directly link with cities and factories, thereby enabling procedures to have direct contacts with consumers, reducing transaction levels, and speeding up circulation. In short, it is necessary to coordinate all quarters through various channels so as to enliven the economy of the mountainous areas.

In Enxi and Lichuan in western Hubei, Zhao Ziyang and his party visited, with great interest, the Dashanding ranch and the Qiyaoshan pasture, both located 1,000 meters above sea level. In eastern Sichuan, he inquired about the artificial seeding in Wanxian County and Peiling Prefecture. He said: We should set up a small demonstration ranch or experimental center in these areas that can be developed into ranches. This center should establish ties with the nearby peasants and households engaged in specialized production, provide them grass seed, give them technical guidance in seeding and breeding, and serve them by processing and marketing their livestock products. With these services, it should organize large numbers of households into a big association in which everyone works together to achieve common growth and the specialized production center works together with the vast number of specialized households. Such a project requires little investment but will yield quick results. Experiences in these places show that the development of animal husbandry will be successful if it starts by developing pastures. There seems to be a great future for developing animal husbandry in the vast areas in northwest Hubei, northwest Hunan, Guizhou, and eastern and northern Sichuan. As long as our measures are proper, not only can we arouse the nearby peasants' enthusiasm, we can also train for the state a large number of experts in management, processing, and other technical aspects of animal husbandry, and they will become a big asset of the mountainous areas.

Owing to their climate and soil texture, some mountainous counties in eastern Sichuan and western Hubei are suitable for tangerine production, and the peasants there also know how to grow tangerines. Zhao Ziyang pointed out that a tangerine production belt is being developed between Sichuan's Jingjin and the Chang Jiang in Jiangxi. He stressed: In addition to output, attention should also be directed to studying cultivation of new tangerine varieties that mature early, late, or somewhere in between, so that the fruit season can be lengthened; efforts should also be made to improve tangerine quality and solve such problems as storage, processing, and so forth. Zhao Ziyang urged the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry, and Fishery and other relevant departments to study the cultivation of tangerine varieties and tangerine storage, processing, transportation, and marketing as a system engineering project, and help the tangerine producing areas plan their development and guide the peasants there to develop their economy through tangerine production.

Zhao Ziyang, Wang Renzhong, and others spent 10 days visiting the expansive mountainous areas of Sichuan and Hubei. Comrade Li Peng also made a study tour of the Daxian area in northern Sichuan and of Liangping and Zhongxian Counties in eastern Sichuan's Waqnxian Prefecture. They then travelled east along the Chang Jiang and inspected the Gezhouba water conservancy project, the Jingjiang Dam, and Yichang, Shashi, and Wuhan municipalities.

While in Wuhan, they were briefed on the work in Hubei, had discussions with officials of Wuhan and the Wuhan Iron and Steel Company, and inspected the vegetable wholesale market on Hankou's Jiaotong Road and the trade fair in Qiaokou. Zhao Ziyang and his party returned to Beijing on 6 May.

SEVENTH 5-YEAR PLAN SHOWS EARLY PROMISE

OW091357 Beijing XINHUA in English 1347 GMT 9 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 9 (XINHUA) -- China's Seventh Five-Year Plan period (1986-90), considered crucial by its framers for the country's development, has gotten off to a good start, especially in the coal, railroad, metallurgical industries and in light industry.

Coal output of mines under central government administration rose 3.55 million tons during the first four months of this year over the same period in 1985, Yu Hongen, the Coal Industry minister told XINHUA today. According to the Five-Year Plan, China's annual coal output will reach one billion tons by 1990, 150 million tons more than in 1985. "This is vital to China's modernization program," Yu said. "Coal accounts for 73 percent of the country's non-renewable energy."

Railroad Minister Ding Guangen told XINHUA the volume of rail freight during the first four months of the year rose 4.4 percent over last year. The increase is important, he said, "but that's not enough to meet the growing economy's increasing demand for rail transportation." China plans to increase its annual freight capacity to 1.6 billion tons by 1990, 2.5 percent more than in 1985. The country also expects to extend its railroad routes by 3,600 kilometers and to electrify 4,000 kilometers over the next five years. Ding said the railroads would also improve service and increase production of locomotives and rolling stock.

Minister of Metallurgical Industry Li Yuanjing told XINHUA iron and steel output increased by more than 10 percent during the first four months of the year over 1985. The Five-Year Plan calls for annual iron production to reach 55 million to 58 million tons by the year 1990, eight to 11 million tons more than in 1985, said Li. "Our focus over the next five years is on production high-quality iron materials," he said. "These are needed by the energy, transportation, engineering, building, and electronics industries."

Yang Bo, minister of light industry, told XINHUA first-quarter production of refrigerators and electric fans, recently in great demand in China's stores, increased by 66.5 and 31.2 percent respectively over 1985. First-quarter output of sugar, everyday glassware, dairy products, synthetic detergents, and beer also rose by more than 10 percent over last year, he said. The Five-Year Plan calls for production of consumer goods and other light industry products to increase at an average annual rate of eight percent through 1990.

HU QILI ON RECTIFICATION, CPC NATIONAL CONGRESS

HK090340 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 18, 5 May 86 pp 3-4

[Article by reporter Gu Wenfu: "Hu Qili on the 13th National Congress of the CPC and Rectification of Party Style"]

[Text] Hu Qili, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and secretary of its Secretariat, was interviewed at Qinzheng Hall of Zhongnanhai on 10 April by Helene Cheung, a report accredited to Beijing by the Australian Broadcasting Corporation. Qinzheng Hall is the office of the CPC Central Committee Secretariat.

In the 40 minute-long interview, Hu Gili said: According to the CPC Constitution, the 13th CPC National Congress will be convened next year (1987). The central leading organ of the CPC will be reelected at the congress and a number of old revolutionaries who have rich experience and enjoy high prestige will remain at the helm.

He continued: Continuous efforts will be made to investigate and punish those who violate party discipline and state law. The principle is that each case will be handled realistically and in light of the law without exaggerating the problems or involving the innocent, but no evildoers will be let off.

Hu Qili also said: Some decadent phenomena in China's current society are related to, but are not the inevitable result of, the policy of opening up to the world and invigorating the domestic economy. So long as we strengthen and improve our political and ideological work, develop a democratic work style, and improve the legal system, we will certainly be able to reduce the negative influences to the minimum. We will not refrain from doing something necessary for fear of a slight risk. Continuously opening up to the outside world is our unshakable, basic national policy. The central leaders working on the first front deal with a vast amount of work every day, but they still keep in contact with the masses through different channels. The strategy for economic and social development during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period was drafted by our experts in line with a fact-finding survey made by the central leaders throughout the country and was finally worked out on the basis of suggestions and proposals offered by people of various circles.

THE 13TH CPC NATIONAL CONGRESS WILL ELECT A NEW CENTRAL LEADING ORGAN

In answering whether a party congress will be held next year and whether there will be any major readjustments, Hu Gili said: Founded on the principle of democratic centralism, the CPC practices a high degree of centralism on the basis of a high degree of democracy. Decisions on major issues within the party are always made by party congresses. As prescribed by the party Constitution, the 13th CPC National Congress is to be held next year. The party's central leading organ will also be reelected in accordance with the party Constitution. The exact date for the convention of the 13th CPC National Congress will be fixed through discussions during the 6th Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee to be held in the second half of this year.

In order to cope with the arduous tasks of modernization, our party has made great efforts over the past few years to reorganize its ranks of cadres so that leading cadres at various levels will be more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated, and more professionally competent. This is a major and fruitful effort that our party's central leading organ has undergone two major readjustments -- the one that took place at the 12th CPC Congress and the other at last year's National Conference of Party Delegates. Both readjustments were carried out smoothly. A number of old comrades voluntarily stepped down from the central leading organ and thus made valuable contributions to the abrogation of the life tenure of leading posts which was then a reality, as well as to the rejuvenation of the central leading organ. Meanwhile, a number of younger cadres have taken up new leading posts and plunged themselves into work with full vigor. Now our new and old cadres respect each other, work in close cooperation, and unite as one. This is an important indication of our party's prosperity. In order to ensure that our party's central leading organ will better meet the needs of the four modernizations and to guarantee the continuity and stability of our party's line, principles, and policies, the 13th CPC National Congress will take a step forward in enhancement of cooperation between old and new cadres and replacement of the former by the latter.

Early last year, some ideologically unsound tabloids and pornographic videotapes appeared in some localities. Through investigation and corrective measures, this unhealthy tendency has been basically curbed. Prostitution is illegal in China. There are such instances, but they are rare. Such evil has profound social and historical roots. It is related to, but is not the inevitable result of, the new objective conditions that have arisen since the introduction of the policy of opening to the outside world and invigorating the domestic economy. The appearance of unhealthy tendencies reults somewhat from the influences of capitalism, but we should not ignore the pernicious influence of longstanding feudalism. Some special phenomena appear because of the slow development of the commodity economy. To combat such negative phenomena is a long, drawn-out task. Although there are quite a few problems in our society, our public order and the general standards of our social conduct at the present time are still much better than those in many other countries in the world.

The world of today is opening up and information is up-to-the-minute. When engaging in a modernization drive, a country cannot but derive nourishment from the material and spiritual wealth jointly created by mankind. Blind opposition to everything foreign can only lead the modernization drive to empty talk. The change from closing our country to international intercourse to opening it to the ouside world is historical progress. In opening up to the outside world, we not only can absorb foreign investment funds and learn advanced scientific, cultural, and technological knowledge and managerial skills from foreign countries, but we can also instill new vitality in our national spirit and effect profound changes in people's spiritual life. Naturally, just as flies enter our house when we open the windows, some decandent ideas and lifestyles of capitalist society also take advantage of the opportunity to enter our country when we are opening up to the outside world. Moreover, the pernicious influence of the remant feudal ideas left over from old China cannot be thoroughly eliminated in a short time. As soon as there is a suitable climate, these dregs of society will come to the surface. For this reason, it is entirely unnecessary to be alarmed if some decadent phenomena increase to some extent. So long as we promote cultural and ideological progress, step up education, and improve the legal system, we will certainly be able to reduce the negative influences to the minimum. We will not "give up eating for fear of choking." Continuously opening up to the outside world is our unshakable, basic national policy.

Chinese Leaders Currently in Office Often Go Into the Midst of the Common People To Make Investigations and Studies.

Speaking of the work style of Chinese leaders, Hu Qili pointed out: The central leaders working on the first front handle a host of things every day in regard to domestic and international affairs, but they still keep in contact with the broad masses of the people through different channels. Our leaders do not have spare time and a day off is, of course, out of the question. Moreover, in order to read documents and letters from the people, they often have to work late into the night. During the 6 years between 1980 and 1985, General Secretary Hu Yaobang read and commented on at least 2,000 letters from the people. Every year, the central leaders try and find time to go down to factories and the countryside in order to make investigations and studies. There are more than 2,200 counties throughout the country. General Secretary Hu Yaobang has been to at least 1,500. In 1985 alone, he visited over 60 counties and cities. Most places that he has been to over the past few years are underdeveloped in China, such as Yunnan, Guizhou, Guangxi, and Xinjiang. Last year, Premier Zhao Ziyang made an inspection visit to different areas every month, except in May and June. During the Spring Festival of this year, Premier Zhao, Vice Premier Tian Jiyun, and I made an inspection of Hainan Island.

The strategy for economic and social development during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period was put forth in the light of vast investigations and studies conducted by the central leaders throughout the country and on the basis of suggestions and proposals offered by more than 1,000 experts, scholars, and people of various circles.

Making investigations and studies from actual conditions, doing everything for the people, and doing everything by relying on the people are cherished traditions of our party. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th Central Committee, these cherished traditions have sparkeled with brilliance again. This is quite obvious to everybody.

HU QILI TALKS WITH MING PAO PRESIDENT CHA

OW231918 Beijing XINHUA in English 1854 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 23 (XINHUA) -- Hu Qili, member of the Political Bureau of the Communist Party Central Committee, met here today Louis Cha Leung Yung, chairman and president of the Hong Kong newspaper MING PAO.

Hu discussed with Cha a wide range of topics, which include China's political and economic situation, its economic performance over the past five years and its economic and social development over the next five years. Xu Jiatun, head of the XINHUA Hong Kong office, was present.

YU GUANGYUAN VIEWS REACTION TO MA DING ARTICLE

HK120100 Shanghai SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO in Chinese 21 Apr 86 p 14

[Article by Yu Guangyuan: "Discussion of Ma Ding's Article Should be Taken as an Opportunity To Gain Experience in Implementing the 'Double Hundred' Policy"]

[Text] On 7 April, SHIJIE JINGJI DAOABO republished the full text of Ma Ding's article. The headline added by an editor of the newspaper says it is "a good article well worth reading." Before I express my views, please let me rethink whether I agree with this judgment. What I want to say now is that I hope that after reading Ma Ding's article, more people can express their own views free from the restraints of the headline given by the editorial department of SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO. The department will certainly welcome the airing of various views, including those that disagree with the newly added headline.

I would now like to tell the readers that at an academic meeting held in Beijing on the 24th of last month on the question of Ma Ding's article, I said: This is a relatively important article, an article that has been published by permission and an article that must attract the attention and discussion of economists and theoreticians. I did say so. (In addition, I also said that I could not agree with some ideas expressed in the article.)

Why did I say so? By saying that it is a relatively important article, I mean that although it is an academic thesis, the article describes in an overall manner China's current study of economics, involving the orientation of China's study of economics. Therefore, it must be of great significance.

By saying that it is an article that has been published by permission, I mean that I heard an argument that criticized GONGREN RIBAO, BEIJING REVIEW, AND SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO, which carried Ma Ding's article, saying that they "must not publish any article opposed to Marxism."

Of course, this argument is connected with the coverage carried by JINGJI CANKAO. It is only natural for people to raise such an argument (of course, a bit too rashly) after reading the coverage, as they did not have the opportunity to look up the articles of Ma Ding and CHUNG PAO. It is common for a news report that is distorted and inconsistent with the facts to have such a consequence. Moreover, the argument will strike blows not only at Ma Ding himself and the publications that carried his article, but also at many "certain economists." Before discussing whether Ma Ding's article is good or not, we must first make a clear and unequivocal judgment on whether such an article should be allowed to be published in the newspapers.

By saying that it is an article that must attract the attention and discussion of economists and theoreticians, I mean that now that Ma Ding's article is relatively important and moreover, has been published, the economic community should discuss whether the article's views are correct and comprehensive, whether it is a good article, and where its significance lies. As I see it, Ma Ding's article deals with the guiding ideology for China's economic work. Holding discussions on his article will have a great impact not only on our theoretical study but also on our practical economic work. Only through discussions can we gain a clear understanding of haw to state appropriately the article's errors or shortcomings, if any. I favor discussing some matters of principle and not diverting people's attention by spending too mcuh time discussing side issues. In this remark, I also touched on the question of the theoreticians, because it has been reported that Ma Ding himself is a young philosophy teacher. For this reason, in my opinion, it is necessary for theoreticians to concern themselves with and make an analysis of Ma Ding's article and the debate triggered by CHING PAO's criticism of Ma Ding's article.

With the third remark, I also mean that this year marks the 30th anniversary of the promulgation of the "double hundred" principle of the CPC Central Committee. On 26 May 1956, Comrade Lu Dingyi made the famous speech of "let a hundred flowers bloom and a hundred schools of thought contend" in Zhongnanhai's Huiren Hall in Beijing, conveying the party Central Committee's major principle to promote the flowering of the sciences and the arts. However, the principle has since not been implemented for a long time. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, things have greatly changed. Nevertheless, many problems remain in carrying out the "double hundred" principle. Therefore, I hope that the implementation of the principle will be embodied in practice in the future. Since Ma Ding's article has attracted people's wide attention, I think we must set an example in handling the matter. I hope that on this matter, we will manage to reason out things dispassionately and in real accordance with the facts and the original. I also hope that through the current discussion, we can show people what is meant by a strict scientific approach. Recently, the Commercial Publishing House published a book entitled "Let a Hundred Schools of Thought Contend -- The Only Way Out of Scientific Development." It is the "White Book" of the meeting on genetics held in Qingdao in the summer of 1956. It provided the academic community with valuable experience in implementing the "double hundred" principle. However, the experience gained 30 years ago is far from enough for us now. Therefore it is necessary for us to create new experience. I think it advisable to take the discussion of Ma Ding's article as an opportunity to gain experience in implementing the "double hundred" principle.

Of course, what I have said is to strive to create experience in this field of endeavor.

With this remark, I also mean that first, we must have a clear and definite idea to create experience and be clear about this objective; second, we must use our brains to seek ways of creating the experience; and third, we must always study what we have done and learn where we have achieved desired results and where we have made mistakes. Since the principle of letting a hundred schools of thought contend has not been satisfactorily implemented for many years, everybody lacks experience in it. Therefore, it is difficult to avoid shortcomings. Taking shortcomings as the object of study is always an important method for summing up experience.

In discussing Ma Ding's article, I want to bring the attention of the discussion participants to the fact that it was published twice -- first in GONGREN RIBAO on 2 November 1985 and then in BEIJING REVIEW on 9 December, in both the English and Japanese editions. The latter is the revised version of the article carried by GONGREN RIBAO rather than its simple reprint, in which the author and the editorial department made some deletions and additions. Some of the alterations are important because they have corrected some major oversights and flaws of the article's first-published version. Therefore, when clarifying some facts about the criticism by New York's CHUNG PAO version of Ma Ding's article, we must base ourselves completely on the article published in BEIJING REVIEW, because the Japanese news agency's coverage was based on that article. We must affirm the revisions made by the author on his article since the article was published subsequently.

WANG MENG ON NORMALIZATION OF LITERARY CRITICISM

HK110742 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1235 GMT 7 May 86

[Article by Wei Liming, selected from HUA SHENG BAO [5478 5116 1032] of 6 May: "Looking Forward to Normalization of Literary Criticism" -- ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] "We Are Now in the Best Period Since the Founding of the PRC, but There Are Still Many Difficulties."

I recently interviewed Wang Meng on a series of questions, such as the prospect of art and literature in China, the policy of "double hundred" (letting a hundred flowers bloom and a hundred schools of thought contend), and so on.

I saw him in his small office. Dressed simply in an old dark blue uniform, he looked just like a secondary school teacher. Smiling, he told me: "I moved into this office only 2 days ago. You are the first reporter to interview me here."

Our conversation began with China's cultural cause. I asked him what period he thought China's cultural cause was in at present. He answered without hesitation: "We are now in the best period since the founding of the PRC."

He said that cultural cause is now flourishing in China and the scale is much larger than before. Various cultural branches, such as literature, art, opera, cinema, acrobatics, music, archaeology, and so on, are very prosperous. Libraries are also developing rapidly -- it is not only the most prosperous period since the founding of the PRC but also the best period he has ever seen in his life. He said: Libraries are always full of readers, old and young.

These phenomena show that as the country becomes more and more stable and the economy keeps developing, people have a greater need for and set higher demands on the cultural cause. At the same time, many problems have been exposed.

As the living standards have been raised, many people now have their own television sets, and they can watch ordinary literary and art programs on television. People will not go to the opera house or cinema if the performing quality is not high enough. How can we make opera well received among the young audience? This is an essential issue. "Therefore, in my opinion, our cultural cause is now in a period of rapid development, but we will also face many new problems or even great difficulties."

"I Like the Policy of 'Double Hundred' Very Much"

By May this year, 30 years will have passed since the policy of "double hundred" was first put forth. The drastic rise and decline of a large number of young writers who emerged in the 1950's were closely related to the implementation of the policy of "double hundred." Therefore, in speaking of the policy of "double hundred," Wang Meng said with deep feeling: "I like the policy of 'double hundred' very much." In English, he added: "I enjoy the policy."

Wang Meng emphasized that the policy of "double hundred" is a policy that can bring the positive role of literature and the initiative of literature and art workers into play, encourage them to display their personal character and help to practice democracy in the artistic field.

Reviewing history, he said: The policy of "double hundred" scored instant results as soon as it was put forth in 1956. Soon after that, all kinds of new works emerged and new efforts of artistic exploration were made. For example, some novelists produced new works, and some operas were created, such as the plays "Yang Naiwu and Xiao Bai Cai" (which was adapted from the story of an unjust verdict in the Qing Dynasty) and "The Happy and Tragic Love Story of an Actor" (which reflected the life of urban residents in the early period of the Republic of China).

"It was due to the inspiration of the policy of 'double hundred' that I wrote the novel 'The Newly Arrived Young People in the Organization Department' (a novel describing a group of young people fighting against bureaucracy)." Wang said: "I owed my courage to the policy of 'double hundred' because it created a relaxed atmosphere for writers and artists and encouraged people to criticize."

"And soon after that I was consigned to the inferno. I was banned from writing for nearly 20 years and the policy of 'double hundred' was completely forsaken during the Great Cutural Revolution.

Wang Meng said: The state has redressed the "leftist" guiding principle in varous fields in the new historical period. With regard to art and literature, the policy of "double hundred" has been adopted again and enriched. Wang Meng himself has recovered the right of creation. He told me proudly that due to the inspiration of the policy of "double hundred," he had published in only 7 years between 1979 and 1986 many novels, prose pieces, and critiques which ran to over 2.5 million characters.

For this reason, Wang Meng said: "The 'policy of double hundred' is a matter of vital importance. It makes me a writer and enables me to carry on my artistic creation and exploration."

"Do Not Be Oversensitive in Regard to Literary Criticism"

Literary criticism has always been a sensitive issue. Wang Meng held that implementing the policy of letting a hundred flowers blossom will inevitably encourage criticism, nd literary criticism is definitely a normal practice.

No writer or artist in the world, Chinese or foreign, modern or ancient, has the right to be exempt from criticism. Wang Meng said: "Do we not have to point out the dross in the works of Balzac and Cao Xueqin in studying the works today? Cao Xueqin died long, long ago, and we cannot locate even his tomb today. However, he still cananot be exempt from very abnormal criticism." But, Wang Meng pointed out that "China had suffered from very abnormal criticism." To cite an example, he told me, the novel "The Newly-Arrived Young People in the Organization Department," which he published in 1956, aroused different kinds of criticism in the following year. He was happy to hear criticism at the very beginning, thinking that it was a matter for rejoicing. However, as a result of the criticism, he was labeled a "rightist," expelled from the party, and prohibited from publishing any more novels.

Smiling, Wang Meng said: "Our writers do not like such criticism. They do not welcome criticism of any writer in the form of administrative penalty unless he has violated the law."

Wang held that putting literary criticism onto the normal, healthy, and democratic track is a hallmark of the correct implementation of the policy of "double hundred" in China.

Of course, China is also facing another problem. According to Wang Meng, due to the pernicious effect of the long-standing abnormal way of criticism, some writers and artists have become very delicate -- they cannot stand even very slight criticism. They absolutely must not be so sensitive, Wang said.

Meanwhile, some friends abroad are also particularly sensitive to literary criticism in China. They always think of something disastrous at the mere rustle of leaves in the wind.

Wang Meng cited Zhang Xianliang's case as an example. Zhang Xianliang has become a focus of attention as he described for the first time sexual depression in his new work -- "Half of a Man Is a Woman." During Zhang's recent visit to the United States, BEIJING RIBAO carried a 500-character letter from a reader criticizing Zhang's works. Some foreign news agencies, newspapers published by Overseas Chinese, and Tiawan newspapers prominently reprinted this article without delay, and some people immediately advised Zhang Xianliang as a visitor in the United States not to return to China, warning him that he would possibly be sent back to a reform-through-labor camp as soon as he returned home (Zhang underwent reform through labor in Ningxia, western China, for nearly 20 years, as he was wrongly classified as rightist).

Of course Zhang Xianliang turned down the advice. He found nothing had happened when he returned home. Instead of being sent to the reform-through-labor camp, he was greeted by his wife, who was waiting for him at a first class hotel in Guangzhou. When he returned to Yinchuan City, Ningxia region, where he worked, the director of the provincial Cultural Department and other leaders gave him a warm welcome at the railway station.

Wang Meng held that such a view expressed by some foreign friends could hardly be avoided because our country had indeed undergone a period in which some people were attacked due to their literature and art works.

Therefore, Wang Meng told me seriously: "First, I hope that literary criticism will be normalized. Second, I hope that Chinese writers and artists will adopt a normal attitude toward criticism. And third, I hope that our foreign friends and foreign reporters will also follow normal procedure in reporting literary criticism in China and not be oversensitive."

RENMIN RIBAO URGES PROTECTING RURAL ENTERPRISES

OW091247 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 10 May 86 p 1

[Commentator's article" "Exterminate 'Termites' To Protect the 'Pillar'"]

[Text] This paper today published a report on the People's Procuratorate of Shazhaou County, Jiangsu, which, in the course of dealing blows at economic crimes, made clear distinctions according to the party's policy and differentiated between merit and dismerit and between right and wrong, thereby protecting and promoting the healthy development of town and township enterprises. The Shazhou County People's Procuratorate's experience is very good and deserves to be taken as a good referenmce by comrades in all other places.

Since the beginning of last year, newspapers successively exposed unlawful activities of individual town and township enterprises to make counterfeit medicines and other commodities. Quite a few evil practices and law violations exposed in the course of party rectification and dealing blows at economic crimes in the countryside involve town and township enterprises. Correct understanding and handling of these problems is of extremely vital significance to the healthy development of town and township enterprises.

Like other economic crimes, those committed within town and township enterprises' activities do tremendous harm to the state, the people, and the enterprises themselves. If not dealt with according to law and allowed to go on uncurbed, they would certainly jeopardize reform and the policy of opening to the outside world and stimulating the domestic economy, and would undermine the building of the socialist material and spiritual civilization. Judicial organs must take an absolutely clear-cut stand, strictly enforce the law, disregard any personal relationships or considerations, and conduct serious investigation of, and mete out severe punishment to, the small number of lawless persons who commit embezzlement, larceny, or bribery, or swindle, smuggle, or handle smuggled goods. The People's Procuratorate of Shazhou County considered the town and township enterprises as the important economic pillar in the countryside, and economic criminals as the "termites" in the pillar. Maintaining a high degree of alertness at all times, it eliminated every termite it had discovered. This is absolutely correct. This is one aspect.

On the other hand, cautious and concrete analyses must be conducted of a number of problems cropping up in town and township enterprises, activities. By no means should all problems be considered as economic crimes and be dealt with as such. Developing from scratch, and from small to large, town and township enterprises have more and greater difficulty than urban enterprises in such fields as funds, technical know-how, energy, facilities, raw and semifinished materials, and product marketing. They have to try all possible ways and endure innumerable trials and tribulations in their struggle for survival and development. As the town and township enterprise law has not yet been formulated, the related policy and law stipulations have yet to be perfected, and the management system of town and township enterprises are hard to avoid.

These should of course be criticized, stopped and, in some cases, punished. However, a clear distinction must be drawn according to the party's policy and the law. Clear differentiation must be made between which are legitimate economic activities the party's policy permits, which are the evil tendencies that must be halted, which are mistakes committed due to lack of clear distinctions, and which are obvious offenses against the criminal law. More investigations should be conducted and no hasty decision should be made as to the nature of a case if things about that case are not clearly known for the time being. The Shazhou People's Procuratorate's experience is good in that it made concrete analyses of problems and conducted propaganda in the legal system by using typical cases, thereby enabling the people to understand what could be done and what should not be done in their economic activities. In so doing, it stopped economic offenses, helped stimulate the economy, and promoted the development of town and township enterprises.

The vigorous mushrooming of town and township enterprises were the product of the extensive rural restructuring conducted since the 3d Plenum of the 11th Party Central Committee, and a great creation of the 800 million peasants. By 1985, town and township enterprises nationwide employed over 60 million from the rural labor force and their total outut value accounted for over 40 percent of the total social output value of the countryside, or which the town and township industrial output value accounted for 20 percent of the nation's total industrial output value. Town and township enterprises have made tremendous contributions to changing the backward outlook of the countryside and to the motherland's modernization cause. They have demonstrated their great vitality. They have become an inseparable component of socialism with Chinese characteristics. Comrades of all departments and units concerned must, as the Shazhou People's Procuratorate did, upholeheartedly take goood care of, and support, town and township enterprises, "eliminate termites" for then, promote what is beneficial and abolish what is harmful and make positive contributions to their sound development.

ARTICLE URGES PUBLICIZING PARTY STYLE PROBLEMS

HK100826 Beijing WEN ZHAI BAO in Chinese No 309, 4 May 86 p 1

[Article by WEN ZHAI BAO Data Office: "Correctly Understand and Publicize Problems in Party Style"]

[Text] At present in the new situation there have emerged some unhealthy practices such as abusing power to seek personal gains in the economic sphere, developing the "special privilege" mentality in political affairs, and not acting according to principles in making proper use of personnel. They are also manifested in gossiping about people behind their back or by spreading information by the grapevine. This will not help matters of people, but instead will damage the party. Any problems must be placed on the table and solved. If they are not matters of principle, we must take an attitude of magnanimity and seek common ground while reserving differences. The problems which are not worth putting on the table for solution should not be discussed in private. Second, they are manifested in taking a one-sided approach toward matters and people. Now that people have worked for several decades, they must have both strong points and successions as well as weak points and deficiencies. We must neither arbitrarily raise their weak points and deficiencies to the higher plane of principle, nor stick labels on them. For example, if a comrade makes some inappropriate or even erroneous statements, we must not lightly say that he is going in for liberalization. The suffix "-lization" refers to something which is thorough and complete in nature. We must make an appropriate analysis and judgement of a person.

XINHUA COMMENTATOR ON CORRECTING IRREGULARITIES

OW091109 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0732 GMT 9 May 86

[Article by XINHUA commentator: "Start With the Leadership To Correct Occupational Irregularities"]

[Text] Beijing, 9 May (XINHUA) -- The correction of occupational irregularities has drawn the attention of many leading organs. This is a good phenomenon. In order to do this job properly, it is indeed necessary to start with the leading organs and cadres.

Both recent and past cases show that those who perpetrate occupational irregularities are usually a small number of ordinary workers and staff members. However, most cases also have something to do, either directly or indirectly, with the leadership of the organizations where the perpetrators work. Some leading cadres are themselves perpetrating irregularities. Some leading cadres tolerate, or even support, a small number of persons in their organizations practicing irregularities, because they either want to protect their departmental interests, or simply do not see the danger of such irregularities. Other leading cadres have slackened ideological education among the personnel of their organizations and departments, causing occupational irregularities to become rampant. Therefore, in order to correct these, it is most important for the leading cadres concerned to raise their awareness and strenthen ideological education among the personnel of their organizations and departments. For some organizations, it is also necessary to improve relevant rules and regulations. Otherwise, it will be very difficult to stop occupational irregularities, or prevent their recurrence, even if they are stopped.

Recently, the responsible persons of the Shaanxi Provincial CPC Committee, the Ministry of Communications, the Ministry of Water Conservancy and Electric Power, the Ministry of Railways, and the State Bureau of Materials and Equipment have successively issued statement pledging to strengthen their leadership and adopt some measures to correct the occupational irregularities perpetrated by a small number of organizations within their region or department. The leading cadres of the department of communications in Shanxi Province have pledged to draw lessons from the case of the "highway despots," involving transport administrative personnel, strengthen ideological education among transport administrative personnel, and seriously enforce discipline and a good work style. We are convinced that general occupational practice, with which the masses are concerned, will surely improve fundamentally, if the leading organs attach importance to it and the leading cadres set a good example.

HU YAOBANG URGES DEVELOPING OFFSHORE ISLANDS

OW090245 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] A national forum on the development of offshore islands opened in Beijing on 6 May. Comrade Hu Yaobang's recent important instructions on the sibject were relayed at the forum: Many of our country's offshore islands must be further developed. The State Economic Commission and the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry, and Fishery should make a systematic study and investigation of the offshore islands and come up with feasible plans for their development.

He also called on various central departments to study and investigate special subjects in a planned way and with a well-defined objective in mind in order to avoid acting blindly and giving only vague, general directions.

Those attending the forum will sum up the situation and exchange experiences in the development and construction of offshore islands and discuss related questions.

YU QIULI ON IMPROVING POLITICAL CADRES' QUALITIES

OW111046 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1325 GMT 10 May 86

[Text] Beijing, 10 May (XINHUA) -- Addressing a meeting attended by cadres of organs and units under the General Political Department on 8 May, Yu Qiuli, deputy secretary general of the Central Military Commission and director of its general political Department, urged all party committees and political organs of the Armed Forces to work hard to improve political cadres' qualities in order to keep up with the need of intensifying ideological work in the armed forces during the new period.

What qualities should a qualified political cadre in the Armed Forces have? According to Yu, he should meet requirements in the following nine respects:

He must be knowledgeable in the basic theories of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, be proficient with the party's basic principles and policies, and consciously and firmly maintain ideological and political unity with the party Central Committee.

He must have a strong party spirit and a strong sense of organizational discipline. He must uphold principles, be fair and upright, and be willing to place party interests above his own. No matter what he does, he proceeds from the party's interests. He seeks no personal gains, nor will he practice favoritism. This is the most important requirement in order to reinstate political organs' credibility.

He must treat people equally and sincerely, regardless of their ranks, or whether or not they are still in office. His political work organ is operated like a "home of cadres."

He must be highly enterprising and has a strong sense of responsibility. He works earnestly, responsibly, and scrupulously. He is capable of discovering problems and has the courage and capability of solving problems.

He is approachable, having forged close ties with the masses and the vast number of cadres. Since he always knows the ideological trend of cadres and fighters, his political work is pertinent and effective.

No matter what he does, he sets an example for others. Not only can he convince people with reason, more importantly, he can inspire and influence people with his exemplary deeds.

He must be fairly well educated and knowledgeable in science. As today's officers and men are better educated than in the past and political work is work among people, a political cadre must be better educated and more knowledgeable.

He must be broadminded, modest, cautious, and good at listening to different opinions. He respects his superiors as well as people of the same rank, cherishes people of lower rank, and earnestly upholds the principles of democratic centralism. He makes criticism and self-criticism seriously and sincerely.

He must be knowledgeable in military affairs. Only when he knows military affairs can be combine military work with ideological education, and can his political work be able to facilitate military training and logistics services and ensure the accomplishment of all campaigns and other missions.

[Station commentary: "A Milestone in Invigorating Henan -- Hailing the Close of the Fourth Session of the Sixth Provincial People's Congress"]

[Excerpts] The Fourth Session of the Sixth Henan Provincial People's Congress, the focus of attention of the people of the whole province, has victoriously concluded after completing all its agenda. As commissioned by the 77 million people of Henan, the deputies gathered to discuss ways and means of invigorating the province, and to examine and approve the province's Seventh 5 Year Plan.

The Seventh 5-Year Plan calls for an increase of 40.9 percent in industrial and agricultural output value and an increase of 43.8 percent in gross domestic product in 1990 compared with 1985. There will also be relatively significant development of science and technology, education, and culture. Urban and rural living standards will show quite a big improvement. This is a vast scheme for building Henan and a great program for reform and opening up.

Henan has a large population and a thin foundation. Its economy is rather weak. We will have to work unstintingly in the spirit of endurance in order to join the ranks of the advanced and make our proper contribution to the state's modernization drive. The four modernizatons is an arduous struggle. We must fill the Central Plain with the spirit of the foolish old man as we execute the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

TAIWAN DEVELOPING HIGH-PERFORMANCE WEAPONS SYSTEM

HK010436 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE in Chinese 1337 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Hong Kong, 30 Apr (ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE) -- According to reports from Taipei, Taiwan has started developing high-performance weapons systems in order to facilitate the "plan for developing science and technology for national defense." In a written answer to an inquiry by "Legislative Yuan" mem er Wu Shih-peng a few days ago, Taiwan's "Executive Yuan" pointed out that in order to effectively develop "science and technology for national defense," while actively seeking cooperation with well-known foreign firms and importing high technology, departments concerned in Taiwan should endeavor to invite Taiwan scholars residing abroad to return to participate in work in this area. In the meantime, the authorities have assisted more than 10 colleges on the island to carry out 66 projects of basic research and have transferred the results of 111 technological research projects to civilian enterprises for production in order to promote the development of various high-performance weapons systems.

ECONOMIC, POLITICAL FUTURE OF TAIWAN, MAINLAND VIEWED

OW080056 Beijing XINHUA in English 0015 GMT 8 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 8 (XINHUA) -- Taiwan has reached an economic "turning point" where its future economic and poliical health depends upon reestablishing ties with the mainland, a Beijing social scientist said today. He Fang, at the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, told XINHUA that it is in the interests of residents of Taiwan and the mainland for reunification to take place.

In an analysis in Monday's overseas edition of PEOPLE's DAILY, he argued that following decades of rapid economic growth, Taiwan's economy faces a lack of material resources and limited domestic markets in a world of intensified economic competition. At the same time, he wrote in the Communist Party newspaper, declining economic possibilities could threaten Taiwan's political stability in the decades to come.

Claiming that theirs was the true government of all of China, Kuomintang leaders have prohibited travel, mail and telecommunications as well as direct trade with the mainland as long as it was not under their rule. But, he said, Taiwan leaders should give up their fictions and begin "acting on the basis of social realities" -- including the desires of the people on Taiwan -- by working for renewed ties. Such ties would promote the national interest -- including Taiwain's, according to him.

Hong Kong has benefited from trade with the mainland, and Taiwan from indirect exchanges of goods, he said. And China's mainland, with its "stable political situation and economic growth" is "sure to become a major economic power by the turn of the century." Since Taiwan could only benefit from hitching its star to the rising mainland economy, he said, "what's needed now is to begin talking and to expand contacts."

He reviewed the "one country, two systems" reunification proposal, which he said would not threaten Kuominatang rule on Taiwan. The social system practiced on the mainland will not be imposed on Taiwan, he said. "What is wanted is talks on an equal basis with neither side trying to devour the other." He said Chinese on the mainland hope for peaceful reunification as soon as possible, and he invited Taiwan compatriots to come to the mainland to see if for themselves.

FURTHER REPORTS ON NEGOTIATIONS FOR CAL PLANE, CREW

MP's Urge Private Contact With PRC

HK091428 Hong Kong AFP in English 0917 GMT 9 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 9 (AFP) -- Two opposition MP's urged the government on Friday to allow civilian groups to negotiate with Chinese authorities for the return of a China Airlines (CAL) jumbo jet and the plane's crew. The two MP's Huang Ho-ching and Chiang Peng-chien, suggested that Taipei break the impasse over the return of the plane and crew by allowing private citizens and the international Red Cross to talk with the Chinese. The two MP's said that Taipei could bypass its policy of not recognizing the Communist Chinese government by allowing private citizens to visit China for negotiations instead of making contact on the official level.

The Boeing 747 cargo plane was diverted to China on Saturday by the plane's pilot, Wang Hsi-chueu. China has agreed to Mr Wang's request to remain on the mainland, but two other crew members, co-pilot Tung Kuang-hsing, 57, and flight engineer Chiu Ming-chiu, 39, have indicated they wished to return home. The return of the plane and the two crew members has been stymied for the past week by Taipei's refusal to deal directly with Chinese authorities and Beijing's insistence that Taipei enter into negotiations. Chang King-yuh, a Taiwan government spokesman, said earlier this week that Taipei would never change its policy of "no contact, no talk, no compromise" with Beijing. The defection of Captain Wang was no exception, he added.

Red Cross To Negotiate Directly

OW100353 Taipei CNA in English 0253 GMT 10 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 9 (CNA) -- Geneva-based Red Cross International [RCI], at the request of the Red Cross Society of China [RCSC], will directly negotiate with the Peiping authorities for the release of a China Airlines' Boeing 747 cargo jet plane and its crew memebers standed in the China mainland since May 3, Ku Cheng-hang, secretary general of the RCSC, said Friday. Ku contacted Paul Mettler, head of the regional delegation of the International Committee of the Red Cross stationed in Manila, the Philippines, by overseas telephone call Friday afternoon and was informed that Mettler has been instructed to keep contact with the Taipei-based RCSC and monitor the development of the incident.

According to the RCSC offial, Mettler said during the call that Red Cross International told him in a cable that the Geneva-based headquarters will be the one to negotiate for the release of the CAL plane and crew. Mettler's regional delegation is in charge of the Red Cross activities in the Republic of China, Hong Kong, Macao and the Philippines. Ku added that thte RCSC will try its best to provide RCI with all necessary information and data so as to make the RCI negotiations with the Chinese Communists more smooth.

Crewmen 'Interrogated' in PRC

OW101423 Taipei CNA in English 1412 GMT 10 May 86

[Text] Hong Kong, May 10 (CNA) -- The three crewmen of the China Airlines [CAL] Boeing 747 cargo plane landed in Canton on May 3 are being interrogated by a team of Chinese Communist cadres from the "Public Security Department," United Front Department" and "People's Liberation Army," several local newspapers reported Saturday from the China mainland.

They reported that pilot Wang Hsi-chueh is being interrogated in Peiping while co-pilot Tung Kuang-hsing and flight engineer Chiu Ming-Chih are being questioned in Canton. The reports pointed out that such "talks" are believed to take at least two weeks. Contents of the interrogations included the personnel of the units to which the three crewmen originally belonged, the military and air defence establishments of the Republic of China [ROC] and details of ROC's civil aviation, the reports said.

CAL Urged To Send Representative

OW121138 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1031 GMT 11 May 86

[Text] Beijing, 11 May (XINHUA) -- The Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC] today sent another cable to Taiwan's China Airlines urging the company to send a representative as soon as possible to take back its 747 cargo plane and two crew members. The full text of the cable reads.

Taipei, China Airlines: In a cable to your company on 3 May, we asked you to send a representative to Beijing as soon as possible to discuss the handling of the 747 cargo plane, but so far we have received no reply, much to the anxiety of the people on both sides of the Strait.

Mr. Wang Xijue, pilot of the plane of our company, has expressed his desire to settle on the mainland, while Messrs Dong Guangxing and Qiu Mingzhi said they want to return to Taiwan. Our attitude is explicit: The plane, cargo, and Dong Guangxing and Qiu Mingzhi, who want to return to Taiwan, will be returned to Taiwan. Please send a representative to discuss and handle the handing-over details.

We have stated before that this is totally a business discussion between two civil aviation companies with no political issues involved. Since it is only a matter of handing over, it should be dealt with directly and responsibly by the two parties concerned to ensure the safe return of the plane and personnel who wish to return to Taiwan. Such being the case, it is better if you send a representative to negotiate instead of going through a third party. Should you feel Beijing inconvenient, then you can suggest any other place of your preference.

Our proposal is reasonable. It is made with full consideration of your company's predicament. If your company still does not want to take up the handing-over issue, then it is you, not us, who should be held responsible for any delay in the return of the plane and crew to Taiwan. It is hoped that you will think this over. Once again we hope you will make a quick decision and give us a reply as soon as possible.

The Civil Aviation Administration of China, 11 May 1986

Plane Not Political Issue

OW121101 Taipei CNA in English 1045 GMT 12 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 12 (CNA) __ The Civil Aeronautics Administration [CAA] will assist the China Airlines in seeking the return of its cargo jet and crewmen now stranded on the Chinese Mainland, CAA Director General Liu Teh-ming said Monday.

Speaking at a press conference, Liu said that the ROC [Republic of China] national flag carrier has entrusted the Hong Kong-based Cathay Pacific Airways and the British insurance company Lloyd's of London to negotiate with Peiping for the return of the plane, cargo and crewmen.

The family members of the crewmen also have asked the International Red Cross to help urge the Chinese Communists to release the crewmen. Liu said that the three approaches are proper and that his agency will render all feasible assistance to CAL to seek an early solution to the problem.

He stressed that this is essentially a civil aviation case with no political issues involved and should not be used as a theme for political propaganda. "If the Chinese Communists try to exploit the case for political purposes," Liu asserted, "they are certain to ignite public indignation in the world community."

He continued that the ROC Government did not delay in returning a British Airways passenger plane which was forced by a Hong Kong youth, Liang Wei-chang, to land at the Chiang Kai-shek [CKS] International Airport during a routine flight from Hong Kong to Peiping a few years ago, although several Communist Chinese "officials" were on board.

Liu also revealed that an aircraft of British Caledonian Airways Ltd. also landed at the CKS Airport on March 20 because the Hong Kong airport was closed. All of its crew and passengers, including 10-odd Chinese Communist Party cadres, left Taipei safely aboard the airliner after an overnight stay at the CKS Airport Hotel, he said.

Li added that nine days have passed since CAL started seeking a return of its jet, cargo and crewmen through the afore-said three channels. But the airline has so far failed to get any positive reply from the communist regime. He urged Peiping to soon return the plan and crewmen based on the principle of humanitarianism.

Commentary Views Defection

OW120155 Taipei International Service in English 0200 GMT 11 May 86

[Station commentary]

[Text] The wife of the China Airlines pilot who landed his jumbo jet in Canton on his way from Bangkok to Hong Kong on May 3 has appealed to the International Red Cross to help her husband back home. As Mrs. Wang Hsi-chueh pointed out: There are a lot of questions to be answered about the alleged defection. Peking's behavior since the incident occurred has only reinforced her doubt. The pilot did not have the slightest reason to defect. Even journalists in Hong Kong were puzzled by his act which really defies explanation.

First, Wang has a happy family in Taipei. He and his wife of 30 years have three grown-up children and about to become a grandparent. As a civilian pilot, he drew a monthly pay of over U.S. $5,000 which amounts to a lifetime's earning of an average worker on the Chinese mainland. Second, the pilot has been highly trusted by his superiors. Before he left the airforce, he was one of the few Chinese military pilots chosen to fly the U-2 reconnaissance missions over the mainland. He was much decorated and was received personally by the late President Chiang Kai-shek. Third, Wang has no known bad habits and has led a normal life. He had no enemies and got along well with his colleagues. In a word, Want is kind of man who has much to thank for the life he had in Taiwan, because even his prosperous fellow countrymen in free China would consider his lot the best one can hope for.

According to reports from Canton, Wang flew his plan to Canton merely for the purpose to be reunited with his aging father and an elder brother. The explanation is hardly convincing. If he really missed them that much, he would have arranged a meeting with them in Hong Kong or somewhere else. He could even take his father to Taiwan. Such family reunions are permitted by the ROC [Republic of China] Government.

However, the fact is that Wang did land a CAL cargo jet in Canton. There must be a reason for that. That reason can be given only by the pilot himself or by the two other crew members, but the Communist authorities have shielded the other two crew members from the public. Requests by Hong Kong reporters to meet them have been rejected.

The only thing now for certain is that the co-pilot and the flight engineer had expressed the wish to return to Taiwan. The chance of the their safe return to Taiwan remains uncertain as reports from Canton were contradictory. One Communist cadre was quoted as saying that no decision has been made regarding their fate. China Airlines has requested the Cathay Pacific Airways to negotiate on its behalf with the Communist authorities for the return of the plane and the crew. Peking has reportedly rejected approach and instead wanted the ROC flag carrier to send a representative to the mainland to talk over the matter. Now, it is too early to predict what Red China will eventually do with the CAL cargo plane and its crew members. One thing is sure. It will make the utmost propaganda mileage out of the incident in trying to force the ROC to cave in to its terms.

MAINLAND SPECIALIST COMMENTS ON HU QILI INTERVIEW

OW100537 Taipei CNA in English 0244 GMT 10 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 9 (CNA) -- Almost all of the top officials of the Chinese Communists, although they are in old age, have refused to retire so as to make room for the "younger generation" as Peiping has sloganized, according to a China mainland affairs expert here Friday. Hu Chi-li, a member of the Peiping's politburo, made the disclosure in an interview with a unidentified Australian report recently, according to the expert, quoting a recent report on the foreign edition of Peiping's OUTLOOK weekly. Hu said that the 13th party congress of the Chinese Communists, which is scheduled to be held next year, will elect new members to the CPC's Central Committee to make the top party organization "more youthful." However, Hu stressed, "several veteran revolutionaries will remain at the helm".

This, the expert said, is referring to the situation in which Teng Hsiao-ping, Peiping's top leader, and Chen Yun, whom Western experts regard as a conservative and who is opposed to Teng's market-opening policy, will still hold the reins of the Peiping regime. There have been speculations that Teng and Chen will retire next year.

MERITS, SHORTCOMINGS OF 4TH NUCLEAR PLANT CONSIDERED

OW050425 Taipei CNA in English 0230 GMT 5 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 4 (CNA) -- Economics Ministry has promised that it will carefully consider all merits and shortcomings before deciding if it should build the fourth nuclear power plant. Vice Economics Minister Li Mo said over the weekend the nation's power consumption is expected to increase in the next new years with the economy turning to the better day by day. The government's basic stand is that the nation must not face a shortage of power, he said.

Li said some people have suggested the government build more thermal power plants to replace nuclear power plants. Even if the government were to build the proposed thermal power plant in central Taiwan within this year, it would take four years before the plant began to generate electricity. And if the government does not build the fourth nuclear power plant now, it will have to plan to build another thermal power plant in four years, he said. Thermal power plants are not always safe because scientists have proved that they can also cause some pollution problems, such as acid rains, he said.

PAI HSING COMMENTS ON ARREST OF HU QIAOMU'S SON

HK091113 Hong Kong PAI HSING in Chinese No 119, 1 May 86 pp 6, 7

[Report filed from Beijing by PAI HSING special correspondent: "Having Committed Serious Crimes, Hu Shiying Finds Himself in Qincheng Prison; Unable to Shelter His Son, Hu Qiaomu Hides in Hanzhou" -- first paragraph is PAI HSING introduction]

[Text] Deng Xiaoping dissolved Hu Qiaomu's "ideology committee" and condemned him, saying that he always wrote articles to teach other people but was unable even to teach his own son to be a good man. Hu Yaobang condemned him, saying that he learned from Mao Zedong only his shortcomings and specialized in playing tricks.

Hu Qiaomu's son Hu Shiying [0013 5391] (alias Hu Shiying [4258 5391]) was formally arrested for the crime of "embezzling education funds" on 7 March this year. He is now the criminal of a major case in Qincheng Prison.

According to sources informed on the case, Hu Shiying obtained a total of 17 million yuan (16 million yuan, according to other sources) through fraud and embezzlement. There is relatively conclusive evidence that when he helped a sugar refinery in Nei Monggol import some equipment, he asked it to pay him 200 metric tons of sugar. Moreover, the companies set up by him have seriously evaded taxes. In the name of his "study-aid center," he has set up more than 10 companies, among which a Flowers and Trees Advisory and Development Company evaded 15 percent of its taxes. He embezzled 4 million yuan from a law correspondence college he set up. The study-aid center that Hu Shiying is in charge of was organized similarly to that of Deng Pufang's China Welfare Fund for the Handicapped. Hu Qiaomu and Bo Yibo are honorary directors in chief of the center.

Hu Shiying's private life has always given people the impression that he is "morally corrupt." He has four apartments for four mistresses. The first is a teacher in Nanjing, the second is an office worker in the Fourth Branch of the People's Bank of China in eastern Beijing, the third is a RENMIN RIBAO reporter, and the fourth is a "third-rate" movie actress. After living with her for 1 month, he recommended the actress to work for a certain film studio, and had her photograph published in a certain pictorial.

A friend told this reporter that one day, Hu Shiying took his bank worker mistress to a certain Air Force hostel to watch pornographic videotapes. They were arrested on the spot. Later, when those who arrested them learned that he was Hu Qiaomu's son, they dared not take further action and asked Hu Qiaomu for instructions. In addition to telling Hu Shiying to confess, Hu Qiaomu phoned the Department of Public Security, hinting at what it should do. As a result, his son was released without prosecution.

Hu Shiying's first wife's name is Zhu Rongmei, who has given birth to a son and a daughter for him. Later, when they were divorced, Zhu Rongmei kept the daughter while Hu kept the son. His second wife is now the accountant of the study-aid center. The couple colluded in making a mess of the center's accounts.

There was an episode concerning his first wife, Zhu Rongmei. Before they were divorced, Zhu Rongmei one day unexpectedly went home and found Hu Shiying making love with the above mentioned actress. The actress ran into the toilet in fear and Zhu pulled her out, twice slapping her face, and turned her out into the street. Zhu quarreled with Hu many times because Hu kept mistresses in apartments outside his home.

The apartments in which Hu Shiying kept his mistresses were provided by Li, director of the Beijing Municipal Housing Administration. Hu Shiying met Li for the first time at Yanjing Restaurant and asked Li to help him find apartments. Li "generously" promised to immediately allocate two apartments to Hu.

Those who know Hu well told this reporter: At first, Hu Shiying worked for RENMIN RIBAO and published most of his articles in the name of "Hu Shiying" [4258 5391]. Then he was transferred to the Academy of Sciences of China (where his mother Gu Yu, Hu Qiaomu's wife, was a member of the party committee). Later, he was transferred to the Postgraduate Institute of the Academy of Social Sciences of China and then he was finally transferred back to the Academy of Sciences of China. However, Hu Shiying joined the CPC when he worked at the Postgraduate Institute of the Academy of Social Sciences of China, where Wen Jize was the president. When Hu was arrested and sent to jail, the relevant workers asked Wen how Hu was recruited by the party. Wen Jize said: "Comrade Hu Qiaomu told me to take care of this matter."

Specialized in Playing Tricks

After Hu Qiaomu's son Hu Shiying was arrested, the "Ideological Committee" headed by him, was dissolved upon Deng Xiaoping's order. He thus lost his base as an "authority on theory." In addition, since his son was arrested, he has not been able to intercede for him; therefore, he could not help but retreat to Hangzhou to "recuperate" and pretend to ignore it.

A senior CPC official has made some very pertinent remarks about Hu Qiaomu: "Comrade Hu Qiaomu was chairman Mao's secretary for a long time, but he did not learn from Chairman Mao's strengths, but learned from all his shortcomings and has become specialized in playing tricks." (It has been alleged that these were Hu Yaobang's words.)

Another story is now spreading among senior officials in Beijing. When Hu Qiaomu's son was arrested, some people asked Deng Xiaoping what had to be done. Deng Xiaoping said very angrily that it should be handled in the proper way. A thorough investigation should be made for any major and important case, no matter whether officials at any level, however high, are involved. After Deng Xiaoping ordered the "ideology committee" to dissolve, he lectured Hu Qiaomu, saying: Do not always write things to teach other people. How can you teach other people when you cannot even satisfactorily teach your own son?

Hu Shiying's Arrest Affords General Satisfaction

The circumstaces of Hu Shiying's arrest are also worth narrating. According to informed sources, General Secretary Hu Yaobang personally gave the order and appointed Wang Zhaoguo to carry out the order and Wang appointed Yang Dezhong to actually make the arrest. However, they were worried that there would be difficulties if they arrested Hu Qiaomu's son in his presence. Therefore, they played the trick of "luring the tiger out of the mountains." They told Han Tianshou of the CPC Commission for Discipline Inspection to invite Hu Qiaomu to his office for an appointment and then sent Yang Dezhong to arrest Hu Shiying. Reportedly, Hu Qiaom was very angry over this, called the general secretary names, and said that the general secretary did not follow legal procedures in arresting people. As he was not unjustified in saying so, Qiao Shi apologized to him on behalf of the secretary. Hu Shiying was arrested on 7 March. The next day, on 8 March, Women's Day, Hu Qiaomu purposely appeared in public to attend the festival activities to show that he was "all right." At thay time, he looked as if he "was protesting against the arrest.

The sources also said that just after his son was arrested, Hu Qiaomu adopted a tough attitude and said that all his life he hated two men most bitterly: One was Chiang Kai-shek and the other was his son. Later, when he saw that his son's case was serious, he personally went to the responsible persons concerned at the CPC Central Commission for Discipline Inspection to intercede for his son, saying that he did not believe that his son was so bad. He pleaded for mercy for his son.

Ordinary people in Beijing were very pleased by Hu Shiying's arrest and said that it was retribution for Hu Qiaomu, who has made too many people suffer.

As for how Hu's son's case will be handled, there are two possible scenarios: One of the possibilities is that Hu Qiaomu will regain an upper hand and succeed in turning big problems into small problems and small problems into no problem at all and thus have his son released. But it now seems that this possibility is unlikely. The other possibility is that his son will be sentenced to prison, but if the term of imprisonment is very long, Hu Qiaomu will be very embarrassed.

CRITICISM OF 'MA DING' ECONOMIC ARTICLE ANALYZED

HK070729 Hong Kong CHENG MING in Chinese No 103, 1 May 86 pp 6-8

["Notes on a Northern Journey" by Luo Ping: "A Counterattack on the Conservatives Criticizing Zhao" -- first paragraph published in boldface]

[Text] In an article on economic research published by Song Longxiang, a young teacher at Nanjiang University under the pseudonym of Ma Ding, he points out that owing to the ultraleftist political line, Chinese economists took a one-sided approach to different Western economic theories. They just criticized the vulgar, apologetic, and reactionary features of Western economics and neglected the fact that it is practical, reasonable, and scientific. As a countermeasure, the conservatives advocated combating "the spiritual pollution at the higher echelons of power," directing their spearhead at Zhao Ziyang.

Hu Qiaomu Obstinately Demanded He Jingzhi Remain in Office as a Deputy Director in the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee

Around February of this year, Hu Qiaomu frequently made public appearances and delivered various speeches on Marxism everywhere. Moreover, he went everywhere to call on celebrities in the cultural, academic, and art circles, including Xu Ting, a young female poet in Fujian Province. In addition, he continued writing letters to female writers and poets and almost no female writer has not received a letter from him. Moreover, he has also done several unpopular things. One of them is that he retained Jingzhi as a deputy director despite the thorough reshuffling of the Propaganda Department.

He Jingzhi, who has leftist ideological deviations, played a shameful role as the hatchet man for Hu Qiaomu in the previous "movements" to "combat spiritual pollution" and to ban literature and art as well as academic democracy. Therefore he has a bad reputation in the literature and art community. However, at the beginning of this year, He Jingzhi resigned, citing old age. Unwilling to see a further decline in their strength on the ideological front, Hu Qiaomu and Deng Liqun did their utmost to persuade He Jingzhi to keep his post as a deputy director of the Central Propaganda Department. In defiance of a thorough reshuffle of the department -- with Zhu Houze as its director and Wang Daming (former director of the Propaganda Department of the Beijing Municipal CPC Committee), Teng Teng (former deputy director of the State Science Commission), and Li Yan (former cadre of the Central Propaganda Department) as its deputy directors -- Hu Qiaomu obstinately demanded he remain in office as a deputy director.

This was a tactical expression of the conservatives' unwillingness to abandon any stronghold in the struggle against the reformers.

Hu Qiaomu Participated in Stirring Up the "Ma Ding Storm"

Hu Qiaomu was also unpopular for participating in stirring up the "Ma Ding storm", because it was an offensive against reformers. Ma Ding is the pseudonym of the Song Longxiang, a young teacher at Nanjiang University. On 2 November last year, in GONGREN RIBAO he published an article entitled "Ten Major Changes in the Contemporary Study of Economics in China" under the pseudonym of Ma Ding. The article points out: "In the 20th century, after socialism changed from a scientific theory into reality, the main task confronting the Marxist political economy is no longer to criticize the old capitalist world but to facilitate the more strenuous historical task of building a new socialist world. And study, therefore, we must be focused on how to develop the social productive forces and increase the national wealth, maintain steady economic growth, and make the socialist economy operate smoothly. For these questions, no ready answers can be found in 'Das Kapital.' Therefore, Chinese economists should free themselves from the restrictions of Marxist books.

While studying the problems of the socialist economy, they should proceed from present-day facts rather than from books and dogma and develop a science of economics for building socialism." The article's subhead entitled "From Rejecting and Negating Contemporary Western Economics to Analyzing and Using It for Reference" points out that "for a long time, however, owing to the ultraleftist political line and traditional conservative ideas, Chinese economists took a one-sided attitude to different Western economic theories. They stressed criticizing the vulgar, apologetic, and reactionary features of contemporary bourgeois economics and completely neglected its other important aspect -- it is still practical, reasonable, and scientific." The writer held that in the days ahead, we should "criticize, analyze, and refer to the results of the study of the above-mentioned Western economic theories scientifically."

CHUNG PAO's Article Shelling Zhao and Hu

From the above-quoted passages, we can see that first, Ma Ding has not departed from Marxist conventions when discussing problems and second, Ma Ding did not put forth any completely new ideas on economic theories. Overall, Ma Ding has never "gone too far." It can even be said that some of his ideas are quite conservative. However, in the eyes of those people who take a 1-sided attitude to Western economic theories, Ma Ding's ideas are actually a revolt against Marxism.

The New York-based CHUNG PAO, which has connections with the CPC, was the first to launch an attack. On 19 December last year, the newspaper published an editorial entitled "Negate Academic Utilitarianism." The article erroneously accuses Ma Ding, believing that in his article Marxist political economy "has lost validity" and "we should boldly introduce the results of contemporary Western economics, including Keynes' theories." On the other hand, the article also criticizes the studies carried out by economic circles on the mainland.

Acting in coordination with each other, the CPC conservatives regarded CHUNG PAO's article as a spearhead and directed it at Zhao Ziyang.

XINHUA NEWS AGENCY's Publication and Others Responded To Hu Qiaomu's "Call"

This is because the economic views of Zhao Ziyang, in particular his think tank, are similar to those of Ma Ding. It was just because of this that Ma Ding's article could be published in GONGREN RIBAO.

Bombarding Ma Ding is, in reality, bombarding Zhao Ziyang. Moreover, the conservatives have long attacked Zhao Ziyang.

After reading CHUNG PAO's article, Hu Qiaomu, the "theoretical master" of the conservatives, filled with joy, proposed criticizing Ma Ding's article and bourgeois liberalization and sent a report to Hu Yaobang and Zhao Ziyang together with CHUNG PAO's article "for reference." His intention was obvious. Hearing Hu Qiaomu's call to "launch criticism," his subordinates energetically wrote critical articles.

JINGJI CANKAO (Economic Reference), compiled and printed by the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY (General Office) was the first to respond to the call. On 4 March, it headlined CHUNG PAO's editorial under the title of "Marxist Economics Has Great Vitality," which does not appear in CHUNG PAO's editorial. This means they accused Ma Ding of regarding Marxist economics as "lacking great vitality." In its subhead, it quoted a remark from CHUNG PAO's editorial for its own purpose. The remark says: "Some Chinese economists are suffering from indigestion of things foreign."

Deng Liqun Clamored There Was 'Spiritual Pollution in the Higher Echelons of Power'

From then on, some publications and an "authoritative person' stampeded to censure liberal-minded theoretical workers and put the labels of "indigestion of things foreign" and "spiritual pollution in the higher echelons of power" on theoreticians and Ma Ding. In addition, some effective writers upheld the "revolutionary mass criticism" banner under orders and were ready to denounce the reformers.

The so-called "authoritative person" is an obscure expression used by newspapers in Beijing. Who actually is he? Who is the maker of the idea of "spiritual pollution in he higher echelons of power?" Through many efforts to gather news and to study discoveries without any subjective intention, I came to know that the "authroitative person" was Deng Liqun. The notion of "spiritual pollution in the higher echelons of power" is the irresponsible masterpiece of Deng Liqun, who only read CHUNG PAO's editorial and never read Ma Ding's article carried in GONGREN RIBAO. Another performance of Deng Liqun! What a good performance of his!

It Was Decided To 'Criticize Zhao' on the Eve of the NPC Session

Why did the conservatives launch a "public opinion" offensive 2 months or longer after CHUNG PAO's article was published? A friend with inside information told me that "the timing was clever. First, it took time for Hu Qiaomu and his followers to form public opinion -- including organizing some effective writers to write critical articles. Second (more important), an NPC session at which Zhao Ziyang would deliver a report was to be held in March. Launching an attack against Zhao at that time would have greater impact and better results." What a carefully calculated plot it was!

At that time, dark clouds were gathering over the academic forum and it seemed that a movement to combat "spiritual pollution in the higher echelons of power" was pressing up to the theoretical community.

The politically sensitive theoretical community in Beijing sensed that the "Ma Ding storm" and the new activity to "combat [spiritual] pollution" were carefully calculated antireform and anti-opening-up policy plots. Some people doubted that the "inspiration" for writing CHUNG PAO's editorial stemmed from New York.

Many theoreticians have taken vigorous exception to CHUNG PAO's editorial and the coverage by JINGJI CANKAO of the editorial and to the formulation of "spiritual pollution in the higher echelons of power" in particular. However, in a situation where there is a lack of academic freedom, they dare not speak out or are forced to keep their resentment to themselves.

Counterattacks by Zhao Ziyang and Hu Yaobang

Just at this moment, the reformers in Zhongnanhai made known their positions. Zhao Ziyang and Hu Yaobang did not give an opening to the conservatives in the face of the latter's new offensive. First, Zhao Ziyang wrote comments on the report submitted by Hu Qiaomu. The comments say that it is necessary to be prudent in criticizing economic theories (general idea).

Then, Hu Yaobang added some comments on the same report. The comments say that it is necessary to be prudent in criticizing theoretical liberalization (general idea). This serves as a head-on blow to Hu Qiaomu and his followers who intended to launch "mass criticism" in the theoretical circles.

There is a change in the situation at which the vast numbers of theoretical workers all rejoiced. The "Ma Ding incident" became a boost to theoreticians' spirits. They all thought that Ma Ding's article was a good one. At the forum held on 22 March by the China Federation of Economics Societies on the development strategy for social sciences, the participating experts and scholars spent almost half their time excitingly discussing the "Ma Ding incident." Zhu Shaowen, researcher at the Economics Institute under the Academy of Social Sciences of China, said that Ma Ding's article was "exceptionally well-written." Yu Guangyuan also spoke in defense of Ma Ding. He also agreed that "Marx cannot solve many problems existing in China at present." Several newspapers in Beijing and Shanghai gave the "Ma Ding storm" wide coverage, criticizing CHUNG PAO, JINGJI CANKAO, and other "criticize Zhao" statements or articles.

What is surprising and interesting is that Zhu Houze, director of the Central Propaganda Department, also wrote comments on the report submitted to Hu Qiaomu. The comments say tht it is necessary to be prudent in criticizing theories. This attitude is also applicable to the criticism of literature and art works (general idea). These remarks by Zhu Houze were not only an encouragement to the theoretical community but they also made writers and artists happy.

The Conservatives, Hu Qiaomu Lost the Battle

A theoretician and a writer said to me almost at the same time: There have been some changes in the image of the Central Propaganda Department, the first change seen for many years.

The Central Propaganda Department's theoretical bureau specially held a meeting in the last 10 days of March, distributing domestic and foreign comments on Ma Ding's article (foreign comments were mainly made by Japanese newspapers and CHUNG PAO) and invited experts and scholars for public discussion. After the meeting, some people expressed appreciation for the novel practice of the Central Propaganda Department. Later, quite a few newspapers transmitted the strong demand for academic freedom. On 3 April, Shanghai's WEN HUI BAO carried Deng Weizhi's article. The title is quite similar to the comments by Hu and Zhao, namely, "we must be prudent in criticizing theoretical liberalization." Prior to this, Deng Weizhi published an article with similar views in RENMIN RIBAO.

The conservatives and Hu Qiaomu have lost the battle.

Many people in the cultural circles heaved a sigh and believed that any attempt to launch any movement to "combat [spiritual] pollution" in the academic circles was doomed to fail, although the fierce struggle was not yet over. Of course, no one knows when the conservatives will launch another new offensive against the reformers.

TA KUNG PAO DETAILS WANG RUOSHUI'S RECENT ACTIVITIES

HK081404 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in English 8-14 May 86 p 14

[By Xu Shu]

[Text] Spring came early to Beijing this year turning the city green shortly after Qingming Festival. Wang Ruoshui, who in 1984 lost his post as deputy editor of the PEOPLE'S DAILY when his views on humanism came under attack during the anti-spiritual pollution movement, began to turn up on various occasions. 'My health is better than last year,' Wang said. As if he had never been under any pressure whatever, 'I feel just fine,' he said.

Although quite a number of newspapers and magazines asked Wang to write for them, last year Wang only published 5 articles. Last autumn, when invited to Nanchang to give a speech, a varied audience crowded the auditorium and many of them lingered on after Wang's speech on Marx's Philosophy of Man which lasted nearly 7 hours. Wang gave a speech on the same topic in Shenzhen at the beginning of this year.

Even today Wang still holds to his opinions on humanism although criticism of such opinions caused his dismissal two years ago. When asked recently about the communist ideal, Wang answered, 'to let each person develop fully and freely; and to make every individual master of the world, the society, and of himself as well."

Although still holding no post as yet, Wang is not lonely. Many people expres concern for him and he is frequently visited by young people seeking advice.

At present, it is the modernization and reforms in China that concern Wang most. he has a philosphical view on the problems caused by reforms. 'We have to pay a price for modernization, this is inevitable,' Wang said. 'Seeking a way without any side-effects is Utopian. Retreating to the former path exacts an even heavier toll: everyone stays poor. According to Engels, the desire for wealth has been an impetus since the birth of civilization. Promoting the economy will naturally stimulate people's desire for wealth and comsumption. Getting rich in a proper way benefits the people and increases wealth in society. But a minority of people get rich by evil means. To tackle the problem we need a sound legal system which allows no fuedal injustice. Capitalist legal rights are more progressive than feudal privileges.'

Wang shows the same sort of optimism in his evaluation of present Chinese theoretical circles which many abroad see critically as silent and conservative. 'It is not a pool of stagnant water,' he said. 'A careful observer will find that there is a continuous flow of new ideas and theories published in all sorts of articles and magazines. Such a spirit of exploration is praiseworthy, although not all the ideas put forward are correct. Young and middle-aged theorists are particularly open-minded and vigorous. To me, this indicates that a new breakthrough is being bred.'

Although Wang Ruoshui has put down his pen for some time, many believe that a new breakthrough is being born from his silent research and observations too.

WORLD BANK, IDA TO PROVIDE FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

OW090747 Beijing XINHUA in English 0703 GMT 9 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 8 (XINHUA) -- The World Bank and the International Development Association (IDA), will provide financial assistance totaling 190 million U.S. dollars to China to expand one of its major ports and to develop fisheries operations near urban centers, according to a World Bank news release today. A loan of 130 million dollars form the World Bank is to support the construction of a new pier in the eastern port of Tianjin, south of Beijing. The pier will have 11 deepwater berths that will increase the port's efficiency in handling general cargo as well as timber and construction materials.

A credit of 60 million dollars from IDA, a World Bank affiliate, will help finance the development of freshwater fish ponds near eight of China's major urban centers including Beijing, Shanghai, Chongqing and Shenyang. When complete, the project is expected to produce annually about 85,000 tons of freshwater fish and 75,000 tons of fish feed. It will create more than 7,000 full-time jobs.

WFC ASIA-AFRICA WORKSHOP OPENS IN GUANGZHOU

He Kang on Grain Policy

OW121617 Beijing XINHUA in English 1523 GMT 12 May 86

["China Won't Rely on World Grain Market" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Guangzhou, May 12 (XINHUA) -- China will stick to the policy of solving its food problem by itself, said China's minister of agriculture, animal husbandry and fishery today. Speaking at the opening session of the World Food Council's Asia-Africa workshop on food policy, He Kang said China, with a population of well over one billion, cannot pin its hope for food on the world grain market. He said that China has always tried to feed its population by itself. Its limited grain import is for a change in varieties and foreign trade.

He noted since 1978, new policies have been adopted, including allowing farmland to be worked on a household basis, developing diversifed economy, encouraging peasant markets, abolishing the state monopoly of grain purchase and raising the purchasing prices of agricultural products. He Kang said China now can basically feed its people through hard work over the past decades. Its 1985 grain output was 378,980,000 tons, averaging 378 kg for each person. He expressed the hope that China will further develop agriculture as far as its capacity allows.

Food Policies Discussed

OW122304 Beijing XINHUA In English 1446 GMT 12 May 86

[Text] Guangzhou, May 12 (XINHUA) -- China's experience in grain production is of significance for drought-stricken Africa, said an official of United Nations World Food Council (WFC) here today. Gilles Laubhaouet-Valley, vice-president of the WFC, made his address at "WFC Asia-Africa Workshop on Food Policy," a six-day seminar which opened here today. He said the drought and unfavourable international economic situation make it a greater necessity than ever for African countries to make appropriate food policies.

In this respect, he said, they may share China's experience in developing its agriculture by enlarging irrigated areas, adopting improved grain varieties, and applying more chemical fertilizers.

The seminar is meant to introduce to African countries the food policies practised in Asian countries, especially those performed in China. Attending the meeting include experts from China, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Central Africa Republic, Ivory Coast, Ethiopia, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, India, Kenya, Mali, Mauritania, Niger, Senegal, and Zambia.

HUANG HUA COMMENTS ON ASIAN DEVELOPMENT

OW122322 Beijing XINHUA in English 1435 GMT 12 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 12 (XINHUA) -- Huang Hua, vice-chairman of the National People's Congress Standing Committee, today met foreign participants in an international conference here on Asian development. Huang told them he thought the five-day conference, which ended today, had helped to strengthen understanding between developing Asian countries. He briefed the participants on China's continuing economic reforms and open policy, and exchanged views with them on co-operation between developing countries and world peace. The conference was organized by the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences and the United Nations University. Participants from 14 Asian countries took part.

OW121342 Beijing XINHUA in English 1333 GMT 12 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 12 (XINHUA) -- Chen Muhua, state councillor and governor of the People's Bank of China, met with Masao Fujioka, president of the Asian Development Bank (ADB). She told Fujioka that she was satisfied with the session. Both Chen and Fujioka exchanged views on business cooperation between China and the ADB. Later, Chen gave a dinner for the visitors, who arrived here earlier today at the invitation of Chen Muhua.

JOURNAL SAYS CHINA PROMOTES LABOR SERVICE ABROAD

OW121346 Beijing XINHUA in English 1334 GMT 12 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 12 (XINHUA) -- China has extended its labor service to 90 countries and regions, today's "INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS" Journal reported. By the end of last year, it had sent more than 170,000 people abroad on contracted engineering and labor projects. They include engineers, workers, cooks, sailors, doctors and craftsmen, mainly working in Middle-Eastern and north African countries. They are engaged in the construction of highways, bridges, harbors and buildings, as well as the machine-building, metallurgical, chemical, textile, power and light industries. China's labor service abroad is also being expanded to include service trades, the paper said. The country has so far established 65 companies handling labor services for foreign countries.

ZHAO ZIYANG TALKS ON TRADE ISSUE WITH JAPAN

OW071248 Beijing XINHUA in English 1232 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 7 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang today expressed his hope that the Chinese and Japanese Governments and peoples would make joint efforts to eliminate the trade imbalance between the two countries under the principle of equality and mutual benefit. During a meeting with a delegation from the Japanese Research Institute for National Policy headed by by its president, Shinsaku Hogen, Zhao praised the Japanese institute for its contributions to Sino-Japanese friendship.

Noting that Sino-Japanese friendly relations are based on their economic relations, Zhao said that economic relations between the two countries have developed well over the past few years and their financial cooperation has made fresh progress since the beginning of last year.

Zhao hoped that China's Japanese friends would make further efforts to help promote investment by Japanese entrepreneurs in China and Japanese technological transfer to China. Referring to problems in Sino-Japanese trade, Zhao said China's deficit in bilateral trade should be eliminated through joint efforts by both sides so as to guarantee the sound development of their trade. Zhao noted that China should improve the quality of its exports to meet market demands in Japan, while Japan should open its markets and reduce trade restrictions so as to import more Chinese commodities.

Shinsaku Hogen said that friendship between Japan and China is conducive to peace in Asia and the world as a whole. He told Zhao that his institute is willing to make continued efforts to promote economic and trade cooperation between the two countries.

Zhao briefed the guests on China's economic situation. He said that the on-going economic reform in China features stability with the adoption of proper principles and policies. Things have been going better than expected, he added. The Japanese delegation arrived here yesterday at the invitation of the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs. President of the institute Han Nianlong was present at today's meeting.

WU XUEQIAN MEETS JAPAN'S HEALTH, WELFARE MINISTER

OW091817 Beijing XINHUA in English 1810 GMT 9 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 9 (XINHUA) -- Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian met here today Japanese Minister for Health and Welfare Isamu Imai, who is on a special China trip for settling the issue on Japanese orphans raised in China. Wu said Japanese orphans in China began to go to Japan to look for their parents and other relatives back in 1981. Since then, the Chinese side has been working positively in view of Sino-Japanese friendship and humanitarianism. Wu also expressed satisfaction with the positive cooperation from the Japanese side. The issue, left over from the history, is a very important one that should be settled through consultation, he said. In accordance with the agreement of the two sides, he said, 700 more Japanese orphans will go to Japan this year to look for their original parents or relatives. "I hope they will become a bridge for the Sino-Japanese friendship from generation to generation."

Isamu Imai expressed his gratitude to the Chinese Government and people, as well as the Chinese parents who had brought up the Japanese orphans. He said he hoped for an earlier settlement of the orphan issue.

According to sources disclosed, 842 Japanese orphans raised in China went to Japan between March 1981 and March 1986, and more than 300 of them have reunited with their parents and relatives. China and Japan have, through friendly discussions, reached agreement on the orphans issue, and Isamu Imai arrived here today to complete the note-exchanging procedures. During their stay here, Isamu Imai and his party are going to call on officials of the departments concerned and visit the China-Japan friendship hospital before returning home May 11. The Japanese visitors were honored at a banquet given by Chinese Vice Foreign Minister Qian Qichen here tonight.

VICE-PREMIER LI PENG MEETS JAL DELEGATION

OW092023 Beijing XINHUA in English 1524 GMT 9 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 9 (XINHUA) -- Vice-Premier Li Peng met a Japan Airlines delegation led by company President Susumu Yamaji here today. Li said that since Japan Airlines and the Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC) had wide connections, aviation had become an important political, economic and cultural link between the two countries. He hoped there would be more close bilateral co-operation in aviation.

Yamaji said that a measure of how their links had grown could be seen in the fact that the number of Japanese and Chinese air passengers had increased from 50,000 in 1975 to 800,000 last year, while the volume of airfreight had risen from 1,400 to 24,000 tons. The Japanese delegation arrived here on Thursday at the invitation of CAAC Director General Hu Yizhou. Earlier today, the two sides held talks on the development of Sino-Japanese aviation co-operation.

PRC, JAPAN ESTABLISH NEW JOINT VENTURE

OW091410 Beijing XINHUA in English 1402 GMT 9 May 86

[Text] Tokyo, May 9 (XINHUA) -- Japan and China today established a new jointly-operated enterprise, Chuwa Trading Company, aimed at strengthening economic and technical cooperation between the two nations. The new company is founded by Japan's Wakoboeki Company and China's Harbour Engineering Company.

Naruo Fujisato, president of Wakoboeki Company, said at a reception hosted by Chuwa Trading Company in Tokyo Hotel this afternoon that establishment of the new company will strengthen economic and technological cooperation between the two nations. The new company will be responsible for the import and export of machinery, equipment, materials and technology needed for construction of harbours and other projects in and outside China. The company is headquartered in Tokyo and has an office in Beijing.

NI ZHIFU-LED TRADE UNION DELEGATION VISITS DRPK

OW091943 Beijing XINHUA in English 1740 GMT 9 May 86

[Text] Pyongyang, May 9 (XINHUA) -- Ni Zhifu, president of the All China Federation of Trade Unions (CFTU), today expressed firm support for the Korean Government's position for a peaceful settlement to the Korean issue. He made the pledge at a banquet hosted by the Central Committee of the General Federation of Trade Unions of Korea (CCGFT) in honour of the CFTU delegation in the People's Palace of Culture here. Ni, who is a member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China and leader of the delegation, said the purpose of the delegation's visit is to strengthen friendship between the two peoples.

Kim Pong-chu, chairman of the CCGFT, said the Chinese delegation's visit will contribute to the development of friendly relations between the working classes and trade unions of the two countries. The delegation arrived in Pyongyang this morning. This is the second visit of this kind led by Ni to Korea.

Meets With Kim Il-song

OW121421 Beijing XINHUA in English 1410 GMT 12 May 86

[Text] Pyongyang, May 12 (XINHUA) -- Korean President Kim Il-song today met with a Chinese trade union delegation led by Ni Zhifu, chairman of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions. During their talks, Kim, also secretary general of the Central Committee of the Korean Workers' Party, said that the Korean people were glad to see China's great achievements in modern socialist construction, and expressed the belief that China's four modernizations would be realized. Today the Korean General Federation of Trade Unions held a meeting in the workers auditorium to welcome the visiting delegation. The Chinese delegation arrived here May 9 and will visit some places in the country.

Rally Welcomes Delegation

OW122140 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1454 GMT 12 May 86

[By reporter Gao Haorong]

[Text] Pyongyang, 12 May (XINHUA) -- Today the General Federation of Trade Unions of Korea held a mass rally at Pyongyang's Workers Guild Hall to warmly welcome the Chinese trade union delegation led by Ni Zhifu, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and chairman of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions. Kim Pong-chu, chairman of the Central Committee of the General Federation of Trade Unions of Korea and Ni Zhifu made speeches at the rally.

Kim Pong-chu said: A profound social economic change unprecedented in its several thousand-year history is now taking place in China. This change of historic proportions is a major event promoting the development of the history of mankind. He continued: The Korean people believe that the socialist modernization program of the CPC is based on the actual situation in China. Kim expressed his belief that under the leadership of the CPC, the Chinese working class and people will definitely fulfill the tasks set by the 12th National CPC Congress and score fresh victories in all fields in developing the socialist modernization program.

Ni Zhifu praised the Korean working class and people for their firm determination and spirit of selflessness in building a poor and backward Korea into a prosperous socialist nation. He said: The Chinese workers feel highly elated over and wholeheartedly admire the achievements attained by the Korean workers and people in building socialism. Ni Zhifu expressed his firm determination to support the just struggle of the Korean workers and people for independence and peaceful reunification of the motherland and to endorse the plan put forward by the party and government of Korea for the realization of peaceful reunification.

In their speeches, both Kim Pong-chu and Ni Zhifu pledged to cherish the friendship between the workers and peoples of the two countries and pass it on from generation to generation. At the rally, both sides presented banners to each other. Attending the rally were So Yun-sok, member of the Central Committee Political Bureau of the Korean Workers' Party, and Zong Kewen, Chinese ambassador to Korea.

YI TAE-HO CONDEMNS SINKING OF DPRK BOAT

OW061325 Beijing XINHUA in English 1120 GMT 6 May 86

[Text] Panmunjom, May 6 (XINHUA) -- A high-ranking officer of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea today condemned South side for sinking a North side's fishing boat, calling the action "a piracy." Major General Yi Tae-ho, senior member of the Korean-Chinese side of the Korean Military Armistice Commission, made his accusation at the 435th meeting of the Korean Military Armistice Commission held here.

On April 24, a South Korean warship attacked and sank a North side's trawler no. 1390 that was sailing back for its base, killing two crew members and injuring four others, Li said. Showing pictures and a press conference video tape, the general denied te U.S. side's allegation that the "suspicous" trawler "went beyond the military demarcation line." Yi described South Korea's naval attrack as "an illegal action" that defied international law and the Korean Armistice Agreement."

Thanks to restraint of the North side for the sake of relaxing tension on the Korean peninsula, he said, the incident has not been escalated to an armed conflict between the two sides. But he warned the U.S. and South Korean representatives that the restraint should not be regarded as weakness. He demanded that the U.S. and South Korean authorities apologize, punish the chief plotter and assailants in the incident, and take measures to avoid occurence of similar incidents.

TIAN JIYUN RECEIVES DPRK YOUTH DELEGATION

OW101217 Beijing XINHUA in English 1200 GMT 10 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 10 (XINHUA) — Tian Jiyun, member of the Political Bureau of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee and vice-premier, met a delegation from the Socialist Working Youth League of Korea here today. Tian noted that the delegation's visit will enhance the profound friendship between China and Korea, and between their people and youths. The Chinese Communist Party and the Chinese people will make consistent and untiring efforts to defend the Sino-Korean friendship, he said.

Kim Chang-ryong, head of the delegation and vice-chairman of the Central Committee of the Socialist Working Youth League of Korea, said this friendship has been founded by the older generation of revolutionaries of the two countries and the Korean Youth League will carry it forward from generation to generation. Present was Song Defu, first secretary of the Chinese Communist Youth League Central Committee. The Korean youth delegation arrived in Beijing May 9 at the invitation of the Chinese youth league.

SOUTH KOREAN STUDENTS DEMONSTRATE IN INCHON

OW040735 Beijing XINHUA in English 0556 GMT 3 May 86

[Text] Pyongyang, May 3 (XINHUA) -- Tens of thousands of South Korean students and workers today demonstrated in Inchon, 25 miles west of Seoul, to denounce the South Koran authorities for forcing a cancellation of a big opposition rally, according to reports reaching here.

The rally sponsored by the opposition, New Korea Democratic Party (NKDP), is aimed at promoting an NKDP campaign to collect 10 million signatures on a petition to urge "President" Chon Tu-hwan to permit direct presidential polls next year.

The KOREAN CENTRAL NEWS AGENCY quoted the reports as saying that hours prior to the scheduled opposition gathering, more than 15,000 masses staged a peaceful protest inside and around a public hall in the western port city, chanting "go away U.S. imperialists" and "down with dictatorship." However, city authorities forced the party to cancel the meeting and a police cordon was set up around the hall and all routes to the site were cut off. Police threw tear gas at the masses coming to the meeting. NKDP leaders, including party President Yi Min-wu and leading dissident Kim Yong-sam, were prevented from getting into the hall. The meeting had to be postponed indefinitely. a massive demonstration followed immediately in protest. The demonstrators threw stones and petrol bombs at police and set fire to local offices of Chon's Democratic Justice Party as well as a police van and a civilian car.

On April 30, "President" Chon had talks with Yi, declaring that he would keep the current constitution until 1989, but claiming that if the ruling and opposition parties reach an agreement on the matter he will revise the constitution before his term expires. The KCNA report said that the South Korean authorities' acts of suppresion proved that what Chon said was nothing but "a fraud."

MASSIVE SIGNATURE CAMPAIGN RALLY IN SOUTH KOREA

OW111004 Beijing XINHUA in English 0935 GMT 11 May 86

[Text] Pyongyang, May 11 (XINHUA) -- More than 25,000 citizens in Masan city, South Korea, yesterday attended a rally in support of the signature campaign for constitutional revisions. The rally was sponsored by the leading opposition new Korea Democratic Party (NKDP), KOREAN CENTRAL NEWS AGENCY (KCNA) reported today. This is the eight such rally held in different South Korean cities organized by opposition forces.

In separate speechs, Kim Yong-sam and Kim Tae-chung, standing advisors to the NKDP, accused the United States for supporting the South Korean authorities during a recent visit to South Korea of U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz. They described South Korean "President" Chon Tu-hwan's claims as "a fraud resulting from strong nation-wide pressure" Chon Tu-hwan said on April 30 that "if an agreement on constitution revision could be reached in parliament between the ruling and opposition parties, the constitution revisions would be conducted before his term expires."

Following the rally, about 1,000 students launched a protesting demonstration. It was reported that more than 17,000 policement deployed in the area fired tear gas to disperse the protesters. Under the signature campaign plan, the New Korea Democratic party will hold a similar rally in Chonju city on May 17. The campaign's objective is to force the ruling authorities to accept a "three-stage political agenda", namely, a constitutional revision this year, a direct presidential election next year and a transference of power in 1988.

NPC DELEGATION CONTINUES VISIT TO AUSTRALIA

OW100652 Beijing XINHUA in English 0639 GMT 10 May 86

[Text] Melbourne, May 10 (XINHUA) -- Australia is sincere in wishing to build a mutually beneficial broadly-based relationship with China, said Tom Edmunds, speaker of the legislative assembly of the Australian southern state of Victoria, here this afternoon. Edmunds made these remarks at a luncheon given by the Victorian Parliament in honor of the Chinese National People's Congress (NPC) delegation led by Peng Chong, deputy chairman of the Chinese NPC Standing Committee. Edmunds said the Victoria state particularly cherishes its relationship with China's Jiangsu Province, which has established sister ties with the state of Victoria.

Peng said he was confident that with the steady growth of the Sino-Australian relations, bilateral economic cooperation and cultural exchanges would continue to increase. Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincain, deputy leader of the NPC delegation and vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, was also present on the occasion. It is his first visit abroad since the 1960's. Apart from scheduled activities, he also met with Tibetans here this evening. It is estimated that some 30 Tibetans now reside in Australia.

China and Australia established diplomatic relations in 1972. The current visit of the Chinese NPC delegation is the third of its kind since 1978. The leaders of the two countries have exchanged visits many times over the last several years. Australian Prime Minister Robert Hawke will make a goodwill visit to China on May 18. The Chinese delegation, who arrived in Australia on April 29 at the invitation of the Australian Federal Parliament, will leave here for home tomorrow.

Leaves for Home

OW101243 Beijing XINHUA in English 1221 GMT 10 May 86

[Text] Melbourne: May 10 (XINHUA) -- The National People's Congress (NPC) delegation from China left David Hamer airport here for home this afternoon after a 12-day visit to Australia. During its stay in Australia the delegation held talks with Ninian Steppen, governor-general of Australia, and Prime Minister Robert Hawke, federal and state parliamentary leaders, federal and state government ministers on promotion of friendship and cooperation between the two countries.

Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincain, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee and deputy leader of the delegation, discussed his perception of religious freedom in China today, which was praised by religion officials. The Chinese delegation, led by Peng Chong, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, arrived April 29 at the invitation of the Australian Federal Parliament. NPC delegations previously visited Australia in 1978 and 1982.

AUSTRALIA'S HAWKE VIEWS CHINA'S FUTURE

OW121839 Beijing XINHUA in English 1810 GMT 12 May 86

[Text] Canberra, May 12 (XINHUA) -- South Africa stood out like an island of reaction in a sea of change, Australian Prime Minister Robert Hawke told the Duke of Edinburgh's Commonwealth Study Conference in Melbourne today. Hawke said while the process of decolonization has been substantially completed, the great majority of the people in South Africa have still to achieve sovereignty and control of their own destiny. "Today," he said, "The recently independent nations bring a totally new dimension to international affairs."

He went on to say that the Commonwealth, now representing a quarter of the world's population and a third of the sovereign and independent nations, have developed a particular capacity to recognize in time the need for change. The Australian prime minister noted that "a particular feature of the period has been the growing importance of north Asia -- of China and Japan especially -- and the economic dynamism of the Western Pacific Basin." He said, "I would venture two observations in this respect. First, the revolution which is occurring in China is the single most significant event of our time. Second, the pattern of dynamic economic growth in this region will continue to characterize the period to the end of this century." The conference, chaired by the duke of Edinburgh, is being attended by delegates from all Commonwealth countries.

GUANGZHOU MAYOR IN SYDNEY FOR 'CHINA WEEK'

OW122300 Beijing XINHUA in English 1527 GMT 12 May 86

[Text] Sydney, May 12 (XINHUA) -- The traditional Chinese dragon and lion dances marked the beginning of "China Week" here today -- the first of its kind in Australia since the establishment of diplomatic relations between China and Australia in December 1972. Hundreds of cheerful people carrying aloft panda banners and multi-color flags paraded through Sydney's main streets, from Chinatown to downtown's City Hall. The parades were welcomed at the Sydney Town hall by Mayor of Sydney Douglas Sutherland and Mayor of Guangzhou Zhu Senlin, who earlier today signed a proclamation announcing that Sydney and Guangzhou have become friendship cities. Guangzhou is the capital of China's southern province of Guangdong while Sydney is the capital of Australia's southeastern state of New South Wales. "China Week," which lasts from May 12 to 18, will present a variety of Chinese programs, including circus shows, painting, print and photo exhibitions, a film festival, the Guangdong trade fair and a trade seminar. The activities will take place in the Sydney Entertainment Center, the art gallery of New South Wales state, the Sydney Town Hall, the suburbs, parks, shopping centers and Chinatown.

PRC INSURANCE FIRMS IN HONG KONG INCREASE CAPITAL

OW122113 Beijing XINHUA in English 1506 GMT 12 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 12 (XINHUA) -- Two Hong Kong-based Chinese insurance companies have increased their capital and two others will follow suit this year in efforts to expand business and provide more solid security for policy holders, according to the People's Insurance Company of China. The business of the Chinese insurance companies in Hong Kong scored a 10 percent increase in 1985, with goods transportation insurance achieving the highest growth, and growth of reinsurance exceeding 20 percent. In order to further boost its business, the China Life Insurance Company raised its capital to 20 million yuan renminbi from five million yuan renminbi in 1985. The China Reinsurance Company also extended its authorized capital to 100 million H.K. dollars from 50 million H.K. dollars; and its actual capital to 80 million H.K. dollars from 30 million H.K. dollars. This year, the Hong Kong Mingan Insurance Co. Ltd. plans to increase its actual capital to 100 million H.K. dollars from 50 million H.K. dollars and the China Baolian Investment Co. Ltd. has decided to raise its actual capital to 10 million H.K. dollars from 100,000 H.K. dollars. China has established in Hong Kong a fairly complete insurance system with various specialized companies dealing in property insurance, life insurance, reinsurance, investment and securities. There are now more than 280 insurance companies in Hong Kong and the competition is acute.

WU XUEQIAN BEGINS 9-NATION EUROPEAN TOUR

Arrives in Finland

OW111755 Beijing XINHUA in English 1746 GMT 11 May 86

[Text] Helsinki, May 11 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian arrived here today for a three-day official visit to Finland on the first leg of his nine-nation European tour. Wu, who was met at the airport by his Finnish counterpart Paavo Vayrynen, told reporters upon his arrival that he hoped that his visit would enhance understanding, develop friendship, strengthen cooperation and help maintain peace. This is the first visit by a Chinese foreign minister to Finland since the two countries established diplomatic ties in 1950.

Wu, also Chinese state councillor, expressed satisfaction over the development of bilateral relations in the past years and said the visit will further promote such relations. During the visit, which also will take him to Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Belgium, Luxembourg, Ireland, Democratic Germany and Hungary, Wu is expected to meet with Finnish President Mauno Koivisto and Premier Kalevi Sorsa and hold talks with Vayrynen on bilateral and international issues.

Meets With Finnish President

[Text] Helsinki, May 12 (XINHUA) -- Finnish President Mauno Koivisto today met visiting Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian and the two exchanged views on international issues of mutual concern. During the meeting the Chinese foreign minister also briefed the Finnish president on the economic situation in China and the economic reforms underway there. Later, President Koivisto gave a luncheon in honor of Wu attended by Finnish Prime Minister Kalevi Sorsa and other government ministers. Chinese Ambassador to Finland Lin Aili and other embassy officials were also on hand.

Wu, Vayrynen View Disarmament

OW121530 Beijing XINHUA in English 1510 GMT 12 May 86

[Text] Helsinki, May 12 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian held official talks with Finnish Foreign Minister Paavo Vayrynen this morning on East-West relations, disarmament, other pressing international issues and Sino-Finnish relations. The two ministers shared identical or similar views on a series of international questions during the meeting that lasted for more than two hours.

On disarmament, Wu expressed the hope that the United States and the Soviet Union will negotiate seriously to achieve large-scale arms reduction and reach an agreement which would not infringe upon other nations' interests. Vayrynan, while stressing that big powers bear major responsibilities for disarmament, hoped they will reach an agreement on an overall nuclear test ban.

On medium-range missiles, Wu said China demands a simultaneous and balanced reduction and destruction of missiles based in Europe and Asia. Vayrynen expressed his concern over the danger posed by cruise missiles to the neutral nations, saying that the use of such missiles should be banned.

During the cordial and friendly talks, they also briefed each other on the foreign policies of their own countries and the situation in Asia and northern Europe.

Wu, also a Chinese state councillor, reaffirmed that China appreciates and supports Finland's foreign policy of positive neutrality and peace and its efforts to promote detente and disarmament. The two agreed that Sino-Finnish relations have developed vigorously in recent years, as is evidenced by active political contacts, a developing trade and more exchanges in culture, science and technology. Both of them foresaw a bright prospect for bilateral cooperation and believed that the friendly relations between the two countries will further grow.

Present at the talks were Klaus Torlund, deputy state secretary of the Finnish Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and other Finnish high-ranking officials as well as Chinese Ambassador to the country Lin Aili.

Speech Reviews Foreign Policy

OW121924 Beijing XINHUA in English 1903 GMT 12 May 86

[Text] Helsinki, May 12 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian today said the fundamental objective of China's foreign policy is to oppose hegemony, safeguard world peace, develop international cooperation and promote common prosperity. Wu, in a speech at the Paasikivi Society here, said that China has put forward an independent and peace-oriented foreign policy as a long-term national policy in recent years. In pursuing the policy, he said, "China both fulfills the condition required by its own modernization program and makes a positive contribution to world peace and human progress." "China will never attach itself to any superpower, nor will it enter into alliance or establish strategic relations with either of them," said the Chinese minister, who arrived here on Sunday to start a nine-nation European tour that will also take him to Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Belgium, Luxembourg, Ireland, Democratic Germany and Hungary.

Wu said that China welcomes the resumption of U.S.-Soviet arms controls talks and hopes they will reach an agreement favorable to peace through serious negotiations. "We believe that so long as both China and the United States strictly adhere to the principles established in the joint communiques between the two countries, Sino-U.S. relations can develop steadily, and that if concrete actions are taken to remove the existing obstacles, a true improvement in Sino-Soviet relations is possible," he said.

Touching on the disarmament issue, Wu emphasized that China stands against arms race and its extension to outer space. China stands for the complete prohibition and thorough destruction of nuclear weapons, he continued. "The two big nuclear powers, which possess over 95 percent of the world's total nuclear arsenal, should take the lead by reducing their nuclear armaments. This is a prerequisite for bringing about universal nuclear disarmament." "The forces making for peace in the world have now outgrown the factors of war," he said, adding that "world peace can be maintained so long as the people of all countries and various forces for peace enhance their unity, cooperate closely and work unremittingly for peace."

With regard to international relations, the Chinese minister stressed that China opposes the use or threat of force in international relations. China opposes terrorism of all descriptions, and believes that the correct way to solve the problem is to wipe out the social and political root causes of terrorism, he said.

China supports the European nations in their efforts to relax tension in that region and welcomes the increased contacts and cooperation between East and West European countries aimed at relaxing the confrontations between the two military blocs in Europe.

In his speech, Wu renewed China's call for the pullout of all foreign troops from Kampuchea and Afghanistan so that the peoples there could choose their own social and political systems without outside interference. "This is the prerequisite for political settlement of the Kampuchean and Afghan questions through negotiations," he said.

He noted that such major world issues as peace, disarmament and development should not be monopolized by the superpowers, and all countries, the medium-sized and small ones in particular, should have an equal say. He stressed that China firmly supports the Third World countries in their struggle to oppose any forms of imperialism, colonialism and racism and to win and safeguard national independence and state sovereignty. China also supports North-South dialogue and enhanced South-South cooperation and the establishment of a new international economic order.

On Sino-Finnish relations, the Chinese minister said that China fully respects and understands Finland's stance in world affairs, and appreciates the useful role it plays in easing the tension in Europe and promoting the East-West contacts and cooperation. "In the lofty cause of world peace and international cooperation, China and Finland are friends and partners who can work closely together and trust each other," he said.

Also present at today's meeting were Paasikivi Society Chairman Jaakko Iloniemi, people from the country's political, business and journalistic circles and other public figures. Paasikivi Society, established in 1958 in memory of Finland's outstanding statesman and late President J.K. Paasikivi, is one of the most important institutions studying the country's foreign policy and international issues.

VIEWS COOPERATION WITH EUROPE

OW130638 Beijing XINHUA IN English 0628 GMT 13 May 86

[Text] Helsinki, May 12 (XINHUA) -- China attaches special importance to economic and technological cooperation with European countries, Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian said here today. Replying to questions from audience after addressing a meeting of the Paasikivi Society, Wu said China will not only promote trade and economic relations with the Asian-Pacific region but also with countries in Europe and the rest of the world. He expressed China's support for the Eureka program raised by France last year and supported by other West European countries, saying it is conducive to the continuous development of European economy and technology.

The Chinese Minister, who is on a nine-nation European tour that will also take him to Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Belgium, Luxembourg, Ireland, Democratic Germany and Hungary, said a united and strong Europe will be a major force in safeguarding world peace. Referring to regional development, Wu said the economic development in the Asian-Pacific region has been growing faster and has attracted much attention from the world community. The region's economy should develop under the principle of equality and mutual benefit and no superpower should be allowed to control the development of the region, he added.

Meanwhile, in an interview with Finish Tv, the foreign minister said China supports the Finnish foreign policy of peace and neutrality. The relationship between Finland and China is good and the perspective of cooperation between the two countries is broad, he pointed out, adding Finnish Prime Minister Kalevi Sorsa's visit to China in September will further promote the existing relations and cooperation between the two countries.

Sign Taxation Agreement

OW130244 Beijing XINHUA in English 0154 GMT 13 May 86

[Text] Helsinki, May 12 (XINHUA) -- China and Finland today signed an agreement to avoid double taxation and prevent evading fiscal responsibility. Wu Xueqian, Chinese state counsellor and foreign minister, and Paavo Vayrynen, Finnish Foreign minister, signed the agreement. The agreement, which will promote Finnish investment in China, follows an investment protection agreement signed between the two countries in September 1984.

Wu, whose three-day visit to Finland is the first stop of a nine-nation European tour, met with Finnish Prime Minister Kalevi Sorsa today and discussed bilateral trade and economic and technological cooperation. At the meeting, Wu conveyed to Sorsa cordial greetings from Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang. Sorsa said that he is looking forward to his visit to China in September. Sorsa noted that Finland attaches much importance to promoting relations with China.

Feted at Banquet

OW130630 Beijing XINHUA in English 0615 GMT 13 May 86

[Text] Helsinki, May 12 (XINHUA) --- Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian said here tonight that northwest European countries are an active force in striving for detente and disarmament in Europe, and China respects their foreign policies worked out in the light of their own conditions. Speaking at a banquet hosted by his Finnish counterpart Paavo Vayrynen, Wu said his country supports a more active role for these countries in international affairs.

He pointed out that Finland, pursuing the foreign policy of "active and peaceful neutrality," has made unremitting efforts in and positive contribution to strengthening cooperation between Eastern and Western Europe and promoting detente and disarmament. He also said that China pursues an independent peaceful foreign policy and hopes to develop friendly relations with other countries on the basis of the five principles of peaceful coexistence. The foreign minister stressed the significance for China to develop long-term and stable friendly relations and cooperation with Western Europe. China values relations not only with major countries in Western Europe but also with medium and small nations in northwestern Europe, he declared. The important role of northwest European countries in promoting European cooperation and South-North dialogue and safeguarding world peace should be highly appraised, he added.

On bilateral relations, Wu said that Finland is among the earliest Western countries that established diplomatic relations with China, and the two countries have made great progress in their relations in the political, economic, cultural and other fields. He noted that enhancement of these ties is a good example of cooperation of mutual respect between countries with different social and economic systems.

Vayrynen in his speech described the first visit by a Chinese foreign minister to Finland as a historic event. On international affairs, he said that the stockpiling of nuclear armaments by major powers does not help increase world security, which hinges on the premise that these powers will never use these weapons. He stressed that Finland supports all efforts to limit nuclear weapons and halt the arms race. Vayrynen also said that Finland is making efforts to increase security inside and outside Europe and improve the international atmosphere. It believes that the proposal for a nuclear-free zone in northern Europe is of practical significance, he added.

He said that Finland and China have steadily developed their ties since the establishment of their diplomatic relations, and visits to each other have increased. He noted that the policy of opening to the outside world pursued by both countries makes it possible for the two countries to cooperate more closely in various fields. He hoped the relationship between the two countries will be further developed. Attending the banquet were Finnish officials and noted figures and diplomats of the Chinese Embassy here.

LI PENG MEETS FRG PARTY DELEGATION 7 MAY

OW071347 Beijing XINHUA in English 1338 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 7 (XINHUA) -- Vice-Premier Li Peng and Walther L. Kiep, member of the Presidium of the Christian Democratic Union of the Federal Republic of Germany (FRG), discussed cooperation in automobile production between the two countries at a meeting here today. Li said the Chinese Government attaches great importance to the cooperation being conducted by a Shanghai automobile factory and Volkswagen of Federal Germany. Kiep considered this a symbol of Sino-FRG Economic and technological cooperation and said he would do his best to aid such cooperation. Both sides held that Volkswagen should help the Shanghai joint venture to produce spare automobile parts itself as quickly as possible. The Federal German side is also asked to import more of China's spare parts and other automobile products in order to enable the company to enjoy a foreign exchange balance. Kiep and his party arrived in Beijing May 5 at the invitation of the State Economic Commission.

PRC BECOMES FRG'S LARGEST THIRD WORLD TRADE PARTNER

OW080628 Beijing XINHUA in English 0535 GMT 8 May 86

[Text] Bonn, May 7 (XINHUA) -- Federal Germany's exports to China totalled 6.4 billion deutschmarks last year, making China its biggest third world trade partner. According to the Berlin (West) Economics Institute's report released today, Federal Germany's export volume with China was 1.2 billion marks more than with Saudi Arabia, Germany's second largest third-world exporting partner. In 1985, Federal Germany exported 4.8 billion marks worth of goods to Iraq, 4.2 billion to Turkey, 3.4 billion to India, 3.2 billion to Egypt and 2.9 billion to Algeria. The report predicted that this year Federal Germany's exports to China will not reach last year's record high level and its total exporting volume with the Third World countries will be reduced to about 69 billion marks. The country's total exporting volume with the Third World nations last year was 78 billion marks, 53 percent of which was with the oil producing countries. But with the oil price decline these nations' importing capacity will likely decline.

ZHENG TUOBIN, DELEGATION DEPART FOR WEST EUROPE

OW061729 Beijing XINHUA in English 1525 GMT 6 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 6 (XINHUA) -- A Chinese Government economic and trade delegation led by Minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Zheng Tuobin left here today for Ireland, France and Britain. Zheng will exchange views with his counterparts in the three countries respectively on the expansion of bilateral trade and economic cooperation. Zheng, on behalf of the Chinese Government, is going to sign an agreement on cooperation in economy, industry and sciences and technology between China and Ireland, a document on investment protection and loans between China and Britain. He will preside over the sixth session of the Sino-French mixed committees on economy and trade and sign a loan document between China and France.

MINISTERS EXPLAIN 5-YEAR PLAN GOALS, PROBLEMS

OW101009 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0632 GMT 9 May 86

["Conscientiously Carry Out the Seventh 5-Year Plan To Promote Socialist Modernization" — XINHUA headline]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 9 May (XINHUA) — XINHUA editor's note: The people of all nationalities throughout the country are conscientiously studying and carrying out the Seventh 5-Year Plan for economic and social development since it was approved by the Fourth Session of the Sixth National People's Congress. XINHUA today has transmitted a number of articles by responsible persons of the Ministries of Coal Industry, Railways, Metallurgical Industry, and Light Industry, and will transmit statements made in interviews with a few leaders of provinces, cities, and autonomous regions. These articles and talks have revealed from different angles how the ministries and the various areas are implementing the 5-Year Plan; moreover, they have also introduced their future plans for implementing the plan. As the Seventh 5-Year Plan is China's action program for reforms and construction in the next 5 years, we hope that the cadres and masses in all localities and in all trades and professions, while implementing the 5-Year Plan, will continue to display an unyielding spirit in carrying out reforms and working hard, and to do their utmost for the motherland's socialist modernization. [end editor's note]

Reform Should Be the Priority for the Coal Industry During the Seventh 5-Year Plan

By Minister of Coal Industry Yu Hongen

The 5 million workers and staff members of the coal industry have created a good situation for the industry with their diligence at a time when the Seventh 5-Year Plan has just started: Coal output of mines under central government administration rose 3.55 million tons during the first 5 months of this year over the same period in 1985. During the first 4 months, there were fewer accidents than in the same period last year, and new progress was made in capital construction.

According to the 5-Year Plan, China's annual coal output will reach 1 billion tons by 1990. In the next 5 years, the coal industry plans to build projects with a total capacity of 180 million tons, but projects with a total capacity of 167 million tons are expected to be completed.

During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we shall continue our efforts to modernize our coal industry by giving it distinctive Chinese characteristics. First, we shall concentrate on the technical transformation, renovation, and expansion of the existing mines. The objective is to get quick and effective returns with less investment. Meanwhile, we shall step up construction of key projects in order to lay a sound foundation for the development of the coal industry in the next 10 years after the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

The Railroad Industry Should Strive To Effect a Significant Change Before Ushering in the 1990's

By Railways Minister Ding Guangen

The railways occupy a key position in China's whole transportation system. However, the transport capacity of the railways still cannot meet the increasing demand, and the quality of service is not good enough to satisfy the people's demand.

We know that we had important tasks to do in the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, so we have worked hard from the outset and thus have gotten off to a good start: In the first 4 months of this year, in addition to fulfilling the passenger transport plan, we fulfilled the freight transport plan fairly well. The volume rose 4.4 percent over the same period of last year.

To improve railway transport services during the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we must emphasize railway management and operations in the next 5 years. We plan to build 2,500 kilometers of double-track lines and 4,000 kilometers of electrified lines, renovate and expand 7 marshalling yards, build 2 new ones, and build and renovate 10 passenger stations in order to raise the railway system's transport capacity.

The Iron and Steel Industry Should Advance to a New Level During the Seventh 5-Year Plan

By Minister of Metallurgical Industry Qi Yuanjing

The Seventh 5-Year Plan calls for annual steel production to reach 55 million to 58 million tons and for annual output of steel products to reach 44 million to 46.5 million tons by the year 1990, an increase of 8 million to 11 million tons and 7 million to 9.5 million tons respectively over 1985. The Seventh 5-Year Plan also sets fairly high demands on the iron and steel industry regarding variety, quality, and consumption.

In the first 4 months of this year, our production maintained a steady increase. Output of iron and steel rose more than 11 percent over the same period last year, while that of steel products increased by 8.9 percent. Good economic results were also reported.

In raising steel output in the next 5 years, three-fourths of the increase should be undertaken by existing enterprises. Iron smelting is a weak link in our effort to boost the output of steel to the level set by the Seventh 5-Year Plan and to break the 60-million-ton mark. Therefore, we must concentrate on increasing iron output, which is needed for the increase in steel production, in the next 5 years.

Currently, there is not only a shortage of steel, pig iron, and steel products in China, but, more importantly, a problem of poor variety, quality, and economic results. Although we have made some progress in these areas in the past few years, we are still far behind the international level and cannot meet the needs of national construction. Henceforth, we should pay attention, not only to raising output, but also to raising quality and producing marketable products. In the next 5 years, we shall try to make a breakthrough in developing high-quality steel products, with focus on low-alloy structural steel, which are urgently needed by the energy, transporation, machine-building, building, and electronics industries. Efforts will be made to increase China's output of low-alloy structural steel from 6.19 million tons in 1985 to over 9 million tons in 1990, and output of alloy steel from 2.92 million tons in 1985 to 4 million tons in 1990. Our efforts are to fulfill or overfulfill the targets set by the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

It Is Necessary To Raise Quality and Increase Varieties of Light Industry During the "Seventh 5-Year Plan"

By Light Industry Minister Yang Bo

During the first spring of the "Seventh 5-Year Plan," the broad masses of cadres, staff members, and workers on the light industry front worked hard and created a very good situation.

In the first quarter of this year, compared with the same period last year, the production of refrigerators and electric fans, which are in great demand in China's stores, increased by 66.5 percent and 31.2 percent respectively. The production of sugar, everyday glassware, dairy products, synthetic detergents and beer also rose by more than 10 percent over last year and satisifed the demand of the masses of people in urban and rural areas. However, we must also clearly see that the people are setting a higher demand on consumer goods and have become highly selective in buying those products. As a result, the problem of low quality and lack of variety is even more imporant than that of inadequacy. Therefore, in the next 5 years, we must use the reform of the economic structure as a motivation, constantly adjust production structure, and make great efforts to raise quality and increase variety of products to satisfy the needs of the people of the whole country.

In order to achieve a relatively big development in light industry during the "Seventh 5-Year Plan," especially significant progress in raising quality and increasing variety, we must further promote reform, and strive to turn various enterprises into socialist producers and commodity operators, with full vitality and full responsibility for operations and financial gains and losses. We should also eliminate obstacles between departments and regions, and among enterprises with different systems of ownership and use famous and fine products as leading forces to promote lateral economic and technological cooperation.

RENMIN RIBAO ON QUESTIONS OF CIRCULATING CAPITAL

HK120751 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 28 Apr 86 p 5

[Article by Zhu Tianshun: "The Problem of Circulating Capital Should Be Tackled in a Comprehensive Way"]

[Text] Why Has the Problem of Circulating Capital Become so Acute?

Circulating capital includes capital needed by enterprises in the course of production, and the capital needed in the circulation stage which is interdependent and interrelated with production stage. Every process of reproduction, which includes circulation, is an active cycle of circulating capital. To ensure production and circulation, we need sufficient circulating capital. However, due to the fact that most of the addition financial allocation of circulating capital has been turned into loans, after the tightening of money supply last year, the amount of circulating capital needed has exceeded the supply of loans which can be used as capital. This has made the contradiction in this aspect more acute. At present, the problem of circulating capital has become a striking problem in the national economy. If we fail to tackle it in a comprehensive way and solve it, it will adversely affect production and the normal cycle of circulation.

What are the factors contributing to the acute contradiction between the supply and demand of circulating funds?

1. The scale of capital construction was too broad, andthe number of newly opened enterprises was too great. Over the past 2 years, excessive scale of capital construction as adversely influenced the supply and demand of circulating capital basically in the following three aspects: 1) A large amount of capital was used because of the excessive scale of capital construction. This not only squeezed out some of the circulating capital needed by production and circulation and affected the full operation of production capability, but also squeezed out profits reserved by enterprises and their funds for renewing their equipment. Whether an enterprise is assigned a task of raising funds to carry out capital construction, or expands the scale of its own capital construction would affect its capability for technical reform by aiming at reducing the proportion of circulating capital.

2) Since there were many newly-opened enterprises, a large amount of circulating capital was needed. At present, while carrying out capital construction, generally speaking we do not arrange any basic circulating capital which is linked up with fixed assets. Therefore, the newly-opened enterprises lack circulating capital from the start. People describe this as "giving birth to a baby, but not breast-feeding it." However, since the "baby" has been born, some "milk" is needed. Therefore, loans provided by banks as circulating capital are not enough to go round — "gruel for three is shared by five." Over the past 2 years, some 20 percent of loans provided by banks as circulating capital went to the newly-opened enterprises. 3) There was a strain on the supply of means of production because of excessive scale of capital construction. This stimulated price hikes of means of production, and more circulating capital was used. According to statistics issued by some localities, about 30 percent of the newly-increased circulating capital was spent because of the rising price of means of production.

2. Some enterprises went in for excessively high speed and slackened their management. Apart from excessive scale of capital construction, seeking ultrahigh speed on the part of the existing enterprises also increased the demand on circulating capital in the following three aspects: 1) Almost all enterprises, including large and medium-scaled enterprises and town and township enterprises, sought to increase growth rate of output value, and they competed with each other in this respect. We learned that an increase per 100 yuan in output value needed circulating capital of 30 yuan or so on the average. 2) Since enterprises lacked power to improve their business management, the quality of their products declined. There was overstocking of products. In 1985, the capital which enterprises spent on industrial products and end products accounted for 21 percent of their fixed circulating capital, an increase of 31 percent over 1984. 3) Due to the strain on the supply of raw and processed materials, enterprises vied with each other to store more raw and processed materials, or blindly imported them regardless of cost. This increased the amount of capital earmarked for reserving materials.

3. Although commodity circulation was expanded, the means of financial circulation was insufficient. The national econmy was enlivened, commodity circulation expanded, and commerical credit increased. However, due to the insufficiency of the means of financial circulation, more circulating capital was used in the folowing three aspects: 1) Enterprises engaged in production increased the proportion of their own self-production and self-marketing, whereas industrial enterprises did more supplying and marketing business. All this increased the use of circulating capital. 2) Enterprises were in arrears with the payment of goods. The amount of payments receivable and the money paid in advance increased. This affected capital turnover. In 1983, the proportion of such payments receivable and money paid in advance, which were not fixed circulating capital, was 14 percent of the fixed circulating capital. It increased to 18 percent in 1984. The amount of clearing capital of commercial enterprises also markedly increased. 3) There was a large amount of capital held in transit. According to figures issued by joint trades and professions concerned throughout the country, the average amount of capital held in transit was more than 6 billion yuan every day (the figure was based on holding the capital for 5 days on average).

4. Due to the implementation of the supply system of circulating capital, a fairly large amount of circulating capital was not active enough. The supply system of circulation capital was an old problem. Although there was an acute contradiction between supply and demand of circulating capital, the supply system had not yet been shattered. There were still many circulating "pitfalls." 1) The percentage of reserve capital for products was still very large.

This was mainly due to the fact that a fairly large quantity of agricultural and sideline products, which had been purchased, and mineral products, which had been produced, were kept in stock. Some of the reserve capital for products belonged to the state reserve capital, and some belonged to circulating capital which got stuck. 2) The state financial departments allocated circulating capital for enterprises gratuitously. Enterprises concerned can still use it without any compensation. This gives rise to uneven distribution of capital. With regard to circulating capital, new and old enterprises cannot compete with each other from the same starting line. 3) To maintain their "profits," or "take off" the label of losing money in business, some enterprises resorted to deceit by hook or by crook. With regard to some "goods which should be considered as losses in stocktaking" and some other unsalable goods which should be discarded as useless, some enterprises were not willing to handle them financially in accordance with the formalities stipuilated by the state. They would rather keep them on the books. Although this caused "false profits and true losses," "less actual profits than reported," the current wage and bonus level of enterprises could be maintained. All this is called "inflated content" [shui fen 3055 0433] of circulating capital. In the past, the state helped enterprises free themselves from such dire straits several times. Now some enterprises still hope that the state will again help them remove the burden and take the risk for them. The problem of the so-called"inflated content" in circulating capital has become a long-standing, big and difficult problem which people describe as "grass that even a praire fire cannot destroy; it grows again when the spring breezes blow." In some enterprises, the percentage of "inflated content" in circulating capital is as high as about 10 percent. 4) Enterprises stretched out their hands to ask for circulating capital boldly at low interest whether their business was good or bad. Some banks failed to examine applications strictly.

The problems occurring in the four aspects mentioned above are major problems in circulating capital at present and we can see that they are quite serious. Our enterprises' circulating capital has not yet solved the old problems of "large spending, slow turnover, and poor results." On average, circulating capital in advanced capitalist countries passes through 7 to 10 cycles every year. However, there are only 3.5 cycles in our country.

Strengthening and Improving Macroscopic Control Over Circulating Capital

Circulating capital is connected with various fields such as production, distribution, exchange and consumption. Its operation reflects whether social and economic effect is good or bad. Every year, the loans newly allocated by banks as circulating capital account for about 70 percent of the total amount ofloans. Only by doing well in macroscopically grasping the key link of circulating capital can we exercise effective control over credit funds.

1. We should take the normal requirement of circulating capital as a means for controlling the scale of capital construction, and the speed of economic development. While organizing capital construction projects, we should consider fixed assets and circulating capital in a unified way. Only by linking fixed assets with circulating capital to form a whole can we carry out production and gain an income. While assessing feasibility of the scale of capital construction, we should consider not only the conditions of energy, communications, materials and funds for capital construction, but also conditions of basic circulating capital. Whether the state, localities, enterprises, towns and townships carry out their capital construction, they should have their own basic circulating capital. This should also be regarded as a means for controlling the scale of capital construction. Capital construction should make way for the circulating capital regularly needed.

Consideration of the needs of circulating capital should likewise be regarded as a means for controlling excessively high speed. The speed of economic development should be based on the feasability of energy, communications, and materials. Besides, the feasability of circulating capital should also be taken into consideration.

2. We should continue to deepen economic reform, develop lateral economic ties, and expand commodity circulation of agricultural and sideline products and mineral products. It is only after entering the market that products become commodities, and are circulated. Only thus can products have their own value, and can capital circulation be ensured. Town and township enterprises should place their emphasis on the commercialization of agricultural and sideline products. In the process of developing lateral economic ties, we should turn products into commodities through various forms of economic and technical cooperation. We should also turn unsalable commodities into commodities which sell well. In a word, through developing socialist commodity economy, we should wake up and enliven circulating capital which is "slumbering."

3. We should enhance technical and management level of enterprises, cut down the consumption of raw and processed materials, enhance product quality, spend less funds and speed up capital turnover. In the present fixed circulating capital of the industry, material reserve capital accounts for about 60 percent, and capital for products and finished products accounts for about 20 percent. A situation of the "clumsy fish finding it difficult to swim" has occurred. To change this situation, we should devote our efforts to technology and management, reduce the consumption of materials, and enhance product quality. To do so, we should macroscopically consider the sources of technical reform and funds. We would rather carry out less capital construction than give up technical reform. We would rather let enterprises retain more profits than abandon modernization of enterprises (including modernization of technology and management). In particular, we should support the efforts to upgrade and renew products for export in order to enhance the competitiveness of our products on the international market.

4. We should change the supply system of circulating capital. 1) The state should levy a charge on the circulating capital provided in the past in order to support key enterprises and enterprises manufacturing products for export with circulation capital. 2) We should establish an examination and auditing system for the circulating capital of enterprises, and let enterprises use their own methods to solve stage by stage and group by group the problem of "inflated content" in circulating capital, and prevent the occurrence of new "inflated content." The idea of enterprises fearing to cast off their burdens and not daring to carry out investigation and auditing should be overcome. The more we know about the situation of circulating capital of enterprises, and the "clearer the water in which the number of fish can be fully counted," the better we know about whether these enterprises have done well in carrying out their management and administration, and in observing financial and economic discipline.

In the course of carrying out examination and auditing, we should criticize the specious argument that shifting circulating capital to capital construction, or raising funds for this purpose means "interchanging between circulating capital and fixed assets." These two kinds of things can interchange only through production, circulation, and the intensification of administration and management. The method of promoting direct "interchange" through releasing regular circulating capital will not work. 3) We should follow a system of different interest rates, or floating rates, and make use of interest rates to reward the best and restrict the worst. 4) We should follow a system of letting enterprises replenish their own circulating capital, and enhance their capability of taking risks.

Leaders of enterprises should have a financial concept, and rationally arrange circulating capital of enterprises. They should regard the management of circulating capital as their own concern, rather than an added burden.

Leaders of enterprises should have a financial concept, and rationally arrange circulating capital of enterprises. They should regard the management of circulating capital as their own concern, rather than an added burden.

Enlivening Circulating Capital Microscopically

The problem of the amount of use of circulating capital and its importance to production and circulation are major issues of macroeconomics which should be handled well.

It is also an important aspect of microeconomics which should be enlivened. In the course of promoting their production, enterprises should correct the practice of excessive speed and satisfy the demand of circulating capital to develop production at normal speed.

1. We should exercise a flexible control over the total amount of annual loans earmarked for circulating capital. The amount of circulating capital might be different every month, or every quarter. Basic-level banks should be allowed to flexibly adjust the figures in accordance with the situation in production. The amount of annual loans earmarked for circulating capital is not compulsorily fixed. If basic-level banks receive more deposits, they are allowed to provide more loans for circulating capital. Thus, we will be able to arouse the enthusiasm of local government in paying attention to savings deposits of local banks.

2. We should reform the system of settling accounts and speed up the work. With the development of commodity economy, we should reform the previous system of settling accounts based on planned purchase and marketing by the state. We should vigorously develop the system of using more commercial bills of credit, discount bills and clearing checks. We should speed up the process of computerization of banks. First, we should establish microcomputerized remote data processing networks to speed up capital turnover and minimize the default in payment of cash in transit.

3. We should deal with each case on its merits and avoid demanding conformity in everything. With regard to enterprises which are engaged in manufacturing famous-brand products, new and marketable products, high-quality and cheap products, products which earn foreign exchange for the state, products connected with energy and communications, and products or small commodities in short supply, priority for loans should be given to them. The terms of loans for them should be softened. If something has happened with regard to the business management of an enterprise, we should not give it all-out support. However, if one kind of its products is salable, we should support production of such products. With regard to new, integrated enterprises which develop in the course of promoting lateral economic ties, we should let them open bank accounts, and supply them with loans earmarked for circulating capital. With regard to enterprises which manufacture products in a rough and slipshod way, or produce low-quality, expensive and unmarketable goods, we should not provide them with "benevolent credits."

4. We should tap the potential of circulating capital, and handle the problem of "inflated content" in capital. They key to solving the problem of circulating capital lies in tapping the potentials of enterprises in circulating capital. We should recall loans and promote the sale of products and materials which should be sold at reduced prices (those enterprises which wait for higher price to sell, or keep goods in stock intentionally should pay higher interest rates). We should reduce the amount of materials which are overstocked. Dealing with the problem of "inflated content" might influence financial revenue of some localities. To arouse the enthusiasm of localities, we should appropriately increase the amount of loans for local enterprises, which are earmarked for circulating capital, after recalling loans as a result of the settlement of the problem of "inflated content."

RENMIN RIBAO URGES EMULATING POLITICAL CADRE

[Commentator's article: "Thousands of People Like Xiong Yuanqi Are Needed During Our Times"]

[Text] The new historical period makes new demands on ideological and political work. Fine political work cadre Comrade Xiong Yuanqi was one of the exemplary persons who emerged on the ideological front in the new situation of reform and opening to the outside world. His spirit of "self-confidence, self-strengthening, and self-respect "is worth learning earnestly by all political work cadres.

In order to create a new situation in ideological and political work, centering on the central task of energetically developing the productive forces and keeping abreast of the needs of building a highly advanced socialist material civilization and spiritual civilization, we must strive to increase the ideological consciousness and raise the ethical level of the masses of people so that they can develop their enthusiasm, initiative, and spirit of blazing new trails. In the course of reform and opening to the outside world, we must try hard to learn advanced science and technology and managerial experience from foreign countries, and to develop the socialist commodity economy. At the same time, we must resolutely resist the influence of various decadent ideas and overcome erroneous ideas which hamper the progress of reform. Reform and opening to the outside world have put forward new and more arduous tasks for ideological and political work. This has made some comrades think that it is difficult to do ideological and political work and that they do not know how to do ideological and political work. They are unwilling to do, or have neglected and relaxed, work in this respect. Comrade Xiong Yuanqi was also aware that the work had become more difficult and the demands higher. However, he never wavered in his confidence in doing a good job in ideological and political work. He regarded meeting the needs of the party and the people as his sacred task and bounden duty. He advanced amid difficulties and devoted all his energy and gave a brilliant performance at an ordinary post.

Ideological and political work is a science for sculpting human souls. People who only have enthusiasm are not qualified to engage in this branch of science. We have often come across comrades who are "enthusiastic" in doing ideological work but who only indulge in aimless preaching and frequently put on a stern expression and critcize others. Consequently, those who are criticized express their disagreement and those who are educated stay at a respectful distance from them. Why was Comrade Xiong Yuanqi's ideological and political work full of vitality and attractive? An important reason is that Comrade Xiong Yuanqi was not satisfied with doing his work in an ordinary way and constantly improved himself politically and professionally in the spirit of self-strengthening. While carrying forward the fine tradition of the past, he endeavored to explore the characteristics and laws in ideological and political work in the new period; and on the basis of studying Marxist theories, he paid attention to psychology, law, and the science of management. Therefore, he did ideological and political work in a fair and reasonable manner and attained outstanding achievements.

The party and the people need ideological and political workers like Comrade Xiong Yuanqi not simply because he actively publicized the party's principles and policies but also because he did solid work and set an example for others.

There is an old saying: "If a person is an eloquent speaker and earnestly practices what he advocates, he is a valuable asset to the country." Since political work cadres educate others, they should first of all have self-respect and self-esteem and should lay greater stress on setting a personal example than on verbal instructions. As long as a political work cadre can match his deeds with his thoughts and words, and follows what is true, good, and beautiful, he will win the respect and trust of the people and be able to inspire and encourage millions upon millions of people to forge ahead together.

The party and the people are anticipating the emergence of tens of millions of Xiong Yuanqi's. If large numbers of people like Xiong Yuanqi have matured, we shall then have a mighty contingent of ideological workers who are full of combat power and are able to convince and attract others, carry out our ideological and political work with excellent results, and continuously open up new situations in promoting the building of the two civilizations.

GENERAL OFFICES ISSUE CIRCULAR ON HEROES, MODELS

OW112000 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 10 May 86

[Text] The General Offices of the CPC Central Committee and the Central Military Commission recently approved and conveyed the report made by the Central Propaganda Department and the PLA General Political Department on the results of the PLA Heroes and Models Reporting Group's reporting activities throughout the country.

In the circular approving and conveying this report, the two general offices pointed out: The reporting activities of these heroes and models and the publicity campaign on advanced persons launched on all fronts offer an extremely valuable experience in how to do ideological and political work well in the new period.

In their report to the CPC Central Committee and the Central Military Commission, the Central Propaganda Department and the PLA General Political Department summed up the following experiences by which the PLA Heroes and Models Reporting Group had attained their success:

1. To give widespread publicity to and enthusiastically learn from the advanced deeds of heroes and models is an effective way in extensively carrying out education on Communist ideas.

2. The Communist ideas and lofty ethics of the heroes and models have set a good example for the broad masses of young people to foster their correct world outlook.

3. Workers in the field of ideology and politics must ensure that their own thinking and workstyle are able to pass the stiffest test.

4. Ideological education and propaganda work must be carried out in close connection with the actual situation. They must be realistic and reasonable.

The report made by the Central Propaganda Department and the PLA General Political Department stressed: Propaganda and cultural departments must make it their bounden duty to wholeheartedly publicize typical advanced examples so as to promote a fine general mood of society by means of strong public opinion.

A. the same time, the report also pointed out: Right now, many departments and areas have already organized or are beginning to organize the advanced characters in all fields of endeavor to make speeches to the masses.

In doing this type of work, we must carefully select the advanced characters. We must avoid sponsoring too many speeches in one area. It is necessary to make full use of up-to-date propaganda media such as television and audio and video recorders so that activities to give widespread publicity to and learn from heroes and models will be carried out even more extensively and over an even longer period of time.

ARTICLE VIEWS OBSTACLES TO STUDY OF ECONOMICS

HK100746 Shanghai SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO in Chinese 21 Apr 86 p 14

[Article by Chen Lebo: "Three Major Obstacles to the Development of Economics Study in Our Country"]

[Text] Our country's theoretical workers have made tremendous efforts to develop the study of socialist economics. However, the level of theoretical research is considerably low. A careful analysis shows that there are three obstacles to the development of the study of socialist economics in our country.

First Obstacle: The Socialist Economic Mechanism Has Not Yet Developed to Maturity

The summary of theoretical law cannot go beyond the development of matter. At present we are arduously exploring ways to reform the socialist economic system. Our country's economic mechanism is now in an unstable state in which the new and old patterns are being applied side by side. Under this situation, we should recognize the historical obstacles to the development of the socialist economic theories and boldly conduct theoretical exploration in light of practice. However, owing to historical reasons, we always used to take the socialist pattern of the Soviet Union as the model. This has severely restricted our thinking. The historical obstacles are holding us back and hindering our progress.

Second Obstacle: Shifting Events Are Coped With by Sticking to a Fundamental Principle

The classical Marxist works, especially Marx' "Das Kapital" which has a perfect structure and contains incisive analyses, have exerted tremendous influence on our country's economists. This is quite natural. However, a matter which goes too far will become the opposite of what was meant. As a result of the influence by the "left" line over the past years, we also have adopted an attitude of unswervingly following only the instructions given in "Das Kapital." That is, only what is said in "Das Kapital" counts, and things which are not mentioned in "Das Kapital" are unorthodox. We just coped with the shifting events by sticking to a fundamental principle, that is, by applying the instructions in the classic example. Applying the instructions in a century-old book in appraising the varied realities of a greatly changed society will invariably result in the ossification of thinking and the separation of theories from social practice. Theoretical work means comparing and analyzing various kinds of different ideas, and truth has to go through a course of setbacks before it can be grasped by the people. This is the normal process of scientific work and a prerequisite to scientific development. However, due to the lack of an absolute demarcation line between a political problem and an academic problem, and as a result of the influence by the "left" ideas of "putting politics in command" as in the past, a deviation in expressing and understanding a problem might even stir up an unimaginable political storm so that the development of our studies of socialist economics meet huge obstacles as far as theoretical research and work style are concerned, the analyses and studies of the traditional Marxist economics are often labeled as anti-Marxist, and the use of the Western economic theories for reference is sometimes regarded as "wholesale Westernization."

There is also the question of an all-round, complete understanding of "Das Kapital." For a long time in the past, instead of proceeding from the process of operations and the internal contradictions of the socialist economy, the study of the socialist society mechanically analyzed and applied the standards and categories of the capitalist society.... As a result, the quintessence of the Marxist economic theories was not duly developed under the new conditions.

Third Obstacle: Academic Problems Are Mixed With Political Problems

In the course of academic research, some patterns which have long been publicly acknowledged as correct have often aroused doubts, and some of the things which have been fully proved to be wrong have often attracted close attention and been elaborated on. For this reason, a great deal of economic information is passed on through internal channels and the research on economic theories is "suffocated." Once learning is equated with politics, political leadership naturally becomes academic authority. In this situation, the most important task of theoretical work is neither to serve policymaking nor to open up new domains, but merely to serve the policy.

No one will deny that the above-mentioned situation has greatly changed over the past few years as a result of the urgent social demand for economic restructuring. However, we must also see that because of the low level of our social economic theories, we are lagging rather far behind in the planning of reforms, the making of ideological preparations, and the training of cadres. For this reason, it is necessary for us to reexamine the obstacles we have met in developing the socialist economic theories, to reconsider the status of the socialist economic theories as a subject of study and the conditions for its continuous development, and to make clear what kind of studies are "unhealth trends" in the study of economic theories.

SU SHAOZHI ARTICLE CALLS FOR ACADEMIC FREEDOM

HK120430 Shanghai SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO in Chinese 21 Apr 86 p 2

[Article by contributing commentator Su Shaozhi: "Now There Is Greater Need To Make Bold Explorations"]

[Text] The ongoing economic structural reform is the second major change following the socialist transformation of the private ownership system of the means of production after the victory of our proletarian revolution. It is a change, reform, and innovation, and an experiment, so no ready-made solution for it can be found in the classical works of Marxism.

Marx and Engels mainly analyzed capitalism, they did not have practical experience in building socialism. Lenin used much of his energy to deal with the civil war after the October Revolution, and then he put forth the new economic policy after the victory of the civil war. I think that Lenin's new economic policy was the first trial to reform the economic system. However, because Lenin's health failed and he died too early, his economic policy was soon replaced by Stalin's theory and practice and was not seriously and fully implemented. It can be said that the economic structural reform is still in the stage of practice, and the theoretical foundation has yet to be established.

Therefore, when carrying out reform, we should not be afraid of running some risks. Stalin's economic model has existed in China for more than 30 years, and has not been thoroughly changed although we have found various defects in this economic system. The main reason is that we are still afraid of running risks and committing mistakes. In fact, maintaining an old system that is not suited to the development of the productive forces and the times is itself a big mistake.

Of course, we should do our best to advance reform prudently and steadily. However, it is impossible to avoid all risks. Reform without any risk is not reform at all. It is unavoidable that errors may appear in the course of reform. In fact, the prolonged existence of the old system itself has caused many errors, but as people are accustomed to the old system they do not deeply realize these. However, they are very sensitive to minor errors and changes in the course of reform, because they are not used to the new things. Therefore, when observing and assessing the situation of reform, we should soberly distinguish the mainstream from nonessential phenomena and believe that transient and nonessential problems can be resolved through further reform.

To carry out reform, we should dare to break through some dogma in the traditional textbooks, as well as some major conclusions in the classical works of Marxism. For example, when reform is carried out in a socialist country, it is inevitable that theoretical studies will first be made on the relationship between plans and markets. The biggest problem in the old system is the viewpoint that holds that plans and markets are contradictory and repulsive to each other and that the socialist planned economy must be based on a product economy rather than a commodity economy. So, our reform must first break through this dogma and raise the viewpoint that the socialist planned economy should still be placed on the basis of a commodity economy. The resolution adopted by the 3d Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee put forth a new concept of a planned comodity economy, and this represents a major breakthrough in Marxist theory. Following this major theoretical breakthrough, we still have to continue our explorations in both theory and practice. We should consider things in light of the regularity of the socialist commodity economy; discard all old concepts, ideas, practices, conventions, and systems that are no longer suited to the socialist commodity economy; and adapt all aspects of our social and economic life through reforms to the requirements of the development of the socialist commodity economy. To carry on reform successfully, we still have to make a series of breakthroughs. Reform itself is a breakthrough. Negating the need to make breakthroughs is equal to negating reform.

Since reform will break through some major Marxist conclusions, it will certainly bring about new phenomena, new questions, and new opinions. It is certain that our political economic textbooks and some concepts, categories, and viewpoints in the classical works of Marxism will not be able to satisfy the needs and need to be updated. The new questions include the increase in the number of white-collar workers in developed capitalist countries; the increasing role of science and technology in creating value; the increasing proportion of tertiary industry in the economy; the extensive use of computers and robots; the appearance of systems engineering, cybernetics, informatics, depletion structure theory, and other research methodologies; and the consolidation of the ruling part in a socialist country, the socialist commodity economy and the market mechanisms in a socialist country, and employment and fund-raising under the socialist system... along with the appearance of the new phenomena and new questions, there must be new concepts. Through sublation, we can also assimilate some new concepts developed by contemporary scholars in developed capitalist countries. Marxism itself is an open doctrine. When writing "Das Kapital," Marx quoted many works by bourgeois economists and made use of their concepts. As we all know, the three sources of Marxism summarized by Lenin are not proletarian theories at all. If Marx were alive today, he would not turn a blind eye to all sorts of new ideas and concepts. In order to carry out reform, we must asimilate new ideas and put forth new concepts. Of course, we should assimilate other people's things in a critical way.

In view of the current situation in our country, I think that a major obstacle to our ongoing reform is the lack of theoretical explanation of our reform. This is partly because we have not given full scope to free academic discussion. We tend to recklessly attach the label of "bourgeois liberalism" to some new opinions, and this makes our minds too tightly bound by the traditional ideas and discourages us from developing theory from our real life. As a result, our theory lags behind our practice. Our theorists are used to writing stereotypes or repeating empty talk that seems correct at any time and in any circumstances. This style will certainly obstruct our reform.

Modernization and democratization is the objective of our struggle. Reform of the economic and political systems is a way to reach this objective. In order to advance the reform, we should seriously carry out the principle of letting "a hundred flowers bloom and a hundred schools of thought contend," and should encourage free academic discussions. We should oppose the practice of recklessly denouncing some academic theories as "liberalism." Historical experience tells us that attaching a political label to an academic issue will never lead to a good result. What we need now are bold explorations.

ZHU HOUZE ATTENDS SHANGHAI CULTURAL FORUM

OW102055 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1545 GMT 10 May 86

[By reporter Zhao Lanying]

[Text] Shanghai, 10 May (XINHUA) -- Over 300 experts, scholars, and scientfic research personnel from Beijing and Shanghai gathered together here today to discuss and study the "Draft Proposal on Strategy for Shanghai's Cultural Development" as well as the some 100 relevant papers and investigation reports, and to suggest ways and means for forming a strategy to promote culture in Shanghai.

The activities in studying the strategy to promote culture in Shanghai constitute an important step adopted by the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee in implementing the policy of the central authorities to simultaneously develop the "two types of civilizations." These activities have aroused widespread attention from people of all walks of life since they began to develop in March last year. Over 400 professors, experts, scholars, and scientific research personnel in Shanghai have written more than 100 papers and investigation reports on Shaghai's cultural development. These investigation and research activities have delved, in a preliminary way, into the history and the current situation in promoting cultural development in Shanghai, pointed out the way to deal with the situation, and provided a solid basis to bring about a balanced development between Shanghai's culture and economy and among the various cultural departments in the city.

The forum which opened today is the continuation and extension of the aforementioned study activities. At the forum, Rui Xingwen, secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee, said: The aim in forming a strategy to promote cultural development in Shanghai is to foster a new style of work and bring up one generation of "new Shanghai landers" after another. Rui Xingwen said: Shanghai already has two strategic plans -- the "Shanghai Economic Development Strategy" and the "General Plan for Shanghai's Urban Development." The "Strategy for Promoting Cultural Development in Shanghai" now being studied is the third plan. With these three plans, Shanghai will be able to do a good job implementing the "Seventh 5-Year" Plan and make even greater contributions for the whole country.

Zhu Houze, head of the Propaganda Department under the CPC Central Committee; Xia Yan, vice chairman of the China Federation of Literary and Art Circles; Gao Zhanxiang, vice minister of culture; and many scholars and responsible persons of various departments in Beijing made special trips to Shanghai to attend this forum. Also attending today's inaugural ceremony were principal responsible persons and some celebrities in Shanghai.

IMPORT OF AUTOMOBILES TO BE STRICTLY CONTROLLED

HK100710 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1343 GMT 8 May 86

[Text] Beijing, 8 May (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Our reporters have learned from the China Automobile Marketing Service Company that the recession in the automobile market in China which arose in the latter half of last year has not been alleviated yet. This year, the output of automobiles will be maintained at the same level as last year, and the import of automobiles will be kept under strict control.

The prices of most China-made automobiles have dropped by 20 to 40 percent on average. The price of a Jiefang brand truck has dropped by 9,000 yuan, that of a Dongfeng brand truck by 6,000 yuan, that of a Huang He brand truck by 20,000 yuan, and that of a Yuejin brand truck by more than 10,000 yuan.

According to a source concerned, there are many contributing factors for the recession in the automobile market. Now that the government is exerting strict control over credit extension, some car purchasers who intend to buy do not have enough money. Meanwhile, many automobiles are lying idle due to a domestic shortage of gasoline. In addition, the domestic automobile market had a strong impact from the large number of cars imported in 1984 and 1985. A series of preferential policies such as the lifting of restrictions on the purchase of cars by non-individual consumers, lowering of prices, and the method of hire purchase were adopted.

The same source pointed out that the Chinese automobile market is now fluctuating and is about to recover.

STATE CONTROL OVER MATERIAL RESOURCES RELAXED

OW111407 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0729 GMT 11 May 86

[By reporter Wu Jincai]

[Text] Beijing, 11 May (XINHUA) -- To relax the control over the goods and materials market gradually, China has established social balanced planning system for a number of important means of production.

According to information provided by the State Bureau of Materials and Equipment, in the past, the various kinds of means of production were mainly distributed by the state according to unified planning. However, following the progress of the reform in recent years, the number of goods and materials under unified state planning and distribution has reduced from 256 kinds in the past to last year's 2 kinds. At the same time, the kinds and quantity of goods and materials under the control and disposal by the various enterprises and localities have increased, and the state materials and equipment departments are undergoing a gradual transition from direct to indirect control over goods and materials.

To maintain a balanced situation between the demand and production of goods and materials of the whole society, China has established some systems for balanced social planning.

At the beginning of each year, the State Bureau of Materials and Equipment will conduct an investigation of goods, materials, and resources of the entire society with attention focused on the total availability of steel prducts, lumber, cement, and coal; prepare a plan for social demands according to the results of the investigation; and apportion resources, goods, and materials according to the needs under state unified planning, the needs of local and department distribution, and of the market. At the same time, the various areas, cities, departments, and even the enterprises will work out their own balanced plans according to their own needs.

The new system adapted to the new market situation has provided the basic data for making macroeconomic decisions in production and construction. In preparing annual plans over the past several years, the state planning departments were able to make prompt readjustments or production and construction based on the availability of material resources as reflected in the balanced planning for goods and materials. Thanks to balanced regional planning, many localities have been able to analyze their advantages and disadvantages in material resources; make adjustments according to these advantages and disadvantages; and promote stable and healthy economic growth.

Thanks to the new balanced planning of materials, a number of steel mills in Wuhan City were able to exchange their surplus steel products for nonferrous metals with neighboring Hunan Province and galvanized iron and thin steel plates with Guangzhou City, thereby solving a difficult problem of material shortage in production. Thanks to increased production over the past several years, many goods and much equipment in short supply in the past have become plentiful. This tendency can also be promptly reflected in social balanced plans for material resources. When coal supply became relatively plentiful, Hunan Province made a macroeconomic adjustment to coal production according to the balanced planning. it limited the production of coal mines with low output which produce poor quality coal but continued to give support to small coal mines that had shown good economic results, thereby adapting coal production to market changes.

It is reported that the state materials and equipment departments have decided to furthr perfect social balanced planning for materials. This year, eight kinds of materials, namely heavy oil, copper, aluminum, lead, zinc, tin, sodium carbonate, and caustic soda will be included under balanced planning.

'NATIONWIDE NETWORK' SET UP TO SUPERVISE PRICES

OW110143 Beijing XINHUA in English 0137 GMT 11 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 11 (XINHUA) -- The All-China Federation of Trade Unions and the State Administration of Commodity Prices have recently issued a joint circular on setting up a nation-wide network in the urban areas to supervise prices to protect the consumers' interests.

The circular says that this is an effective form for the people to directly participate in the state economic adminstration.

According to the circular the network will be empowered to fine and confiscate illicit income up to a certain amount and help departments of commodity prices deal with illegal acitivities concerning prices.

Workers' Supervision Stressed

OW092059 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1218 GMT 9 May 86

[Text] Beijing, 9 May (XINHUA) — The All-China Federation of Trade Unions and the State Administration of Commodity Prices recently issued a joint "Circular Concerning Strengthening of Commodity Price Supervision and Inspection by Workers and Staff," calling on all localities to adopt effective measures to place workers' supervision and inspection of commodity prices on the agenda and to strive to institute and perfect a commodity price supervision and inspection network that combines full-time personnel and the masses of people.

The "circular" said: Workers' supervision of commodity prices is an effective way for the masses to take part in managing national economic affairs, as well as an important component of the economic supervision of the market. The current nationwide workers' price supervision and inspection has contributed to safeguarding the interests of the state and consomers, stabilizing market prices, and ensuring the smooth progress of pricing reform, and it has been well received by party committees and people's governments at various levels, as well as by the broad masses of people.

The "circular" urged all cities to set up workers' price supervision organizations. Those that have already set up such organizations should further consolidate and improve them. All cities should establish a workers' price supervision general station to take charge of the planning and guidance of local workers' price supervision activities. Trade unions, price administration departments, and other departments concerned in all localities should take concerted action and share responsibility in carrying out the work. All city and county trade unions and price administration departments should assign competent cadres to ensure success in the work.

The"circular" also urged local price administration departments to delegate powers to and outline procedures for imposing a fine and confiscating illegal income by workers' price supervision organizations and price inspectors on the basis of their experience and ability. However, they should report cases involving violations of regulations not covered under their jurisdiction to price administration departments, and assist them in investigating the cases.

REGULATIONS ON RESEARCH UNITS' WORK RELAXED

OW090745 Beijing XINHUA in English 0658 GMT 9 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 9 (XINHUA) -- A new government regulation made public today allows China's 5,000 research institutes to accept research projects from non-governmental institutions.

Under the new rule, research institutes will be able to work with Chinese enterprises, design units and universities and arrange for personnel and manage their own financial affairs without checking with central government authorities. However, the projects must still accord with the general tasks set for the institutes by central government officials, according to a provisional regulation of the State Council, China's highest governing body.

The regulation also allows the institutes to earn tax-free income from new technology they develop as well as from other services they provide. "The goal is to stimulate the institutes to boost the country's scientific and technological development," according to a State Council statement.

ANHUI DISCUSSES 'SERIOUS' SMUGGLING PROBLEM

OW090511 Hefei Anhui Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 8 May 86

[Text] The second Anhui provincial antismuggling conference cosponsored by the provincial public security department, the provincial communications department, the provincial taxation bureau, and the Wuhu Municipal Customs House concluded today. Under the guidelines set forth by the fourth conference sponsored by the State Council on deterring smuggling activities in three coastal provinces in southeast China, the participants discussed measures to intensify Anhui's antismuggling operations, examined the current situation, pledged closer cooperation among themselves, and studied the relevant policies.

In view of the smuggling activities and antismuggling force in Anhui the conference discussed the issue of trading in smuggled automobiles in Anhui. The conference maintained that the situation of smuggling and trading in smuggled goods is quite serious today and that smuggling and trading in smuggled goods by state-operated and collective units are the most blatant.

As shown by some major cases that have been cracked, there are many ways to smuggle goods into Anhui, and most of the great variety of smuggled goods are commodities that can yield a windfall or at least a handsome profit. The meeting urged the public security, communications, taxation, and business administration departments as well as the customs house to work in close coordination to investigate the trading in smuggled automobiles and handle the cases according to law.

Ye Rongyun, chief of the Wuhu Municipal Customs House, briefed the participants on the situation. He also made an important speech about certain specific policies. Shi Jiyu, [words indistinct] of the Anhui Provincial People's Government, addressed the meeting. Also present at the meeting were comrades of the public security, taxation, and communications departments of Hefei, Bangbu, Wuhu, Anqing, Tongling, Huainan, Huaibei, and Maanshan Municipalities.

Commentary on Antismuggling Efforts

OW090537 Hefei Anhui Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 8 May 86

["Short commentary": "Firmly Rebuff Smuggling and Trading in Smuggled Goods"]

[Text] Currently, China is enjoying political stability and unity and economic prosperity. Reforms and the policy of opening to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy have accelerated the nation's modernization process and brought profound changes in our country's economic and social outlook. However, under this gratifying situation there are certain problems. One of them is the rampant smuggling activities and the trading in smuggled goods.

On smuggling and trading in smuggled goods, some comrades in our province have treated the matter lightly, thinking that the problem is not serious in an inland province like Anhui. (?They cannot be more wrong.)

We must realize that following the implementation of the policy of opening to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy, as well as the development of lateral economic ties among various regions, the relations between interior areas and coastal ports have become much closer; and large quantities of smuggled goods have been brought into the inland areas through the many joint ventures and various other channels from the coastal areas in southeast China.

We must clearly realize that certain state-operated and collective enterprises and institutions, to benefit a small number of people in their region or department, have resorted to all kinds of tricks to evade taxes and engage in smuggling and trading in smuggled goods, disregarding party discipline and state laws and taking advantage of loopholes in state policies and regulations. Since the antismuggling struggle that we have launched is meant to safeguard our national sovereignty and our socialist system, it is a serious political as well as economic struggle. Our customs houses, public security, taxation, and business administration departments, which have the responsibility to deter smuggling activities, must realize the seriousness of this issue and work closely to carry out the antismuggling struggle through to the end.

[Excerpts] The Yuhuatai Martyrs Cemetery construction committee held its fourth meeting today. Leading comrades of Jiangsu Province and Nanjing City were invited to attend. The leading comrades examined the overall construction plan and detailed construction plans, heard a report on the progress of construction, and inspected the construction site. The attending comrades approved the construction plans for the martyrs monument, the memorial pavilion, and the East and South Gates. They offered many valuable views on the sculptures on the monument. Han Peixin, Sun Jianzheng, and other leading comrades inspected the construction sites of the Yuhuatai martyrs monument and the memorial ring.

WAN SHAOFEN ATTENDS CLOSING OF PEOPLE'S CONGRESS

OW111140 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 10 May 86

[Excerpts] The Fourth Session of the Sixth Jiangxi Provincial People's Congress came to a successful close. A closing meeting was held at 3 pm today at the Bayi Auditorium in Nanchang. Some executive chairmen of the presidium of the fourth session served as the executive chairmen of the 10 May closing meeting. They were Wan Shaofen, Xu Qin, Wang Shufeng, Wang Zemin, Zheng Xiaoxian, Liang Kaixuan, Huang Xiandu, Peng Shengxi, and Liu Bin.

Seated on the rostrum were members of the presidium of the session, and the leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee, the provincial Advisory Commission, the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission, the provincial government, the Jiangxi Military District, the provincial Higher People's Court, the provincial People's Procuratorate, and the provincial CPPCC Committee, who were attending the meeting on invitation. They included Liu Fangren, Ni Xiance, Bai Dongcai, Wang Zhaorong, (Lu Xiuzhen), (Wang Zhihua), Zhao Zhijian, Zhao Zengyi, Di Sheng, Zhu Zhihong, Qian Jiaming, (Sun Xiyue), (Chen Guisun), Li Yanling, (Li Ying), Wang Shuheng, Wu Ping, Yang Yongfeng, Liu Jianhua, Li Shanyuan, Jin Liqiang, and Wu Yunzhong. Three veteran comrades were also attending the meeting on invitation and sitting on the rostrum. They were Zhang Yuqing, Li Fangyuan, and Xie Xianghuang.

The closing meeting was presided over by Wang Zemin, an executive chairman of the session. First, by a show of hands, it adopted the Seventh 5-Year Plan of Jiangxi Province and a resolution on the report on the Seventh 5-Year Plan. It also unanimously adopted the resolutions on the 1986 economic and social development plan of Jiangxi Province, the final provincial accounts for 1985, the provincial budget for 1986, the report on the work of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee, the report on the work of the provincial Higher People's Court, and the report on the work of the provincial People's Procuratorate.

HUBEI: GUO ZHENQIAN ON SEVENTH 5-YEAR PLAN TASKS

HK090147 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 8 May 86

[Excerpts] Acting Governor Guo Zhenqian stressed in his report on the draft Seventh 5-Year Plan for Hubei that to ensure the successful fulfillment of the plan, it is essential to carry out economic structural reforms in depth, harmonize the various economic relationships, and promote sustained, steady, and coordinated development of the national economy. At present the focus should be on consolidating, digesting, replenishing, and perfecting the fruits and measures of reform and on creating conditions and laying the foundation for taking new strides in reform next year and the year after.

In rural reforms, we should uphold and perfect the contract responsibility system with payment linked to output based on the household, actively develop cooperative economy in various forms, further perfect the contract system for purchasing agricultural and sideline products, and also continue to rationally readjust the rural production structure and stimulate the development of commodity production.

In urban reforms, we must continue to do a good job in grasping the cardinal link — invigorating the enterprises, especially the large and medium enterprises, vigorously promote lateral economic ties, and lead forward reforms in other fields.

Acting Governor Guo Zhenqian said in his report that the province must strictly control investment in fixed assets during the Seventh 5-Year Plan, readjust the investment structure, and concentrate finance and material for key construction projects so as to strengthen the reserve capacity for economic development.

He said: The general principle of the investment structure in the next 5 years is to focus on productive construction, on construction for raw materials, energy, and communications, on technological progress, and on transformation through applying internal factors. According to this principle, we must resolutely cut nonproductive construction. Except for essential tourism facilities, we must cancel projects for constructing high buildings, halls, and centers. Investment in residential housing must also be controlled to a certain proportion. We must increase investment in agriculture, primary industries, and infrastructure, cut investment in general processing industries, appropriately increase investment in science and technology and education, and increase the proportion of investment in technological transformation.

Guo Zhenqian said: We must continue to strengthen the agricultural foundation during the Seventh 5-Year Plan and rely on the policies and on science to develop our strong point in grain and stabilize our strong point in cotton. We must vigorously develop township enterprises, give free rein to diversification, and promote the healthy development of the rural economy.

Grain and cotton are two strong points in Hubei's agriculture. In readjusting the rural production structure, we must ensure steady growth of grain and cotton production. At the same time we must give free rein to diversification in light of market needs and natural conditions.

BRIEFS

HUBEI COTTON SOWING — The province has basically completed cotton sowing. By the end of April, the province had sown cotton on 6.92 million mu, about the same level as last year. The provincial government has allocated some 88 million yuan to help cotton production. [Summary] [Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 7 May 86 HK]

HEBEI'S XING CHONGZHI ON SPIRITUAL CIVILIZATION

SK070948 Shijiazhuang HEBEI RIBAO in Chinese 23 Apr 86 p 1

[Text] On the morning of 22 April, at the meeting to exchange experiences in the publicity of the spiritual civilization held by the national journalist association and the provincial journalist association, Xing Chongzhi, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, said that it is necessary to adhere to the principle of grasping the two civilizations simultaneously in a conscientious and persistent manner, and with correct methods and forms.

On the same morning, Comrade Xing Chongzhi visited the delegates to the meeting at the Baoding Hotel, and also attended the meeting. After listening to reports on the building of the spiritual civilization given by responsible comrades of the PLA units stationed in Baoding, and the Baoding Prefectural and City CPC Committees, Comrade Xing Chongzhi pointed out: Our province's activities to build the socialist spiritual civilization cooperatively by armymen and civilians were initiated by the PLA with the guidance of the correct principles of the CPC Central Committee, and were popularized with the concern of the central leading comrades. However, we should pay attention to refraining from an overestimation of the results of the activites, and should be realistic. We should overcome the habit of regarding the work of pilot units as that of a large area, which has been established for many years, and make a success of both qualitiative analysis and quantitative analysis. We should carry out the work in a down-to-earth manner, encourage or comment the units which have done a good job by conferring honorary titles on them, and cancel the honarary titles of those which are not up to the standard. He said: When coming to Baoding of our Hebei Province, you comrades should visit both the advanced and the backward units, and should both sum up experiences and discover and study problems. Journalists are fairly keen in thinking. We hope that you will offer more valuable opinions on the work of our province in order for us to implement the directives of the CPC Central Committee, and carry out our work more successfully.

[Exerpts] On 8 and 9 May, Shanxi Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Li Ligong listened to reports given by leading comrades of the Yuncheng City CPC Committee and government on urban construction and carefully inspected the blueprints for construction work. He also viewed four road sections where construction is being speeded up. He said: In the construction work, the departments should adopt the method of putting projects up to tender and sign contracts with the construction units to ensure the quality of the projects. It is essential to solve properly the problems of supplying (?water) and heat. This city should be built into a clean and civilized city.

PRC FOREIGN MINISTRY SETS UP TAIWAN AFFAIRS OFFICE

[Text] In answering reporter's questions here on the afternoon of 7 May, Ma Yuzhen, press spokesman of the Foreign Ministry, confirmed that his ministry had set up a Taiwan Affairs Office. He said: The mission of this office is to implement the Chinese Government's policy and principles of peacefully reunifying the motherland, handle international affairs involving Taiwan, and defend China's sovereignty.

ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE COMMENTS ON CAAC MESSAGE TO CAL

HK121510 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE in Chinese 1410 GMT 12 May 86

[Commentary by Tian Ye: "It Is a Good Thing That Taiwan Confirms the Receipt of the Telegram" — ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE headline]

[Text] The "China Airlines [CAL] issue" has remained unsettled for about 10 days. The Civil Aviation Administration of China [CAAC] sent its first telegram to CAL, calling on the latter to send representatives to discuss the problem of receiving its airplane and crew. However, nothing has been achieved so far. On 11 May, CAAC sent its second telegram to CAL, calling on it to begin discussion without delay.

In its second telegram, the CAAC unambiguously says that the problem of returning the airplane and the crew is "purely a business matter without any political implications between two civil airlines," that the purpose of the talks is to "ensure the safe return of the airplane and of the crew to Taiwan," and that the CAL can propose a place for holding the consultation talks. By stressing that only business, not politics, will be discussed and, in particular, by clearly stating that the place for the talks is negotiable, the CAAC has created favorable conditions for the talks.

However, the relevant Taiwan officials still insist on negotiations through a third party. Is this not too stubborn and too unreasonable? Both the CAL and the CAAC are civil airlines. Why, when a business problem arises between them, can they not focus on the problem and handle it without involving a third party? Sportsmen from both sides of the Strait can participate in the same international tournaments, including the Olympic Games. Then why can the civil aviation personnel on both sides of the Strait not sit down and discuss the problem of returning an airplane and its crew? Since the CAAC has indicated that "political issues will not be involved," CAL should take advantage of this and focus on solving the problem of getting back its airplane and crew.

Things are a little different this time from when the CAAC sent its first telegram. Liu Te-min, chief of the Civil Aviation Administration under Taiwan's Ministry of Transportation, and Lin Liang-chih, have publicly confirmed the receipt of the second telegram sent by the CAAC. This is a praiseworthy realistic attitude. It is hoped that this realistic attitude can help CAL to settle the CAL issue.

TAIWAN AGREES TO DISCUSS PLANE ISSUE WITH PRC

HK130320 Hong Kong AFP in English 0802 GMT 13 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 13 (AFP) — Taiwan Tuesday said it had offered to talk with China for the return of a jet freighter, two crew members and the cargo, in what would be the first official contact between the two rivals since 1949.

In desperate efforts to save the crew on humanitarian grounds, we have asked Cathay Pacific Airways to inform our decision to Communist China's aviation authorities," said Lin Liang-chih, spokesman for Taiwan's flag carrier China Airlines (CAL).

(A Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC) spokesman in Beijing Tuesday said he had not heard of the CAL announcement, and Foreign Ministry representative declined comment.)

CAL earlier had asked Cathay Pacific, based in Hong Kong, to act as its representative in talks in Beijing, after the Boeing 747 carrying 214,000 pounds (96,525 kilograms) of general cargo was diverted to Guangzhou in southern China May 3 by Captain Wang Hsi-chueh.

The 56-year-old pilot, who left a wife and children in Taiwan, asked to be able to live in China and unite with his father, 82, and brothers. The two other crew, co-pilot Tung Kuang-hsing, 57, and engineer Chiu Ming-chih, 39, have said they wanted to return to Taiwan.

Mr Lin said CAL would assign its Hong Kong representatives to discuss the matter in the British colony with CAAC officials. He added: "The landing of the aircraft in Guangzhou is a pure aviation incident and negotiations on the return of the plane, the crew and cargo should be considered only as business.
A high-ranking official said talks would not be the beginning of further official contacts which could eventually lead to peace negotiations.

Earlier, CAAC had asked CAL in two telegrams to send representatives to China for direct talks to settle the issue, but CAL had refused.

Taiwan is ruled by Nationalists who moved here after losing to the Communists in a civil war.

"It would be naive to speculate that the aviation discussions would open dialogue between the two sides since we don't consider it has anything to do with politics," said the official who declined to be identified. "Our policy of 'no contact, no talk, no compromise' with the communists remains unchanged except in this event when the lives of our two people are involved," he added. If there was any political significance it was that Taipei was not so rigid when a matter concerned the safety of its people, he added.

(In Beijing, diplomats said the talks offered today by CAL on the cargo jet would signify a major victory for Beijing which had taken a most determined stand in recent days over the hijacked aircraft. But it was too early to say if Taipei's move indicated a change in its policy toward the mainland, the diplomats added. They noted that such talks would be the first official contact between Taipei and Beijing since 1949.)

(In Hong Kong earlier Tuesday a pro-Beijing newspaper said China had disposed of the cargo and was prepared to pay compensation for the goods. The TA KUNG PAO newspaper, quoting an unnamed senior Chinese official, said some of the cargo such as durian fruit had been sold, while rotten garoupa fish had been destroyed in Guangzhou. The official said China would compensate the traders concerned when talks proposed by Beijing were held between the CAAC and CAL. The official said the two crew members who requested to return to Taiwan were in good condition and lodged at a comfortable guesthouse in an undisclosed place, the paper added. In Hong Kong, Cathay Pacific spolesman D.J.T. Bell decline to comment. A ranking official with the firm who asked not to be named confirmed to AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE that Cathay had "played a role" in the matter.)

CENTRAL DAILY NEWS CLAIMS CAL PLANE 'FORCED' TO PRC

OW101037 Taipei CNA in English 1009 GMT 10 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 10 (CNA) -- A major Taipei newspaper said Saturday that the pilot of the China Airlines B-198 all-cargo jetliner was very likely to have been forced by Communist Chinese secret agents stationed in Bangkok to divert to the China mainland. The CENTRAL DAILY NEWS said in an editorial that the CAL plane's cockpit links with its cargo compartment. "Let's suppose that communist agents had sneaked into the plane before it took off from the Bangkok airport," the paper said, "they could easily reach the cockpit and force the CAL pilot to switch to Canton during its flight to Hong Kong."

The paper said that the supposition is not irrational because the Chinese Communists have often used depraved means to attain its purposes. The paper said that the cargo jet landed at the Canton airport at 3:10 p.m., but its pilot Wang Hsi-chuh didn't leave the plane until 4 p.m. During that 50 minutes, the Communist Chinese security agents apparently made some arrangements, the paper said. It continued that under Communist arrangement, Wang met his father in Peiping. But both of them were not particularly excited. Moreover, Wang's statement made at the press conference in Peiping was not an expression of his own free will. "The script was apparently prepared by Communist cadres because it was full of communist cliches," the paper said. The reasons that Wang gave for his "defection" were not convincing. His complaints about CAL were also ridiculous and groundless, the paper noted.

It further pointed out although the Communist authority claimed that co-pilot Tung Kuang-hsing once telephoned his wife in the United States from Canton, he and Chiu Ming-chih, flight engineer, has not yet been allowed to meet foreign journalists. The paper suspected that Tung and Chiu might have been injured in a fight with Communist agents during the deverted flight to Canton. "They, therefore, cannot appear in public," the paper said. The CENTRAL DAILY also stressed that the government should stand firm and not talk directly with the Chinese Communists for the release of the plane and its crew members. "We should entrust a third party to negotiate with Peiping," the paper asserted.

COMMENTARY ASSESSES NEW PRC TAIWAN AFFAIRS OFFICE

OW110311 Taipei International Service in English 0200 GMT 6 May 86

[Station commentary]

[Text] The Chinese Communists' Ministry of Foreign Affairs announced last week that it had established a Taiwan Affairs Office to handle international problems related to the Republic of China.

In recent years the Chinese Communist authorities have set up several types of Taiwan offices in their governmental and party organizations from the state level downward. These so-called Taiwan offices operate with a single objective, that is, lowering the vigilance of free China by continuously making sweet promises and telling beautiful lies. Last year Peking reportedly spent 58 million dollars to finance the operation. However, Peking's efforts in this regard have come to nothing because the people in Taiwan understand the Chinese Communists too well to be deceived. Furthermore, economic and social disparity between Taiwan and the mainland is so great that Peking's offering of the Trojan horse has often boomeranged. As a result, Red China is shifting the emphasis overseas. It has put out an overseas edition of the PEOPLE'S DAILY in an effort to swing the viewpoint of the large Overseas Chinese community, hoping to turn the tables this way.

At the same time, Peking is trying to persuade other countries to believe that the Republic of China or Taiwan is merely a renegade province. The Office of Taiwan Affairs under Peking's Foreign Ministry was created for this very purpose. This is reflected in the fact that the new setup is supposed to be similar to the Hong Kong and Macao Affairs Office, set up in the same ministry last May to liaise with Britain and other countries (?on) foreign relations aspect of Hong Kong's 1997 transfer to Peking. In other words, Peking is attempting to persuade other countries to believe that Taiwan is not different from Hong Kong and Macao and eventually will return to its control. However, wishful thinking is one thing; reality is another. The differences between Taiwan and the two foreign colonies are so glaring that no country can possibly be taken in by Peking's sleight of hand.

Hong Kong and Macao are Chinese territory ceded to foreign powers under unequal treaties forced upon China by the colonial power of the past, whereas Taiwan was restored to Chinese sovereignty and the end of the last war after half a century of Japanese rule and has been the seat of the Republic of China since 1949. The Republic of China [ROC] is a sovereign nation in fact as well as in name. Although the country has only 23 embassies abroad, it has maintained official and semi-official ties with practically every country in the noncommunist world. Even though the ROC is no longer a member of the United Nations, few of its members countries, if any, consider Taiwan as part of Communist China. Equally important is the fact that the vast majority of the 24 million Overseas Chinese have consistently refused to accept the Peking regime as the legitimate government of China and have continued to regard the government in Taipei as China's true representative. Last but not least is the fact that the Republic of China has the ability to defend itself against Peking's attempts at military subjugation. Even if Peking were able to isolate the ROC internationally, it could not change the reality that Free China is here to stay.

PREMIER YU URGES SAFETY PRECAUTIONS ON NUCLEAR PLANTS

OW121117 Taipei CHINA POST in English 9 May 86 p 12

[Text] Premier Yu Kuo-hwa yesterday urged the Atomic Energy Council (AEC) to take all necessary precautions to ensure the safety of domestic nuclear power plants as the problem has concerned the people. Many foreign countries have used nuclear energy to generate electricity, he said. To prevent and defend against possible safety problems which might occur in neighboring countries, the AEC should also work out concrete measures soon, he said. Yu asked the AEC to collect more information concerning the accident at the Soviet Union's Chernobyl nuclear power plant and compile a complete report.

Premier Yu gave the directives at the Executive Yuan meeting after hearing a report from the AEC on the accident in the Soviet Union. The AEC, in its report, pointed out that the facilities at the Chernobyl plant lack containment and safety devices the nuclear power plants in Western countries and Japan have, so no similar accidents will occur in those countries. The AEC said it has notified personnel at domestic nuclear power plants to observe all operational rules and dispatch specialists to supervise.

RADIATION INCREASES; WELL BELOW DANGER LEVEL

OW130311 Taipei CNA in English 0230 GMT 13 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 12 (CNA) -- The Atomic Energy Council said Monday that although the radiation levels in the Taiwan area have increased slightly over the past few days as a result of the accident of a nuclear power plant in the Soviet Union, they are still far from the dangerous level.

An official with the council said that according to its latest test reports around the island, the radiation levels in Taipei, Taichung, Kaohsiung and Hengchun have all increased slightly as compared with the figures of the same period of last year. Such low radiation levels will have no influence on the human body or plants, it said, calling on the people not to worry.

Meantime, Yu Yu-hsien, director of the provincial department of agriculture and forestry, said the radioactive fallout from the Soviet Union will not affect the agricultural products in this nation. Domestically-produced farm products are absolutely safe, and the people need not worry about eating them, he said.

In response to interpellations by provincial assemblymen Chen Chin-pin, Lin Kuo-lung and Lin Ming-cheng, Yu promised that the government will handle the issue with care and will not try to conceal any facts if the foods here are contaminated.

YUAN SAYS 75 PERCENT OF POPULATION SUPPORTS REGIME

OW051405 Taipei CNA in English 1017 GMT 5 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 5 (CNA) -- A great majority of more than 70 percent of the people in the Republic of China are satisfactory with the government, said Dr Wei Yung, chairman of the Research, Development and Evaluation Commission under the Executive Yuan, Monday. The central government, among governments of all levels, enjoys the greatest popularity from 75.8 percent of the people surveyed, Wei said.

Quoting findings in a series of six surveys made between 1978 and December, 1985 to 6,000 civilians of all walks of life, Wei said that 78.7 percent of the surveyed are satisfactory the most with the living standards and ways of life in free China. Among other concerns, Wei said, the environmental protection made by the government has been the least approved by the people; only 30.7 percent of the respondents said its ok. The satisfaction with government employees' services to the people is also slightly declining, the poll indicated.

The poll, Wei said, also revealed that population in urban areas, especially women, youths, laborers and people of free careers, are posing increasing influence on political development as potential constituents. As constituents, people are now paying less attention to the natives of candidates in political elections, Wei said. [sentence as received]

MING PAO: HONGQI CRITICIZES LIU ZAIFU'S THEORIES

HK110524 Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 7 May 86 p 11

[Article by Lin Mei: HONGQI Carries Article Critricizing Liu Zaifu's Theories on Literature and Art"]

[Text] Paying a little attention to newspapers and journals, we can clearly find that there is something unusual in the atmosphere in Beijing academic and theoretical circles. Although, for the time being, people are not yet clear what is the matter and what it means, they obviously feel that it is a serious and important matter.

After the "Ma Ding incident" in the economic theoretical circles, the recent issue No 8 of HONGQI, China's authoritative theoretical journal, carries Chen Yong's long article of over 15,000 characters criticizing by name Liu Zaifu, a promising young man in China's literature and art circles and director of the Institute of Literature of the Academy of Social Sciences of China, for his views on literary and art theory.

In mid April, Zhu Houze, director of the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee, published a speech that said there was an unprecedented brisk situation in the literature and art circles on the Chinese mainland, but there were also a small number of "billows" and a little "aftershock." Now, the "repercussion of them has not yet subsided," and there is still "lingering fear." Of course, Zhu said this with clear objects in view. However, this situation has emerged not only in the literature and art circles.

Over the past few days, important CPC officials one after another gave speeches or instructions calling people to create a harmonized and relaxed atmosphere in the theoretical and ideological fields in order to remove the nervousness in the minds of the intellectuals and in order to encourage people bravely to blaze new trails. In his speech at the meeting to mark the 1 May Labor Day, Hu Qili, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, said: "We should have the courage to break away from some outdated and not entirely correct conclusions of Marxism." A few days ago, Hu Sheng, president of the Academy of Social Sciences of China, also wrote an article to point out: "There is no forbidden area in scientific research, and we should not regard academic mistakes as political mistakes of principle. It seems that the matter is very complicated and makes people feel confused. I am going to discuss what I know about Liu Zaifu the person and Chen Yong's criticism of him.

Liu Zaifu, a native of Fujian, is 45 this year. His father died when he was 4 years old and he was brought up by his mother alone. He finished higher education on stipend. As he was diligent and eager to make progress, when he graduated from the Chinese Language Department of Xiamen University, he was employed as an editor for ZHONGGUO JIANSHE. At the end of the "Cultural Revolution," he published some articles on research about Lu Xun and was appreciated by poet and critic He Qifang. Later, he was transferred to a job in Lu Xun Research Institute in Beijing, where he cooperated with Lu Xun research experts Lin Fei and others in editing the journal LU XUN YANJIU [Lu Xun research] He and Lin Fei jointly wrote "Biography of Lu Xun."

Over the past few years, in addition to time and again publishing works on literature and art theory, Li Zaifu has also written some prose and prose poems and published his collections of prose and prose poems such as "Search in Deep Sea" and "Sun, Land, and Man." In the former collection, the writer expresses his deep love for the motherland, people, and homeland and his persistent pursuit of truth in his unique, fine, and smooth style. In the latter collection, the writer thinks things over "in front of the Great Wall and Tiananmen" and sings praise of the sun, land, and man with warm reason, deep philosophy, and poetic beauty. Not long ago, his collection of prose "Clean and White Rush" was published in Hong Kong.

Liu Zaifu has concentrated on carrying out research into Lu Xun and literature and art theory, been brave in carrying out expoloration, and had quite a few creative opinions. In the wave of rejuvenating CPC cadres in 1984, Li Zaifu was promoted to the post of director of the Institute of Literature of the Academy of Social Sciences of China. However, Liu is keen in academic research and is not interested in official posts; therefore, he is not interested in "gaining power" as many cadres on the mainland do. He delayed taking office after he was appointed director of the Institute of Literature and hid at home for 3 months to concentrate on his theoretical research. Recently, he was often invited by Beijing University and other institutes of higher education to give academic lectures, which were well received with the lecture halls packed with people who even filled the hallways.

After Liu Zaifu was appointed director of the Institute of Literature of the Academy of Social Sciences of China, he clearly put forth his principle in doing his job, which is also the theoretical principle to which he has always adhered. This principle is: "Academic freedom, dignity, virtues, and personality." This principle has brought a free, fresh, and brisk atmosphere of research to the institute, but it was condemned by some dogmatists and some people with rigid minds.

Not long ago, some people recommended Liu Zaifu for the post of vice director of the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee, sources said. But this was not merely a simple matter of "appointing younger and better educated cadres." On the other hand, Liu himself had little interest in the job and he wishes to do academic research work, therefore, this has not become a fact.

Liu Zaifu has not only personally made new probes into literature and art theory and put forth some new opinions, but he has also continued to put forward proposals and opinions on the principles, policies, and methods of cultural and theoretical research. At the fourth session of the Sixth CPPCC National Committee last month, he put forward an "8-point proposal on cultural matters," in which he vigorously advocates creating a cultural atmosphere and environment that is in harmony with the modernization and holds that leaders should not be satisfied with acting merely as "sentries" or referees," but should also act as "builders."

Important CPC official Hu Qili appreciated his opinions. A few days after the CPPCC session closed, Hu Qili pointed out at a get-together of cultural circles in Shanghai that it was necessary to create a united and harmonious atmosphere of mutual trust and understanding in our academic circles.

However, this is a very complicated issue. Obviously, Liu Zaifu had his object in view in putting forth his opinions, which were aimed at countering some "unhealthy practice" in the cultural circles and also hurt the feeling of some senior cultural officials who had not yet cleared "leftist" poison from their minds. This could not help but give rise to some trouble.

This being the case, the publication of Chen Yong's long article by HONGQI to criticize Liu Zaifu has afforded much food for thought.

Originally, academic debates and theoretical discussions are natural and normal. Furthermore, there are still forbidden areas today in the academic circles on the mainland. Therefore, Liu Zaifu's courage in carrying out research and blazing new trails is indeed rare and commendable and should not be condemned. Although Chen Yong suffered from criticism and repudiation in the early 1950's, he does not have much fame in the cultural circles on the mainland. However, this does not hinder him from writing things that criticize others. What is worth noting is:

As a responsible person of the Policy Research Office of the secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, he should be very clear about the CPC's policies on academic research. Therefore, in his article, he should not use force to compel people to submit, brand people with labels; or easily regard Liu Zaifu's viewpooints as negating Marxist viewpoints and methods and being incompatible with dialectical and historical materialism, saying..."This matter is vital to the destiny of Marxism in China and to the destiny of socialist literature and art in China." How can such a threatening conclusion convince people? No wonder, when Chen's article was published, some people in Beijing and Hong Kong who were concerned with China issues thought there was a flavor in this article of the articles carried by the "two newspapers and one journal" during the "Cultural Revolution."

What is even more difficult to understand is that according to reliable sources, after Chen Yong's article was published, some important officials of the literture and art circles specially arranged a "get-together" in order to rouse people to criticize Liu, but few people spoke at the get-together.

Judging by the above alone, we can see some of the "implications." When we link this with the fact that some people advocate the reform and some oppose it, we will realize that there is some reason for this. Let future development prove this.

PRC SCIENTISTS DISCUSSES NUCLEAR, WEAPONS DEVELOPMENT

HK100616 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 10 May 86 p 1

[Special dispatch from corresponent Kung Shuangyin: "Qian Xuesen Talks on Developing Nuclear Power"]

[Text] Newly elected CPPCC Vice Chairman and well-known scientist Qian Xuesen said today that the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant in the Soviet Union would not affect China's development of nuclear power. He said that the development of nuclear energy is a firm principle of China. Qian Xuesen made these statements this afternoon when answering questions raised by foreign correspondents assigned to Beijing at a meeting held by the All-China Journalists' Association.

When asked how China was affected by the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant in the Soviet Union, Qian Xuesen said: People all over the world are very concerned about nuclear power plants. Whenever there is an accident, people are inclined to add some emotional factors into their consideration. We shall develop nuclear power with caution and we shall carefully incorporate the experiences of all countries in the world in this respect. In other words, we must collect the data on different situations for scientific analysis before making our decisions.

On the acitivites of protests against nuclear tests in Xinjiang, which took place in Beijing several months ago, Qian Xuesen said: China pays close attention to the impact of nuclear tests on people living in surrounding areas. As far as I know, in the development of our nuclear industry in the past 30 years, th casualties caused by the tests have been very, very minimal. The people understand when we tell them this fact.

On the visit of Chief of Staff Yang Dezhi to the United States and his aim of buying advanced military technology from the West, Qian Xuesen said: In the area of national defense, China first relies on its strength. Under no circumstances should China arm its forces by depending on imported weapons. However, China is now implementing the policy of opening up to the outside, and we have to learn from the people of the world. We have to use the advanced technology that we have learned so we can produce things of our own.

As for the import of military technology, it is not a matter of wishful thinking. This is a very painstaking issue for Chief of Staff Yang. It depends on the other country. He also said: The most arduous task is that we must accomplish the modernization of national defense. On this issue, we must always bear in mind that we still have a relatively strong technological force. In the late 1950's, our country decided to develop and master the technology of atomic bombs, hydrogen bombs, missiles, and satellites. All these were high technology at that time and who helped us? Nobody! We just started from scratch. It was just by starting from that zero base that China's technological personnel mastered these types of high technology. Therefore, China's technological personnel are full of confidence. They can fulfill all tasks no matter how arduous they are. He added: I do not mean that we should not import advanced technology. what I mean is that if you do not sell, we shall work on our own. This is called acting independently and taking initiative in one's own hands, as well as self-reliance.

WANG GUANGMEI DESCRIBES HER PRESENT LIFE

HK120917 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 12 May 86 p 7

["People's Diary" column: "Madam Wang Comes Out of Hiding"]

[Text] After a long absence, Madam Wang Guangmei made an impressive public appearance at the fourth meeting of the Sixth National People's Congress. Better known to the outside world as the wife of the late Chairman of State, Liu Shaoqi, Madam Wang is a permanent member of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference.

Neither time nor sorrow has left many marks on the 64-year-old widow. her figure remains trim, well-proportioned -- as it was 30 years ago. Tall, graceful, she cut a charming figure in a deep blue western suit. She remained high spirited, pealing with laughter as members of the conference gathered round to greet her.

In her seclusion, she has been working on the memoirs of her husband, pouring over records and notes left by him. It is in part reliving the pains of the decade-long cultural revolution during which he became a "non-person" and the whole family suffered great tribulations. But this is far outweighted by the greater happiness from her children's devotion and achievements today. Madam Wang's three daughters are now studying abroad, two working on their Masters, the third on her doctorate. One has already collected two Masters degrees and plans to return home soon to work. Her son, a university graduate, too, is working in a village, in another part of the country. Madam Wang is regularly visited by her eldest daugher who works in Beijing, a daughter-in-law and a grandson who is at a university in the capital. Madam Wang has been living with an aunt who she says has been like a sister to her. Said Madam Wang: "I have a nice family. Some of my children have set their minds on working for the people; others are studying hard, preparing themselves for the tasks of our four modernizations. They tell me they are doing it for the motherland and living up to my expectations. And that pushes me on to improving myself, too."

Four year ago, Madam Wang resigned from her job with the Chinese Academy of Social Science to give more time to welfare work. This keeps her busy writing letters, making phone calls, interviewing people and espousing the causes of old comrades. These old comrades need assistance, advice and simply need someone to talk to when in trouble. And they have been very impressed by her. Of this, she said: "I like talking to them. They leave me a feeling of affection. Living with the masses makes me feel the deep concern they have shown to Shaoqi and the sincere encourgement they have given me."

But now and again she has to leave welfare work aside to continue with her work on the memoirs.

Most days, Madam Wang thumbs through notes and records. Or sketching the biography. Her life is busy, but fruitful and colourful. She retains an interest in music and exercises without fail. Every night she takes a stroll and listens to music before going to bed. She is an avid swimmer. Even the cold winter does not stop her swimming — indoors, of course. With a twinkle in her eye, she says: "I've swum the Yangtze River, too."

PRC INCREASES CONTACTS WITH TAIWAN DISSIDENTS

HK120905 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 12 May 86 p 7

["China Horizons" column by Yau Shing-mu: "Contacts With Dissidents Established -- Reunification Moves"]

[Text] China has adopted a new strategy towards reunification with Taiwan, working hard to win over those opposed to the ruling Kuomintang on the fortress island. The Vice President of the All-China Federation of Taiwan Compatriots, Mr Zheng Jian, recently told THE STANDARD in Beijing that the Chinese government is now soliciting support from Taiwanese dissidents. Mr Zheng, who is also a deputy to the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, said their contacts with the dissidents are mainly made overseas, in the United States and other places where mainlanders and Taiwanese mix freely.

This is a departure from the past practice when all appeals for reunification were directed at the ruling party. Beijing used to view these dissidents with scepticism. Sometimes opposition to the KMT was regarded as people fighting for independence which Beijing does not tolerate. "We realise the independence advocates are only a minority. Not every member of the political opposition identifies with an independent Taiwan. Besides, a large number of people, especially workers and farmers, long to see a unified China," Mr Zheng said. Last month, a Taiwanese, Mr Zhang Chunlan, a former representative of Kuomintang's party Congress, who defected to settle on the mainland, criticised the Chinese government for its misconceptions of conditions in Taiwan. He said many Taiwanese would not want the dictatorail KMT rule to continue after re-union.

Meanwhile, Beijing's new appeal is to guarantee Taiwanese, after reunification under the banner of "one country, two systems," more democratic rights than ever, Mr Zheng Jian said. The idea was put out early this year when XINHUA NEWS AGENCY, in its new year commentary, suggested that Taiwan's efforts towards "democarcy and prosperity" were compatible with re-unification. It urged all Taiwanese to work hard towards this "great cause." Mr Zhang also pointed out that a highly autonomous Special Administrative Region to be installed in Hong Kong after 1997 would set the example for Taiwan. If the experiment of "one country, two systems" worked in Hong Kong, it believed the internal pressure on the island would mount up, forcing the KMT to deal with the Communists, especially now when the United States was more relaxed about China. Mr Zhang said Beijing was now desperate about re-unification as it was one of the three national objectives to be accomplished by the end of the 1980s.

Taiwan's current economic slowdown was an opportune time for this appeal to gain ground, he said. He said that in the past the KMT had used its economic achievements to convince its people of its superiority. But now economic reforms are changing the mainland and offering an attractive market to Taiwan's businessmen. Beijing is also strengthening its diplomatic ties with other countries and securing its international position. This also meant that Taiwan's links with the rest of the world were being stripped. With these new developments, a new unit has been set up in the Beijing Foreign Ministry to deal exclusively with Taiwan affairs.

FOREIGN MINISTRY SPOKESMAN HOLDS WEEKLY BRIEFING

OW140936 Beijing XINHUA in English 0933 GMT 14 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 14 (XINHUA) -- A Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman today said the allegation about China providing weapons to the Nicaraguan anti-government forces "is a sheer fabrication." The spokesman made this comment at the weekly news briefing here this afternoon.

In response to a question about Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian's visit to Eastern European countries, the spokesman said that Wu's visit to the Democratic Republic of Germany and Hungary is aimed at further developing friendly relations between China and the two countries and enhancing friendship between these peoples. Wu now is on a tour of nine European countries of Belgium, Denmark, Democratic Germany, Finland, Hungary, Ireland, Luxembourg, Norway and Sweden.

Indian Protest 'Unjustifiable'

OW140756 Beijing XINHUA in English 0750 GMT 14 May 86

["China Refutes India's Protest" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, May 14 (XINHUA) -- India's protest against China on the opening of the Khunjerab Pass to the personnel of the third countries by China and Pakistan is utterly unjustifiable and has been resolutely rejected by the Chinese side. The Foreign Ministry spokesman made this statement when asked to confirm the matter at a weekly press briefing here this afternoon. He noted that the Chinese and the Pakistan Governments have decided to formally open the Khunjerab Pass to the nationals of the third countries beginning from May 1. "It is entirely the normal affairs between China and Pakistan, the two sovereign states with common borders, in which no other country has the right to interfere," he said. The Chinese side, he added, has stated time and again that this does not concern the ownership of the disputed Kashmir between India and Pakistan.

Delegation to WNGA on Africa

OW140824 Beijing XINHUA in English 0814 GMT 14 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 14 (XINHUA) -- A Chinese delegation will attend the special session of the General Assembly of the United Nations on the critical economic situation in Africa to be convened in New York from May 27 to 31. This was announced by a Foreign Ministry spokesman at a weekly news briefing here this afternoon. The spokesman said that Minister of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fisheries He Kang will head the delegation with Vice-Foreign Minister Qi Huaiyuan as his deputy.

The special session is to be convened in accordance with the resolution adopted by the 40th session of the U.N. General Assembly. It will be the first U.N. special session devoted to the economic issue of one continent. This session will make an overall review of the questions confronted by Africa in its economic recovery and its long and mid-term development, the spokesman said.

Cape Verdian Premier To Visit

OW140800 Beijing XINHUA in English 0757 GMT 14 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 14 (XINHUA) -- Pedro Pires, prime minister of the Republic of Cape Verde, and his wife will pay an official visit to China from May 27 to June 3 as guests of Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang. This was announced by a Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman at the weekly briefing here this afternoon. This is Prime Minister Pires's first visit to China since he assumed office in 1975.

ZHAO ZIYANG ASKS ADB TO ADD CHINA TO BOARD

OW131428 Beijing XINHUA in English 1418 GMT 13 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 13 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang today expressed the hope that the Asian Development Bank would add China to its board in view of its size and role in the Asia-Pacific region. He told a visiting ADB delegation, led by its president, Masao Fujioka that China wished this issue to be soived as early as possible. Fujioka said he would strive to win a seat for China on the bank's board.

Zhao thanked him and his colleagues for their effort to make China a member of ADB. He said: "China is boosting its economic development by introducing foreign funds and technology. Our participation in the ADB has opened a new channel for achieving our objectives." China attended the ADB annual meeting in Manila last month for the first time. Today, Zhao invited the ADB to hold its annual meeting in China in the near future. Zhao told the delegation that there was great potential for economic development in the region. As members of the ADB included both developing and developed countries from inside and outside the region, the bank could play a strong role in promoting South-South and South-North co-operation. He said China was keen to contribute to the aim of ADB and economic development and prosperity of the Asia-Pacific region. The ADB president said he had agreed with Chen Muhua, state councillor and governor of the People's Bank of China, that a senior ABD delegation would be sent to China this year to discuss concrete matters concerning cooperation between the two sides.

DEVELOPING COUNTRIES' VIEW OF TOKYO SUMMIT NOTED

HK091240 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 8 May 86 p 6

["Jottings" by Jiao Ri: "Hollow 'Magnificent Future'"]

[Text] The Tokyo 7-nation summit has issued a political statement called "Looking Forward to a More Magnificent Future." The statement pointed out: In the increasingly mutually-dependent world of today, without the stability and prosperity of developing countries "it would be impossible for these countries of ours to enjoy lasting stability and prosperity." The statement also pledged to let developing countries play their role in realizing a "magnificent future." This remark sounds perfectly reasonable.

Meanwhile, attended by the representatives of 32 countries, the South-South conference was held in Kuala Lumpur. According to the YOMIRUI SHIMBUN of Japan, some representatives' "dissatisfaction over the Tokyo summit of developed countries exploded simultaneously" at the meeting. People called on the Tokyo summit not only to think about the developed countries but also to "take into consideration the (economic) demands of developing countries."

For example, the developed countries should help solve various problems, such as the falling prices and sluggish sales of primary products, the export slump of developing countries, and their heavy foreign debts.

Indeed, the developing countries are confronted with various difficulties. The difficult problems mentioned above weigh on them so heavily that they are gasping for breath. And this state of affairs has also been brought about by certain policies of developed countries. The slightly better days that some developed countries are economically enjoying now are, to a considerable extent, built on the hardships of developing countries. The Tokyo 7-nation summit did not adopt practical measures to solve these specific problems but merely uttered hollow, nice words. What is the use of this? No wonder that the developing countries simultaneously expressed their dissatisfaction.

The statement of the Tokyo summit put it correctly: Today, the world's countries are increasingly dependent on one another. If the developing countries get poorer, not only will it be impossible for them to have a "more magnificent future" but the "magnificent future" of the developed countries will perhaps be problematic.

SOVIET-AMERICAN RELATIONS AGAIN DETERIORATE

OW070053 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0821 GMT 2 May 86

[Roundup by XINHUA reporter Cheng Shouheng: "Soviet-American Relations Cool Down Again"]

[Text] Beijing, 2 May (XINHUA) -- Following a series of setbacks to improvements in Soviet-American relations since this spring, tension has been on the rise once more. This is an inauspicious signal for the "International Peace Year" in 1986.

Bilateral relations had relaxed somewhat following the Soviet-American summit meeting in Geneva last November. People were looking forward to some practical deeds by the two superpowers in the New Year to further improve their bilateral relations and ameliorate the entire international situation. However, people have become increasingly disheartened as events have unfolded over the past 4 months, particularly over the past month and more.

Soviet leader Gorbachev issued a statement on 15 January this year, proposing a total destruction of all nuclear weapons. He also announced that the Soviet Union would unilaterally extend its moratorium on nuclear testing to the end of March, hoping for a positive response by the United States. The United States only gave an official reply 2 days prior to the opening of the 17th CPSU National Congress, after a lapse of more than a month. Gorbachev remark: Judging from the letter from President Reagan, "we can hardly see that the American leader is seriously preparing to solve the fundamental issue of eliminating nuclear threat." That is to say, the United States has turned down the Soviet proposal.

By mid-March, Gorbachev again announced that the Soviet Union would continue to stick to its moratorium on nuclear testing should no new nuclear detonations be conducted by the United States, after the Soviet moratorium expired at the end of March. He also proposed to immediately set about probing for a nuclear test ban treaty in the form of international law. By the end of March, he again expressed his willingness to hold talks immediately with Reagan in any European capital on banning nuclear testing. All these proposals were swiftly rejected by the U.S. side. What is more, the United States held three nuclear tests successively in March and April. The United States officially maintained that further U.S. nuclear tests are "necessary" in view of the "rapid progress gained by the Soviet Union." Under such circumstances, the Soviet Union asserted in April that it would not be obliged to halt nuclear testing unilaterally, and that nuclear tests would resume at any time.

About the same time, the U.S. Administration officially demanded that the Soviet Union cut its UN staff by 40 percent. Intrusion into the Black Sea waters off Soviet Crimea by U.S. warships evoked Soviet protests.

A spate of U.S. raids on Libya has generated serious adverse effects on American-Soviet relations. Libya has maintained close, friendly relations with the Soviet Union. With assistance from Soviet advisers, it has deployed Soviet air defense missiles. Notwithstanding the presence of Soviet advisers, the U.S. air raids were mostly targeted at the missile bases. Consequently, the Soviet Union no only strongly protested the U.S. raid, but also took corresponding countermeasures. It called off the Soviet-American foreign ministerial meeting originally scheduled for the coming May. It opened an "air corridor" to Libya. Three Soviet high-speed corvettes were also found cruising off Libya at this time. All this has brought about renewed tension in Soviet- American relations. In a speech on 15 April, Gorbachev pointed out that the U.S. encroachment in Libya "is a deliberate attempt by the United States to aggravate Soviet-American relations."

In the wake of the aforementioned series of events, the Soviet-American summit scheduled for this year also ran into trouble. Gorbachev told reporters on 20 April: "If the U.S. goes on acting as it is today, trying to poison the atmosphere, this will throw a shadow over any future meeting." U.S. Secretary of State Schultz said: The Soviet Union's cancellation of the foreign ministerial meeting planned for May "has undoubtedly cast a shadow on this year's American-Soviet summit talks." Reagan alleged that if Gorbachev does not come to meet him in the United States this year, he is not going to Moscow next year. Moreover, the Soviet Union has consistently insisted that any future summit talks should aim at reaching concrete agreements on the reduction of nuclear weapons and on banning nuclear testing. The United States, on the other hand, insisted that summit talks must be linked to the issue of regional conflicts. At the same time, both sides oppose each other's stance.

The prospects for Soviet-American relations are highly unpredictable. Rivalries and contention between the two countries will not only continue, but are likely to be further intensified. Nevertheless, neither side is yet willing to break off dialogue outright. Conflict of interests in many areas notwithstanding, both the Soviet Union and the United States have retained bargaining room, and are making every effort to avoid a head-on collision. In his reply to the Algerian weekly REVOLUTION AFRICAINE, Gorbachev remarked that the current Soviet-American relations "are at a stage of unease. However, we have not lost hope for relations...."

BEIJING REVIEW ON U.S.-SOVIET RIVALRY IN PACIFIC

OW050855 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English 5 May 86 pp 10, 11

[By Xie Wenqing]

[Text] Now that their European military stalemate is a fact, the Soviet Union and the United States are both determined to create a new military hegemony in the Asia-Pacific region.

Taking the United States as its chief antagonist, the Soviet Union seeks to expand its influence in the region by building up its military strength. It aims at breaking up U.S. containment of the area in order to assure its sea traffic through the Pacific Ocean to the Indian Ocean. The Soviets hope to improve their status in the rivalry by stepping up communications between their eastern and western wings.

The United States has designated the Far East, Western Europe and the Middle East as its three major strategic regions. Believing the Pacific to be the best region from which to confront the Soviet Union, the Reagan administration is reconsidering its military designs in the West Pacific. It is stepping up plans to further its military co-operation with Japan and South Korea in an effort to retain its military advantages in the region and contain the Soviets to their own waters. For years, the two countries have continued to set up new command facilities, increased military forces, consolidated overseas military bases and furthered co-operation with allies in the Pacific region.

The Soviet Union has accomplished a Far East Theatre command in Ulan-Ude, which takes charges of controlling and coordinating its military operations of the Far East, Trans-Baykal region (including troops staged in Mongolia), western Siberia and the central Asian military regions as well as the Pacific Fleet.

The United States established a command centre in Japan in 1985 which has greatly improved the control and command of U.S. troops in Japan and their coordination with the Japanese troops.

The Soviet Far East theatre command controls some 50 divisions, plus one staged on the four islands north of Japan. The equipment for those troops has been improved remarkably, having brought in T-72 tanks, updated armoured vehicles and guns. A third generation of fighter planes, including MiG-23, MiG-25, MiG-27 and Su-15, Su-17 and Su-24, have been put into service. MiG-31 fighters were also deployed. Even more significant is the expansion of Soviet naval forces in the region. Its Pacific Fleet has grown to include 600 vessels. With two aircraft carriers, it has a total tonnage of 1.6 million.

A closer look at U.S. military forces in the region reveals that they have been increased by 7,000 troops since 1984, standing at 195,500 today, or 33.1 percent of its total overseas forces. The ground forces are being equipped with the most modern weapons of the 1980s, including M-1 tanks, M-2 and M-3 armoured vehicles, multi-pipe rocket guns, "Apache" helicopters and "Patriot" anti-air missiles. The tactical air forces are now bringing in new F-15, F-16 and A-10 fighters, and two F-16 fighter groups are scheduled to be deployed in Japan by July 1987.

Nuclear forces of the two superpowers have been skyrocketing in the region. Since 1977, the Soviet Union has deployed 171 SS-20 medium-range missiles and more than 100 "Backfire" bombers. The United States continues to renovate its fighters based along the western Pacific front and on aircraft carriers capable of supporting nuclear arms.

It has also equipped all its nuclear powered-submarines and warships with "Hatchet" cruise missiles. In addition, all the B-52 bombers have been transformed to carry short-range, air-to-earth missiles.

Meanwhile, the Soviet Union continues to expand its military facilities in Cam Ranh Bay and Danang in Vietnam and Kompong Som of Kampuchea. A permanent special detachment of the Soviets has been staged in Cam Ranh Bay, together with some long-range reconnaissance and patrol planes, as well as Tu-16 medium-range bombers and MIG-23 fighters. All these greatly improved the Soviets' control of the West Pacific and over the Strait of Malacca and Bashi Channel. At the same time, the United States is perfecting and expanding its overseas bases. Apart from consolidating the old bases, it has renovated and developed large-scale naval and air facilities in Japan, South Korea, Thailand, Saipan and Tinian islands.

In their Asia-Pacific competition, the Soviet Union is somewhat handicapped by its geographic conditions, particularly its seamouth is vulnerable to U.S. competitors based in the area. The United States, on the other hand, is too far from the Asian mainland. Therefore, both countries are scrambling for their allies' support and never stop at attempting to undermine each other's alliances. The Soviets have gripped Vietnam, handing over large amounts of military and economic aids and supporting its war against Kampuchea in return for the right of long-term use of air and naval bases in Indochina. At the moment, the Soviet Union has been engaged in active propaganda for peace to soften U.S. military cooperation with Japan, South Korea, Australia and New Zealand. The United States is working hard to build a multinational strategic alliance, further its defence partnership with Japan and South Korea, and give greater attention to developing cooperation with the Association of Southeast Asian Nations and the South Pacific Nations. It is seeking a multitiered defence to contain the Soviets' southward strategy.

RENMIN RIBAO: U.S. COUNTERS USSR IN ASIA, PACIFIC

HK110802 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 11 May 86 p 6

["Roundup" by correspondent Gui Tongchang: "Superpower Rivalry Intensifies in Asia-Pacific Region; United States Takes Positive Action To Counter Soviet Penetration"]

[Text] On the eve of his trip to Tokyo for the 7-nation Western summit, U.S. President Reagan paid a special visit to Indonesia from 29 April to 5 May, during which he met Indonesian leaders and ASEAN [Association of Southeast Asian Nations] foreign ministers. This was the first visit to Southeast Asia by an American president in more than a decade; moreover, Secretary of State Shultz also visited South Korea and the Philippines after the 7-nation summit. Apart from these two visits, Defense Secretary Weinberger visited South Korea, Japan, the Philippines, Thailand, and Australia from 1 to 12 April. He also stopped off in Indonesia on the way. These frequent trips to Asia-Pacific countries by top U.S. officials within a month or so illustrate the importance the United States attaches to this region.

The dramatic changes in the Asia-Pacific situation in recent years have aroused U.S. concern for its political, economic, and strategic interests in the region. The Soviet Union has boosted its military strength in the Far East and increased the number of SS-20 medium-range missles deployed there. Since gaining the right to use the Cam Ranh Bay base in Vietnam, the Soviet Union has continually boosted its military strength in Southeast Asia. Its naval forces have even penetrated into the South Pacific.

To counter this Soviet military expansion, the Reagan administration has formulated afresh its policy toward the Asia-Pacific region and strengthened its cooperative relationship in the political, economic, and military fields with its Asia-Pacific allies, to facilitate coordinated action to check the momentum of Soviet expansion in the region, consolidate the "security line" running from Japan to Australia via the Philippines, and develop and readjust U.S. economic and trade ties with the Asia-Pacific region.

Last year the United States gave South Korea 230 million woth of military aid, provided economic and military aid for the Philippines totalling 275 million, and gave 132 million worth of aid to Thailand, 110 million of which was for military aid. In addition, since 1980 the Asia-Pacific region has consistently been America's chief trading partner; almost one-third of U.S. trade is conducted with the region. At the same time, the growth in U.S. investment in the region has been faster than in any other region of the world. In the past 5 years, U.S. investment in the region has grown by 65 percent. In recent years, however, economic and trade contradictions and friction have intensified between the United States and the Asia-Pacific region due to the U.S. practice of trade protectionism. The main purpose of President Reagan's talks with the ASEAN foreign ministers was to explore economic issues. In reiterating that "the United States is determined to practice its concept of free markets and free trade," President Reagan was aiming precisely at easing the contradictions in economic relations between the United States and the ASEAN countries.

The Reagan administration has also paid attention to stepping up bilateral consultations with its Asia-Pacific allies in order to stabilize the situation in the region. The lack of a solution to the Cambodian problem after all this time, the political turmoil in South Korea and the Philippines, and the refusal of New Zealand to allow U.S. warships to enter its ports have caused difficulties for U.S. military deployments in the Asia-Pacific region. For this reason, the United States is vigorously seeking to coordinate its steps with ASEAN. It has expressed support for ASEAN'S stand on the Cambodia question and has worked with it in putting pressure on Vietnam to force that country to withdraw its troops from Cambodia. During his visit to South Korea, Weinberger repeatedly state that there was no similarity at all between the situation there and the Philippines during the Marcos period. In this he was seeking to calm the struggle of the South Korean masses and to stabilize the political situation there. During his visit to the Philippines, he declared that the United States would continute to support the government of Corazon Aquino and guaranteed that it would increase its economic and military aid for the country. During his Asian trip, President Reagan too reiterated the U.S. stand of support for the new Philippine Government. When he went to Australia, Weinberger talked with Australian leaders about Soviet penetration into the South Pacific and the U.S.-Australian use of advanced Australian technology for the joint production of low-level radar. All these activities will play a certain role in consolidating the U.S. strategic position in the Asia-Pacific region.

Another important step taken by the Reagan administration is to step up its military deployments in the Asia-Pacific region and strengthen military cooperation with its allies. U.S. nuclear and conventional deployments in the region have been beefed up since last year, and the number of troops stationed in the region has now reached 195,500, an increase of 7,000 over the 1984 figure. The United States has also stepped up its deployment of nuclear submarines at the Yokosuka base in Japan and has stationed a squadron of F-16's, capable of carrying nuclear weapons, at Misawa. The 7th Fleet has been equipped with Battleaxe cruise missiles. The United States has also expanded its Guam base, strengthened the installations at its Philippine bases, and hastened the construction of military bases on Saipan and Tinian in the Marianas.

In addition to this, in order to step up military cooperation with its allies, the United States has set up a "warship communciations center" at Yokosuka, making this not only the forward U.S. base in countering the Soviet Far East strategic missile bases and nuclear submarines but also the U.S. Navy's command, control, and communications pivot in the Far East. Last year, the United States supplied South Korea with a number of Tow missiles plus 133 Sting missiles equipped with advanced infrared systems. Weinberger signed a military cooperation agreement with South Korea when he visited there in April. In Southeast Asia, the United States has supplied Thailand with 40 M-48 tanks and 20 advanced F-16 fighters. The two countries have also carried out the largest military maneuvers since the end of the Vietnam war. Moreover, last August the United States decided to sell eight F-16's to Singapore. According to foreign press dispatches, the strengthening of U.S. aid in new weaponry for Thailand and Singapore shows that the United States attached still greater strategic importance to the ASEAN countries.

U.S. policy trends in the Asia-Pacific region show that the United States is now exerting itself to counter Soviet penetration in the region and preserve its strategic interests there. As U.S. and Soviet military strength in the Asia-Pacific region increases, the rivalry between them in the region will become more and more complex and sharp.

'ONLY MODEST' U.S.-USSR CHEMICAL BAN PROGRESS SEEN

OW121846 Beijing XINHUA in English 1744 GMT 12 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 12 (XINHUA) -- The United States and the Soviet Union have made only modest progress toward a chemical-weapons ban treaty and the Reagan administration is still preparing to resume chemical-arms production as planned, THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR reported today. The newspaper, quoting a senior U.S. arms control official, said that although the Soviet negotiators "came forward a little bit in a couple of areas" during the latest round of chemical-arms control talks which ended in Geneva three weeks ago, many issues remain unsolved.

One of the areas where progress was reported was commercial chemicals. The two sides reached tentative agreement on a list of some commercially available chemicals that can also be used in weapons production. Small gains were also made on the issue of dismantling chemical weapons plants. But on the question of how such destruction could be verified, the two countries remain on opposite sides of the fence, and there is very little likelihood of quick agreement when talks resume in June, the paper said.

The latest effort on the superpowers' chemical-arms control dates back to 1980 when U.S. President Ronald Reagan proposed a draft treaty. Since then talks have proceeded in the forum of the United Nations Committee on Disarmament, a body with 40 member nations that meets in Geneva. Last November, at their summit meeting in Geneva, Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev pledged to accelerate work on the issue.

The Reagan administration has argued for years that unless there is an agreement with the Soviets on banning chemical arms, the United States should modernize its aging stockpile of chemical bombs and artillery shells to counter Soviet advantage. The U.S. congress last year approved its plan to resume chemical-weapons production beginning October 1 this year. The Reagan administration also plans to ask, at a late May meeting of NATO defense ministers, the West European countries to endorse its chemical-arms plan, the report said.

YANG DEZHI VISITS AIR FORCE BASE, SAN FRANCISCO

The visitors arrived here Sunday at the invitation of the Chinese Ministry of Radio, Film and Television.

DENG LIQUN THANKS AMERICAN EXPERT FOR HELP

OW121420 Beijing XINHUA in English 1401 GMT 12 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 12 (XINHUA) -- Eleanor Bidien, and American expert who has been working in China for the past 35 years, was honored at a reception here this evening to celebrate her 65th birthday and the 35th anniversary of her coming to work in China. She has been working in XINHUA NEWS AGENCY as an English language polisher since 1951.

Deng Liqun, member of the Secretariat of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, met her before the reception began. During the meeting, Deng thanked her for her contributions to the Chinese people's socialist revolution and construction. Deng Yingchao, chairman of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, sent a basket of flowers to Eleanor Bidien on the occasion.

Guo Chaoren, deputy director-general of XINHUA, read a message of congratulations on behalf of the news agency at the reception. "Your wide range of knowledge and understanding of the situation both inside and outside China have helped our Chinese comrades understand the needs of foreign readers and improve their work accordingly," he said.

"The role you have played has far exceeded that of a foreign expert and polisher. What we have achieved toward the goal of turning XINHUA into a world news agency is inseparable from your hard work," he added.

Eleanor Bidien said in her speech that she and her Chinese colleagues had worked together in harmony because of their common goal. She said that news of China's efforts to reform the economy, to modernize, to improve the life of the people is gaining mounting attention and respect abroad. "This is the challenge of the times for all journalists in China. I hope to be with you for many years more in this important work," she added. Among those present at the party were Sol Adler and Israel Epstein, two old friends of Bidien's.

RONG YIREN MEETS U.S. BUSINESSMEN 12 MAY

OW121353 Beijing XINHUA in English 1336 GMT 12 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 12 [XINHUA) -- Rong Yiren, vice-chairman of the National People's Congress Standing Committee, met a delegation from the United Technologies Corporation (UTC) here this evening in the Great Hall of the People. The 42-member delegation led by Harry J. Gray, chairman of UTC, and Alexander M. Haig, Jr., former U.S. secretary of state and conultant of UTC, arrived here yesterday. Rong, also chairman of the board of directors of the China International Trust and Investment Corporation, and Gray discussed areas of possible technical cooperation. After the meeting, Rong hosted a banquet in honor of the delegation. UTC, a comprehensive technological corporation, began to trade with China in 1973 in a varied form of co-production, joint ventures and technology transfer.

U.S. DECLINES TO HALT NUCLEAR TESTING

OW100330 Beijing XINHUA in English 0048 GMT 10 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 9 (XINHUA) -- The United States Thursday made it clear once again that it will not join the Soviet Union in banning nuclear tests, which Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev has called for repeatedly. "We are persuaded it would be irresponsible and unwise to enter into such an agreement at this time," said Richard Perle, assistant secretary of defense for international security policy and senior official in the Pentagon on nuclear arms policy.

Testifying before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Perle said, "Our top priority at the nuclear and space talks in Geneva has been and will continue to be to seek deep, equitable, and effectively verifiable reductions in the offensive nuclear forces of both sides." A freeze on nuclear testing, he asserted, "would derail -- not facilitate -- any prospect for real arms reductions."

Furthermore, he said, if the United States were to shift its attention to negotiating a testing freeze, "the dangers posed by Soviet force advantages and their non-compliance with existing arms control agreements would be left untouched."

"As long as the United States and our allies and friends must rely upon nuclear weapons to deter aggression, nuclear testing will continue to be required," Perle said. Therefore, he stressed, "It would be unwise for us to even discuss with the Soviets at this point a comprehensive ban on nuclear testing." Otherwise, he claimed, "We would be betraying the safety and security and survivability" of the American nuclear deterrent.

HEILONGJIANG PROMOTES PRC-SOVIET BORDER TRADE

OW120951 Beijing in Russian to the USSR 1800 GMT 11 May 86

[Text] In Heilongjiang Province there is the small picturesque border town of Suifen He, one of the major centers of Chinese-Soviet trade. In this town, two major railway lines converge, the Harbin-Suifen He and the great Trans Siberian line. Everyday, thousands of tons of cargo pass through this town in both directions. We arrived in this small mountain town early in spring. Even while still on the platform we noticed the fast tempo of life. Both Chinese and Soviet rolling stock stops at the huge loading dock, which is capable of taking 200 carriages at a time. Here the goods are received and examined. A series of gigantic cranes unload the goods from Soviet into Chinese carriages.

Opposite Suifen He, on the Soviet side, is the town of (Grabekov). Only 15 kilometers separate these towns. In Heilongjiang Province the Soviet-Chinese border stretches for over 1,000 kilometers, but only between these two towns was a wide and narrow guage laid.

The Chinese official responsible for border trade told us that 1985 was a year of comparatively rapid growth of Chinese-Soviet border trade. Suifen He cargo traffic exceeded 18,000 carriages, or more than 940,000 tons. This equals the traffic recorded in 1985, a peak year for Chinese-Soviet trade. Moreover, the share of intergovernmental trade totaled 810,000 tons, approximately 60 percent more than in 1984.

China and the Soviet Union have good conditions for developing trade. Heilongjiang Province and the Soviet far east can make use of the railway system for import as well as export. Border trade between the two countries began a long time ago. Both countries' exports are essential to them, and therefore the broadening of trade contacts at the border is consistent with their interests. Currently the Soviet Union and China rely only on barter in their border trade. The volume of imports and exports for both countries in terms of value is generally the same. China, in the main, sells grain and oil to the Soviet Union. Specifically soybean and corn account for five-sixths of the total Chinese exports.

In the Soviet Union, the cheap and good cotton and manufactured goods from China are in great demand. In the Soviet far east Chinese thermos flasks and pocket flashlights are considered to be good presents.

China imports from the Soviet Union primarily timber and cement. Last year more than 8,900 carriages passed through Suifen He from the Soviet Union. Of these, more than 8,200 carried timber and cement. Besides, China imports from the Soviet Union washing machines, motorcycles, refigerators, electrical appliances, and fish products.

The industrial reforms carried out in China in the past years have helped make Chinese-Soviet border trade prosper. The Chinese government has gradually given provinces and towns the right to independently broaden foreign trade. At present, local trade is playing an increasingly important role in trade with the Soviet Union. Since 1983, when Heilongjiang renewed its border trade with the Soviet Union, the volume of trade has grown from year to year. In 1985 it reached 30 million Swiss francs, that is, 66.11 percent more than in 1983 and 1984.

Currently Heilongjiang is getting ready to open two more border control points, in the town of Aihui and in (Mudanjiang) Prefecture. Several other Chinese provinces and towns are also interested in trading with the Soviet Union through Heilongjiang Province. Last year Heilongjiang Province held talks with Jilin, Liaoning, and Shanghai Provinces. Hou Jie, governor of the Heilongjiang Provincial People's Government, told us that the Chinese Government had already granted permission to Heilongjiang to independently broaden trade with East European countries. Last year he signed contracts with Poland and Czechoslovakia.

SOVIET NUCLEAR POWER POLICY AFTER CHERNOBYL VIEWED

OW131540 Beijing XINHUA in English 1517 GMT 13 May 86

["News Analysis: Chernobyl Accident Casts Shadow Over Soviet Nuclear Industry (by Wang Xianju)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, May 13 (XINHUA) -- The accident at the Soviet Union's Chernobyl nuclear power station, believed to be one of the world's most serious nuclear disasters in three decades, has seriously cut Soviet energy production and is also expected to slow down the development of its nuclear industry.

Construction of the Chernobyl station, 130 kilometers north of the Ukrainian capital of Kiev, began in 1972. Its four graphite-moderated reactors were completed in 1977, 1979, 1982 and 1983, achieving a generating capacity of 4,000 megawatts by the end of 1985.

According to Soviet reports, the Chernobyl accident began with a chemical explosion in the early morning of April 26, which triggered a massive fire and damaged one of the four reactors at the station. The other three reactors were immediately shut down as a safety precaution.

The electricity generated by the Chernobyl station accounted for about half of the power produced in the Ukraine, which is now relying on neighboring republics to covee its power shortage after the accident.

Foreign experts estimate that the shutdown of the crippled Chernobyl station is costing the Soviet Union about four million U.S. dollars a day.

Unconfirmed Western reports say the Soviets have closed all the nation's 15 graphite-moderated reactors in the wake of the Chernobyl mishap. If these reports are true, losses to the country would be much greater than the four-million-dollar figure.

The nuclear industry has grown rapidly in the Soviet Union since it built the world's first experimental, 5,000-kilowatt nuclear reactor in Obninsk, southwest of Moscow, in June 1954. The country had 41 nuclear power-generating units in operation with a total capacity of 25,000 megawatts by the end of 1985. They produced about 155 billion kilowatt-hours last year, accounting for one-tenth of the country's total electricity output, and the Soviet Union was the world's third largest atomic energy producer last year after the United States and France.

It has plans to double its nuclear energy output by 1990 and triple it by the year 2000, which means that nuclear-generated electricity will make up 20 percent of the country's total power output in 1990. This ambitious plan has been set back by the Chernobyl accident, which experts say will at least slow down the progress of the Soviet nuclear industry for several years.

Two new graphite-moderated reactors were under construction at Chernobyl at the time of the accident. Their completion will raise the station's generating capacity to 6,000 megawatts, a one third increase over its present level. Now the plan has to be reviewed. The Soviet Government newspaper IZVESTIYA reported that construction of the fifth reactor at the station has stopped "for understandable reasons".

Most of the existing graphite-moderate reactors in the Soviet Union, for reasons of economy, have no containment buildings which can prevent radioactive substances from spreading in case of accidents. The Chernobyl disaster will force the Soviets to reconsider the need of building containment structures for reactors, and they will also have to improve the emergency core cooling systems at nuclear power stations. While upgrading its graphite-moderated reactors, the country will probably give greater attention to the more advanced light-water reactors.

All this demands an increase of investment in the nuclear industry and better nuclear technology, which means an additional burden on the country's sluggish economy and changes in the Kremlin's nuclear energy development plan.

However, one must not think that the Chernobyl disaster will make the Soviet leadership abandon their nuclear power program, which is a major part of Moscow's long-term strategy to meet the rising domestic demands for energy and match the West in nuclear technology.

CONTINUATION OF GUERRILLA WAR IN CAMBODIA VIEWED

OW130820 Beijing XINHUA in English 0750 GMT 13 May 86

["News Analysis: "Hit-And-Run" Guerrilla War Continues in Kampuchea (by Ma Shengrong)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Bangkok, May 13 (XINHUA) -- Now even cynical political analysts here believes that the Kampuchean resistance forces have not been crushed but made progress in their war against the Vietnamese aggressors in the interior of Kampuchea during the past dry-season. Well-informed sources here said that a salient feature in the Kampuchean war in this year's dry-season is the changing pattern of troop deployment by both the resistance forces and Vietnam. Vietnam has moved a large number of troops to the Kampuchean border areas following last year's dry season offensive, during which it had taken all the border bases of the resistance forces. Meanwhile, the three factions of the resistance forces under the coalition government have gone deep into the interior to carry out a hit-and-run guerrilla war against the Vietnamese aggressors.

A source of the resistance forces told this correspondent that the loss of the bases along the border has forced them to shift the battlefield from western Kampuchea to the central areas. "We have no choice but to continue our fight deep inside Kampuchea. It is more difficult but we enjoy the support of the Kampuchean people," he said. Military leaders of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea (CGDK) disclosed that the resistance forces had attacked six provincial cities including Siem Reap, Battambang, Kompong Thom, Kompong Speu, Takeo and Pursat. The guerrillas even moved into areas around Phnom Penh and attacked the city's international airport on two occasions, they said.

On the part of the Vietnamese, they planned to carry out several major mopping-up operations but had to abandon them later because of the widespread attacks by the resistance forces. Prince Norodom Ranarith, commander-in-chief of the Sihanoukian Nationalist Army told this correspondent that "the Vietnamese couldn't find us. When they concentrated their troops in an area we had already moved to the other places." Vietnam also tried to seal off the Kampuchean-Thai border in an attempt to cut off the supply of the resistance forces. Under its K-5 plan, barbed wire would be set up, and trenches and other fortifications would be dug along the entire border. But resistance sources believe that the Vietnamese plan would not succeed. "We are able to break through their lines even if they do succeed in sealing off the border," one of them said. Observers here note that to seal off the border was one of Vietnam's major strategies to eliminate the resistance forces. One diplomatic source said, "to station troops along the over 800-kilometer-long mountainous boundary will be a tremendous burden to the Vietnamese." "Furthermore, how about their supply of ammunition and provisions to the troops. The long distance transportation is vulnerable to guerrilla attacks by the resistance forces," he said. However, resistance sources admitted that they had a very difficult time when the border bases had been taken by the Vietnamese invaders. "We have to open new areas for our resistance war. We have to tell the local people who we are and what we are fighting for," one source of CGDK Prime Minister Son Sann's faction said. "The people are with us, we have already sent several thousand soldiers into the interior," he added.

No clashes between the CGDK factions have been reported in the past few months. When talking to reporters at the Foreign Correspondent Club in Bangkok, Khieu Samphan and representatives of the other two factions were of the opinion that unity is of paramount importance in their war against the Vietnamese aggressors. "We want to be frank that there were rifts among ourselves. But now everything goes on well," Prince Ranartith told XINHUA in a recent interview.

With the changed pattern in the Kampuchean battlefields, it is believed that the guerrilla war waged by the resistance forces is going on in wider areas in Kampuchea. The Vietnamese troops are bound to face multi-pronged attacks both at the border areas and in the interior, while the resistance forces are able to resort to more flexible tactics in the fighting. Thai military sources predict that the resistance forces would continue their hit-and-run operations in the upcoming rainy-season and the Vietnamese troops armed with heavy weaponry would have to move back to their bases. In this way, resistance forces could have more contacts with the local people and get prepared for the fighting in the next dry season, they said.

XINHUA ON VIETNAMESE VIEW OF HO CHI MINH

OW111540 Beijing XINHUA in English 1518 GMT 11 May 86

["Ho Chi Minh: A Brilliant Image of Vietnam's Past" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Vinh, Vietnam, May 11 (XINHUA) -- People here still call him Uncle Ho, a popular name that best symbolizes their past leader, father of the socialist republic. In today's Vietnam, Ho Chi Minh remains the most celebrated name. Leader of the Vietnamese national movement for nearly three decades and president of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam from 1954 to 1969, Ho was one of the prime movers of the post-war anticolonial movement in Asia and one of the most influential communist leaders of the 20th century.

As revolutionary leader, Ho Chi Minh waged one of the longest and most costly battles against the colonial powers. As a person, he showed the greatest love to his people who, he believed, had their own inalienable rights to be free and independent. Never in his life did Ho think that he would become his country's most respected figure for many years to come. His portraits are still enshrined throughout the country and his quotations cited in many publications. Each year, tens of thousands of people come to Hanoi, the capital, to visit his mausoleum. The Ba Dinh Square, where Ho Chi Minh proclaimed the resurgence of the state of Vietnam in 1955 and lay in state 14 years later, has not seen any celebrations without mentioning his name.

In his home town of Kim Lien in Nghe Tinh Province, 290 kilometers south of Hanoi, his townsmen are expecting a bumper rice harvest to commemorate their beloved former president's 96th birthday, which is next Monday.

Nguyen Hong Hoa, people's committee chairman of Kim Lien, told XINHUA he will never forget the president's 1961 home visit. President Ho, Nguyen recalled, said he did not want to preserve his house here. What Ho wanted were a united Vietnam and the success of the anti-U.S. war, the 44-year-old Nguyen added.

A museum in Kim Lien, built after Ho's death in 1969, houses many of the president's personal belongings. One can have an overall view of this revolutionary leader who had devoted his whole life to Vietnam's independence and unification. A guide said more than 200,000 people have visited the Museum since it was completed in 1970. Items on display, from Ho's well-known "anti-imperialist shoes" to his worn-out clothes, have left profound impressions on the visitors.

To his countrymen, Ho is a brilliant image of the past. His plain life, his skill of leadership, his determination to remain single until the end of foreign occupation, all combine to make him an unforgettable figure in Vietnam's history.

XINHUA REVIEWS SINO-INDIAN BOUNDARY ISSUES

OW081548 Beijing XINHUA in English 1507 GMT 8 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 9 (XINHUA) -- Following is the full text of an introduction of the Sino-Indian border issue broadcast by the Chinese News Service on May 8:

During the recent deliberations by the Indian Parliament on the 1985-1986 national defense report and the budgetary appropriations for national defense of the next fiscal year, an Indian leader asserted in a reply that Indian territory was "definitely occupied by China. A member of the Indian Parliament went so far as to call for "the liberation of the territories occuped by China." Quite a few readers who are concerned about the Sino-Indian boundary question have asked by letter: What is the Sino-Indian boundary question all about? After all who has occupied whose territories? Here we would like to give our readers a brief account of the Sino-Indian boundary question.

The Sino-Indian boundary which is about 2,000 kilometers divided into the eastern, middle and western sectors has never been formally delimited. In the long history of peaceful and friendly coexistence between the Chinese and Indian peoples, a traditional customary boundary respected by the two peoples had long taken shape on the basis of the extent of each sides' jurisdiction. Tranquillity had always prevailed in the border areas. At the turn of the last century, the Western colonialists then ruling India gradually occupied a small portion of Chinese territory across the traditional boundary in their pursuance of the "forward" policy of coveting China's Tibet. After India's independence in 1947, the Indian authorities continued with the "forward" policy and occupied large tracts of Chinese territory. As a result, an actual line of control between the two sides has taken shape on the Chinese side of the boundary.

At present, there are disputes over all the eastern, middle and western sectors of the Sino-Indian border, the eastern sector being the most disputed area. The eastern sector refers to the section of the Sino-Indian border between the tri-junction of China, India and Bhutan and the tri-junction of China, India and Burma. The disputed are comprises three parts, Monyul, Loyul and lower Tsayul. located north of the traditional customary boundary and south of the so-called "McMahon line," covering a total area of approximately 90,000 square kilometers. The inhabitants who have lived for generations in this area are either Tibetans or other nationalities closely akin to them. It is from the Monyul area that the 6th Dalai Lama of Tibet, Tsanyun Gyaltso, hailed. Since the Ming Dynasty, the Tibet local authorities of China had maintinaed administrative organs, appointed officials and exercised jurisdiction over the above three places. These areas have been part of Chinese territory since ancient times. The so-called "McMahon line" contrived single-handedly by the colonialists in 1914 is absolutely illegal and null and void, and has never been recognized by any of the successive central governments of China. For a considerable period of time after 1914, the Tibet local authorities of China had never ceased their administrative jurisdiction over Monyul, Loyul and lower Tsayul. It was towards the end of the World War II that the then colonialists began to press northwards beyond the traditional customary boundary. After its independence, Indian pushed further north until it brought under its control in 1953 all the areas along the illegal "McMahon line," in addition to taking over those parts of Chinese territory illegally occupied by the colonialists.

The middle sector refers to the section of Sino-Indian boundary west of Nepal, bordering on the Ari district of China's Tibet and the Himachal Pradesh and Uttar Pradesh of India. The disputed area covers about 2,000 square kilometers. Almost all the inhabitants in this area are Tibetans who used to live under the jurisdiction of the Tibet local authorites. The greatest part of this area was gradually occupied by India after 1954.

The western sector refers to the section of Sino-Indian boundary beginning from the Karakoram Pass in the north down to the tri-junction in the south of the Ari district of China's Tibet, Ladakh of the Indian controlled Kashmir and Himachal Pradesh of India. There should be no problem whatsoever on this sector of the boundary. However, towards the end of the 1950's, India all of a sudden made the territorial claims to China. The Aksai Chin and other areas referred to by India, totalling over 30,000 square kilometers, has always been Chinese territory under the jurisdiction of China's Xinjiang and Tibet respectively. The name Aksai Chin is the Uygur term for "China's desert of white stones." With the exception of Parigas occupied by Indian since 1956, the whole region has up to date been under China's jurisdiction and control.

The above-mentioned historical facts show that China has never occupied a single inch of Indian territory. On the contrary, over 90,000 square kilometers of Chinese territory have to this day been under India's occupation.

In spite of all this, the Chinese side, proceeding from the overall interests of peace and friendship and setting store by the traditional friendship between the Chinese and Indian peoples, has continued its efforts to bring about a peaceful settlement of this question left over from history. Since 1981, six rounds of talks have been held between Chinese and Indian officials at the vice foreign ministerial level. It is learned from reliable sources that the Chinese side has put forward a number of rational and reasonable proposals, holding that in seeking a settlement of the Sino-Indian boundary question the two sides should respect history and give consideration to the realities while taking into account the national feelings of the two peoples, and the two sides should, in a spirit of seeking truth from facts and of mutual understanding and mutual accommodation, strive for a comprehensive settlement fair and reasonable to both sides through friendly consultations. Here the key lies in the implementation of the principle of mutual understanding and mutual accommodation. Historical experience shows that a fair solution to territorial disputes can be achieved only through friendly consultations and mutual understanding and accommodation, to which there is no other alternative.

LI PENG MEETS PAKISTAN GOOD-WILL DELEGATION

[Text] Beijing, May 11 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice-Premier Li Peng met a Pakistan good-will delegation headed by Syed Qasim Shah, minister for states and frontier regions and Kashmir affairs and northern affairs here this afternoon at Zhongnanhai. The guests arrived at Khunjerab Pass on the Sino-Pakistan border on May 1st at the invitation of the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Regional People's Government to attend a ceremony to mark its opening to personnel of third countries.

Li Peng and Syed Qasim Shah shared the view that the event was important for boosting the economic and trade development as well as the exchange of visits in the border areas of the two countries. The Pakistan guests, who arrived here last night after visiting Guangzhou and Shenzhen, were honored at a banquet here this evening hosted by Ismail Amat, minister in charge of the State Nationalities Affairs Commission.

ZHAO ZIYANG, PENG ZHEN VISIT S&T EXHIBITION

OW132059 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1430 GMT 13 May 86

[By reporter Wu Ming]

[Text] Beijing, 13 May (XINHUA) -- Zhao Ziyang, Peng Zhen, and other party and state leaders arrived at the Beijing Exhibition Hall tonight to see a display of China's scientific and technical achievements during the "Sixth 5-Year Plan" period.

Zhao Ziyang, Peng Zhen, and others carefully examined the pictures, charts, captions and material objects, and listened to briefings by the attendants. They paid particular attention to application of the scientific and technical achievements. During their tour they frequently asked questions about the practical value of the scientific and technical achievements and how they had been used in practice.

In an area where food products were on display, Zhao Ziyang saw instant meals, milk powder that could be used to replace breast feeding, and other new products. He inquired as to whether these products had entered the market. At a counter where leather products were on display, Zhao Ziyang carefully examined a piece of leather made with a new technology, and touched the leather to test its smoothness. As he was leaving the counter, he cheerfully said: It is necessary to popularize this new product.

In an area where communication equipment with the use of optical fibers was on display. Zhao Ziyang took a magnifier from an attendant to carefully examine the optical fiber cable. He asked the attendant if raw materials are available in China for production of the optical fiber cable and whether or not such cable can be manufactured in large quantities.

Comrade Peng Zhen also expressed great interest in how the scientific achievements were being applied. When he reviewed the achievements in the field of color TV video signal amplification, he asked the attendant what television owners thought about this improvement. While reviewing the large strip-mining machinery, he asked: Where is such machinery being used? In an area where achievements in the field of public health were on display, Peng Zhen also asked questions on the prevention and treatment of hepatitis and cancer in China, and the effects of some medications in the treatment of such diseases.

Also attending tonight's review were Li Peng, Hao Jianxiu, Gu Mu, Zhang Jingfu, Mang Bingqian and other comrades.

Zhao Greeted by 'Baby Robot'

OW131653 Beijing XINHUA in English 1535 GMT 13 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 13 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang was greeted at a review of scientific achievements here tonight by a true offspring of the high-tech era -- a baby robot.

"I am a robot of the Number 36 Institute of the Ministry of Electronics. Welcome to the review," said the little robot as it nodded and waved flowers. Zhao and other state leaders toured the display at Beijing Exhibition Hall of more than 3,800 scientific research achievements accomplished in China over the past five years.

After thanking the baby robot, the premier inspected China's first paint-spraying robot. But tonight it sprayed only water onto flowers and trees.

Also attending the review were Peng Zhen, chairman of the National People's Congress Standing Committee, Vice-Premier Li Peng and other state leaders. They visited displays of achievements in agriculture, energy, communications, transport, building materials, electrical machinery and equipment, consumer goods, new technology and social development.

ZHAO ZIYANG URGES SUPPORT FOR REFORM IN GEZHOUBA

HK020900 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 1 May 86

[Excerpt] Zhao Ziyang, Standing Committee member of the CPC Central Committee Political Bureau and Premier of the State Council; Li Peng, member of the CPC Central Committee Political Bureau and vice premier of the State Council; and Wang Renzhong, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, warmly celebrated May Day together with model workers, workers, cadres, and the people in Yichang City. Premier Zhao said in sincere words and earnest wishes that the success of the Seventh 5-Year Plan depends on reforms.

Zhao Ziyang and other central leading comrades have just arrived in Yichang after their inspection of mountain areas on the borders of Sichuan and Hubei Provinces. Shortly after their arrival in Yichang on the eve of May Day, regardless of travel fatigue, they visited the Gezhouba project and met with workers there.

On the evening of 30 April, accompanied by Hubei Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Guan Guangfu, Premier Zhao, Vice Premier Li, and Vice Chairman Wang delightedly met with 50 model laborers, advanced workers, and representatives of technicians and teachers from Yichang prefecture, Yichang City, the Gezhouba project bureau, the Gezhouba power plant, and the Gezhouba lock gate. Premier Zhao said enthusiastically:

[Begin recording] We have fulfilled the Sixth 5-Year Plan. On the whole, the Sixth 5-Year Plan has been executed successfully. There are many reasons for its successful execution, the main one being economic reforms. Will the Seventh 5-Year Plan be executed equally or more successfully? The key lies in reforms. The success or failure of reforms will have a bearing not only on the Seventh 5-Year Plan, but also in the Eighth 5-Year Plan, the Ninth 5-Year Plan and the next century. That is why we say the Seventh 5-year Plan is an essential period in our reforms. Reforms will make the economy flourish and the workers, peasants, intellectuals, and all other people in the country more prosperous. However, reforms are fairly complicated, and we must be ready to meet with difficulties, temporary difficulties of course. Only with the support from the workers, peasants and the broad masses, will our reforms achieve success. In extending holiday greetings to you, I hope that you will support the reforms. [end recording]

Vice Premier Li Peng and Vice Chairman Wang Renzhong also spoke at the meeting.

ZHANG AIPING INSPECTS NUCLEAR POWER STATION

HK140510 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1421 GMT 13 May 86

[Text] Beijing, 13 May (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Since the leakage accident at the Soviet Chernobyl nuclear power station, China has paid even closer attention to safety and quality in building its nuclear power stations.

According to a report by the central television station here, Zhang Aiping, a PRC State Councillor and deputy secretary-general to the CPC Central Military Commission, made a special inspection tour of Zhejiang's Qinshan nuclear power station on the 9th and 10th.

The Qinshan station is the first nuclear power station that China has designed and built on its own.

Zhang Aiping emphatically pointed out that in building the Qinshan nuclear power station, we must adhere to the principle of putting safety and quality first and grasp the work related to safety and quality in an all-round manner in all links including the design, equipment manufacture, the construction, the debugging, and the trial operation and thus ensure that the station is completed smoothly and is of benefit to the human race.

Relevant officials of the Commission of Science, Technology and Industry for National Defense, the Ministry of Nuclear Industry, and the State Nuclear Safety Administration accompanied Zhang Aiping in inspecting the station, the sources said.

LI XIANNIAN MEETS WITH TIANJIN WORKERS 30 APR

SK140510 Tianjin TIANJIN RIBAO in Chinese 1 May 86 p 1

[Excerpt] Li Xiannian, Standing Committee member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and president of the PRC; Hao Jianxiu, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee; Lu Zhengcao, vice chairman of the National CPPCC Committee; and some representatives of the working people from all circles throughout Tianjin Municipality happily gathered under the same roof to celebrate the "1 May" International Labor Day on the evening of 30 April.

The cadres' club was decorated with lanterns, colored ribbons, and red flags of the municipal CPC committee and the municipal government. Central leading comrades, including Li Xiannian, Hao Jianxiu, and Lu Zhengcao, came to the reception hall of the cadres' club, and cordially met with the representatives of model workers of different levels, advanced figures, and working people from all circles throughout the municipality. Central leading comrades, including Li Xiannian, shook hands with the model workers one after another, and extended festive greetings to them. President Li said: Thank you for your contributions, and I wish all of you smooth progress in your work and hope that you make contributions to the four modernizations.

While Mayor Li Ruihuan introduced Gao Chunling, a cleaning worker of the public rest rooms under the Hebei District Environmental Sanitation Bureau, to President Li, President Li gladly had a photo taken with her by holding her hand.

Also attending the meeting were leaders of the municipality and responsible persons of the Tianjin Garrison District, including Nie Bichu, Zhang Zaiwang, Guo Chunyuan, Chen Bing, Zheng Guozhong, and Lan Baojing.

After the meeting, central leading comrades, including Li Xiannian, attended the municipal soiree to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the "1 May" International Labor Day. Together with the representatives of the working people from all circles of the municipality, the central leading comrades watched the literary and art performances given by the Tianjin municipal opera troupe, the Tianjin municipal youth opera troupe, and the Baihua opera troupe of Tianjin Municipality's Hebei Opera Institution.

THEORISTS URGED TO TACKLE 'FORBIDDEN ZONES'

HK131301 Shanghai SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO in Chinese 21 Apr 86

[Commentary: "An Important Addition"]

[Text] Before the "Report on the Seventh 5-Year Plan" was finally approved at the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC, the deputies made eight major amendments after hot debate during the panel discussions. The major amendments were released to the press. One of them reads: "In carrying out research in philosophy and social sciences, particularly in economic theories, it is imperative to integrate theory with practice and to apply the basic theories of Marxism in exploring and solving major problems that have cropped up in the reforms and in construction, so as to enrich and develop Marxism."

This is a very important addition to the report. It points out precisely the drawbacks in our current theoretical research and reflects the anxious wishes of all our theoretical workers.

Everybody agrees with the principle of integrating theory with practice and no one opposes the principle that theory should anticipate objective reality so as to guide it. However, the present state of affairs in theoretical work is not satisfactory. Our theoretical workers are not good at, nor bold in, summarizing new problems that have cropped up in the reforms and in construction. Nor they can display their creative spirit to make breakthroughs in theoretical work.

One of the reasons attributed to such a situation is that our theoretical workers dare not come up with solutions to new problems that have not been expounded by classical works and explore new possibilities in theoretial aspects according to actual conditions. At present our economic reform and construction has anticipated our theoretical research. It is imperative for our theoretial workers to boldly explore and study a number of questions, such as the question of the socialist commodity economy; the question concerning the existence of various forms of ownership and management in socialist society; the question concerning the nature of an enterprise after it has become a relatively independent economic entity and a socialist commodity producer which has the power of operation and is responsible for its own profit and loss; and in particular, the important issue of our current economic reform which is seen as the second revolution in our country. Furthermore, there are too many fetters and forbidden zones for our theoretical workers. They must be allowed to discuss and analyze the concepts of freedom, equality, universal love, human rights and humanitarianism without hesitation. We should not think that socialist society does not need these things just because they are "patents" of capitalist society. If so, does not socialist society have nothing but dictatorship and struggle? This is not the fact in any way, nor is it the original idea of socialism. Why do we not dare to talk about them? Why do we not dare to make a study of them in a realistic way? As a matter of fact, we must display the undaunted spirit of thoroughgoing materialists and pluck up courage to blaze new trails in theoretical work. Otherwise, we will not be able to break through the fetters and forbidden zones to enrich and develop Marxism.

Another reason is that there is no airy freedom in academic research. Just as the economic reform we are now conducting is a great undertaking never before achieved by our predecessors. In carrying it out, we have no ready-made formula to follow. It is therefore impossible for us to work out a perfect plan, so we have to gradually improve it in the course of exploration. This is also the case in theoretical research.

It is impossible for us to devise a perfect once for all theoretical system. It is impossible for an article or a book to be all-embracing, and it is impossible that every sentence is correct and that every article is the pinnacle of perfection. Therefore, there is a need of to make concerted efforts to explore new possibilities. However, discussion should be made on an unbiased basis and on an equal footing, and they should not be made in a way that garbles statements but should be made realistically and in an all-round way. This is very important. Only when there is adequate freedom and there is a lively climate of unity and harmony for academic research, will a new, flourishing situation full of vitality appear in theoretical research. Of course, it is not easy to create such a situation. Some people who are used to longstanding practices cannot get used to discussions on the questions of freedom and equality. They can hardly accept new theses which go beyond "theoretical confinement" or their conventional ideas, so much so that they blur the clear distinction between "freedom" and "liberalization," and object to boldly exploring new possibilities in the theoretical sphere. Some people are not magnanimous and tolerant enough. They cannot exchange views calmly with those having different viewpoints but make unwarranted charges against them because of their narrow-mindedness. This is unavoidable and it will take time to change such a situation.

The discussions held 8 years ago on the principle that practice is the sole criterion of truth, entailed emancipation of minds and the task of setting wrongs right, and played what may be called a historical role. If this is so, then the theoretical circles of our country are now facing a new historical task. Our current reform must be coordinated with the theoretical research of the social sciences. Otherwise, the reform can hardly make further progress and the results we have achieved in this respect will not be lasting. Theoretical research must break with the regulations and restrictions of scholasticism and embark on studies of major practical problems from the high plane of theory. In particular, we must theoretically expound that the line principles and policies adopted by the party since the 3rd Plenary Session of its 11th Central Committee conform to the basic tenets of Marxism and the laws of social development, and, at the same time, we must explain the reform measures we are going to adopt so that people of all circles can be mentally prepared. To sum up, we must emancipate our minds more and apply the basic tenets of Marxism to devise solutions to major issues arising in practice, so as to enrich and develop marxism.

Deputies to the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC made a number of valuable suggestions for the improvement of theoretical research and finally amendments were made to the "report." This is a vivid reflection of socialist democracy. The "report" is regarded as a decree. If it can be carried out resolutely, then our theoretical circles will be full of promise. A climate of boldly exploring new possibilities and plunging into academic discussion without hesitation will certainly appear as this is the trend of the times. Marxism will surely be enriched and developed, this is the inevitable trend of history. Our duty is to promote the progress of the trend of the times and to illustrate the inevitable trend of history.

LOCAL LEADERS INTERVIEWED ON SEVENTH 5-YEAR PLAN

OW121314 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0638 GMT 10 May 86

[Text] Beijing, 10 May (XINHUA) -- Since the Seventh 5-Year Plan for national economic and social development was approved by fourth meeting of the Sixth National People's Congress (NPC), all provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities have taken their respective local situations into consideration and made specific plans for local development, taken measures to carry out these plans, and decided to mobilize the entire population to strive to materialize China's blueprint for 1990.

The following concern the major plans and efforts to be carried out in the Seventh 5-Year Plan as revealed by party and government officials of Shanghai Municipality, Jiangsu Province, Shanxi Province, and Xinjiang Autonomous Region in recent interviews with our XINHUA reporter.

Shanghai: An Old Base Will Radiate New Vitality

As the largest industrial city in the country, how will Shanghai develop in the Seventh 5-Year Plan? In answering XINHUA reporter Wu Fumin's question, Rui Xingwen, secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee, said: "We will work extensively to promote our great undertakings of reforming and invigorating Shanghai, give full play to the role of Shanghai as a central multifunctional city, and enable the old base to radiate new vitality and serve as a pioneer in promoting the four modernizations program of the nation."

Rui Xingwen gave a blueprint of Shanghai's development in specific terms: Along with the process of reforming and revitalizing the light, textile, handicraft, shipbuilding and other conventional industries in the Seventh 5-Year Plan, Shanghai will at the same time devote major efforts to the development of six specific industries as pillars of its industrial development. These six industries are the iron and steel industry to be based on the Shanghai Baoshan Iron and Steel Complex, the modern material industry using the petrochemical industry as a foundation, the automobile industry, the aircraft manufacturing industry, the electronics industry, and the power plant equipment manufacturng industry, which includes the manufacturing of thermal and nuclear power plant equipment. In addition, we will strive to achieve breakthroughs in optical fiber communications, laser technology and bioengineering, as well as find new energy sources, and advance in other modern technological fields. Shanghai's total economic output value will increase by an average of 7.5 percent annually in the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Its total economic output value in 1990 will be double that of 1980.

Rui Xingwen said: In order to materialize these goals, Shanghai will ensure the success of three major tasks in promoting material civilization in the Seventh 5-Year Plan: the acceleration of infrastructural construction; the active utilization of foreign capital and increasing exports to obtain more foreign exchange; and the acceleration of technological development and education of specialized people.

Rui Xingwen, who was once the minister of urban and rural construction and environmental protection, was particularly concerned about accelerating the pace of urban infrastructural construction. He told our reporter that, with respect to the Seventh 5-Year Plan, Shanghai has expressed its determination to carry out a number of major infrastructural projects in different stages, with major efforts devoted to improving urban traffic conditions and speeding up housing development. It will also integrate the work in rejuvenating old city areas with the work in developing new ones, and take steps to improve the investment environment and living conditions.

Rui Xingwen said: The purpose of importing is to enable us to export more, and exporting is a fundamental precondition for importing. Shanghai should strive to make greater strides forward both in importing and exporting. Our export growth should increase by 8.4 percent annually in the Seventh 5-Year Plan, and we should make every effort to enable the major industries and products of Shanghai to reach by 1990 the same level attained by developed nations in the early 1980's. Shanghai is a place with an abundance of talented and specialized people, and therefore we should give top priority to developing science and technology, and to educating talented people.

By 1990, the number of specialized people in Shanghai should increase by 65 percent, and we should be able to turn out a large number of first rate people specializing in various fields by international and domestic standards.

"The successful accomplishment of the development tasks of the Seventh 5-Year Plan hinges on our efforts to continue reform of the economic system," Rui Xingwen continued. He said: "To Shanghai, developing lateral economic cooperation is a key to carrying out an extensive economic reform. Without lateral economic cooperation Shanghai will not be able to sustain its prosperity." He added: Shanghai has many advantages. On the whole, however, Shanghai is a city largely based on processing-type industry. The raw materials, fuel, and agricultural and sideline products it needs have to be supplied by other provinces and autonomous regions. Therefore, Shanghai can only speed up its economic development by strengthening lateral economic cooperation with other localities, that is, by integrating Shanghai's industrial processing ability with the raw material resources of the inland areas.

Rui Xingwen stressed: In developing lateral economic cooperation with other localities, Shanghai should deepen its understanding of these areas, eliminate any haughty tendencies, open its door wide, and resolutely eliminate the practice of creating obstacles for people from other localities, of showing a long face to others, and of deliberately creating difficulties for others. The municipal government is taking concrete measures and drawing up appropriate policies to pave the way for enterprises in establishing lateral economic cooperation in various forms with other localities. This may be referred to as an approach of the government opening the way for enterprises. Following this approach, it is completely possible that lateral economic cooperation between Shanghai and other provinces and autonomous regions will reach a new level, enabling Shanghai to make greater contributions to the state.

Jiangsu: Work for Lateral Cooperation and Advance Reform of the Economic System.

Jiangsu Province has achieved rapid economic development in recent years, which has won widespread attention. How does the province intend to continue its forward progress during the Seventh 5-Year Plan? In an interview with XINHUA reporter Wei Fuzheng, Jiangsu Provincial Governor Gu Xiulian said: The key to accomplishing Jiangsu Province's goals in the Seventh 5-Year Plan is to continue to carry out reform of the economic system. We should work to promote lateral economic association and invigorate medium and small-sized enterprises on the one hand, and endeavor to promote lateral economic cooperation and speed up material circulation on the other.

Gu Xiulian gave an account of Jiangsu Province's new goals laid down for the Seventh 5-Year Plan: By 1990, the total industrial and agricultural output value, the total economic output value, the people's income, and the average actual consumption level of the province will respectively reach 187 billion yuan, 100.1 billion yuan, 85.2 billion yuan, and 620 yuan, with an annual growth rate of about 8 percent.

The governess said: Jiangsu Province has many favorable conditions and, at the same time, many difficulties in materializing these major goals. The province has a relatively developed and advanced light textile industry, and yet it is seriously short of raw materials, particularly energy.

Objective conditions have compelled the province to expand its economic ties and cooperation with other localities, and, at the same time, required it -- according to modern production requirements -- to better organize its industrial production activities, develop lateral economic associations, improve the structure of various industries, and raise the level of production techniques.

Gu Xiulian told our reporter: In promoting lateral economic associations and cooperation in the Seventh 5-Year Plan, Jiangsu Province will establish various forms of open and diversified lateral economic association networks, with emphasis on developing economic associations among enterprises and giving full play to the advantages enjoyed by large, medium, and small-sized enterprises. This is intended to gradually establish the structure of modern enterprises linking urban and rural areas; to allow large, medium, and small-sized enterprises to develop harmonically; to gear production, scientific research, and commodity circulation to support one another; and to rationally arrange our productive forces. By doing so, we can expect to drive the province's economic development in a direction of specialization and modernization. In addition, we should make vigorous efforts to promote regional economic association within the province, and prompt the four economic cooperation zones -- Nanjing, Zhenjiang and Yangzhou; Suzhou, Wuxi, and Changzhou; Nantong, Yangzhou, and Yancheng; and Xuzhou, Huaiyin, Yancheng, and Lianyungang -- to develop relatively long-term and stable economic and technological cooperation and association. We should also actively promote regional lateral economic association and cooperation between the province and other localities; give full play to the role of the economic coordination committee made up of Nanjing, Shanghai, Wuhan, and Chongqing, all central cities along the Chang Jiang, in order to jointly develop and make up of the Chang Jiang golden waterway; help speed up the development of the Huai He Economic Zone with Xuzhou as its center in order to invigorate the communications and commodity circulation in the area bordering Jiangsu, Shandong, Henan, and Anhui; assist the seven provinces and autonomous regions along the Longhai railway to jointly develop and make use of Lianyungang port, and establish the Longhai Economic Zone in order to bring prosperity to the areas along the Longhai railway.

She said: This year the provincial government will take four measures to strengthen the work in this field: 1) mobilize the governments at all levels to sum up experiences, enhance their understanding, discover good typical cases, strengthen leadership over administrative work, and strive to provide proper inducements and encourage cooperation; 2) implement the "Regulations on Some Questions Regarding Further Promoting Horizontal Economic Association" promulgated by the State Council, and, accordingly, formulate detailed regulations that conform to the situation in Jiangsu; 3) enact the corresponding economic laws to guarantee and safeguard the interests and decision-making power of integrated economic entities and economic zones; and 4) in view of the fact that at present "when it comes to soliciting status reports, everyone seems to be the 'mother-in-law' but when it comes to solving problems, there are no 'mothers-in-law' around," governments at all levels are required to assign leading comrades to take charge of the work, let the comprehensive department take the lead, and divide the work among the departments concerned so that each will assume its own responsibilities. Together, they should study the new situation and solve new problems that arise in the course of establishing associations.

Shanxi: Building the Largest Energy Base in China

In his interview with XINHUA reporters Jin Jiasheng and Shang Daijiang, Shanxi Provincial Governor Wang Senhao said: the grand Seventh 5-Year Plan presents a good prospect for Shanxi as the largest energy base in China. Shanxi will further speed up its construction and contribute more to invigorating China's economy in the 1990's.

Wang Senhao excitedly talked about how the party Central Committee and the State Council had shown concern for and attached great importance to the development and construction of the energy base with Shanxi as its center. The state has planned to build in Shanxi in the next 5 years more than 50 large and medium-sized construction projects which are directly affiliated to and provided resources directly by the central authorities. The planned investment is 17 billion yuan, 75 percent more than the 9.7 billion yuan in the Sixth 5-Year Plan. More than four-fifths of this investment will be used on construction of coal, power, and railway projects. After the completion of these projects, Shanxi will be able to make greater contributions to the whole nation. According to preliminary estimates, in the Seventh 5-Year Plan, Shanxi will ship 980 million metric tons of coal to other parts of China, topping the Sixth 5-Year Plan by 80 percent. By the end of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, Shanxi will supply more than 10 billion kwh of electricity, more than 5 times the figure at the end of the Sixth 5-Year Plan By 1990, Shanxi Province's annual coal output will reach 270 million metric tons, accounting for 27 and 46 percent of the totals of the nation and the central region respectively. Freight shipped out of Shanxi by rail will exceed 300 million metric tons. More than 30 billion kwh of electricity will be generated each year. By that time, Shanxi's position in China's national economic development will have undergone greater changes.

Wang Senhao said: Shanxi belongs to the whole nation and plays a decisive role in China's economic construction. In the Seventh 5-Year Plan, the nation is still experiencing an energy shortage. Therefore, we should keep in mind China's overall situation, and do our best to build the key state projects in Shanxi, complete them and place them into operation in good time according to their qualitative and quantitative requirements. Experience in the Sixth 5-Year Plan shows that the key state projects are the "pivotal" projects capable of invigorating local economic development. We should lay emphasis on the development and utilization of coal as an energy resource, vigorously promote lateral economic associations inside and outside the energy base, reasonably readjust the production structure and the product mix, and constantly increase the capacity to locally process coal and transform it into energy, so as to promote the development of the industry in the three materials, namely, the nonferrous and ferrous metals, chemicals, and building materials.

Xinjiang: Economic Strength To Reach or Surpass the Nation's Intermediate Level

What will be the new features of the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region in the northwest border in the Seventh 5-Year Plan? Tomur Dawamat, chairman of the autonomous region, told XINHUA reporter Wang Youfu that in the Seventh 5-Year Plan, Xinjiang will take account of its own characteristics, make full use of its local resources, build a single economic zone with Xinjiang's characteristics, strive to reach or surpass the nation's intermediate level of economic development by the end of this century, and build Xinjiang into an important base for carrying out China's economic construction into the 21st century.

He said: Xinjiang, home of many nationalities, is vast and rich in resources. It plays a pivotal role in the great undertaking of developing and building the great northwest. The autonomous region's economy has entered a stage of very vigorous growth. It fulfilled the Sixth 5-Year Plan 1 year ahead of schedule, which paved the way for further economic development in the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

Turning to the specific objectives of Xinjiang's economic development in the Seventh 5-Year Plan, Tomur Dawamat said: proceeding from its objective realities, in the Seventh 5-Year Plan, the autonomous region will place emphasis on building up the Urumqi-Karamay region, which is better qualified for further development so as to gradually turn it into an pivotal industrial region in Xinjiang. From that point on, efforts will be made to gradually develop the southern and western parts of Xinjiang. By 1990 the autonomous region's total industrial and agricultural output value will reach 18.1 billion yuan, 2.4 times the 1980 figure. The total industrial output value will reach 11.7 billion yuan, 2.5 times the 1980 figure. Animal husbandry, growing of melons and fruits, and planting of grain, cotton, and oil-bearing crops will become the three pillars of Xinjiang's rural economy. Meanwhile, we will speed up the prospecting of resources -- petroleum, coal, gold, limestone, and nonferrous metals in particular -- in order to maximize their uses. Efforts will be concentrated on conducting a comprehensive prospecting of petroleum in the Junggar Pendi and the Tarim Pendi. By 1990 Xinjiang will be producing 7.2 to 8 million metric tons of crude oil. He said: An important task in the Seventh 5-Year Plan is to vigorously open up the markets at home and abroad, and expand the channels of commodity circulation. It is necessary to make use of the open commercial ports like Huro-er-guo-si, Turguart, and Kunjirap to expand foreign trade, and strive for a 60-percent increase in import-export trade volume in 1990 over 1985.

Tomur Dawamat excitedly told the reporter tha the Seventh 5-Year Plan approved by the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC devotes special attention to economic development in Xinjiang, one of the "old, minority, and border" regions. In recent years, Shanghai, Tianjin, Jiangsu, Sichauan, and other economically-developed provinces and municipalities hve established long-term solid cooperative relations with Xinjiang. Xinjiang appreciates the concern and assistance of the state and the fraternal provicnes and municipalities. It will further strengthen and develop lateral economic ties with the fraternal provinces and municipalities in order to speed up its construction.

GUANGMING RIBAO URGES 'HUNDRED SCHOOLS OF THOUGHT'

HK010712 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0706 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, 30 Apr (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- GUANGMING RIBAO today carries a signed article which holds that academic contention in a socialist society usually does not have the character of a class struggle, that differences in academic viewpoints can only be solved according to the principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend" and by the method of conducting criticism, countercriticism, and self-criticism, and that academic issues should not be willfully raised to the level of political issues and still less should academic criticism be conducted. Only in this way is it possible to create a relaxed and harmonious situation in which people are bold in making experiments.

The author of this article is Su Shuangbi, deputy director of the GUANGMING RIBAO Theoretical Department.

The year 1986 marks the 30th anniversary of the promulgation of the principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend." In this article the author expresses his views on some questions in carrying out the principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend."

The article points out: In implementing the principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend," China's academic field has undergone a bumpy, zigzag, and exploratory process. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, great changes have taken place in the implementation of this principle. However, the principle has not been implemnted in a sufficiently natural and smooth way. Recently, a relevant leader of the CPC Central Committee reportedly pointed out the need to conscientiously implement the principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend" and to create a relaxed and harmonious environment.

The article also sets forth the following viewpoints:

— Academic viewpoints should not be mixed up with political concepts. We should not regard different academic points of view as "liberalism." We should advocate free discussions of academic issues and not rashly draw conclusions;

— We should adhere to the principle that all people are equal before the law. In the course of academic contention, the academic view expressed by an expert, an authoritative person, or a leading cadre is only one of the various different views and individually his view is only one of the "hundred schools of thought." Whether his view is right or wrong, he should submit himself to the truth;

— Given the new situation of opening up to the outside world and invigorating the domestic economy, we should dialectically and analytically approach the Western science and culture that have spread into our country. We should not regard Western science and culture as decadent and negative, nor should we totally and uncritically accept them. We should adopt them with a discriminating attitude.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS LITERATURE, ART EXPLORATION

HK131328 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 12 May 86 p 7

[Commentator's article: "Support Exploration, Encourage Blazing New Trails"]

[Text] Over the past 2 years or so, an unprecedentedly animated situation has appeared on China's literature and art front. As on the ideological and other fronts, various kinds of practical exploration are being carried out in literary creation and theoretical research in literature and art. There have been great breakthroughs in the pattern of creation and the means of artistic expression. Many writers and artiests have taken great pains to widen their field of vision, expand the range of subjects, and seek new ways of expression. Some have even adopted certain means of artistic expression which are popular in the contemporary Western world (such as stream of consciousness, symbolism, imagery, exaggeration, deformation, and mysticism), so as to introduce more techniques of expression. There has appeared a trend of variation in our literary creation. In theoretical research, some people have absorbed certain new achievements of modern scientific research and new viewpoints of foreign literature and art theoretical research, providing our theoretical research in this field with many new subjects and rich flavor. This is a gratifying phenomenon.

In order to achieve development and prosperity in our literature and art, it is necessary to make explorations and blaze new trails. After putting an end to the practice of closing the country to international intercourse, a trend of exploration has appeared in the practice of creation and theoretical research in China's literature and art circles. This is completely understandable and normal. In the new period of construction of the four modernizations, the CPC Central Committee has proposed building socialism with distinctive Chinese characteristics. As there is no fixed pattern for building this kind of socialism, it is necessary to make explorations. For literature and art, which are part of an ideology with specific charactersitics, it is even more necessary for us to make explorations. We may regard the current explorations in literary creation and theoretical research as a component part of our explorations as a whole in building socialism with distinctive Chinese characteristics. Our purpose is to establish new socialist literature and art of the Chinese nation, which embody the spirit of our times and is loved by the Chinese people. Therefore, generally speaking, we should welcome and support exploration and blazing new trails and encourage literature and art workers to engage in this practice.

The general target of exploration and blazing new trails in literature and art in the new period is to establish new socialist literature and art with distinctive Chinese characteristics. Under this general target, we must allow all kinds of experiments. Literary creation is a kind of complex mental labor which requires development of the wisdom and talent of writers and artists. We must not restrict this kind of activity, which requires strong individuality, with fixed patterns. As to the subjects, forms, styles, means of expression, and schools of thought in literature and art, we must not make concrete stipulations too early to decide whether they should be allowed or not, should be affirmed or negated, or should be forbidden or encouraged. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the CPC Central Committee has adhered to the principle of practice being the sole criterion of truth. It has listened attentively to the voice of the broad masses of people and, in line with the demand of practice, given them a free hand in exploring and building roads for their new life.

Regarding literature and art in the new era, the party adopts a principle of emancipating the mind and seeking truth from facts. In light of the characteristics and development law of literature and art, it fully brings into play the individual creative spirit of writers and artists, shuns interfering with what and how to write, advocates the free development of various schools and styles, and encourages making bold explorations and blazing new trails, thus bringing about an unprecedented development and prosperity in the literature and art in our country. A colorful and flourishing situation has arisen in the flowering garden of literature and art in our country. It has proved that under the guidance of the party's literary and art principles, we should allow varied explorations and creations and uphold the principle of "letting a hundred flowers bloom and a hundred schools of thought contend" and the principle of "making the past serve the present and foreign things serve China." It is necessary to create a good atmosphere and environment and allow literary and art creation and academic research to enjoy full freedom under the guidance of the four cardinal principles, so as to encourage bold exploration and creation. While making explorations, through the practice of art and the deepening of theoretical research, we should make socialist literature and art attain a more rapid development and greater prosperity.

Any exploration, and creation itself, embraces two futures and possibilities. It might succeed, go astray, or even fail. No one can guarantee that explorations will all be successful. We should learn to correctly handle success and failure in the process of exploration and creation. Regarding the problems cropping up in exploration or even failures, we should prudently and conscientiusly handle them, apply considerate and well-planned methods to repeatedly make differentiations and hold discussions, and earnestly analyze and sum up experiences. Meanwhile, on the literature and art front, some comrades might go astray in the exploration of literary and art creation and theoretical research and make mistakes. We should make conscientious and scientific analysis, clarify the facts, and distinguish the good things from the bad. We should practically and kindly help them sum up experiences and enthusiastically encourage them to boldly begin new explorations and trials.

With the development of the economic structural reform and the country as a whole, the task confronting literary and art workers is both glorious and arduous. In the building of the "two civilizations," if we want to achieve greater prosperity in the cause of socialist literature and art, we must rely on the efforts of the literary and art workers. It is necessary to dare to practice and blaze new trails. Our literature and art must be geared to the masses, the future, and the world. With this aim, as long as we have our feet planted on solid ground and carry out arduous and earnest creation, research, and exploration, the literature and art in this new era in our country will surely attain a new realm which is more varied and colorful and at a higher level.

ZHU HOUZE MAKES CONTACT WITH WRITERS, ARTISTS

HK110441 Hcng Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 18, 5 May 86 pp 4-6

[Article by Yin Jindi: "Zhu Houze's Contacts With Literature and Art Circles"]

[Text] Since his appointment as head of the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department 6 months ago, Zhu Houze has made extensive contacts and had frank exchange of views with people in literature and art circles. He is concerned about their difficulties in creative work. More and more people in literature and art circles regard Zhu Houze as their intimate friend.

Noble and dignified, Zhu Houze, now 55, is full of vigor. Prior to his new appointment, he was the first secretary of the Guizhou Provincial CPC Committee. After he assumed the office of head of the Propaganda Department in August 1985, people in literature and art circles wanted to listen to his program and learn about his behavior. At the same time, they were most concerned about his appraisal of and views on the situation in literature and art circles.

During the New Year holidays, Zhu Houze went to Shanghai to see Ba Jin, a famous veteran writer; He Luding, a noted musician; and his colleagues working in JIEFANG RIBAO, XINMIN WANBAO, and WhEN HUI BAO. He also attened a film creation meeting, a forum sponsored by publication organizations, and a cadre gathering to greet the Spring Festival. His speech at the feature film creation meeting held by the Shanghai Film Studio attracted wide attention.

Zhu Houze said: "Although I am old, I am still a new recruit on the propaganda front." His cordial and modest remark immediately enlivened the atmosphere. People in literature and art circles asked him about the relationship between freedom of creation and adherence to the four basic principles and about important and sensitive questions such as whether it is necessary to oppose bourgeois liberalization in literature and art circles.

Believing that this indicated their trust in him, Zhu Houze said: Only in such a situation can we have a frank exchange of views. Your straightforward remarks indicate your trust in me. We are seeking mutual understanding and mutual trust. Mutual understanding is a prerequisite for mutual trust.

On the question of opposing bourgeois liberalization, Zhu Houze's view was: When our country is behind the most developed countries in many aspects, it is inevitable for the people to cast doubts on socialism and communism and to ask whether we can solve our social, economic, and political problems better than the capitalist countries. Owing to the fact that some of our problems have not undergone the final test of practice, we cannot give up the slogan of upholding the four basic principles an opposing bourgeois liberalization which is a strategic policy. However, adhering to the four basic principles is a political concept, a politcal aim, and a political road to be chosen. It does not hinder freedom of creation or independent explorations.

This new propaganda head, who endured endless sufferings during the anti-rightists struggle and the Great Cultural Revolution, said that the methods of exerting heavy pressure and making abrupt turns should be discouraged and that study and explorations should be conducted on questions concerning policies. He suggested that theoretical work should be strengthened and the people should be taught to understand the inner aspect of things. It is necessary to enhance literature and art work so that it exerts an imperceptible influence on people's minds. We should use these two factors to enrich our socialist culture and carry forward the building of material and spiritual civilizations. While promoting the overall reform of the economic structure, we should lift our national spirit to a new height, enable people throughout society to have a better mental outlook, and encourage them to have lofty ideals and values as well as zeal and drive for practical work.

Zhu Houze's frank speech drew him closer to the literature and art circles.

The second enlarged meeting of the board of directors of the Fourth Chinese Musicians Association took place in Beijing in early March. When Zhu Houze was informed that noted musicians of the nation were gathered in Beijing, he said that he would manage to find time to meet them. On the afternoon of 8 March, Zhu Houze, dressed in a blue Zhongshan suit, came among the musicians with a smile. When the chairman of the Chinese Musicians Association asked him to deliver a speech, Zhu Houze gave an impromptu talk on questions of interest to literature and art circles. He said: since our country forsook the "leftist" error of "taking class struggle as the key link" and unswervingly shifted the focus of the work onto socialist modernization, we have simultaneously grasped the building of material and spritual civilizations. Not only is economic life full of vitality, but the situation in theoretical and academic circles and in literature and art is also more vigorous than ever before. Taken as a whole, our literature and art creation is much better now than any previous period. Everyone feels much happier now. Writers and artists have better chances to extensively develop and to give full scope to, their talents. This is a very favorable condition for blazing new trails and the prosperity of literature and art. However, in this environment there are also partial or little waves and there are still some aftershocks. This state of affairs has emerged partly because of the normal literature and art criticisms and academic, circles. Naturally, normal discussions of this kind may also stir old recollections. It is also partly due to the debates on the nature and assessment of certain literature and art works or to the inaccuracy and inappropriateness of the mode of debate, choice of words, or reasoning. These matters become extremely sensitive when they are reflected in literature and art circles and may easily upset some comrades.

In his view, it is quite natural for them to be sensitive. They would not have become writers and artists had they not been sensitive. As for the fact that some people are easily upset, this can hardly be regarded as a strong point. It is no good to harbor suspicions and worry about a sudden change when you get wind of something. Viewed from another angle, however, it shows that there are still "repercussions" and "lingering fear." For this reason, he encouraged the comrades of the party and government departments in charge in cultural, art, and academic work to frequently get in touch and exchange views with people in literature, art, and academic circles in order to promote mutual understanding and trust.

At the meeting, Zhu Houze put forward an essential condition for the development and prosperity of socialist literature and art, that is, "our literature and art circles should have a harmonious atmosphere, a lively, spacious environment for public opinion, and a fine mood that encourages artistic exploration, criticism in these explorations, and emulation among different schools of thought." "It is the bounden duty of our party comrades in charge of literature and art work to create such an atmosphere and environment." Like a warm breeze and spring rain refreshing the mind, his remarks nourished the people of literature and art circles.

On the relationship between literature and art on the one hand and politics on the other, Zhu Houze said: Literature and art is most distinctively characterized by personal character and, therfore, it is absolutely impossible to engage in literature and art production according to an order form or a pattern. For this reason, the steadfastness in implementing party principles and line should be realized through a high degree of creativity on the part of writers and artists. The unity of political objectives precisely finds expression in the diversification of literature and art. A strong sense of adhering to principles in work should be reflected through flexibitility. A serious theme can be easily accepted by the masses only when it is expressed in a vivid, artistic form. A profound philosophical theory can be comprehensible to readers only when it is readable and readily understandable.

The ideological departments at various levels have a great influence on the masses, Zhu Houze stressed, and this influence is exerted in a variety of ways. Theory convinces people through concepts and, like a scalpel, directly gets to the essence of a matter through numerous and complicated phenomena, thus achieving an enduring and enlightening effect. Literature and art, however, affect people through images. They exert a gradual, uplifting influence on people, enlightening them and containing education in recreation. So long as we adhere to the socialist road, objective, and orientation and dialectically integrate them with the principles for developing academic and literature and art undertakings, such as "letting a hundred flowers bloom and a hundred schools of thought contend" and "making the past serve the present and foreign things serve China and weeding through the old to bring forth the new,: there will be bright prospect for the development of literature and art.

Zhu Houze's remarks struck a sympathetic chord in the hearts of the musicians. His speech was followed by prolonged, warm applause. After the meeting, people in the music and literature and art circles said that Zhu Houze had voiced their aspirations.

Those who had personal contacts with Zhu House unanimously held that he is "amiable and easy to approach."

On the evening of 24 February, it was still very cold in Beijing though Spring Festival had just passed. The door bell of Li Gang's residence rang. Li Gang was director of the art bureau under the Ministry of Culture. When he opened the door, he found that the unexpected guest was Zhu Houze, head of the Propaganda Department. Li Gang felt a bit ill at ease as this was the first time he had entertained the head at his residence. However, the atmosphere immediately became easy after an exchange of conventional greetings.

Actually, Li Gang was to lead a central ballet troupe to the United States the following day. The purpose of Zhu Houze's visit was to see Li Gang off and send his regards to two dancers who wrote him a letter and held talks with him after their return from the United States. On that evening, Zhu Houze talked intimately with Li Gang for more than 2 hours concerning the situation and problems of China's ballet. When Li Gang conveyed Zhu Houze's enthusiastic greetings to the whole troupe the next day, popular feeling ran high. Many members of the ballet troupe expressed their determination to perform China's ballet well on the other side of the ocean.

After Zhu assumed office as head of the Propaganda Department, an old friend of his said: Zhu Houze set the rules of promoting understanding with more people and making more friends for himself. Indeed, he has done as he promised. When he can extricate himself from pressing affairs, he goes to the grass-roots levels to conduct studies and investigations and make friends. One Saturday evening, he took a train to Tianjin to spend the Sunday holiday. Apart from holding talks with the people of the Tianjin Municipal CPC Committee, he also met with young and middle aged writers and critics such as Jiang Zialong, Feng Jicai, Hang Ying, and Xia Kangda, and listened to their opinions and proposals on how to properly exercise party leadership over literature and art work.

Quite a few people come to Beijing very often to look for Zhu Houze. A few days ago the works of a young composer Qu Xiaosong were performed in the Beijing concert hall. Some people told Zhu Houze that there were disputes in the music circles over the work of some young composers and hoped that he could afford time to go to the concert. Zhu Houze attended the concert as an ordinary spectator. At the intermission, Qu Xiaosong, who was born in Quiyang, was expecially excited when he saw the head of the Propaganda Department who came from Guizhou. It was really like "fellow townsmen whose eyes brimmed with tears when they met each other." In great delight, Zhu Houze asked about Qu Xiaosong's birthplace in Guiyang, his school, and the countryside where he worked. When Qu Xiaosong asked for Zhu Houze's comments after the concert, Zhu said: A composer wishes to be understood by his audience and the audience wish to be understood by the composer. His words were simple, but they left Qu Xiaosong much food for deep thought. People in music circles especially appreciated Zhu Houze's remarks: "We should let a hundred flowers blossom; why should a peony be superior to a herbaceous peony?"

"Mr. Zhu, I have a complaint for you. I want you to watch my film. Otherwise, it will be shelved." A famous film actress Liu Xiaoqing rushed to Zhu Houze's office and came straight to the point.

"Really? If this is true, I must see the film," Zhu Houze replied sincerely. Actually, Liu Xiaoqing and the Hong Kong Nanfang Film Studio jointly shot a film entitled "Heartless Lover," in which Liu Xiaoqing was the producer as well as actress. The film was a stage version of hu Huaizhong's novel, which depicted the problems within the tribes in old Xizang through the disputes between two young lovers.

Some people have called the story China's Romeo and Juliet. While describing the life and customs of the Zang compatriots, the film exposed too many backward aspects which were not all true. The film gave rise to much controversy when it was shown among a restricted number of people. As Liu Xiaoqing made the request, Zhu Houze went to the projection room of the film bureau the next day to see the film. Zhu Houze said: I hope that you will deliberate over the the film calmly and make constructive suggestions since the film contains a lot of hard work and cost a great deal. As the Hong Kong Nanfang Film Studio is the main investor, the film can first be distributed in Hong Kong and abroad. Regarding its distribution in the mainland, Zhu Houze asked that the producer respect the views of the Zang compatriots and make some amendments so that the film can truly reflect the life and customs of the Zang people as well as their sufferings and struggles in the old society. It is necessary to explain to people who have complaints that literary and artistic creation is different from news reporting and that there is a question of artistic concentration and creation.

While watching the film, he also laid down a principle for examining films: leading cadres should guard the pass and check the films that are politically reactionary and in vulgar taste. We must never allow these films to poison the masses. As to those films that have shortcomings and defects, they can be solved through literary criticisms. Zhu Houze said that the current reform work as a whole is undergoing a process of exploration, constant development, and constant perfection. Similarly, the literature and art works that reflect the great reform should also undergo a process of exploration and constant development. Therefore, we should not demand perfection. Since the spring of 1986, the films shot last year that gave rise to much controversy such as "Black Cannon," "The Last Empress," "Insidious Temptation," and "The Girl on the Run" have all been solved in light of Zhu Houze's proposal.

We should create a harmonious atmosphere so that our leading cadres and friends in literature and art circles will trust and understand each other and promote the development of socialist literature and art. Friends in literature and art circles all say that Zhu Houze, new head of the Propaganda Department, has set a good example.

SHA YEXIN DISCUSSES MEANING OF NEW PLAY

HK131152 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 18, 5 May 86, p 39

[Article by Wang Liwen: "Sha Yexin on the Recent Play 'Looking for a Real Man'"]

[Text] The play "Looking for a Real Man" has played to capacity audiences since it opened in Shanghai in mid-February. It has been awarded the Creation and Performance Prize at the third Shanghai Drama Festival.

Not long ago, when speaking of this new work, its author, Sha Yexin, said: The drama "Looking for a Real Man," in terms of its plot, seems to be a love story describing an "old maid" in search of a boyfriend. However, the aim of this play is not merely to reflect the superficial phenomena of life but to show the audience, by means of the superficial plot of the play, the heroine's pursuit of an ideal. Shu Huan, the heroine in the play, a 28-year-old "old maid," is different from other girls in that she is not looking for an ordinary man but a "real man" who exhibits true "manhood." In the realities of life, however, she has found instead some men whose "souls have become deformed."

Thus she feels regret and is depressed. But she keeps on looking for a real man, without losing her confidence. At last she meets a plant manager called Jiang Yi who shows an enterprising and pioneering spirit. Sha Yexin said: "The 'manhood' that Shu Huan is looking for is the very spirit that our nation should carry forward in bravely blazing new trails." This is the profound inner idea that the play wants to express. "What Shu Huan is looking for is exactly what I am in pursuit of."

"In the play, I have placed those ugly things in front of a distorting mirror and satirized them by means of exaggeration and enlargement so that my works may play a role in enlightening the benighted," Sha Yexin added. Among those men Shu Huan has met, some are "mama's boys" who cannot survive without their mothers' support; some are imbeciles who yield to those who are in power; and some are "worshippers of the West" who have lost their human dignity. All these characters are certainly ugly and absurd. The purpose of the play in presenting these characters is to criticize and negate them. No man should lead such a vulgar life!

The 48 year-old Sha Yexin is the director of the Shanghai People's Artistic Opera House. He told me this play is a one-act satire. Both the time and space in the play are uncertain and keep "leaping forward," and the background is also "indefinite." The set of the play looks like an abstract scene of a large city, with an S-shaped main street symbolizing the "road of life." This play shows the playwright's attempt to make a breakthrough in the traditional structure of drama. With the heroine Shu Huan's search for a "real man" as its main topic, the play has combined reality with absurdity and natural description with exaggerated performance, thus producing a strong contrast, attracting audiences and pushing them to ponder the realities of life, and increasing the comedic effects of the performance.

Sha Yexin regards modern drama as a kind of regrettable art [as published]. He felt that the latter half of the play was not profound enough and that the profiles of some characters, such as the plant manager Jiang Yi, are not sharp enough. All these have reduced the artistic appeal of the work. Therefore, Sha Yexin is planning to further polish the play.

JIEFANGJUN BAO REPORTS DEEDS OF LAOSHAN HEROES

OW020527 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 2230 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] JIEFANGJUN BAO frontpages a newsletter on 2 May introducing the deeds of unsung heroes on the Laoshan front. Among those unsung heroes, those cadres and fighters, some lost their sight and others lost their legs. Some even risked their lives to save their comrades-in-arms. These unsung heroes let their comrades-in-arms take credit instead of claiming credit for themselves. Commanders in charge of appraising merits in Laoshan all agreed that it was a tough job to ascertain credit, saying it was more difficult to persuade someone to rightfully claim credit than fight the war. The fighters responded by saying that the people's recognition is the highest honor and award they could receive.

GUANGDONG: SUIXI COUNTY CURBS UNHEALTHY TRENDS

HK090259 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 0300 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] In the course of party rectification, the Suixi County CPC Committee resolutely curbed the unhealthy trends of taking advantage of functions and powers to build houses exceeding the limits in three respects and to indiscriminately issue and privately share money and goods. It has scored relatively good achievements and has been praised by the cadres and the masses.

Some time in the past, the organs of Suixi County party and government built quarters which exceed the stipulated cost, floorspace, and standard. They were investigated and dealt with on many occasions. However, due to the fact that some individuals of the county leadership groups were softhearted through tough in appearance, these unhealthy trends could not be curbed.

This time, the principal leading members of the county CPC Committee organized the members of the leadership groups of four county departments to study relevant central documents and to conduct an on-the-spot investigation of the quarters newly built by the Industry and Commerce Bureau, Tax Bureau, and Finance Office to make them understand the seriousness of the problem. The county CPC Committee promptly decided that the 85 quarters built by the 3 units, contrary to regulations, should not be used, and instruction on handling these quarters should be awaited. Regarding the other units' quarters under construction, which exceed the standard, they have been instructed to make a profund self-criticism and the discipline inspection commission, construction bank, and party rectification office must jointly investigate and deal with them.

The Suixi County CPC Committee has also dealt strictly with party and government cadres who had taken advantage of their functions, powers, and working conditions to seek personal gain and to privately share money and goods, in order to conduct profound education in the legal system for the cadres.

COMMENTARY OUTLINES PROSPECTS FOR FANGCHENG PORT

HK110544 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 7 May 86

[Station reporter's commentary: "Fangcheng Port Has Bright Prospects"]

[Excerpts] On 15 February, Hu Yaobang, secretary general of the CPC Central Committee, inspected the district of Fangcheng Port. After listening to reports by the district' responsible comrades, he said: Fangcheng Port has bright prospects. He fully affirmed the roles and prospects of the port.

Fangcheng Port has bright prospects because it has favorable natural conditions. In addition to the seven berths for 10,000-tonners, in the Seventh 5-Year Plan the port plans to extend the seventh berth and build a coal wharf for 50,000-tonners, an oil wharf for 50,000-tonners, and other special wharves. Moreover, it plans to build 50-odd deepwater wharves at the mouth of (Anbu) River, which is near the port. The development prospects of Fangcheng Port are very bright. After visiting the port, some U.S. specialists held that Fangcheng Port has the conditions for becoming an international trade port.

Fangcheng Port has bright prospects also because it has a vast economic hinterland and an abundant supply of raw materials and resources.

Places near the port, such as Beibu Wan, are favorable places for breeding fish and exporting aquatic products. Also, the nearby Qinzhou and Nanning Prefectures are economically developed areas. They are the major production bases of grain and economic crops. Such famous native products and specialities as fruits, cassia bark, aniseed, rosin, and ramie products are exported overseas in large quantities. Moreover, both Fangcheng and Qinzhou are among the native hometowns of the region's Overseas Chinese. This is also favorable for developing foreign trade. The mineral deposits of northwestern Guangxi are abundant. The major export minerals include manganese ore, heavy metals, and bauxite. The vast hinterland of Fangcheng Port includes Yunnan, Guizhou, Sichuan, and Hunan Provinces, which are rich in resources. They can supply abundant amounts of goods to the port. If Dalian Port is taken as the port of northeast China for importing and exporting goods, Fangcheng Port can be taken as the major port of southwest China for importing and exporting goods.

Fangcheng Port has bright prospects also because it has convenient water transport. The Nanning-Fangcheng railway, which will soon be put into operation, links the port to Qinzhou, Nanning, Baise, Liuzhou, Hechi, and Guilin. Thus, products made by these places can be exported overseas through Fangcheng Port. In particular, compared to the export route through Zhanjiang Port, goods that are made in places to the west of the port can be exported more conveniently if they go through this port. The situation is also true for importing goods. The port will also ease the tense demand for railway cargo services if it handles goods. On the other hand, the Nanaing-Fangcheng railway is linked to the branch Guizhou-Guangxi and Hunan-Guangxi railways. Therefore, goods of Yunnan, Guizhou, Sichuan, and Hunan Provinces can be imported and exported through the port. Following the completion of Nanning-Kunming railway construction in the near future, materials and goods of various provinces in southwestern China that are imported and exported through Fangcheng Port can reduce their route distance by 650 to 800 kilometers as compared to that through Zhanjiang Port.

These favorable conditions for land and water transport will not only save the port from the pressure of tense transport demand and backlog of cargo, but will also improve China's overall arrangement of export ports and ease the pressure on other ports. It will become the distribution center of import and export goods as well as the most economic and fastest sea link of the region and southwestern China.

The fact that Fangcheng Port has bright prospects has already been shown through the achieved economic results ever since its inauguration.

Last year, its gross turnover volume totalled 394,000 tons and its profits totalled 1.87 million yuan. It also earned more than $300,000. As it carries out various preferential treatments, the development of production and building in surrounding areas has been quite good. Their gross industrial and agricultural output value totalled 8.72 million yuan, an increase of more than two times compared to the previous year. Their work of finance and tax collection were also very good. The port has formed various organizations for administration and foreign affairs. These organizations actively import goods from outside and link up with the hinterland. They have now signed 9 contracts and made agreements on 10 import projects, involving a total investment sum of $119.35 billion. This shows that the development and trade operations of Fangcheng Port have taken off to a good start and that it has great potential and bright prospects.

Judging from the port's favorable location, good facilities, the economic results it has achieved in the course of development, and so on, we can see that its prospects are very bright. It also brings bright prospects to the region's work pf invigorating the economy as well as the development of various provinces in southwestern China. However, when the port turns the prospects into concrete results, it still faces many problems.

Chiefly speaking, it has a poor foundation, insufficient funds, lacks qualified personnel, and is not surrounded by cities. Also, its structure and some policies are not carried out well enough. This requires the continuous great support and help from the relevant departments of the cnetral authorities and the region. This also requires support and cooperation among the region's localities and various provinces in southwestern China. We believe that the cadres and the masses of Fangcheng Port district will not let the CPC Central Committee down. They will use their wisdom and industrious work to build the port into a window for opening up to the outside, and will develop it into a civilized, developed, and modern port city.

HENAN'S HE ZHUKANG STRESSES PERSEVERING IN REFORM

HK040215 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 3 May 86

[Excerpts] Governor He Zhukang stressed in his report on the Seventh 5-Year Plan that it is essential to unswervingly put reform of the economic structure in first place. Following are the focal points for this work during the period of the plan:

1. Grasp invigoration of the enterprises, especially the large and medium enterprises, as the cardinal link, and further streamline the administration and delegate powers, so that the great majority of enterprises can gradually run their own operations, be responsible for their own profits and losses, and possess self-transformation and development capability.

2. Further develop the socialist commodity market and gradually perfect the market setup. We must gradually expand the production materials market, and promote rational mobility of the labor force.

3. We must further reform the planning structure by appropriately reducing the scope of mandatory planning and expanding that of guidance planning and regulation by the market mechanism. We must be skilled in applying economic policies and the law of value, and exercise all-round macroeconomic management and regulation. In carrying out reform of the economic structure, we must pay particular attention to correctly handling the following relationships:

1. Between reform and construction. Launching projects at all levels, organizing speed contests, and blindly expanding the size of investment, thus causing tensions in economic life, hamper the progress of reform.

2. Between reform and living standards we cannot harbor the notion that today's reforms will bring great advantage to everyone tomorrow. We must correctly handle the relationship between present and long-term interests and between partial and overall interests. We cannot distribute all the profit retained by the enterprises, and still less can we depend on tapping the state from bonuses. We must avoid too rapid a growth in consumption funds.

Governor He Zhukang said: We must further break down the boundaries between areas, departments, sectors, and ownership systems, and vigorously promote and develop all types of lateral economic ties.

We must pay special attention to ties with coastal areas and neighbors, and focus on developing resources and products and increase technological transformation of enterprises. We must eliminate the fear of getting the worst of it, get rid of conservatism, take full advantage of the province's strong points in resources, and strive to attract capital, technology, talent, and advanced management experiences from the coastal areas. The province's backbone enterprises must stretch out feelers to the coastal areas to open up windows and collect information there, so as to improve their technology and train their talented people.

SICHUAN RADIO HAILS PEOPLE'S CONGRESS SESSION

HK121442 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0930 GMT 8 May 86

[Station commentary: "Stand at a New Starting Point; Create a New Situation"]

[Excerpts] The fourth session of the sixth provincial People's Congress and the fourth session of the fifth provincial CPPCC Committee concluded in Chengdu today. These two sessions were a success. We warmly congratulate the success of the two sessions. These two sessions were meetings for carrying forward the old cause and forging ahead into the future, for summing up experiences to push on in the flush of victory, and for enhancing our vigor to attain higher targets.

The Seventh 5-Year Plan is a grand blueprint for building Sichuan, a grand program for carrying our reforms, and a grand plan for building both the material and spiritual civilizations. To fulfill all tasks put forth by the Seventh 5-Year Plan and attain all targets set by the plan is a great historical mission endowed on people of the province. The fulfillment of the Seventh 5-Year Plan will have a bearing not only on the present 5 years, but also on the attainment of the quadruplication target by the end of the century. At present, the main task confronting the people of the whole province is to stand at a new starting point, to persevere in reforms, and to create a new situation.

To fulfill the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we must closely integrate a pioneering spirit with the scientific approach of seeking truth from facts. Leaders at all levels in the province must firmly establish the idea that exercising leadership means providing service. They must go out of offices and administrative organs, deep into the masses, and seriously help grass-roots units solve some practical problems. We must, under the leadership of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, unite more closely, carry forward the spirit of the foolish old man who removed the mountain, work hard, forge ahead, and fight for new achievements in reforms and construction in 1986 and for the fulfillment of the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

SICHUAN MILITARY LEADERS MEET LONG MARCH WRITERS

HK120940 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0930 GMT 9 May 86

[Excerpt] This morning in Chengdu Military Region, leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee, Chengdu Military Region, and Sichuan Military District, including Yang Rudai, Fu Quanyou, Wan Haifeng, Zhang Taiheng, Li Shuo, Kang Zhenhuang, Shao Nong, (Zhang Changshun), and (Gao Shuchun), met the four writers of the book "The Long March Experience".

The writers were (Liu Fangwei) of the PLA literature and art magazine; (Qiao Liang), an Air Force writer for the Central Military Commission; (Zhang Qitao), a writer for the Nanjing Military Region; and (Cheng Dong), a writer for the Beijing Military Region.

In order to mark the 50th anniversary of the successful Long March of China's worker-peasant Red Army, the PLA literature and art magazine organized this activity.

Leading comrades including Yang Rudai, Fu Quanyou, Wan Haifeng, and Kang Zhenhuang delivered speeches. Comrade Yang Rudai said: The fact that you comrades reported on the route of the Long March and on the heroic deeds of that time and the changes in the situation is of great significance in terms of inspiring the people to start a new Long March. I hope that you will write more and better works.

HEILONGJIANG'S SUN WEIBEN WRITES ON PARTY BUILDING

SK090331 Harbin HEILONGJIANG RIBAO in Chinese 21 Apr 86 p 3

[Preface written by Sun Weiben, secretary of the Heilongjiang Provincial CPC Committee, for the book "Questions and Answers on Party Building" compiled and published by the "LILUN YU SHIJIAN" [THEORY AND PRACTICE] journal of Liaoning Province: "Party Building Is the Capital Construction of Various Constructions"]

[Text] The book "Questions and Answers on Party Building" has been published. Comrades in charge of the editorial work hoped that I could take this opportunity to air some opinions on this book. As a cadre engaged in party affairs for a long time, I feel that the publication of this book will not only satisfy the urgent needs of the masses of party members and grassroots cadres but also play a positive role in strengthening the party building in the new period.

Party building is one of the three magic weapons which makes it possible to win a victory in the Chinese revolution, and is also the capital construction of various constructions. This is a simple but extremely important truth that everyone knows. During the past prolonged practice of revolution and construction, countless facts proved that whatever our fronts are, and whatever conditions and tasks we are facing, the combat strength of our ranks as a whole will be greatly enhanced, we will be able to conquer and overcome any strong obstacles ad difficulties, and there will be a reliable guarantee for the development of various undertakings as long as we grasp party building well, strengthen party leadership, and include to the role of grass-roots party organizations as fighting bastions, and the role of party members as vanguards and exemplars.

Then, in the new historical period when the work focus of the party has been shifted, and the economic structural reform has been carried out in a comprehensive manner, will party building still be the capital construction of various constructions? Some comrades are not very clear about this. There are some muddled ideas, that the present party leadership does not hold economic construction as important as before because we stress the practice of acting according to the economic law when we develop the planned socialist commodity economy. When plants and enterprises enforce the system of having directors (managers) assume the full responsibility, the will of directors (managers) will be turned into the voluntary acts of all the workers of the plants and enterprises, as long as the directors' (managers') authority for directing production and administrative work is safeguarded. All the tasks will certainly be fulfilled without giving plan to the role of party organizations and party members, after the household output-related contract responsibility system is implemented in the rural areas, "party branches become useless when contracts are signed with households," and "party members become useless when the responsibility plots are will cultivated." Such ideas are, evidently, wrong. Due to the influence of such wrong ideas, some departments and units neglected party building for a certain period of time, the phenomenon of party organizations taking no charge of party affairs arose in many areas. and the party's ideological and political work became not so powerful among the masses.

We should say that following the in-depth development of the overall economic structural reform, extremely profound changes have taken place in our country's political and economic activities, and other fields, and many new questions on party building have arisen. For instance, what are the fundamental tasks for party building in the new period? What influence have modern science and technology had on party building? What are the major problems in rural party building when a new rural economic system is replacing an old one? How should we exercise correct party leadership in line with the scientific meaning of party leadership when we are building socialism with Chinese characteristics? And so on.

There is no doubt that we should clearly answer these questions by combining theory with practice so that our ideological understanding, state of leadership, and work methods can suit the rapidly developing and changing new situation. However, the principle that party building is the capital construction of various constructions remains unchanged in these numerous and complicated changes. The ruling party should always prioritize on its agenda that the party should take charge of party affairs and should spare no efforts to strengthen party building.

The book "Questions and Answers on Party Building" has selected a wide range of questions, including all the questions mentioned above, and has presented accurate arguments and new views. It will be welcomed by the masses of party members and grass-roots cadres. It is also hoped that this book will play its due role in strengthening party building in the new period.

LIAONING HOLDS MEETING ON ARMY TRANSFER WORK

SK090853 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 0930 GMT 8 May 86

[Text] The work of transferring county and district people's armed forces departments to the local organizational system should be finished by 20 June. This decision was made at the recent provincial meeting on the work of transferring county and district people's armed forces departments to the local organizational system. Liu Dongfan, Standing Committee member of the provincial CPC Committee, deputy head of the leading group in charge of the transfer work, and political commissar of the provincial military district, made a plan for how to achieve the transfer work at the meeting. On behalf of the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial government, Zuo Kun, vice governor of the provincial government, set forth four requirements for achieving the transfer work.

First, leaders of both army units and localities should conscientiously grasp the transfer work through implementing the decision of the central authorities and by taking the whole situation into consideration. Second, leaders of both army units and localities should strengthen their leadership over the transfer work. Third, efforts should be made to handle and solve various specific problems. Fourth, we should regard the transfer work as a new starting point of strengthening the construction of reserve forces.

Sun Qi, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and head of the leading group in charge of the transfer work, attended the meeting and held discussions with the participants. (Wang Youhan), commander of the provincial military district, called on all military subdistricts to rely on and respect the leadership of the local CPC committees and governments over the transfer work, to strictly abide by the discipline, and to resolutely stop and straighten out various unhealthy practices in order to ensure the transfer of good leading bodies and army ranks to the localities.

EMPEROR'S NIECE BECOMES SHENYANG CPPCC MEMBER

OW091019 Beijing XINHUA in English 0942 GMT 9 May 86

[Text] Shenyang, May 7 (XINHUA) --A niece of China's last emperor was elected a member of the Shenyang City committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference (CPPCC) at a recent committee session. Wan Shuying, 44, is the daughter of the sister of China's last emperor, Puyi. She has worked as an engineer in the Shenyang pump plant since graduating from Harbin Industrial University in 1964. A model worker, she has won national awards for technical research.

TAIWAN NO CONTACTS POLICY WITH PRC UNCHANGED

OW131425 Taipei CNA in English 1408 GMT 13 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 13 (CNA) -- The basic stand and national policy of the Government of the Republic of China not to contact the Chinese Communists remains unchanged, Dr. Chang King-yuh, director general of the Government Information Office [GIO], reiterated Tuesday. He said the Peiping regime would arouse public indignation in the world community if it attempted to blackmail the Republic of China politcally using the China Airlines' Boeing 747 cargo jet and crew members stranded in the mainland as hostages. The GIO chief noted that the diversion of the CAL cargo jet to the China mainland May 3 is a simple, individual flight incident. "Communist China should release the CAL jet and its crew and cargo immediately without any conditions," he added.

MORE COMMUNISTS SEEKING FREEDOM IN TAIWAN

OW030511 Taipei International Service in English 0200 GMT 3 May 86

[Station commentary]

[Text] Free China on Taiwan has opened its arms to another freedom seeker from the Chinese mainland. The arrival in Taipei on Wednesday of Chen Pao-chung, a former MiG-19 pilot, from the Republic of Korea after a sojourn of 69 days also proved that Seoul upholds international law and the principles of humanitarianism despite its efforts to mend fences with Peiping.

The 26-year-old Chen, who flew his reconnaissance plane to a South Korean military base last February 21, is the fifth military pilot who rejected communism to seek freedom in the Republic of China over a period of less than five years. Six civilians also chose South Korea as a midway station in their dash to freedom in 1982 when they commandeered a Trident jetliner on its way from Shenyang to Shanghai in a bid to reach Taiwan.

Two years ago, a Chinese Communist naval torpedo boat also made its way to Korean waters after two of the crew members tried to flee to Taiwan. Unfortunately, the Korean authorities sent them back to Red China and their death. There have been many other failed attempts by the mainland people to reach free China by air or sea. Some of these incidents have been reported.

Besides the highly publicized defections from Red China, a large number of Chinese intellectuals have come to the Republic of China from the mainland by way of foreign countries. The freedom seekers include musicians, writers, engineers, scientists and other elites of the Chinese mainland. They are the ones Peiping needs most badly for its modernization scheme.

The number of other less-known freedm seekers are too numerous to be counted. The Free China Relief Association reported recently that it has helped some 170,000 refugees to resettle in Taiwan. The figure does not include the 14,000 Chinese communist prisoners of war in the Korean war who came to the Republic of China en bloc.

Dr Chang King-yuh, director general of the Republic of China's Goverment Information Office, interpreted the defection of Chinese Communist pilots as a sign that the Chinese Communist Armed Forces are sorely beset with problems. He also took note of the fact that the people on the mainland, if given the chance, would seek freedom by air, sea, or land. They reject Marxism-Leninism and the Chinese Communist system.

Quoting President Chiang Ching-kuo that the attraction of the Taiwan experience will become the motivating force of the mainland people to overthrow the communist tyranny, Chang said Chen Pao-chung's flight to freedom has demonstrated that the Republic of China's call for national reunification under democracy is, in his words, a course dictated by consensus of the Chinese people, the logical outcome of historical events and the actual trends in national and international development. The facts are here for everybody to see. Chen Pao-chung's dash to freedom is one of the latest examples of the Chinese people's choice.

COMMENTARY CONDEMNS COMMUNIST MEDIA NEWS BLACKOUTS

OW140613 Taipei International Service in English 0200 GMT 14 May 86

[Station commentary: "Downplaying Disaster"]

[Text] News blackout is the first instinctive response of a dictator when that news is negative. Only after the Scandinavians proclaimed the rise in radiation levels and looked in the upwind direction and demanded information from the USSR did the Soviets admit to a problem. The United States Secretary of State George Shultz obviously has access to U.S. satellite information. He made a comment to the effect that Americans know more than the Soviets have told.

Rather surprisingly, a UPI lead paragraph, from Moscow, says, and we quote: The Soviet Union, inexperienced in disasters like the Chernobyl nuclear accident, has responded with an information blackout that could hurt Mikhail Gorbachev's standing abroad. But Gorbachev is the USSR. The USSR's response is Gorbachev's response. Who would dare either to speak or remain silent without the express approval of Gorbachev? When did you ever read a TASS or PRAVDA Press release anything like the following? Aeroflot flight 123 crashed at 3 pm, killing all 350 Soviet citizens aboard. Never. No Soviet air disasters are ever publicized unless foreigners are on board -- people about whom some embassies will be making official inquires.

As a matter of fact, no communist regime, from Red China to Albania, ever publicized airplane crashes unless foreigners are aboard. The International Airline Pilots' Association has complained for years about the communists refusal to share detailed safety information, all to no avail. Achievements, they boast of, of course, problems, they deny. It is the nature of the beast.

Remember the worst Chinese earthquake disaster within living memory? Red China first tried to hide it, consistently refused any outside aid, and published no hard data for 6 months, finally admitting on 4 January 1977, to 650,000 killed, but later raised to 750,000. Almost 3 years later, the party news agency revised that drastically downward to 242,000. With sadness for our unfree mainland compatriots, we naturally prefer the lowest number of casualities -- but with routine blackouts and obfuscation, when will anyone ever know the truth of the matter?

Russian or Chinese Communist, Yugoslavian or Albanian, the communist presentation of news must always serve the dictatorship of what they called the people. The attempt at secrecy is the direct result of TASS and PRAVDA functioning not to inform the people -- but to serve the party.

LATE REPORT: MEETING WITH PRC ON CAL IN HONG KONG 19 MAY

HK141123 Hong Kong AFP in English 1120 GMT 14 May 86

[Excerpts] Taipei, May 14 (AFP) -- China Airlines (CAL) Wednesday said it would meet Chinese officials Monday in Hong Kong to discuss a cargo jet and its crew diverted to China in a defection May 3, CAL spokesman Lin Liang-chih said. Taiwan's flag carrier Tuesday had said it would have face-to-face discussions with CAAC [Civil Aviation Administration of China] officials over the return of a Boeing 747 cargo jet, two crew members and its cargo in what would be the first official contact between Taipei and Beijing since 1949. CAL set the meeting for Monday after the Civil Aviation Administration of China [CAAC] requested that CAL's suggestion to meet on Friday this week be delayed, he said. He said CAAC officials believed they had too short a notice to meet on Friday.

The Hong Kong-based Cathay Pacific Airways relayed CAL's decision to the CAAC, he said. (In Hong Kong, Cathay Pacific has declined comments on the matter).

"Out of deep concerns over the safety of the crew and eagerness to save them, we agreed to postpone the negotiations until May 19," Mr Lin said.

Taiwan maintains a no contact policy regarding Beijing, which is trying to get Taiwan to reunite under a "one country, two systems" policy it is planning to use on Hong Kong when Britain relinquishes sovereignty in 1997.

(In Beijing Wednesday, China remained silent on the issue. A CAAC spokesman when asked about the offer said that nothing had been received from Taiwan and that "we have nothing to say on the matter." Foreign correspondents at a weekly Foreign Ministry press briefing also ran into a wall of silence over the affair.

(Spokesman Li Zhaoxing refused to answer questions on the Taiwan offer and said that it was the responsibility of the CAAC. The Chinese press also generally ignored the offer. The only mention of the proposal came briefly in the English-language CHINA DAILY, which is mainly read by foreigners.)

Taiwan after the defection reported that China had sent two telegrams to CAL asking it to send representatives to Beijing to discuss the return of the plane and two crew.

(In Hong Kong Wednesday, CAAC's Hong Kong General Manager Xue Jingwu said China had insisted that any negotiations between China and Taiwan on the aircraft should involve only representatives of the two countries. He told Radio-Television Hong Kong that Cathay Pacific should not be involved as an intermediary. He said China had indicated to Taiwan that negotiation could be held in areas outside China but that his office had not received any instructions from Beijing on the matter.)

CHENG MING DETAILS CRIMES OF CPC CADRE FAMILIES

HK091035 Hong Kong CHENG MING in Chinese No 103, 1 May 86 pp 8-12

["Notes on a Northern Journey" by Luo Ping: "Doubts as to Whether Tigers Are Butchered To Cover Up Things" -- first paragraph is CHENG MING introduction]

[Text] Taking advantage of the tiger hunt, the leaders of the two factions in the CPC are trying to expose the mistakes of their adversaries. More and more problems are being exposed each day; neither side can benefit from this. This not only shows how dirty and mean these people really are but has also led to the worsening of the CPC confidence crisis. It looks as if the campaign will come to an end very soon.

A Game Played by Pulling Others' Pigtails

Not long ago, the leaders of the reformists and conservatives in the CPC played a game of pulling each other's pigtails. They tried to find out and expose each other's mistakes. The game was very exciting.

What are the pigtails? The pigtail that has so far drawn the most attention is that of the involvement of "cadre children" in commercial activities. They have also exposed criminal and economic offenses committed by the children of their adversaries. Professing to be upholders of orthodox Marxism-Leninism and honest and decent people, some conservative leaders are extremely critical of the reformists and their reforms, and they made the first attempt to expose the reformists' mistakes. Seeing that there was no need to show restraint, the reformists mounted a counterattack and dealt the conservatives a heavy blow by letting Hu Xiaoyang, the rapist son of Hu Lijiao (formerly the second secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee and currently chairman of the Standing Committee of the Shanghai Municipal People's Congress and a follower of Chen Yun), publicly disgrace his family. The playboy and another two rapists were sentenced to death. Shortly after this, the children of some conservative, non-reformist cadres, including Hu Qiaomu's son Hu Shiying, Peng Zhen's daughter, Fu Yan, and Ye Fei's daughter Ye Zhifeng, were arrested, tried, and sentenced for suspected or proven economic crimes.

Public Security Men Seized an Opportunity To Arrest Hu Qiaomu's Son

The family of Hu Qiaomu, the old Marxist-Leninist preacher, is also involved in a scandal. Beijing citizens must have "heard this with great pleasure."

On the evening of 7 March, when Hu Qiaomu and his wife Gu Yu were enjoying themselves at a cinema, public security men entered their residence and arrested their son Hu Shiying, who happened to be at home. On his return, Hu Qiaomu realized that the public security men had seized the opportunity to arrest his son. Although he was very angry, he could do nothing about it.

Unaware that something had happened to Hu Qiao, a young reporter from FUMU BIDU [PARENTS MUST READ] called on Hu Qiaomu, asking him how he taught his own son. In addition, the reporter also asked him his opinion of FUMU BIDU. Hu Qiaomu thought the reporter was teasing him, so he sullenly said: "I am not the right person to comment on this." The reporter was at a loss to hear that. If Hu is not the right person to comment on that, who is? Hu Qiaomu did not realize that he reporter was ill-informed.

"I Hate Two Persons Most. They are Chiang Kai-Shek and..."

However, the news that Hu Shiying has been arrested is gaining momentum in the cultural circles.

Although Hu Qiaomu is embarrassed, as the CPC's number one theorist, he is, however, also quick-witted. He keeps telling people everywhere: "I have hated two persons most in my life. They are Chiang Kai-shek and my son." This son naturally refers to Hu Shiying, who is in prison. Hu Shiying, about 40, is a cofounder of RENCAI magazine and was once a RENMIN RIBAO reporter. He has also worked with some other magazines. It would be unfair to say that this playboy is not enterprising. However, it is obvious that his desire for wealth and fame got the better of him. After working with the Postgraduate Institute of the Academy of Social Sciences of China for some time, he established a "Center for Legal Studies by Correspondence" and publicized it everywhere. More than 100,000 people applied for admission. The tuition fee was 70 yuan for each person. Thus, he made a fortune of several million yuan. He considered this money has private property and he freely spent it without entering it in an account. Later, the center was not allowed to be established. Hu Shiying returned the tuition fees to some. However, some 40,000 people did not receive a refund and they reported this to the judicial authorities.

Hu Shiying was summoned to a procuratorate, where he was questioned. Among the people responsibile for handling the case, there was a young man who was enrolled by Hu's center for legal studies by correspondence. Following is the interesting conversation between them:

"Why did you establish a center for legal studies by correspondence?'

"I wanted to popularize legal knowledge...."

"In that case, you must have sound legal knowledge."

"Now, there is no need to teach us by correspondence. Just teach us face-to-face."

Although Hu Shiying had embezzled a large sum of tuition fees, he could not give the people a refund. He ended up in a prison [as published], where he was tried.

A Family Beset With Tragedies

The family of Hu Qiaomu, an old preacher of Marxism-Leninism, has been very unlucky. Hu's eldest son was persecuted and killed during the Cultural Revolution. His youngest daughter is a mental patient at Beijing's Anding Hospital. And now, Hu Shiying, another son of Hu Qiaomu, is in jail. In addition, it is alleged that Gu Yu, Hu Qiaomu's wife, who works on the party committee of the Academy of Social Sciences of China, used as large sum of the academy's experiment funds to finance a Zhonghua (or China) New Technology Development Corporation. Some people say that the great loss incurred in the business "jointly started" by Cu Yu and Wang Chun has aroused the attention of the relevant authorities. It seems that Hu Qiaomu's family is beset with tragedies. Of course, the most tragic thing is that with his rigid mind, the old man will persistently continue to "fight for the communist cause for the rest of his life."

The Daughters of Peng Zhen and Xiao Jingguang Have Committee Offenses, and Xiao Kai Has Been Sentenced to 6 Years' Imprisonment.

In the "Notes on a Northern Journey" in the March issue of CHENG MING, I touched on the economic crimes committed by Xiao Jingguang's daughter. Xiao Kai, Xiao Jingguang's daughter, was the first daughter born to the general and his ex-wife. When she was a section head in the China Film Distribution Corporation, she received bribes and commissions. She was arrested and sentenced to 6 years' imprisonment in February this year.

When the news that something had happened to Xiao Jingguang's family became known to the public, some thought that his son Xiao Zhoneng had committed an economic offense. In the "Notes on a Northern Journey" in the March issue of CHENG MING, I said: "The arrested person is certainly not Xiao Zhuoneng." Xiao Zhuoneng's wife is a famous singer named Li Guyi.

A fellow journalist told me that his friend had learned about Xiao Zhuoneng's death not long ago and that "Li Guyi is now a widow."' This news must first be verified because not long ago, some Beijing newpaper reported on Li Guyi's happy family life.

At the news briefing on 24 March, reporters embarrassed Zeng Tao, the responsible person at the news briefing, by pinpointing the economic cases involving Peng Zhen's son and daughter. Zeng's answers to the reporters' questions were a classic example of evasive tactics. However, to evade something is to admit that something is true. It seems that with the approval of CPC authorities, verdicts will be made very soon.

Wan Chun Approves the Use of $2 Million by His Son To Start His Business

As reported in the March issue of CHENG MING, the problems with Peng Zhen's son and daughter are connected with the Wang Chun case. Wang Chun, formerly vice mayor of Beijing, was once a vice chairman of the Beijing Municipal Advisory Committee. His is suspected of being involved in a case of receiving a bribe of $300,000 in exporting 300,00 tons of coal at lower than the official price. Peng Zhen's son and daughter are also suspected of being involved in this case and they have been questioned. In fact, at the end of last year, the central authorities issued and official document to suspend Wang Chun from his duties for investigation. In adddition to his involvement in the coal export case, it is also alleged than when he was vice mayor of Beijing and responsible for Beijing's industry and introduction of foreign capital, he approved the use of $2 million by his son to start his own business.

(The "Notes on a Northern Journey" in the March issue of CHENG MING reported that Fu Yan, Peng Zhen's daughter, who is suspected of having committed an economic crime, was called Fu Yan when she was a small child, and that before the end of last year, Peng Zhen went with her to Xi Shan to plant trees. In the March issue, Fu Yan was misprinted as Fu Ping. It is corrected here.)

Ye Fei's Daughter Has Another Backstage Boss

Many Beijing citizens may have heard the "hearsay" about Peng Zhen's children. However, people more frequently gossip about the case involving the daughter of Ye Fei (ex-minister of navy) [as published], vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, than the case about the family of the chairman of the NPC Standing Committee.

One of Ye Fei's daughters is named Ye Zhifeng (another of his daughters is named Ye Xiaolan, who is the secretary general of the Xiamen City People's Government). Another of her backstage bosses is her maternal grandfather Jian Hua, ex-president of the Supreme Peoples Court (according to another source, her maternal grandfather is Chen Pixian). Between October 1984 and April 1985 -- about the time when people ran wild reselling motor vehicles -- backed by her backstage bosses and taking advantage of her office as deputy director of the Import and Export Bureau under the State Economic Commission, she divulged, through Zheng Changsheng, an employee of the Minority Nationality Economic and Cultural Development Corporation, the country's confidential information about auto imports to foreign and Hong Kong businessmen on several occasions. In addition, when some Chinese companies were negotiating with some foreign businessmen on the import of motor vehicles, she put pressure on the companies and told them to accept the prices offered by the foreign businessmen.

Meanwhile, Zhang Changsheng gave advice to these foreign businessmen. In the course of the talks between a Hong Kong businessman and some Chinese companies, Ye Zhifeng learned that the state was about to make some changes in connection with the signing of import contracts, and she and Zhang Changsheng prompted this Hong Kong businessman to deceive the state department in charge by changing the date of the contract and by other means. In the course of these illegal activities, Ye and Zhang received bribes. In the course of other illegal activities (such as the case in which she applied for approval for the import of motor vehicles by Shenzhen's Zhonghua bus company and Chongqing's Changan machine-tool plant), she also received much ill-gotten money.

Disturbances Within the Outside Zhongnanhai

Informed by a French automobile company of the crimes committed by Ye Zhifeng (refer to "Notes on a Northern Journey," CHENG MING, March issue), Beijing's public security organs obtained evidence of the crimes of Ye and Zhang through investigations. Consequently, Ye and Zhang were arrested and prosecuted. The court tried the case secretly.

During this period, a disturbance involving the Ye and Zhang case was stirred up in Zhongnanhai. The relevant CPC departments had already decided to execute Zhang Changsheng and sentence Ye Zhifeng to 6 years' imprisonment. The case evoked strong repercussions among senior cadres because the fates of the two differed though they were involved in the same crime. They were against the decision though they were involved in the same crime. They were against the decision on sentencing Ye Zhifeng to 6 years imprisonment, which was too lenient. Some said that it ran counter to the principle "all people are equal before law." At this moment, Deng Xiaoping had something to declare. He preferred prolonging the term of Ye Zhifeng's imprisonment. As a result, the Beijing Intermediate People's Court sentenced Zhang Changsheng to death and Ye Zhifeng to 17 years imprisonment on 27 March. The appeal lodged by Zhang and Ye was rejected. Zhang was executed on 14 April.

Zhang Changsheng is a son of a senior army cadre (deputy director of the Foreign Affairs Bureau of the PLA General Staff Headquarters), so his execution can be regarded as killing a tiger.

A friend from the political and legal circles told me that Ye Zhifeng deserved capital punishment. She was treated leniently because during the trial she declared that if she were sentenced to death, at the court she would make public a list of several hundred senior cadres and their children involved in economic crime. As this was no trivial matter, the public security organs, the procuratorial organs, and the people's courts and the leaders of the CPC proposed mitigating her term of punishment. They first proposed 6 years' imprisonment and later changed it to 17 years. It can thus be seen that "all people are equal before law" is just an empty promise!

Some People Believed That Zhang Was Executed To Do Away With the Witness

Following the final court decision on the Ye and Zhang case, there was a public outcry in Beijing. People talked about the matter when they learned about the Ye and Zhang case and Ye's background from hearsay and the XINHUA reports carried in newspapers. They looked at the matter in the following ways:

First, viewed from the XINHUA reporters, Ye Zhifeng is the principal offender in the case. It was Ye who had access to state classified information, who disclosed classified information to foreign and Hong Kong businessmen, who forced the relevant departments on the Chinese side to accept the prices offered by foreign businessmen, and who instructed the Hong Kong businessmen to backdate the signing of the contracts so as to make double profits. In these illegal activities, Zhang Changsheng was only Ye's assistant and follower.

Second, in addition to leakage of state secrets and abuse of power to import cars, Ye Zhifeng also committed other crimes. This shows that Ye Zhifeng is sinful and has gone even farther than Zhang Changsheng.

Third, according to the news reports, Zhang Changsheng received bribes totaling HK$1,908,000 and gave only HK$25,000 to Ye Zhifeng. But this cannot prove that Zhang Changsheng is guiltier than Ye Zhifeng. If the reports are true, it merely indicates that Zhang cheated Ye, which should be "a case within the case" and have nothing to do with the case of disclosing classified information to Hong Kong businessmen and accepting bribes.

Moreover, people in Beijing really doubted the amount of HK$25,000 and 7,000 yuan Ye Zhifeng shared. It has been reported that the officers and men of the public security organs, the procuratoral organs, and the people's courts searched Ye Zhifeng's house and found over $100,000 in cash, which is 40 to 50 times the amount of HK$25,000. People asked where the U.S. dollars came from. Because the XINHUA reports revealed a series of questionable points, the people believed that Zhang Changsheng's capital punishment, which he did not deserve, was "a conspiracy of killing the man to do away with the witness." By so doing, they can protect Ye Zhifeng as well as a large number of people involved.

During this period, the general offices of the State Council, the CPC Central Committee, the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, and the offices of Deng Xiaoping and Hu Yaobang received large numbers of letters from the masses complaining about the unfairness and questionable points of the Ye and Zheng case. The matter really shocked Deng Xiaoping and Hu Yaobang.

XINHUA's Special Report Failed To Assuage Public Indignation

In order to assuage public indignation, the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee received instructions to explain the case to the people. With the arrangements made by the Propaganda Department, XINHUA released a report on 19 April entitled "Zhang Xu, Vice President of the Standing Committee of the Beijing Law Society, Answers Questions Raised by a BEIJING RIBAO Reporter on the Case of Zhang Changsheng and Ye Zhifeng Divulging State Secrets and Accepting Bribes Decided by the Beijing Intermediate People's Court." The central idea of the report was to explain why Zhang Changsheng should suffer punishment more severe than Ye Zhifeng. However, the report was a foolish attempt at an explanation. As the explanations made were not convincing, it became a matter of much discussion among the people. They asked indignantly:

Who says that a prince is punished nowadays as a common person when he commits a crime?
Who says that all people are now equal before law?
What is the system prevailing in China now, rule by man or rule by law?
Should officials be superior to law or law be superior to officials?

It seems that the disturbance has created a terrific shock. Now the people have profoundly realized that it would be impossible to attain the anticipated results of party rectification if the privileges of the CPC and the practices of bureaucrats shielding one another are not changed.

The Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee Criticizes Hong Kong's TA KUNG PAO.

As a matter of fact, party rectification is going through the motions and the tiger has encountered numerous difficulties and obstructions. Please look at the following story:

On 14 February, Hong Kong's TA KUNG PAO carried an item dispatched from Beijing that accurately reported the story of former Beijing Vice Mayor Wang Chun being tried for economic problems and the children of a number of senior cadres involved being examined by the judicial organs. They included the children of Generals Ye Fei and Xiao Jingguang and Hu Qiaomu's son. It is said that the exclusive report of strict accuracy has attracted wide attention in Hong Kong and abroad.

Hong Kong's WEN WEI PO did not carry the news that day. As a result, people in Hong Kong said that TA KUNG PAO was well-informed. Later, WEN WEI PO competed fiercely with TA KUNG PAO in reporting the crimes committed by children of influential families. However, TA KUNG PAO got into trouble because it was the first to report the economic crimes committed by children of senior cadres. The leader of the Propaganda Department was alarmed when he was informed of the matter. He immediately asked for the TA KUNG PAO reporter who dispatched the news (the reporter was probably busy gathering news so he went to the Propaganda Department a bit late) and gave him a good dressing down. TA KUNG PAO actually had a certain extent of "decisionmaking power" in reporting news.

Following the incident, it seems that the Propaganda Department has regained the "decisionmaking power." When Beijing's court sentenced Ye Fei's daughter to 17 years' imprisonment and Zhang Changsheng to death on 13 April, TA KUNG PAO dared not report the news that day. However, WEN WEI PO took advantage of "the loopholes in law" and ingeniously reported the news. But the move also evoked repercussions in Beijing.

This story gives much food for deep thought.

The Tiger Hunt is Drawing to an End

The game played in Zhongnanhai in which each side tried to seize on the mistakes and shortcomings of the other lasted for a short period and cooled down because there were to many people on both sides involved in economic problems. If the struggle continues, it will further expose the dark aspect of the CPC and will benefit no one. Although the tiger hunt began with tremendous force, we believe it will wind up very soon. Naturally, the major cases will still be examined, tried, and handled. It is estimated that the "7 major cases" and the "10 major cases" will be decided and made public one after another, which will give people the impression that the tiger hunt is going on and that the highest authorities are trying to change the image of the CPC through the seemingly true-and-false "movement."

Shen Tu Cuckholds His Son and Attempts To Escape

Meanwhile, hearsay of senior cadres and their children committing crimes spread far and wide.

— Bo Yibo's son, secretary of Liaoning's Jinxian County, had a considerable amount of bank savings abroad.

— Ye Yuanping's younger brother was involved in economic problems, but the people of the relevant departments could not "find" him because he lived in the "marshal's residence."

— Ye Ting's son who worked in the 7th Ministry of Machine Building was questionable in money matters. However, he avoided trouble because he was Zhou Enlai's adopted son and Deng Yingchao said: "He is not a bad boy!"

— Chen Muhua's son resold instruments of ratification for cars in Zhuhai.

Some of these reports are probably rumors. Nevertheless, it shows that the struggle has not ended yet, though the prospect will be "a pact shielding each other and peaceful coexistence." The story of Shen Tu's return after his visit abroad is very interesting. We have a report on Shen Tu in the "Notes on a Northern Journey" in the March issue of CHENG MING. Shen Tu was suspected of accepting bribes while purchasing Boeing airplanes and having a savings account of U.S. $2 to 3 million in the United States. As a result, he was examined and investigated by the political and legal organs. It has been reported that his problem is related to his 29-year-old daughter-in-law Chen. Shen Tu, who has sexual relations with Chen, is referred to as one of "Beijing's four scandalous adulterers." Chen intended to leave the "wolf's den" so she disclosed the story of Shen Tu receiving bribes. According to another source, Shen Tu's big problems are being turned into small ones. This report needs to be further verified.

The crisis in the people's confidence in the party further intensified instead of being eased through the tiger hunt. This is a hard nut for the reformers to crack. This question once again reminds the reformers: While carrying out the reform of the economic structure, it is necessary to reform the political structure. Otherwise, it will be impossible to achieve the anticipated results.

PRC PONDERS LAUNCHING SPACESHIP BY YEAR 2000

HK100618 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 10 May 86 p 1

[Special dispatch: "China Now Having Lively Discussions on Launching a Spaceship"]

[Text] When meeting foreign correspondents stationed in Beijing this afternoon, China's well-known scientist Qian Xuesen revealed that China had not made a decision yet on the issue of launching a spaceship by the turn of this century. He said: China is now having lively discussions on this issue, but the technological personnel do not share a common viewpoint. When asked if he agreed, Qian Xuesen said: I advocate the development of spaceflight industry. This is because judging from human history, spaceflight reflects an advancement of mankind. Proceeding from a long-term viewpoint, we must develop it. When asked what psychological impact the space shuttle accident in the United States made on the people of China, Qian Xuesen said: Our technological personnel did not decide on matters with their emotions. In history, many people lost their lives when transporation developed from land to sea travel. Also, many people lost their lives when air flight travel was developed. Now we are going to outer space. It is inevitable that some people will lose their lives. But history is advancing.

EDITORIAL ADVOCATES FREEDOM ACROSS TAIWAN STRAITS

HK080329 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 8 May 86 p 6

[Editorial: "Freer Movement Across the Taiwan Straits"]

[Text] China laid on the works. By plane, train and limousine the Chinese rushed an old man and his three sons to Beijing airport for a reunion with Taiwan's defecting pilot, Wang Xijue. To see his aging father again was, after all, Wang's reason for giving up home, family and the comforts of a "model military hero" for the uncertainties of life on the mainland. Chinese officials went out of the way to expedite reunion for sheer propaganda reasons. China is unashamedly milking the incident for all it is worth. Not a crime in that; all countries do such things.

But it serves to underscore the human tragedy that is now buried in the mass of speculative stories about what China and Taiwan will do about the future of that jumbo jet and the two crewmen who want to go home.

It is the tragedy of families kept apart in time, space and ideology. It is now 37 years since Chiang Kai-shek took the remnants of his defeated Nationalist Army across the Taiwan Straits to build their last redoubt on the island. In the end, the blood ties remain. Never severed, but throbbing with pain and anguish. Deep down the leaders on both sides know this. There is no other reason why, despite the laws making it a crime, there is such a big movement of people back and forth across the Taiwan Straits. The movement is not acknowledged, but the people are not punished. [sentence as published] In private discussions this is freely admitted. The reason, of course, is that to a man these people do not matter. They are common folk whose passage across the Straits does not embarrass governments or policies on either side of the great divide. Besides, the movement across the Straits leaves the greater majority of the divided families untouched. High officials remain unyielding. They are made of sterner stuff. Or expected to be. Now Mr Wang has punctured this belief. He is human after all.

There have been many defections from the mainland to Taiwan, the United States and elsewhere. But the underlying motivation has usually been ideological or material. Like China today, all these other countries have played those defections for all their propaganda worth. But Mr Wang's defection exposes the basic weakness of the Taiwan regime now that China has opened her doors. Long billed as a bulwark against communism and a staunch member of the so-called "free world," Taiwanese leaders have never really been all that confident about her own people. Hence the legal deterrence against visits to China.

The time has perhaps come for Taiwan to re-examine this basic tenet of its China policy. It may be a long while yet before both sides of the Straits will come to terms. But 37 years of divided families is a long time. A more humane approach is called for.

The Guangzhou director of the Civil Aviation Administration of China, Mr Yu Yanen, was of course speaking rhetorically when he said: "Laws can be changed," when told that Taiwan official cannot go to China to negotiate the return of the plane. But there is a lot of truth to that statement. Changing the law would be a test of Taiwan's faith in its own system and in its achievements. It is far better that its own people can see things for themselves and to make their own choice.

Some of the younger leaders of today's Taiwan concede in private that a modus vivendi of sorts with the mainland is inevitable after the departure from the scene of President Chiang Ching-kuo. A change in the law to allow a freer movement of people across the Taiwan Straits will make it easier for that modus vivendi to come about. Without that change Mr Wang can no longer return to Taiwan to see his family. For how many generations should this great divide be perpetuated.

The China and Taiwan division is not the only one that has separated families. There's the two Germanies, the two Koreas. They are as stubborn as China and Taiwan about their ideological differences. Yet both Germanies and Koreas have arranged for family reunions. China and Taiwan can do the same.

It is well to remember that not all who fled China in the early 1950's went to Taiwan. Many settled elsewhere. And a lot of them have since returned to the mainland for family reunions without being bothered by Chinese officials. Taiwan cannot be unaware of this. They have people here in Hong Kong. And Hong Kong people travel back and forth across the border every day.

PRC UN ENVOY CALLS FOR HALT TO NAVAL ARMS RACE

OW150214 Beijing XINHUA in English 0157 GMT 15 May 86

[Text] United Nations, May 14 (XINHUA) -- China today called on the two superpowers to stop their naval arms race and take the lead in drastically reducing their nuclear and conventional naval forces. The appeal was made by Fan Guoxiang, the newly-appointed Chinese ambassador to the United Nations on disarmament affairs, at the annual meeting of the U.N. Disarmament Commission devoted to the question of "naval arms race and disarmament."

Fan said, "The United States and the Soviet Union are now the only two countries possessing world-wide navies." They possess not only "the absolute majority of the world's total submarine-launched ballistic missiles," but also a conventional naval force "far exceeding that of any other country." "The possibility of their using nuclear weapons and their capacity for intervention against other countries have caused anxiety among many small and medium-sized coastal countries," he added.

He also pointed out that for years the two superpowers have been fiercely competing with each other for combat effectiveness and survivability of their naval forces. The rivalry "not only contributes to the tension in their bilateral relations, but also seriously jeopardizes international security, freedom on the high seas, international shipping routes and the exploitation of marine resources."

The Chinese ambassador said that in face of the global-scale naval arms race between the United States and the Soviet Union and its wide-spread threat to international security, "It is totally justified" for the other coastal countries, particularly the developing countries, to strive to develop their own naval forces in order to guard against outside aggression and protect their maritime rights and interests.

He stressed that the Soviet Union and the United States, the two biggest naval powers in the world, should take the lead in limiting and drastically reducing their nuclear and conventional naval forces, particularly their ocean-going nuclear forces and conventional offensive weapons. With these goals being achieved, other nuclear-weapon states and major naval powers should then participate in the nuclear and conventional disarmament, he added.

Fan also said that "should coastal conventional naval forces exceed the reasonable need of defense, their reduction also has to be effected." But, "as this question does not have a global significance, its solution should be sought in a smaller scope within the region concerned or among the countries concerned."

Ambassador Fan also expressed his appreciation of the initiatives to establish peace zones in the Indian Ocean, the Mediterranean and other sea areas. "The establishment of peace zones with oceans as primary constituents is an effective way to control the naval arms race and avert the use of naval forces for intervention and aggression," he declared. He called on all nuclear-weapon states, particularly those with huge nuclear arsenals, to "fully respect the already established nuclear weapon-free zones, including the waters within these zones."

The 1986 annual meeting of the U.N. Disarmament Commission began on May 5 and will conclude at the end of this month.

PRC TO LAUNCH U.S. COMMUNICATIONS SATELLITES

OW150146 Beijing XINHUA in English 0315 GMT 15 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 15 (XINHUA) -- China will use its "Long March-3" rockets to launch two American communications satellites, the Astronautics Industry Ministry confirmed here today. A memorandum of agreement to launch the satellites was signed between China's Great Wall Industry Corporation and the U.S. Teresat Inc. in New York April 20, said Chen Shouchun, chief engineer of the scientific research and production bureau under the ministry. Chen, who had just returned to Beijing after attending the signing ceremony, said that the first American Satellite will be put into its geostationary orbit in December 1987 and the second will be launched some time in 1988.

This will be the second time for China to launch satellites for a foreign customer since it announced last October that its launching vehicles would be offered for international service. Earlier this year, the Swedish space company asked China to launch a Mailstar satellite. The "Long March-3" carrier rockets have been used to launch China's two earth-synchronous satellites.

ZHAO CALLS ON U.S. TO EASE TECHNOLOGY TRANSFERS

OW141236 Beijing XINHUA in English 1222 GMT 14 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 14 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang today called on the government of the United States to open its doors wider and reduce restrictions on technology transfers to China. He suggested that the two countries combine technology transfers with cooperative production and the establishment of joint-venture enterprises. The Chinese premier made these remarks at a meeting with a delegation from the United Technologies Corporation (UTC), led by former U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig and UTC Chairman Harry J. Gray, here this afternoon.

Zhao said that it is more suitable for China to conduct cooperative production and run joint-venture enterprises in the interests of both China and the U.S. He expressed the hope to further Sino-U.S. trade and see more Chinese products enter the U.S. market. "If that happens, China's ability to buy U.S. products will be heightened," he added.

He pointed out that Sino-U.S. trade amounts to a very small portion of the U.S. external trade. "We'd like to see people of various circles in the U.S. make efforts to further promote Sino-U.S. trade", he said. Zhao told the visitors that UTC has had very fruitful cooperation with China, which should be further expanded.

Haig replied that he would work for the promotion of Sino-U.S. relations, especially trade and cooperation in economic fields. He also expressed his opposition to protectionism. Gray told the Chinese premier that UTC is willing to cooperate with China in technology transfers and personnel training. The Otis Elevator Co., a UTC subcompany, has carried out sound cooperation with China in this regard. Although many of the UTC subcompanies have opened offices in China, he said, UTC itself is prepared to open an office in Beijing to further its contacts with various Chinese departments and enterprises. Zhao also exchanged views with Haig on international issues.

YAO YILIN WELCOMED BY SHULTZ IN WASHINGTON

OW150112 Beijing XINHUA in English 0101 GMT 15 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 14 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice-Premier Yao Yilin arrived here today on a 10-day official visit to the United States at the invitation of U.S. Vice-President George Bush. U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz welcomed the Chinese vice premier at the Madison Hotel where Yao stays during his stay in Washington. On hand at Andrews Air Force Base to greet Yao Yilin and his party were Gaston Sigur, U.S. assistant secretary of state; Winston Lord, U.S. ambassador to China; Brigadier General Edward N. Gidding, commander of Air Force, district of Washington. Zhang Zai, minister of the Chinese Embassy in Washington, was present on the occasion. During his visit, Yao will co-chair the fourth session of the China-U.S. Joint Commission on Commerce and Trade. Yao Yilin and his party arrived in San Francisco from Beijing on May 12. While in San Francisco, Yao Yilin attended a banquet given in his honor by Dianne Feinstein, mayor of the city, and met with noted businessmen.

Addresses Banquet in His Honor

OW150956 Beijing XINHUA in English 0934 GMT 15 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 14 (XINHUA) -- Sino-U.S. economic and trade relations must be based on equality, mutual trust and benefits to ensure an overall, stable and sustained development, Yao Yilin, Chinese vice premier of the State Council, said tonight. Yao, speaking at a dinner in his honor, is on a 10-day official visit to the United States at the invitation of U.S. Vice President George Bush. He is also going to head the fourth session of the the China-U.S. Joint Commission on Commerce and Trade (JCCT) during his visit.

U.S. Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldrige said economic and trade relations between the United States and China have been promoted as a result of efforts by both sides. The joint commission's history is not long, Baldrige said, but it is inspiring so far. He said he believes that this session will equal and surpass achievements of previous sessions.

Yao replied, saying with the rapid developments of Sino-U.S. trade in recent years, the United States has now become the third largest partner in China's foreign trade. According to Yao, besides trade, great potential in economic and technological cooperation between the two countries remains to be tapped. He stressed that China offers numerous opportunities for Sino-U.S. cooperation. Attending the dinner were members of Yao's party, the Chinese delegation for the commission sessions, and diplomats from the Chinese Embassy in Washington. U.S. Deputy Secretary of State John Whitehead, Assistant Secretary of State Gaston Sigur, U.S. Ambassador to China Winston Lord, under Secretary for International Trade Bruce Smart and members of the American delegation attending the fourth session of the JCCT. Yao, who arrived today, met with Clayton Yeutter, U.S. special trade representative, this afternoon.

YANG DEZHI VISITS VARIOUS SITES IN CALIFORNIA

[Text] Washington, May 14, (XINHUA) -- Yang Dezhi, chief of the general staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army, and his party visited the McDonnell Douglas Helicopter Corporation in Culver City, near Los Angeles, California this afternoon.

Yang, accompanied by the executive President of the Douglas Helicopter Division Al Haggerty, viewed 500e model helicopter flight demonstration. Yang arrived in Los Angeles yesterday evening. This morning he toured Universal Studios in Unversal City, California. Yesterday they visited the Pradley fighting vehicle assembly plant in San Jose and the Moffett Field Navel Air Station, California.

U.S. AEROSPACE EXHIBIT OPENS IN BEIJING

OW150640 Beijing XINHUA in English 0628 GMT 15 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 15 (XINHUA) -- A U.S. aerospace industrial exhibition opened here today at the China International Exhibition Center. The exhibition, the first of its kind ever held by the United States in China, was jointly sponsored by the U.S. Ministry of Commerce and the Chinese Aviation Industry Ministry. Over 70 manufacturers are displaying engines, electronic equipment and other sophisticated equipment and components, covering more than 5,000 square meters of floor space. A senior official from the U.S. exhibition group told XINHUA, the exports of aviation industrial products to China came to 668 million U.S. dollars in 1985, accounting for about 16 percent of the total U.S. exports to China during the year. An official from the Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC), China's national flag-carrier, said that China has ordered eight jumbo Boeing aircraft and two A310 type airbuses from the United States this year. China will then have 51 Boeing aircraft, he added.

Jia Shi, president of the host organization for the exhibition -- the China Council for the Promotion of International Trade, said that the participating companies will brief their Chinese counterparts on the present conditions and development trends in the U.S. aviation industry, as well as on their products during the exhibition. This will give an impetus to the development of technical cooperation and trade in the aviation industry between the two countries, he added. Aviation Industry Minister Mo Wenxiang cut the ribbon to open the exhibition. The exhibition will last through May 21.

NO DATE SET FOR SHULTZ-SHEVARDNADZE TALKS

OW130148 Beijing XINHUA in English 0046 GMT 13 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 12 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. State Department said today the United States and Soviet Union still have not agreed on a date for a meeting between Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze. The meeting, originally planned for May, was cancelled by the Soviet Union after the U.S. air raid on Libya.

State Department spokesman Charles Redman confirmed that a Soviet deputy foreign minister had met with U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Rozanne Ridgway last Friday in Washington. Asked whether they discussed the date for a Shultz-Shevardnadze meeting, Redman replied, "I would not lead you to believe that that meeting advanced that particular question at all." Redman also disclosed that the two countries have not decided when and where bilateral talks on the Middle East and Afghanistan will be resumed. News reports indicate that the Soviet Union has proposed Stockholm and Moscow for the talks in June on the Middle East and Afghanistan, respectively. "It's simply a question of pinning the dates down and getting the go-ahead," Redman said. The State Department last week announced that the two superpowers will resume talks on Central America in Moscow on May 20.

HU YAOBANG MEETS DPRK CHEMISTS' DELEGATION

OW141340 Beijing XINHUA in English 1334 GMT 14 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 14 (XINHUA) -- Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, met the leading Korean Chemist Yi Sung-ki and a delegation of chemists he leads from the Korean Academy of Sciences here today in Zhongnanhai. Professor Yi, also director of the academy's Hamhung branch, successfully heat-treated vinylon in 1939 in collaboration with a Japanese chemist, thus putting it to practical use.

Hu, who met the professor in Hamhung in May 1984, praised the 82-year-old professor's contribution to the technological development of the vinylon production.

Yi, who last visited China in 1963, told Hu that he was impressed by the depth of research now China was doing after visiting some research establishments this time. Lu Jiaxi, president of the Chinese Academy of Sciences, took part in the meeting. The Korean guests arrived here last week at the invitation of the Chinese Academy of Sciences.

GU MU SPEAKS TO JAPANESE NEWSMEN ON TRADE DEFICIT

OW131722 Beijing XINHUA in English 1552 GMT 13 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 13 (XINHUA) -- State Councillor Gu Mu said here today that a solution to the Sino-Japanese trade deficit was of strategic importance in boosting economic and friendly relations between the two countries. Gu was speaking at a meeting with economic editors from the Japanese newspapers, "YOMIURI NEWS", "ASAHI SHIMBUN", "KYODO TSUSHINSHA", "SANGYO KEIZAI SHIMBUN", "CHUNICHI SHIMBUN" and "NIHON KEIZAI SHIMBUN".

He said he hoped both China and Japan would make painstaking efforts to find positive ways to balance the trade deficit, which is currently in Japan's favor. While China needed to upgrade the quality of its exports and open new fields of co-operation, it hoped Japan would adopt more open and preferential policies to allow more Chinese products to enter Japanese markets.

Responding to a question about whether China would open more special economic zones and cities, Gu said that so far China had not considered the matter. China was concentrating its attention on running the existing ones well, he added. On relations between Hong Kong and Shenzhen, he said that policies now being carried out in Shenzhen would not be applied to Hong Kong, but that the close co-operation and mutual support between the two cities would further develop after 1997. "That will be good for both Hong Kong and Shenzhen," he added.

[Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 1343 GMT on 13 May, in a similar report adds the following: "Gu Mu pointed out: The Shenzhen Special Economic Zone will always adhere to the four basic principles, but economically it will implement a fairly special policy. On the other hand, the existing system in Hong Kong will remain unchanged for 50 years after 1997."]

Asked whether China's participation in the Asian Development Bank would affect other Asian countries as China needed large amounts of funds, he said that China would respect the ADB's rules and regulations, and act in accordance with the rights and obligations ADB stipulated in its rules for all members. "China will never do anything against ADB's regulations to benefit itself at another country's expense," he added. Fan Jingyi, editor-in-chief of China's "ECONOMIC DAILY", attended the meeting.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON WU XUEQIAN"S EUROPEAN VISIT

Meets Finnish Parliamentarian

OW141400 Beijing XINHUA in English 1338 GMT 14 May 86

[Text] Helsinki, May 14 (XINHUA) -- Finnish Parliament Speaker Erkki Pystynen received Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian at the Parliament House this morning. During the meeting, Pystynen recalled the visit he paid to China early last year at the head of a parliamentary delegation, saying the cordial welcome accorded him and China's rapid economic growth had left a deep impression on him. He inquired about the economic situation in China in the past year since his visit, after being briefed by Wu about the economic construction and reforms now being carried out in China. He expressed the desire for more contacts between the two countries in the political, economic and other fields. They also had an exchange of views on issues of mutual interest. After the meeting, Foreign Minister Wu and members of the delegation he led were shown around the Parliament House in the company of Pystynen. Also present on the occasion were other Finnish parliament leaders as well as Chinese ambassador here Lin Aili.

Addresses Trade Luncheon

OW141444 Beijing XINHUA in English 1435 GMT 14 May 86

[Text] Helsinki, May 14 (XINHUA) — Visiting Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian said here today that China sets great store by its economic exchange and cooperation with not only West but also north European countries. Speaking at a luncheon given for him by the Finland-China Trade Association, Wu added that the exchange and cooperation referred not only to big enterprises, but also to small and medium-sized companies. Dealing with China's economic growth, Wu said that from 1981-85, China's gross national product registered an average yearly increase of 10 percent, and its industrial and agricultural output an increase of 11 percent. The reforms being carried out in its economic structure are progressing steadfastly and healthily, he said.

On China's policy of opening to the outside world, Wu said that China will depend on its own efforts to reactivate its economy, but it will also strengthen exchange and cooperation with other countries. China's foreign trade has doubled in the past three years compared with the previous five years, Wu added. The past years have witnessed a jump in Finnish-Chinese trade, and there exist broad prospects for greater cooperation on the basis of mutual benefit, Wu said.

Wu's words struck the right note among Finnish businessmen attending the luncheon who responded with promises to work for greater cooperation between the two countries. In recent years, greater trade and cooperation between China and Finland have gone hand in hand with increasing political exchanges between the two countries. Trade between China and Finland last year was about 800 million markkas (146 million U.S. dollars), a big jump over the previous year. The Finland-China Trade Association was set up last year and is made up of more than 100 enterprises covering industry, commerce banking and tourism.

'Successful and Fruitful' Visit

OW141528 Beijing XINHUA in English 1519 GMT 14 May 86

[Text] Helsinki, May 14 (XINHUA) -- Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian left for Sweden today after a "successful and fruitful" three-day visit here, the first by a Chinese foreign minister to the Nordic country. During his stay here, Wu held talks with his Finnish counterpart Paavo Vayrynen on bilateral relations and a wide range of international issues of common concern. The two sides stressed in the talks that Wu's visit will promote the friendly relations between the two countries and their cooperation in economy, trade, science and technology.

Finnish President Mauno Henrik Koivisto, Prime Minister Kalevi Sorsa and Parliament Speaker Erkki Pystynen also met and exchanged views with the Chinese minister on bilateral and international issues. Wu's visit is one of a series of high-level contacts between the two countries over the past two years. Vayrynen and Pystynen visited China in 1984 and early 1985 respectively. Sorsa will visit China in September.

During his stay, the Chinese foreign minister visited Helsinki and some other cities in north Finland. Wu delivered a speech Monday on China's independent and peace-oriented foreign policy at Finland's Paasikivi Society, one of the most important institutions studying the country's foreign policy and international issues. The Chinese minister gave a farewell buffet yesterday evening in the Chinese Embassy. Vayrynen and many other well-known persons attended the reception. Wu arrived here Sunday on the first leg of a nine-nation Europe tour that will also take him to Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Belgium, Luxembourg, Ireland, Democratic Germany and Hungary.

Arrives in Sweden

OW141812 Beijing XINHUA in English 1803 GMT 14 May 86

[Text] Stockholm, May 14 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian said here today that mankind should not abandon the use of nuclear energy and they can build more secured nuclear stations by learning from the Soviet Chernobyl accident. Wu said that nuclear energy should serve the peace of mankind and economic development instead of being abandoned. He expressed the belief that after the accident, there will be more and better security measures to prevent such mishaps from occurring.

Wu made these remarks in response to reporters' questions upon his arrival here for an official visit to Sweden on the second leg of his nine-nation European tour. Wu, also Chinese state councillor, flew in from Finland after a three-day visit. He was met at the airport by Swedish Foreign Secretary Sten Andersson and other officials. The Chinese foreign minister told reporters at the airport that there are broad trade prospects between China and Sweden, China's number one trading partner in northern Europe. He said that efforts are being made to solve inbalance between the two countries.

Welcomed at Stockholm Banquet

OW150664 Beijing XINHUA in English 0633 GMt 15 May 86

[Text] Stockholm, May 14 (XINHUA) -- Swedish Foreign Minister Sten Andersson tonight praised China's economic reforms and its open door policy and called for enhanced Sino-Swedish relations.

He made the remarks in a welcoming speech at a banquet in honor of his Chinese counterpart Wu Xueqian who arrived here today for a four-day official visit. He said a more prosperous society both in Sweden and in China depends on world peace. He expressed satisfaction at the state of relations between the two countries, which, he said, not only benefit Sweden and China but also world peace and stability.

In his response, Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian said China places a high value on Sweden's economic and scientific achievements. He specially praised Sweden's neutral and nonaligned policy in defence affairs and the unremitting efforts it has made against power politics and for easing international tensions and improving South-North relations. He reviewed the development of Sino-Swedish relations and stressed that "our friendly cooperative relationship will be strengthened" through joint efforts by the two countries. On the international situation, he said that it is the common aspiration of the peoples of all countries to safeguard world peace. "We are opposed to arms race of all kinds and advocate effective disarmament," he said. He stressed that all the countries, big or small, strong or weak, should enjoy equal rights in discussing disarmament, a question that concerns human future and destiny.

ZHAO, THATCHER GREET CHINA ECONOMIC WEEKLY

OW110828 Beijing XINHUA in English 0849 GMT 11 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 11 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher have sent messages to congratulate the publication of the CHINA ECONOMIC WEEKLY. Started publication on May 1. the English language weekly is being edited in Beijing, and printed and distributed in Britain. It is sponsored by the Chinese ECONOMIC DAILY.

In his message, Premier Zhao Ziyang said that the publication of the CHINA ECONOMIC WEEKLY will be of significance in promoting the economic, technical and cultural cooperation between China and European countries and enhancing the friendship between the peoples of China and Europe. "Europe is an important trade partner of China," he said. There has been a considerable progress in the bilateral economic and technical cooperation and exchanges in recent years. "However, there is still great potential that requires the efforts of the two sides to tap." The premier hoped the weekly would play an active role in this respect and contribute to the prosperity of China and that of the European countries.

In her message, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said, "I know from my visits to China that many British businessmen have not been slow to see the great potential for trade that exists between our two countries. But if this potential is to be realised it is very important that more British businessmen be made aware of the latest developments in China's expanding economy. I am very pleased therefore that the first newspaper devoted exclusively to the Chinese economy published in English should be the result of Anglo-Chinese co-operation. I am sure that with the publication of the CHINA ECONOMIC WEEKLY, businessmen will be better informed and therefore better placed to take advantage of the opportunities for trade and investment that exist."

ZHENG TUOBIN SIGNS FINANCIAL PROTOCOL IN FRANCE

DISCUSSIONS WITH BRITAIN OVER RAIL BOND ISSUE

HK100928 Hong Kong AFP in English 0905 GMT 10 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 10 (AFP) — China and Britain completed Saturday a first round of talks of properties which, analysts said, covered a dispute over pre-revolutionary Chinese rail bonds that has blocked Beijing's access to London financial markets. A British Embassy spokesman said Chinese and British teams had completed a first round of "property negotiations" started here Monday. He said the discussions were held in a "friendly and frank atmosphere." A second round of talks will be held in the near future, he said, but decided to give further details on either the talks or the assets under discussion. Informed analysts said the talks were believed to have covered a collection of properties including the pre-revolutionary rail bonds and some British assets damaged in China after the communists came to power in 1949. It was not known that the post-1949 assets included damage to the British Chancery in Beijing, which has burned by Red Guards during the Cultural Revolution in 1967.

Legal snags over Beijing's refusal to honour six million pounds sterling of Huguang railway bonds issued by the crumbling Qing Dynasty in 1911 to British, French, German and U.S. investors have prevented China from borrowing on London and New York financial markets, bankers said.

China, which had a record 14.1 billion dollar trade deficit in 1984 and is hard pressed for foreign currency to finance ambitious modernization plans, has shown increased willingness to borrow during the past year, analysts said. Resolving the issue could help open the way for China to float bonds in London and eventually in New York, the analysts said. Previous Chinese bond issues have been limited to Tokyo, Hong Kong, and a small 1985 issue in West Germany.

China considers the Huguang bonds as "odious debt" unpayable under international law, since they were incurred by China's imperial government "to maintain its reactionary rule and suppress the revolutionary struggle of the Chinese people with imperialism." Huguang bond holders say the debt, which was honoured by the nationalist government from 1911 until the 1930's, is valid. They argue that the railway built with the funds still exists.

BEIJING-ROME DIRECT FLIGHT TO BEGIN 30 JUN

OW140852 Beijing XINHUA in English 0639 GMT 14 May 86

PRC HELPING MODERNIZE CZECHOSLOVAK SHIPPING

OW131635 Beijing XINHUA in English 1452 GMT 13 May 86

[Text] Prague, May 13 (XINHUA) -- Eight ships of the land-locked Czechoslovakia's merchant fleet will be replaced by new ones in the next five years, the country's official news agency CTK said. The new ships, among which four from China, two from Yugoslavia and two from Poland, will be highly automated and computerized, making possible round-the-clock operation with an eight-hour duty in the engine room and highly rationalized running, maintenance, fuel consumption, loading and unloading.

While ocean shipping in the world is now in its worst crisis since the war, Czechoslovakia as a land-locked country keeps his ocean shipping effective -- from operation up to the sale of old ships, though it does not have very favorable conditions for the development of its merchant fleet. It has to buy the ships, most of the materials and services necessary to operate them abroad and have its crews trained in the Soviet Union, Democratic Germany and Poland.

CTK said in the 1981-1985 period, earnings of the country's ocean-going ships rose by 40 per cent over the previous five years. Its ocean-going ships carried a record 1,879,000 tonnes of goods last year, exceeding the average of the past 27 years by almost 90 per cent. In the last 10 years, they visited 252 ports in 62 countries, CTK said. The bulk of their operations is transport of goods between ports in Poland, Yugoslavia, Cuba and India. The Czechoslovak Ocean Shipping Company, founded 27 years ago, now owns 14 ocean-going ships with a total capacity of 264,000 dwt, making it the second largest fleet of a land-locked country.

ACADEMIC CIRCLES SET 'ABUZZ' BY REFORM MEASURES

HK150450 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 15 May 86 p 4

[Article by Zhang Xiaogang: "State Reforms Set Academics Abuzz"]

[Text] Chinese academic and artistic circles are buzzing these days with discussions and arguments on topics ranging from economics, such as how to improve on concepts of socialism and literary criticism.

The leadership of the Chinese Communist Party has stressed time and again, especially since the beginning of this year, the need for theoretical review of the reforms' accomplishments to date.

Deng Xiaoping said earlier this year that the reforms would involve more than economics, including politics, science, and education.

Hu Qili, a prominent younger leader of the party, met with quite a few artists, social scientists and scientists during his inspection tour to Shanghai in mid-April. He advised artists to prize the harmonious atmosphere recently developed in the artistic circle.

He also emphasized the need to organize systematic research on major theoretical issues and policies, in which the party and government would give full play to the talent of social scientists.

Soon after, he told a May Day meeting that "a series of reforms" in such fields as economics, politics, and culture would be necessary in the process of modernization.

The current surge of academic discussion has also been stimulated by the commemoration of Marx's birthday on May 5.

It has been 30 years since the policy of "let a hundred flowers bloom and a hundred schools of thought contend" was proposed.

The policy was adopted while a few academicians were trying to convince their colleagues that the Soviet research methods were the only ideologically correct ones in some scientific fields.

But the good policy was "practically suspended" when the anti-rightist campaign went out of control in 1957, Lu Dingyi, former director of the Communist Party's Propaganda Department, recalled regretfully.

When every academic debate was believed to have serious political implications, the policy was reduced to lip service, particularly during the "Cultural Revolution."

Writing from his sick bed, Lu argued that it was counterproductive as well as contrary to academic freedom to attach political labels at will to scholastic and artistic schools of thought.

Without academic and artistic freedom, China would eventually run into disasters, he said.

Zhu Houze, the newly appointed director of the Propaganda Department, expressed a similar opinion to his predecessors when he met with editors of 86 literary magazines earlier this month.

The historian Hu Sheng has also published an article saying citizens have the right to engage in any artistic and academic activity that benefits the people, whether or not they have studied Marxism.

He suggested that serious research in social science and Marxism were not opposed to each other, saying although he believed social science research should be guided by Marxism, he was against forcing academicians to take Marxism as doctrines.

He regretted, too, that "academic discussion based on mutual understanding and pregnant with valuable insight is far too rare" in present-day China.

Chinese economists bear the brunt of the task of enriching their theories for roughly three reasons. First, Marx's theory of political economics was a critique of capitalism rather than detailed discussion of socialism.

Secondly, China, now having state-run enterprises, collective businesses, private firms, individual operations, joint ventures with foreign capital, and industries with 100 percent foreign investment, is actually a very complicated economic system. The research of economic must be compatible with the Chinese realities.

Thirdly, by opening its door to the rest of the world, China is at the same time faced with the challenge of the world market.

A series of articles in the newspaper ECONOMIC INFORMATION, written by Liao Xun, director of the Institute of Quantitative Economics, said today's Marxists had two alternatives, to "introduce concepts like commodity, money, and market into studies of the socialist system," or "retreat to utopian communism," in fact a dead end.

The writer noted that creative Marxist thinkers all choose the first alternative, that is, to move towards what Marx called "free men's association" or, in his words, a socialist system with high level of democracy.

In literary criticism, Liu Zaifu, director of the Institute of Literature under the Chinese academy of Social Sciences, has become the center of an argument.

Liu believes literary criticism should focus on what he calls "aesthetic characteristics" rather than mere politics. His opponents say, however, that the essence of literature and art would be "incomprehensible" if they are not related to politics and major events.

RENMIN RIBAO ON 'HUNDRED SCHOOLS OF THOUGHT' IDEA

HK150231 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 2 May 86 p 5

[Article by Li Peishan and Huang Shune: "Contention Among a Hundred Schools of Thought is the Only Road to Scientific Development -- A Talk Commencing With the Qingdao Forum on Genetics Held 30 Years Ago" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] It is fully 30 years since the CPC Central Committee put forth the principle of "letting a hundred flowers bloom and a hundred schools of thought contend."

The Qingdao forum on genetics in August 1956 was regarded by academic circles as an example of implementing the principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend." Reviewing today the 30 years of twists and turns that our country's genetics has undergone, in light of which the principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend" was formulated, will enable us to more clearly realize the tremendous influence of the principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend" on our scientific development and academic prosperity and also to clarify the great difficulty in implementing this principle.

In the early 1950's, in our country's genetic circles, Ivan V. Michurin's position on genetics represented by Trofim Lusenko was accepted while modern genetics represented by Gregor Mendal and Thomas H. Morgan which had been accepted for half a century in the world was criticized and entirely negated. This was a typical case of copying Soviet errors in implementing in an all-round manner the principle of learning from the Soviet Union in the initial period after the founding of the PRC. In the mid 1930's, Lusenko began to criticize the Morgan school in the Soviet Union and gradually gained ascendency in Soviet agricultural science circles. In August 1948 at a meeting of the Soviet Union's Lenin Academy of Agriculture Science, the CPSU Central Committee and Stalin came out to give political conclusions respectively to the two schools and thus brought the criticism to a "climax." The Morgan school was formally branded with political labels such as "bourgeois," "reactionary," "idealist," "metaphysical," and "fake science" and was publicly criticized in the press and journals. Lectures, study, and publication of Morgan's genetic theories were forbidden and the genetic and other experts who held the views of the Morgan school were dismissed from administrative and academic leading posts. The Lusenko school was defined as a "proletariat," "progressive," "dialectical materialist," and "reality-linked" school and was supported by diverse administrative means. Thus, after the 1948 August meeting ended, the Lusenko school's monopoly in Soviet gentic circles was established. In the early 1950's, the viewpoints of the Lusenko school and the Soviet practice soon spread to our country. In the ideological remolding campaign that was carried out among intellectuals in 1952, in many areas in our country, the Soviet practice was followed and mass criticism was carried out against the scholars who held the views of the Morgan school, who were then branded with various political labels. We prohibited the lectures, experiments, and publication of works about Morgan's genetic theories and the branches of science related to it and organized and a nation-wide study of the Lusenko school's Michurinism. We continued that practice until 1956.

In 1956, there were tremendous changes in Soviet genetics circles. In February 1956, Nikita S. Khrushchev gave a secret speech against Stalin's personality cult and Lusenko was forced to resign from his post as president of the Lenin Academy of Agriculture Science of the Soviet Union. This provided the politcal support for criticism against Lusenko's academic views, his attitude toward science, and his despotic work style, a criticism which began in 1952. After this, for a time, there was a lively situation in Soviet biological circles.

In the spring of 1956, Comrade Mao Zedong gave his speech entitled "On the Ten Major Relationships" about the readjustment of our country's various policies. At the same time, he put forth the fundamental principle for the development of art and science -- the principle of "letting a hundred flowers bloom and a hundred schools of thought contend." Soon afterward, Comrade Zhou Enlai relayed to the departments concerned Comrade Mao Zedong's speech on "letting a hundred flowers bloom and a hunred schools of thought contend." On 26 May, Lu Dingyi, director of the CPC Central Committee propaganda Department, gave a speech on "letting a hundred flowers bloom and a hundred schools of thought contend."

All the above-mentioned speeches pointed out some problems that had cropped up in the course of our country's learning from the Soviet Union and also pointed out Soviet mistakes in dealing with the Lusenko incident. They spoke highly of the academic prosperity in our country's Spring and Autumn and Warring States Periods and in Western Europe's Renaissance. They all opposed the practice of branding people with political labels in academic debate and the despotic work style of one school suppressing all other schools. The speeches of Central leaders covered far more issues than those related to genetics, inclulding the issues concerning the relationship between Chinese traditional medical science and Western medical science, and issues related to philosophy and social sciences.

At that time, the science office of the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department, the Chinese Acadamy of Sciences, and the Ministry of Higher Educaton followed the instructions of central leading comrades and started to study problems related to the teaching of and research into genetics and the steps to actually implement the principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend" in our country's genetic circles. They decided that in August 1956, the Chinese Academy of Sciences and the Ministry of Higher Education would jointly hold a forum on genetics in Qingdao. At the opening session of the Qingdao forum, Yu Guanyuan, who was then chief of the Science Office of the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department, relayed to the forum the policies of the committee. All the major scholars of the two schools of genetics and the science branches related to it in our country attended the forum. They all cited facts, presented arguments, aired their views freely, and thus broke the previous monopoly held by one school. The forum made on conclusion on academic issues. It only affirmed the opinion that equal opportunities should be given to all the various schools concerning their work of teaching and research and the publiciation of their works, and requested the departments concerned to make corresponding arrangements.

From the spring of 1956 to that of 1957, there was prosperity and vitality in all academic spheres in our country. Quite a few scholars began to publish articles to expound on their own academic views not only on genetics, but also on various branches of natural sciences and even some branches of social sciences such as philosophy, history, economics, and sociology. The principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend" began to display its power. The initiative of the vast number of scientific workers was brought into play and they dared to adhere to scientific truth and think independently, and a situation of free research began to emerge.

However, the implementation of the principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend" was by no means plain sailing. After 1956, political movements that "criticized the bourgeisie" emerged one after another in our country. They naturally also had their impact in the sphere of genetics. However, we soon overcame the relapses that emerged for a time, under the influence of the Qingdao forum. In our social sciences sectors, because of the direct influence of the principle of "regarding class struggle as the key link," during the 10 years before 1966, a lively situation like that of 1956 never emerged. During the 10 years of turmoil after 1966, scientific work was mainly at a standstill. It was not until 1978 after the fall of the "gang of four" that we put an end to that situation of confusion once and for all.

In about 20 of the past 30 years, there was serious interference by the "leftist" mistakes in the fields of both our natural and social sciences and there was great resistance to the implementation of the principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend." A review of the history of that period starting from summing up the experience of the Qingdao forun on genetics will enable us to get the following understanding of the nature of objective laws.

WE SHOULD PROPERLY AND SATISFACTORILY HANDLE THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN POLITICS AND SCIENCE AND RESOLUTELY OPPOSE THE PRACTICE OF USING POLITICAL FORCE AND ADMINISTRATIVE MEANS TO INTERFERE WITH THE DEBATES OF THE ACADEMIC VIEWS OF DIFFERENT SCHOOLS, SUCH AS THE PRACTICE OF FORCING PEOPLE TO ACCEPT A CERTAIN SCHOOL'S VIEWPOINTS, OF BRANDING PEOPLE HOLDING DIFFERENT ACADEMIC VIEWS WITH POLITICAL LABELS, AND OF DEPPRIVING PEOPLE OF THE RIGHTS TO TEACH, CARRY OUT RESEARCH AND PUBLISH THEIR WORKS. This is the fundamental experience of the Qingdao forum on genetics. The results of using political force and administrative means should of course be removed by political force and administrative means, but academic rights and wrongs themselves involve large spheres of knowledge; therefore, they can only be solved by the academic circles themselves through their research, practice, and academic discussion as the Qingdao forum did. In other words, they should be solved through the implementation of the principle of "letting a hundred schools of though contend" and our party and government organizations cannot and should not give conclusions on academic matters. Even if the party or government leader himself is a scientist (this will become increasingly common in the future), his academic views should only be regarded as the views of a scientist in academic discussion and we should not judge a scientist's views by his political position or his fame. It is necessary for some technological achievements to be checked by the state, but the government mainly plays the role of organizing specialists to evaluate the technology according to scientific procedures and the conclusions remain to be made by scientific and technological experts themselves.

In the world at present, science and technology is crucial in developing the economy, strengthening national defense and improving the people's material, cultural, and spiritual living standards; therefore, the leaders of various countries, in particular developed countries, attach unprecedentedly great importance to science and technology. Politics and science and technology have become increasingly closely related and "relying on science and technology" has already become one of the foundations of our country's economic policies. Our government departments have increasingly intensified their administration over scientific work. The quality of this administration is vital to the question of whether our science and technology will be able to develop smoothly. The experience of many countries has proved that in formulating policies on science and technology and adopting administrative measures, it is necessary to adopt a prudent attitude, fully solicit all kinds of different opinons from scientists, carefully consider whether these policies and measures are conducive to the accumulation of knowledge and prosperity of science and thus enable them to facilitate social and economic development and human progress.

THERE MUST BE ACADEMIC FREEDOM IN ORDER TO IMPLEMENT THE PRINCIPLE OF "LETTING A HUNDRED SCHOOLS OF THOUGHT CONTEND." This is a law that the experience of the Qingdao forum on genetics has fully proved. In the speech "letting a hundred flowers bloom and a hundred schools of thought contend" that Comrade Lu Dingyi made in 1956, he clearly pointed out: "The principle of 'letting a hundred flowers bloom and a hundred schools of thought contend' that we upheld means that we advocate freedom of independent thinking in our literary and art and scientific research work, freedom to debate and freedom of literary and art creation and criticism." These pertinent words have been laid aside for over 20 years and we feel very moved when we read them again today. Precisely because the Qiangdao forum on genetics actually implemented this principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend," it achieved substantial results. In fact, the passage cited above was precisely put forth in the light of the characteristics of our scientific work itself. If we fail to do so, we will not be able to develop our science.

As scientific research is a kind of creative labor, only in an environment where people can consider and probe things freely and carry out free discussion can it be easier to continue to score achievements and push forward the development of science and then promote the development of the whole society. Whenever people's minds were fettered, both science and society bogged down. It is a pity that we have as yet failed to really understand the historical experience and lessons gained from our work in handling the problems related to genetics. During the 10 years of turmoil, the above words of Comrade Lu Dingyi's were criticized as advocation of "bourgeois liberalization."

WE SHOULD ADOPT A CORRECT ATTITUDE TOWARD FOREIGN SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY AND SHOULD NOT BLINDLY ACCEPT OR REPUDIATE THE SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY OF ANY FOREIGN COUNTRY. This is a fundamental principle that the Qingdao forum on genetics has clarified. Science is international in nature and is the common wealth of the whole human race. If it is not restricted by different natural conditions and as long as the level of economic and cultural development allows, all science and technology can be developed in all countries, capitalist or socialist, or having white, yellow, or black people, through the independent efforts of the scientific and technological workers of the countries or through international exchange. The history of the development of science proves that the development of any branch of sciences is the result of the continuous joint efforts of the scholars of many countries and nations. Although some developed countries have adopted some measures to keep their technology secret, these measures can play their role for a limited time only. Generally speaking, the advanced technology of one country will sooner or later be mastered by other countries. For an underdeveloped country or region, selecting and importing the technology applicable for it is an effective way to speed up its own development.

IN ORDER TO ATTAIN THE GOAL OF DEVELOPING OUR SCIENCE THROUGH THE IMPLEMENTATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF "LETTING A HUNDRED SCHOOLS OF THOUGHT CONTEND," WE MUST CARRY OUT ACADEMIC DISCUSSIONS AMONG VARIOUS SCHOOLS ON THE BASIS OF ADEQUATE SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH. From their debate, the scientists who attended the Qingdao forum fully realized this. This is an important realization. For only genuine scientific research achievements have the convincing force to make other people tell what is true from what is false. Often, it takes several years, decades, or even a century to get a correct conclusion on one of the many questions on which there is contention the history of science. At the beginning, our limited data or materials were favorable to a certain theory, but a few years later, the new data or materials discovered along with the development of science favored another theory. Through a period of further research, it was possible for the two theories to supplement each other and thus develop into a more refined theory. This was the case in the establishment of the theory on the dual nature of light being both a wave and particles in the field of physics. At the beginning of some contentions, people only saw some superficial phenomena, but failed to grasp the essence; therefore, they put forth some erroneous theories. Through repeated discussions, it was finally possible to refute erroneous theories with undeniable scientific facts and thus establish correct theories. For example, in the field of biology, there have been several contentions centered on the erroneous theory of spontaneous generation. Therefore, when no consensus can be reached after the contention between different academic views or theories, we should allow people to reserve their views and continue their research. When our research work has made new progress, there will be an improvement in our contention and people will gradually hold identical views.

In short, in our scientific research, it is necessary to allow a hundred schools of though to contend; while the contention between a hundred schools of thought must be based on scientific research. Only when the two supplement each other can they push forward the development of science.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF PHILOSOPHY NEEDS SCIENCE AND THE DEVELOPMENT OF SCIENCE NEEDS PHILOSOPHY. WE SHOULD NOT REGARD THE CATEGORIES IN PHILOSOPHY AS LABELS AND ALLOW PHILOSOPHY TO ERRONEOUSLY INTERFERE IN OUR SCIENCE. Science and philosophy are closely related. This has been fully proved by the history of science and philosophy. The history of the development of the Marxist philosophy has also fully proved this. The development of philosophy needs science. Many great philosophers attached very great importance to studying science and understanding new achievements in science, and paid attention to having contacts with scientists and discussing with them phiolosphical issues in science and the philosophical significance of major achievements in science. Engels' "Natural Dialectics" sets an example in this sphere. The development of science also needs philosophy. Some great scientists attached great importance to improving their knowledge about philosophy, and discussed with them the scientific and philosophical issues that both the scientists and philosophers were interested in. Albert Einstein was a typical example of such scientists. Exchanges between scientists and philosophers have not only promoted the development of both science and philosphy, but have also given rise to an interlapping science -- natural dialectics, which is called "a philosophy for science" in the West. A Marxist philosophical worker should learn from the experience of his predecessors, prticularly Engels' experience, in order to develop Marxist natural dialectics. The setbacks that our genetic circles experienced were precisely the consequence of our deviation from these requirements. For example, we regarded categories in philosophy as labels and branded each scientific issue with one, or some, of these labels. As a result, we gave the genetic theory of the Morgan school the labels of "idealism" and "metaphysics," while giving the Michurinist genetics of the Lusenko school the label of "dialectic materialism." As the Lusenko incident took place in the Soviet Union, it misled quite a few Marxists, in particular the Marxists in socialist countries, and made them follow this mistaken line for a certain period. As a result, it hindered the development of science and also harmed the reputation of Marxist philosophy in the scientific circles. At the same time, it also hindred the development of Marxist philosophy itself. The Qingdao forum on gentics opposed the practice of branding philosophical labels and also criticized the erroneous philosophical proposition that "fortunity is the enemy of science." By so doing, it enable genetics to be free from the interference from philosophy, started genuine free discussion, and began to establish normal relationships between genetics and philosophy. All these were entirely necessary. We now think that this understanding is of universal significance.

WE MUST CORRECTLY UNDERSTAND THE RELATIONSHIPS BETWEEN THE IMPLEMENTATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF "LETTING A HUNDRED SCHOOLS OF THOUGHT CONTEND" AND ADHERENCE TO THE PARTY'S LEADERSHIP, AND ABANDON THE ERRONEOUS VIEW THAT REGARDS THE IMPLEMENTATION OF THE PRINCIPLE AS ABANDONING THE PARTY'S LEADERSHIP. Both the Qingdao forum on genetics 30 years ago and the experience that we have gained in scientific fields in the 30 years since fully prove that in order to really implement the principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend," and in order to keep this path we must follow in developing our science clear, it is particularly necessary to clarify an erroneous view that the implementation of the principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend" means abandoning and even eliminating the party's leadership. In fact, this principle itself is a principle and policy of the party.

Like any other principle or policy of the party, it can only be implemented through the hard efforts of the whole party. Implementing the principle of "letting a hundred schools of though contend" is precisely adhering to the party's leadership while failing to conscientiously implement this principle precisely means abandoning the party's leadership. In order to ensure that academic contention is carried out normally, in order to draw a clear demarcation line between political and academic matters, and in order to avoid repetition of the simplistic mistakes of acting as chief judges on academic issues and applying political labels indiscriminately, our party organizations at various levels should do lots of work. All this work, including making investigation and study, publicizing policies, having heart-to-heart talks with and doing ideological work among scientists, and formulating the specific measures for the implementation of the policies, embodies the party's leadership role. The situation at and after the Qingdao forum clearly proved that without the correct leadership of the CPC Central Committee and without all of the arduous and painstaking work done by the party organizations at various levels, it was impossible to smoothly implement the principle of "letting a hundred schools of though contend."

Today, our country has entered an new period of building a highly civilized and highly democratic modern socialist country; therefore, we will never allow any repetition of the erroneous practice that we allowed in the past in conducting political criticism against the genetics of the Morgan school. However, in all sciences, including genetics, there will always be differences in academic views. This is a normal phenomenon in our academic circles. Therefore, reviewing the twists and turns that our country's genetic circles have gone through since the 1950's and summing up the experience of the Qingdao forum on genetics, in particular the positive and negative experience and lessons gained in the 30 years since the principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend," in order to clarify some understanding of the laws is not only valuable for the research into China's modern history of science, but also of great practical significance in promoting the continuous implementation of this principle and facilitating the continous and healthy development of science in our country.

COMMENTARY ON DEVELOPMENT OF TALENTED PEOPLE

HK100706 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE in Chinese 1128 GMT 7 May 86

[Commentary by Hao Si: "China Should Attach Greater Importance to Its Own Talented People]

[Text] Hong Kong, 7 May (ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE) — Yesterday, while speaking to Goh Keng Swee, economic adviser on China's coastal development and former Singapore deputy prime minister, CPC leader Hu Yaobang remarked that China would introduce talented people from abroad and stressed that this was China's strategic policy.

China deeply feels that professional personnel have been in great demand since it started the modernization drive and began to implement the policy of opening up to the outside world. Therefore, China has opened its door wide to welcome foreign and Overseas Chinese experts to give lectures and make exchanges, or to engage foreign economic experts as managers for or advisers in some enterprises. Goh keng Swee is one of them.

In fact, China also has quite a number of talented people. But as Hu Yaobang said, China's own talented people have a limited understanding of the present world; therefore China has to introduce talented people from abroad and to learn from foreign experts and economists. Goh Keng Swee added that Cina's economic managerial personnel should have a good knowledge of both the domestic economic development law, economic development in foreign countries, and the international market. Therefore, China can compensate for the shortage of talented people by introducing talented people from abroad. This will enable domestic talented people to get information about foreign countries and to improve their professional knowledge and level. This is undoubtedly a correct policy.

The scope of introducing foreig talented people is, after all, limited. In such a vast expanse of territory, China cannot hire foreign experts and advisers for every province, city, and enterprise. Efforts should be concentrated on turning out more talented people of its own. Hu Yaobang said: Over the past few years, we have promoted some capable people who are better educated to leadership positions. In the course of training and using its own talented people, China introduces talented people from abroad.

Since Deng Xiaoping came to power, China has attached greater importance to the use of knowledge and talented people. However, the habit of looking down upon intellectuals and experts still exists. Now very few people dare openly reproach intellectuals, but sometimes we still hear that some people squeeze out intellectuals. Not long ago, a factory directory in a province who concentrated on reforms and made some achievements was fired. This is probably not an isolated case.

In addition, some leading cadres "prefer the opinions of foreign experts to those of domestic experts." Sometimes they ignore the suggestions repeatedly made by domestic experts but bow to the words of foreign experts. The practice of underestimating our own capabilities is really not good for developing the initiative of domestic experts.

Therefore, while introducing foreign talented people, China must pay attention to training and using its own talented people. The latter is more important than the former. While learning from foreign experts, it is necessary to listen to the opinions of domestic experts. On the question of how to treat talented people, we should neither belittle them nor have too high an opinion of them. Examination and correction must be made with regard to the errors in the course of implementing the policy on intellectuals, so as to provide an excellent working environment and conditions for intellectuals.

SUPPORT FOR REFORMERS IN ENTERPRISES URGED

HK141524 [Editorial Report] Beijing Domestic Television Service in Mandarin on 13 May, during its 1000 GMT newscast, broadcasts Liaoning Television Station's 1-minute film clip of the party committee of the Shenyang City Metallurgical Industry Corporation "enthusiastically" helping its Shenyang Steel Sheet Factory director solve "last year's" reform problems. This is followed by a 1-minute announcer-read China Central Television Station "editor's note," which praises the Shenyang corporation, gives a general picture of enterprise reformers' problems "in some localities," and calls for helping such reformers solve problems.

The Liaoning Television Station's undated filmed report, filed by station reporter (Shi Lianwen), depicts "some people blaming" the Shenyang factory director's reforms in the leadership and personnel systems for causing "the fall in the factory's economic returns since the beginning of last year." The reporter states that according to a "thorough investigation" conducted by the Metallurgical Industry Corporation, the "main cause" of the fall was due to the increase in the prices of raw and processed materials. The report does not give details of any other causes. The filmed report then depicts the corporation helping its steel sheet factory produce "new products." As a result, "the factory netted a profit of more than 1.7 million yuan at the end of last year."

After the film clip, the announcer reads the following China Central Television Station "editor's note" calling for helping enterprise reformers solve problems:

"The Shenyang City Metallurgical [Industry] Corporation's support for the advanced reformers is praiseworthy. Some localities have for a period of time seized on advanced reformers' shortcomings in work, wantonly exaggerated such shortcomings, and described reformers as being devoid of any merit. As a result, some advanced reformers cannot work and are unable to stop working even though they want to [yu ba bu neng]; and some enterprises, which once were prosperous, are now in the red. Why is it that advanced reformers have been attacked? The basic reason is that reforms have expanded the power of enterprises. Some people just cannot get used to this and always want to regain the power. The other reason is that some are jealous of other people's talent. No gold is pure, and no man is perfect. Shortcomings and errors are unavoidable when progressives carry out work. The question is: How are we to approach shortcomings and errors? The Shenyang City Metallurgical Industry Corporation has affirmed the reformers' achievements and has pointed out their shortcomings. The corporation has also helped them solve problems. This truly is the correct approach. And only by so doing can we successfully carry out our country's reforms."

ECONOMIST XU DIXIN INTERVIEWED ON REFORMS

HK140401 Guangzhou KAIFANG in Chinese No 4, 8 Apr 86 pp 5-8

[Article by special correspondent Zhang Shengyou: "Persevere in Opening Up, Stimulate Reforms -- Interview With Well-Known Economist Xu Dixin"]

[Text] Early this spring, this reporter interviewed Xu Dixin, the well-known economist at his residence in Nansagou, Xijiao, Beijing. The revered Xu was in his eighties, his sideburns all gone white. But still he looked very healthy, and his broad and bulging brow indicated a very learned man. True, devoting his whole life to the study of economics, the revered Xu has written a long list of books in this field. Entrusted by the magazine KAIFANG, this reporter made a special trip to Beijing, soliciting his views on "opening up and reforms."

Starting From the Overall and Long-term Interests of Socialism, Opening Up to the Outside World Is Inevitable

"It won't do to close the country to international intercourse if China is to go in for socialist modernization. Because in every period, the world's industrial indexes are always rising, and the world-conscious economic market is always changing. China is such a big country, if it should conduct construction with its door closed, it would certainly become backward."

When this reporter told him about his aim of the interview, the revered Xu instantly became excited, and said: "A few years back, when the Central Committee proposed the implementation of the economic principles "opening up to the outside world, making the domestic economy lively," many people failed to have a good grasp of the principle, and had different views on the opening-up policy. But why should they have failed to figure out the need of the principle? On two grounds: first, after the founding of the PRC, we confiscated bureaucrat capital in the 1950s; later, we implemented socialist transformation of capitalist industrial and commercial enterprises, when enterprises of foreign capital were also gradually dealt with. We can say that all things capitalist were swept out of China. But now, we are to invite foreign capital in, and some people have failed to recognize the need for it. For the revolution, we communists feared no bloodshed and death. Many comrades sacrificed their lives to the cause of overthrowing the three big mountains that weighed down on the Chinese people. Now after all those efforts and sacrifices, foreign capital is again invited in. It's just natural that some old comrades in particular cannot figure out the need. And second, some comrades are worrying that once the policy is implemented with the doors wide opened, foreign capitalist ideas will swarm in, having an effect on the social atmosphere, ideology and moral concepts. I believe it's just that, and nothing else!"

How should we regard those differences in understanding? According to the revered Xu, even if this is making one step backward, it aims to make two steps forward. Because, if all things capitalist are swept out, with the door shut tight, you'll find it difficult to get by without those things you lack. Moreover, we lag behind other nations, with a poorer foundation. China has not much of a foundation to speak of, being a semi-colonial and semi-feudal society in the past. If we should start from scratch in everything, we would lose much time. As to the erosion and effects of bourgeois ideology, do they exist? Well, yes, this we must admit. In fact, opening up aims to make use of foreign advanced technologies and funds, and to develop those comparatively backward and weak departments in our special economic zones and open cities. Starting from the overall and long-term interests of socialism, and making the four modernizations faster and better, opening up to the outside world is inevitable.

Import Is Bilateral; To Make Foreign Technologies Ours, We Must Upgrade Our Own technological Level as Quickly as Possible

Opening-up is inspecting and learning knowledge on a worldwide scale. Through opening up, foreign advanced technologies can be imported to China. But how? Revered Xu made the following remark: "Import is bilateral. To capitalist countries, China is one big market; China has a population of 1 billion, and it is the largest consumer market in the world. They want to market huge volumes of their commodities in China. However, our aim is not for them to market their commodities, but to allow the import of their technologies and funds. Of course, those commodities which we need and lack may be imported." According to the revered Xu, those foreign businessmen who have come to do business with China are trying their best to sell more of their commodities to China, which is the greatest contradiction in importing foreign funds and technologies. We can't say that this contradiction is beyond solution. Many projects under negotiation have been rather successful.

Xu continued, there is a question that concerns us ourselves in opening up and importing technologies; namely, the question of digesting, transforming and upgrading in order to make foreign technologies our own. And the first problem arising is whether we have knowledge of the technology concerned and whether we are capable of using it.

The technical level of our workers, technicians and engineers, not referring to all of them, is not so high. For example, in some factories, those machines imported have been lying idle. People do not know how to handle them, and the machines broke down the moment they were put to use because they were wrongly handled. In the end, in importing technology and foreign capital, we often have to invite foreign engineers to China with the technology, and even the capitalists to help in management. Under such circumstances, we can come under their control, be easily tied down, and land in a passive position.

The revered Xu said: "To do a good job in opening up and importing technologies, China's self-reliance as well as the ever-strengthening of the socialist national economy must be ensured in the course of import. Otherwise, we'll end in relying on others."

The Key Lies in Upgrading Quality if SEZ [special economic zone] Products Are To Occupy a Place in the Overseas Market; It Is Most Essential To Place Cadres Who Know the Ropes at Leading Posts of Enterprises

The revered Xu attaches great importance to investigation and research. In recent years, he has been to some open cities and the several SEZs such as Guangzhou, Shenzhen, Zhuhai, Shantou and Xiamen, and has been to some of those places on several occasions. He said: "Some of the SEZs seem to be quite busy on the outside. The roads are made very beautiful as well as the buildings. This is quite good, and necessary. But why have they built all those roads and houses? It is to turn the SEZs into the 'four windows,' to turn out more export products so as to earn more foreign exchange." In his opinion, Shekou has done a rather good job in this respect. The factories are not so large in scale, but have provided more products for export.

According to Xu, we will bring in greater tax revenue and earn more foreign exchange for the state through export. Regarding the whole country, nothing can be done without foreign exchange if economy is to be developed. You'll have to import technologies, and to purchase foreign blueprints and new equipment for our use in blazing new trails. No foreign exchange, no go! Therefore, export is imperative, and it must be expanded. However, most of our exports at present are primary products. They are either raw materials or semi-finished products, but not finished products. They are not competitive, and are largely cheap stuff. This has much to do with the production level. A low production level always lags behind others.

Citing an example, Xu says: "I have been to the United States on several occasions. And I made a special trip to their department stores. I just could not find any of our China-made commodities. This is because our exports are mostly primary products. With some processing, our primary products have become their finished products. Take garments, they should be counted as finished products. But they, too, are very backward, in very poor fashion. So they were placed in some inconspicuous corner. And I felt badly seeing them lying there!"

Why is it that when a large number of the leading members and technicians of our factories and enterprises have been sent abroad with huge sums of money spent, the result has not been very satisfactory, with some ordinary, low-level technical problems remaining unsolved? The revered Xu pointed out sharply: "This concerns the level of those who have been sent abroad. It seems that going abroad has become some kind of political treatment.

"If someone belongs to the leadership and has a long standing, he has to be sent abroad. This is catastrophic. What's the good of it if he went, knowing nothing about what he saw abroad, doing nothing beneficial to production when he returns. It doesn't mean that we want the door closed, and to stop sending people abroad, but appropriate people should be picked and sent, and they should do something helpful to production when they return. We are not sending people abroad on a sightseeing tour. To inspect and study foreign advanced technologies and others' advantages, one must first possess certain background in science and technology."

"On the other hand, some of our comrades attach importance to output, and output value only, but not technical transformation and product quality. Some factories in China beieve their products are "princesses, who know no worry about marriages." True, China has a large population as well as a large consumer market; and the domestic marketability of their products has never been a problem. But when their products are sent to the overseas market, they stop being 'princesses.' This is chiefly because the leading members of some factories are laymen themselves, the have a low level in management, knowing practically nothing about blueprints and the use of advanced machines. Therefore, the replacement of cadres under way is very important. Those cadres who are laymen should be replaced by some qualified specialized people who are educated and know the ropes!"

The revered Xu continued, three capitalist countries stand out rather conspicuously in the world today. The United States is one, it was the victorious nation in World War II, out of which it made a fortune. This is universally known. However, West Germany and Japan were vanquished nations in the war. Their factories were reduced to ruins in bombardment, and their machines were taken away. A great grandson of Engels's visited China in 1983, and I asked him: "How were things in Germany in 1945?" And he said: "Disastrous enough! Both our oil resources and coalmines were taken over. Factories were ruined. There was no steamheat that winter, and people shivered in cold. They had to live on what little relief provided by the U.S. Army. However, we still had two things left: first, a large number of engineers and technicians who knew the ropes about technology; and second, a large number of people who had a good knowledge of economics and management. Relying on these two things, we got by that winter. then, factories were reopened on the ruins; but soon production came up." As a result, the German economy revived after 5 years of hard work. And what about Japan? When we were children, we know Japanese goods were of inferior quality. And people would speak of them in contempt: "Japanese goods are good to look at, but they do not work." After Japan's defeat in the war, the Japanese worked hard with a will. In the 1960s in particular, they gave priority to product quality, with the government taking a good grasp of it. Emulation in product quality was held on an annual basis, and made a system. Japanese economy has taken off on the basis of quality upgrading.

The Key to the Success of Opening Up Lies in Strengthening Foreign Affairs Discipline and Enforcing the Law.

On the evaluation of the practice of opening up to the outside world in recent years, the revered Xu says: "The policy of opening up has been carried out for several years, and the following aspects have been successful: closer foreign relations, and a better understanding of the economic situation of various nations and the world market. We have done some business and imported some technologies.

"However, in the course of implementing the policy of opening up, many problems exist in the import of technologies and funds, enterprise management, our relations with foreigners as well as our ideological style, of which, the most important one is our being laymen, not knowing the ropes; and we have been hooked in some cases."

The revered Xu pointed out, in foreign relations and conducting talks involving foreign economic relations, we must first focus on the position and interest of the state. If those people involved in negotiation should commit corruption and graft, injure the national interests, and make the state lose face, I believe, they should be severely dealt with according to the law. Those who should violate the law economically, including smuggling and speculating in foreign exchange, should all be severaly dealt with; otherwise it would become a capitalist economy, and not a socialist economy. That is the crux of being successful in opening up.

Here, the revered Xu became very angry: "If those cadres who negotiate in foreign economic relations should fatten their own pockets at the expense of the state, selling out national interests, they would become compradors; and they should not be regarded as Chinese nationals, not to mention communists! This is a political problem as well as an economic one. The problem of style, the problem of special privilege is terrible! Whether the national interests or the individual interests the long-term interests or the immediate interests are more important is the basic difference between socialist economy and capitalist economy. Therefore, doing a good job of the opening-up policy is by no means isolated, politcal and ideological work, economic measures, the legal system and laws and decrees should start working together to make a success of opening up."

Two Problems That Should Never Be Neglected in the Reform of the Economic Structure: Population and Ecological Economics

Steady progress has been made in China's reform of the economic structure. According to the revered Xu, there are two conspicuous problems that must call for complete attention by the relevant leading departments.

One is the population problem. Xu says: "The difficulty facing us is that production growth has failed to keep abreast with population growth. Although we have implemented planned parenthood in controlling the population, more than 10 million are given birth on an annual basis. Because a population of 1 billion is quite a base, a birth rate of 12 per thousand can create some problems. Problems such as food, clothing, schooling and employment all stem from too fast a population growth. I am doing some study on the population. The pressure on social consumption will remain great if the population should continue to grow at a fast rate; and social accumulation will be greatly limited with consumption fund staying high. China is facing the pressure from three aspects: first, a large population; second, a soaring consumption fund, which is also a pressure on the market, with demand far exceeding supply; and third, too long a line of capital construction, with capital construction outside the plan also expanding."

And second, the problem of ecological economics. The revered Xu says: "Reform of the economic structure in cities is a very complicated question. It involves not only some areas, but all respects, with the economic base and ideology both affected.

In the reform of the economic structure in cities, production must be developed, but by-products such as waste gas, waste water, and industrial residue are often neglected, which is another aspect of environmental pollution."

Xu cited the following example. When coal is burned in a factory, huge volumes of sulfer dixoide and carbon dioxide are emitted from the chimney and rise up into the sky. When meeting vapor in the sky, they turn into acid rain, which is terrible. Today, the water from Shanghai to the middle reaches of the Chang Jiang river valleys, the Dadu He, and Guilin, Guangxi is polluted. The acid rain erodes such metals as iron, and has very bad effects on people and livestock. Farms crops and trees will stop bearing fruit once caught in the acid rain. Sulfer dioxide causes cancer too, it's terrible.

Xu went on to say: "The positive side of material production is yielding material wealth such as cloth, iron and steel, television sets and refrigerators; and its negative side is the simultaneous yielding of waste gas, waste water and industrial residue. This is the law of nature and natural science, independent of man's will. I don't think we have attached enough attention to the graveness of the problem. We pay attention to production only, seeking output and output value, going all out, but disregarding product quality, not to speak of ecological environment. What does it mean by economic results? The implication of economic results is allround.

A high output, a high output value, with more foreign exchange earned, a greater profit made, and more profit and taxes handed over to the state, which is certainly a good thing. But what about the product quality, and the treatment of the ecological environment? The question of ecological environment is a vital issue that concerns the future generations. I told the leading comrades of departments concerned: I think the aim of quadrupling the gross industrial and agricultural annual output value by the year 2000 will certainly be fulfilled. There's no problem to quadruple the output value of cotton yarn, iron and steel, and oil. But what if soil erosion, acid rain, and the acreage of desert quadruple, too, by the year 2000, and waste gas, waste water and industrial reesidue will also quadruple? That will be disastrous! I have just written a book, entitled 'Ecological Economics," which will be soon published and circulated. I want to appeal to the society: When we are carrying out allround economic reform in te cities, we must attach great importance to the ecology and guard against environmental pollution. You reporters should help in the appeal."

In conclusion, the revered Xu says: "There are all kinds of gossip and even censure about opening up and reform in the society at present. These people have only seen some superficial phenomena. Dialectics tells us, nothing is absolutely good or absolutely bad in the world. Everything has two sides, and the key is how you deal with it. Things will be all right if you bring forward the positive side and keep the negative side under control. The wish to eliminate all side effects wil never come true in our world. The Central Committee is bent on opening up and reform; there's no way out for out country otherwise, and the four modernizations won't come up!"

RENMIN RIBAO ON IMPROVING COOPERATIVE SYSTEM

HK150551 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 12 May 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "The Demand for Perfecting and Developing the Cooperative System Should Be Made by the Peasants"]

[Text] By saying that where water flows a channel is formed, we mean that success will come only when conditions are ripe. This is a law.

In rural economic reform, putting the household-run economy into the orbit of the cooperative economy by establishing a new double management system characterized by the combination of centralized and separate operation is a process of flowing water forming a channel. Similarly, the improvement of the double management system and the development of economic cooperation and integration should follow the objective law of economic development and comply with the demands of the peasants. In this respect, it is necessary to implement the policy of allowing the peasants to make an independent choice.

The need to develop the commodity economy and productive forces necessitates the improvement and development of the cooperative system. Commodity production has freed millions upon millions of peasants from household and land confinement and has enabled them to build closer economic ties with people in other areas. Various forms of cooperation among the peasants in production and sales become more necessary following the development of commodity production, the specialization and socialization of the household-run economy, and the deepening of the peasants' economic ties with people in other areas. Economic cooperation and integration have helped produce better economic results than exclusive operation on a household basis. This is the basic factor for rural economic cooperation.

The development of China's commodity economy and productive forces in different regions and industries have different demands for developing economic cooperation and perfecting the cooperative system. Therefore, it is really necessary to respect the peasants' autonomy and choices. Economic cooperation in various forms and channels is a complicated development process. Deviation from the needs of producers will make it impossible to bring their initiative into play and to achieve excellent results. How to perfect the double management system, in what fields to cooperate, whom to cooperate with, when to cooperate, in what way to cooperate, and how large the scope and scale of cooperation will be -- these should be decided by the peasants themselves; on no account should cadres or other people decide for them.

In the past, we had such a lesson in selecting economic modes suited to the rural areas. One of the reasons was laying undue stress on leaders' choice and forcing on the masses the mode designated by leaders. Apart from this, political movements were introduced to guarantee implementation of the mode designated. This seriously dampened the initiative of the peasants in production and delayed the development of the commodity economy and productive forces. The peasants play a principal role in rural economic activities. Choices without their approval are lifeless. The correct way is to make the best use of the peasants' choices and to follow the principle of voluntary selection and mutual benefit.

In the past, many peasants endured untold sufferings as a result of being forced to mix with each other. As this still remains fresh in their memories, they are perturbed at the mention of the word "cooperation." To dispel the peasants' misgivings, it is necessary to apply a correct policy apart from just carrying out propaganda work. The basic purpose of perfecting the cooperative system and developing rural economic cooperation is to create a more favorable economic environment for the peasants to go in for commodity production and to improve the results of the household-run economy. In perfecting the cooperative system, we should proceed from the service trade. As the peasants have different demands for service trade, different forms of cooperation and integration will simultaneously exist.

We should not find a single solution for diverse problems, still less should we introduce political movements to popularize a method. Viewed from the present situation, an important reason why the peasants in some localities still have complaints and misgivings about rural economic cooperation is that the cadres in these localities are overanxious about the results of economic cooperation. This has, to a certain extent, run counter to the objective needs for economic development and to the wishes of the peasants. This matter is of major importance, and it is necessary to remind rural cadres that they should not take it lightly.

CHINA DAILY CITES OFFICIAL ON ECONOMIC CRIMES

HK150516 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 15 May 86 p 1

[By staff reporter Liu Dizhong]

[Text] In the first three months of this year, procuratorates throughout the country investigated 11,000 economic crimes, 130 per cent more than in the same period last year. Of these, more than 3,800 were serious, an increase of 630 per cent.

The figures were released to CHINA DAILY in an interview yesterday with a senior official of the economic department under the Supreme People's Procuratorate.

The official said the crimes included embezzlement, bribery, smuggling, profiteering, swindling, evading taxes, trademark imitation and misappropriation of relief funds. Major economic crimes usually involved more than 10,000 yuan.

During the first quarter, the official said, the procuratorates ordered the arrest of 7,441 persons on charges of economic crime, an increase of 230 per cent.

More than 5,900 cases were completed, an increase of 85 per cent. Of them, 1,400 were serious cases, a 570 per cent increase.

As a result, the official added, more than 126 million yuan was retrieved, 1,000 per cent increase.

China's crackdown on economic crime, which began in July last year, has contributed to the smooth progress of economic construction and economic reform, the official said.

He noted that economic crimes, particularly major ones, have been increasing over the past two years and the number of party members, officials and children of high-ranking officials involved also has increased. They collaborate and take advantage of their positions, he said, noting that their crimes cause the most serious loss for the country.

Some economic crimes have also harmed the interests and health of consumers. Several persons reaped more than 300,000 yuan by selling fraudulent cooking oil in Anhui Province. The sale of fake tung oil resulted in the sinking of 19 fishing boats with a death toll of 33 persons in Zhejiang Province, the official said.

Although fighting economic crime is a long, arduous and complicated task, the official said the Supreme People's Procuratorate is determined "to smash the arrogance of economic criminals this year."

While prosecuting economic criminals remains the major task of the procuratorates this year, great efforts will also be made in ideological and economic fields to eliminate the causes of crime, he said.

This year, all the procuratorates should try to wind up all major economic crime cases uncovered in 1984 and in the first half of 1985. Meanwhile, stricter measures will be taken to uncover tax evasion and sale of fraudulent goods, both of which have tended to increase recently.

Special attention will also be paid to smuggling, embezzlement and the revealing of state economic secrets by government employees engaged in foreign trade, and to profiteering and swindling by a handful of lawless businessmen from Hong Kong and some foreign countries, he said.

FISHING MALPRACTICES, ENVIRONMENTAL DAMAGE CITED

HKi21426 [Editorial Report] Beijing Domestic Television Service in Mandarin on 10 May, during its regular 1000 GMT newscast, broadcasts a Hubei Television Station's 1.5-minute film clip on Hubei Province's "aquatic resources and ecological equilibrium being seriously destroyed" by the province's fishing malpractices adopted "over the past few years." This is followed by an announcer-read China Central Television Station "editor's note" criticizing fishing malpractices in Hubei Province and "in other areas."

The Hubei Televison Station's undated filmed report, filed by station report (Du Shaohua), depicts the following fishing malpractices "adopted by the great majority of the fishermen" in Hubei Province: "killing fish by electric shock, using mesh nets to catch fish, poisoning fish," and "using explosives to catch fish." After describing the malpractices as "killing the hen to get all its eggs," the reporter states: "Comrades of the Hubei Provincial Aquatic Products Department told this reporter that in the 1960's, the catch of fish from Hubei Province's rivers and lakes averaged 170 million jin (a year). However, last year's catch of fish only reached 60 million jin. They said that if things continue this way, Hubei, known as the province of 1,000 lakes, will have no fish to catch in a few years."

After the film clip, the announcer reads the following China Central Television Station "editor's note" criticizing fishing malpractices:

"Dear viewers, Hubei Province's reckless fishing practices, its reckless use of explosives to catch fish, and the damage it had done to fishery resources are phenomena that also occur in other areas. These practices violate the State Council's regulations regarding the protection of aquatic resources and aquatic breeding. The regulations strictly forbid using explosives to catch fish, poisoning fish, and indiscriminately killing fish by electric shock. However, over the past few years, some units' leaders have not paid great attention to such phenomena and have been weak in the administration. Some people have been entirely absorbed in making money and have not paid any attention to other things. As a result, the phenomena such as poisoning fish, using explosives to catch fish, and killing fish by electric shock tend to worsen with each passing day. If things go on like this, fish will be in short supply, our ecological equilibrium will be destroyed, and there will be no end of troubles for the future. The PRC fishery law will be put into effect on 1 July this year. The departments concerned must connect the implementation of the fishery law with publicizing the legal system and with conducting education in the legal system, and must adopt effective measures to resolutely check those phenomena such as reckless fishing practices, reckless use of explosives to catch fish, and poisoning fishery resources."

STATE COUNCIL APPOINTS NEW CONSULS GENERAL

RENMIN RIBAO URGES OUTDOOR ACTIVITIES SAFETY

HK121002 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 6 May 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Spring Warning"]

[Text] People are usually bustling about during the Spring Festival when temple fairs are held, during the Lantern Festival, in March when it is most suitable for a walk in the country, and during the Double Ninth Festival. In the past few years we have maintained a political situation of stability and unity and our economy has become more prosperous every day. Consequently, recreational activities of the masses which are rich in national characteristics are also increasing. This is indeed gratifying.

What is worth noting is that these activities must be properly organized. Otherwise, tragedies may occur. During the Lantern Festival this year, for example, two painful accidents occurred: On 21 February, the Lantern Festival was celebrated in Jiangsu's Jiangdu County. Since the place was extremely crowded and people pushed and crowded each other, more than 20 people were killed or injured when they were trampled by others. Two days later, on 23 February, the Lantern Festival was celebrated at Zhejiang's Jinhua City, but the celebrations were not properly organized. Some 35 people were trampled to death and 33 were badly injured when a crowd rushed into the park.

Similar accidents also occurred in other localities. In addition, vehicles and vessels for these recreational activities are often overloaded. As a result, they may overturn or capsize, causing death or injuries to many people. Accidents of this kind have occurred one after another. It goes without saying that they bring damage and misery to the families of the victims.

What lessons should we draw from these unfortunate accidents? In organizing collective activities, large-scale mass activities in particular, all localities and departments must first of all pay attention to the safety of the masses. They should, for example, take into consideration the capacities of the sites, roads, vehicles, and vessels. They should also take into consideration unforeseen accidents and should make appropriate arrangements in advance for evacuating and rescuing people in case such accidents occur. They should postpone such activities if no appropriate safety precautions can be taken. This is the correct attitude we cadres should take and the duty we cadres should fulfill.

However, some comrades only think about how to organize recreational activities for the masses and overlook how to ensure the safety of the masses. A few localities and departments even care nothing about safety but only try to earn more money by selling more tickets. How then can accidents be avoided? When an accident occurs, some people say that this is because there was a "lack of experience." This may be one of the causes, but what they said is not completely true. We cannot and need not have personal experience in everything. It would be ridiculous to say that "experience" in accidents caused by a capsized vessel can be gained only after a vessel has capsized in our own locality. We have good reasons to ask this question: Do organizers of these recreational activities have a great sense of responsibility for the safety of the lives of the people? Should those who neglected their duties and were chiefly responsible for an accident be punished according to law and discipline?

Sima Xiangru, a man of letters of the Han Dynasty, said: "Those who have foresight can see approaching trouble, and those who are wise can avoid hidden danger. Troubles cannot be easily seen and we fall into them once we are careless." As a matter of fact, accidents like those mentioned above are by no means hidden or difficult to foresee. If leaders concerned really attach great importance to the safety of the lives of the people, it will not be difficult for them to "see approaching troubles" or to "avoid hidden danger" like "wise" people. Not long ago, another scenic spot, "Mutianyu Great Wall section," was opened to tourists, the Beijing Public Security Communications Administrative Bureau has told the public in good time: People who go to visit the place by car must apply for tourist permits. We should advocate the bureau's work style and work method of thinking of problems and taking preventive measures.

It is now the end of spring and the beginning of summer and the weather is fine. There are numerous people in scenic spots in various localities. In arranging and organizing sightseeing activities, leaders of departments and organizations concerned must give full consideration to safety. Bear in mind that anything involving human life is to be treated with utmost care and no negligence is permitted!

LIN BIAO, JIANG QING CITED TO DEFINE SUBVERSION

OW141329 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 0245 GMT 13 May 86

[From the "legal system" program: "Common Knowledge on Criminal Law, No 50: What Is the 'Crime of Plotting To Subvert the Government?'"]

[Excerpts] On 20 November 1980, the 10 major felons of the case of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques were brought to the historical tribunal and tried by the people. After examining the cases of the felons, and on the basis of Article 92 of China's Criminal Law, the special tribunal of the Supreme People's Court concluded that, with the exception of a few, all other felons in the case were guilty of the crime of plotting to subvert the government

The crime of plotting to subvert the government refers to plotting to overthrow the people's government and usurp state leadership.

The term people's government here refers to the central people's government, which is the state's highest administrative organ, whose safety has a close bearing on the future and destiny of our country and the success or failure of our socialist cause. Plotting to subvert the people's government and usurp state leadership refers to subverting the people's government and usurping state leadership by means of counterrevolutionary violence. It also refers to plotting to use peaceful evolution to cause the people's government to degenerate, making it a tool of the dictatorship of landlords and the bourgeoisie, after part of the state leadership has been usurped.

The Lin Biao counterrevolutionary clique's plan for carrying out a counterrevolutionary armed coup d'etat aimed at taking over national political power. However, it also did not forget the overthrow of the local people's governments, knowing that it was not easy to overthrow the central people's government. To achieve its ultimate goal of overthrowing the government, which exercised the dictatorship of the proletariat, as well as the socialist system, and to achieve its counterrevolutionary restoration plot throughout the country, in many cases the clique began by setting up counterrevolutionary separatist strongholds, overthrowing the local people's governments and usurping their political power.

Actual results in subverting the government are not needed to substantiate the crime of plotting to subvert the government. The felon will be found guilty of this crime as long as it has been ascertained that he has conspired secretly to subvert the government.

The crime of plotting to subvert the government is primarily a crime committed by careerists and schemers who occupy relatively high positions in party and state organs, and who have relatively great social influence. The crime of plotting to subvert the government is even more deceptive and destructive than the subversion carried out by other class enemies. According to Article 92 and Article 103 of the Criminal Law, whoever is found guilty of plotting to subvert the government is to be sentenced to life imprisonment, and may be sentenced to death when the harm to the state and the people is especially serious and the circumstances especially odious.

JIEFANGJUN BAO ON SELF-CRITICISM IN ARMY

OW080606 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 2130 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] JIEFANGJUN BAO carried a commentator's article on the first page reiterating that the effort to create a good atmosphere is one of the fundamental goals of party rectification in the Army. The article holds that one of the important means to reach that goal is to conduct frequent and active criticism and self-criticism in the Army, since criticism and self-criticism is tantamount to good atmosphere and the only and efficient path leading to all good atmosphere.

SHANGHAI LEADER AT CULTURAL DEVELOPMENT MEETING

OW141128 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 0000 GMT 14 May 86

[Excerpt] The Shanghai symposium on strategy for Shanghai's cultural development held a plenary session yesterday to hear some speeches. Xie Lijuan, vice mayor of Shanghai, and Shu Wen, vice chairman of the Shanghai Municipal People's Congress Standing Committee, chaired the morning and afternoon sessions. Gao Zhanxiang, vice minister of culture, and Rui Xingwen and Huang Ju, respectively secretary and deputy secretary of the Shanghai municpal party committee, attended yesterday's session.

Speaking at the session, Xia Yan, vice chairman of the China Federation of Literary and Art Circles, pointed out: The strategy for Shanghai's cultural development must be compatible with the strategy for Shanghai's economic development approved by the State Council; it must also be compatible with the nation's objective of quadrupling gross industrial and agricultural output value by the year 2000. Proceeding from its actual situation, Shanghai must oppose conservatism, but it must also guard against rashness. After analyzing Shanghai, past and present situation, Xia Yan urged Shanghai to give full scope to its advantages so that Shanghai can lead other parts of the country in cultural development.

SHANGHAI MILITIA TRANSFERRED TO LOCAL GOVERNMENT

OW060949 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 0000 GMT 6 May 86

[Text] On the morning of 5 May, the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee, the Municipal People's Government, and the Shanghai Garrison held a signing ceremony on transferring the Nanshi District People's Armed Forces Department, the first pilot unit to be transferred in Shanghai, to local administration. BRIEFS

ZHEJIANG SATELLITE GROUND STATIONS — The cities, prefectures and counties in Zhejiang will successively build a network of satellite ground receiving stations to receive and relay educational and other programs transmitted by the Central Television Station via satellite, according to a provincial meeting on public health and education which ended in Tonglu County on 29 April. This year, China has obtained, by renting and buying, a total of three satellite transmitters. They will be used by the Central Television Station to open education and economic information channels in addition to its current programs. The educational television programs will start on a trial basis on 1 July this year and remain on the air for 17 hours each day. A satellite ground receiving station has just been completed in Tonglu County. Participants of the meeting wanted to build one in their respective localities as soon as possible. BEIJING: MAYOR ON REFORMS TO REMEDY SERVICE PROBLEMS

OW141849 Beijing XINHUA in English 1514 GMT 14 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 14 (XINHUA) -- Beijing Mayor Chen Xitong said here today the remedy to the problems in Beijing's services sector is the continuation of reforms. Chen noted that the poor services here are mainly due to "inadequate implementation of the responsibility system," the main feature of the reforms carried out in China in recent years. To tackle the problems, he said, there is the need for the service trades to resume pursuing the system, which boosts staff enthusiasm for work by relating their income directly to the management oftheir enterprises.

The mayor was making an address in response to criticism of Beijing's services by a group of delegates to last month's National People's Congress here. This news agency released a story in Chinese and English about the complaints of Beijing residents. The Chinese version was published in full in the BEIJING DAILY today.

The mayor added that Beijing's increasing population, especially those pouring into the city from other regions, has made "intolerable" demands on Beijing's commerce and services network. The city now has a population of more than nine million, with a transient population of about one million every day, he said. According to Chen, other factors responsible for poor services include inadequate consideration for the problems of service workers, unreasonable prices for some commodities, and inadequate training for those who have entered service trades in recent years.

XING CHONGZHI ATTENDS HEBEI CPPCC CLOSING SESSION

SK140725 Shijiazhuang HEBEI RIBAO in Chinese 30 Apr 86 p 1

[Excerpts] After successfully accomplishing all items on the agenda, the Fourth Session of the Fifth Hebei Provincial CPPCC Committee concluded on the afternoon of 29 April.

Present at the closing ceremony to congratulate the successful conclusion of the session were some leading comrades of the party, government, and army, including Xing Chongzhi, Xie Feng, Li Wenshan, Yang Zejiang, Zhang Chao, Ye Liansong, Lu Chanzan, Chen Yujie, Du Benjie, Wang Youhui, and Dong Xuelin.

Among those invited to attend the closing ceremony were Liu Zhenhua, Han Shufan, Liu Kedong, and Jiang Shougui, members of the National CPPCC Committee; and Jia Qiyun and Lu Zhiguo, former vice chairmen of the provincial CPPCC Committee.

Seated at the rostrum were Yin Zhe, chairman of the provincial CPPCC Committee; Zhang Ruolin, Bai Tieshi, Chen Lintang, Ma Zhouzhou, Wang Enduo, May Xinyun, Liu Zongyao, and Du Jingyi, vice chairmen of the provincial CPPCC Committee; and Wang Shusen, secretary general of the provincial CPPCC Committee.

Xu Chunxing, vice chairman of the provincial CPPCC Committee, presided over the closing ceremony. Voting, by a show of hands, the session unanimously elected Wang Shusen as Standing Committee member and secretary general of the provincial CPPCC Committee. Amid warm applause, Wang Shusen stood up from his seat to greet all CPPCC members. Before the election, Xu Chunxing, vice chairman of the provincial CPPCC Committee, explained to the CPPCC members participating in the session the fact that Shi Xizhi had voluntarily requested that he be allowed to resign from the post of secretary general of the provincial CPPCC Committee in order to implement the instruction of the central authorities on ensuring that the ranks of cadres become more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated, and more professionally competent.

When undertaking the post of secretary general of the provincial CPPCC Committee, Shi Xizhi enjoyed the respect of the people for working hard and making notable achievements. At that time, the CPPCC members warmly applauded to extend their heartfelt respect for him.

After that, the session adopted a resolution on the political work made by the fourth session of the fifth provincial CPPCC Committee, a resolution on the report on the work of the provincial CPPCC Committee Standing Committee, and a report on the situation in examining the motions of the fourth session of the fifth provincial CPPCC Committee.

After accomplishing all the items on the agenda, Li Wenshan, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered a speech at the session. Yin Zhe, chairman of the provincial CPPCC Committee, was the last to make a speech.

TIANJIN: NI ZHIFU EXAMINES EXPORTS EXHIBITION

SK140900 Tianjin TIANJIN RIBAO in Chinese 28 Apr 86 p 1

[Excerpts] "There is a galaxy of brand-name and quality products on display and the designs of the exhibits are quite new." This was an evaluation of the people for the export commodities displayed at the 2-day municipal preliminary exhibition.

These commodities will soon be displayed at the Hong Kong export commodities sales exhibition. On 26 and 27 April, Ni Zhifu, Li Ruihuan, Wu Zhen, Nie Bichu, and other leading comrades of the municipal CPC Committee, the municipal Advisory Commission, the municipal People's Congress, the municipal government and the municipal CPPCC Committee examined the exhibits at the preliminary exhibition.

With the approval of the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade, our municipality will sponsor its first export commodities sales exhibition in Hong Kong from 22 to 28 July. The sales exhibition will enable foreign friends and the broad masses of traders to further understand Tianjin's achievements and the new level which the export commodities have attained under the new situation in which the policy of vitalizing the domestic economy and opening to the outside world is being implemented; deepen the production departments' understanding of the foreign market situation; further expand the municipality's production of export products; and enhance the competitiveness of export products on international markets.

More than 108 municipal industrial companies will participate in this sales exhibition. After 5 months of tense preparations, we have provided nearly 2,800 varieties of products for the sales exhibition. The preliminary exhibition for the sales exhibition came to an end yesterday.

TIANJIN LENIENCY RALLY HELD FOR CRIMINALS

SK140902 Tianjin TIANJIN RIBAO in Chinese 1 May 86 p 1

[Excerpts] On the morning of 30 April, the municipality held a rally at first palace to give leniency to those criminals who surrendered to the police during the anti-stealing campaign. At the rally, the branch of the municipal People's Procuratorate announced the decision to give leniency to four thieves who voluntarily surrendered to the police and grant them immunity from prosecution.

Vice Mayor Lu Xuezheng spoke at the rally. He said: The party and the government mean what they say. All those who have committed thefts and other crimes, no matter how serious their crimes are, will be treated leniently in accordance with the spirit of "giving leniency to those who confess their crimes," so long as they surrender to the public security authorities and confess their crimes within the time limits set by the government.'

"He said: Since 1 April when the "notice" of the municipal Public Security Bureau was promulgated, the municipality's anti-stealing campaign has developed strong momentum and achieved marked results. Under the deterrent of the people's democratic dictatorship and the influence of the party's policies, more than 5,000 law breakers have surrendered to the police. The large number of the masses have supported and coordinated with the public security departments to seize and hand over a total of 1,076 criminals to the police. During the anti-stealing campaign, the public security organs have cracked 1,939 stealing cases, recovered large amounts of illicit money and property, and retrieved more than 4.947 million yuan of economic losses. Responsible persons of the municipal CPC Committee, the municipal People's Congress Standing Committee and the municipal People's Government attended the rally.

GANSU REGULATIONS DEFINE SPECULATIVE ACTIVITIES

HK080325 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] To curb illegal speculative activities, protect legitimate dealings, and uphold socialist economic order, the provincial industry and commerce administrative bureau recently issued provisional regulations on investigating and dealing with illegal economic activities. The regulations list in detail 12 kinds of activities that come under the category of speculation, together with the methods of dealing with them including fines, confiscation, enterprise consolidation, and so on.

The circular points out: Reselling material allocated under mandatory state plans for profit; reselling materials whose unrestricted purchase and sale is forbidden by the state, such as banned goods, contraband, illegal medicines, and reactionary and pornographic material including literature and pictures for profit; buying commodities in bulk from the state retail shops in extremely short supply and reselling them for profit; reselling bank certificates, foreign currency and exchange, and Overseas Chinese and foreign certificates for profit; reselling and dealing in cultural relics at profit; and diverting commodities earmarked for export to the domestic market -- all these activities come under the category of speculation, and we must resolutely crack down on them and deal with them severely.

SHAANXI COMMENTARY ON POWER ABUSE FOR PRIVATE GAINS

HK090253 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2330 GMT 7 May 86

[Station commentary: "Abuse of Power for Private Interests Is the Core of Sectoral Malpractices"]

[Excerpts] Curbing sectoral malpractices is an important hallmark of straightening out party style and checking the ongoing development of unhealthy trends. In the wake of checking the development of unhealthy trends, the problems disclosed in all aspects bear sectoral characteristics to a very great extent. The situation in the work of the different sectors varies greatly and their work style is also different. If we want to correct the unhealthy trends of all fronts, trades, and professions, we cannot use a single standard, set a unified demand, and apply a single method. In the light of the realities of the different trades and professions, we must grasp the unhealthy trends which bear sectoral characteristics. We can then penetratingly carry out the work of correcting such trends.

To eliminate sectoral malpractices, we must stress curbing the unhealthy trends of taking advantage of functions and powers, practicing fraud, extortion, entrapping the masses, and pursuing private ends. In our socialist country, people engage in thousands of trades and professions. The aim of the thousands of trades and professions is to serve the masses' production and livelihood. The workers of all trades and professions are to serve the people. Those who are faithful to their duties, perform their duties, and seek the interests of the people are welcomed by the masses. This can promote close ties between the party and the masses. The great majority of the workers of all trades and professions act in this way.

However, due to historical reasons and under the influence of capitalist ideology, some trades and professions have one problem or another.

For instance, those who control water close sluice-gates stop water supply at will; those who control electricity pull the plug at will to stop electricity supply; those who control the market confiscate goods and impose fines at will, and so on. The core of this overbearing work style which has sectoral characteristics is to take advantage of the power vested by the people to pursue private ends and to act wildly in defiance of the law or public opinion. The work of serving the people is turned into measures for entrapping the masses. This ideology, work style, and behavior are not allowed by the party discipline and state law and are opposed by the great majority of the workers of all trades and professions.

To get rid of sectoral malpractices, leaders must take the lead. In places and units which have serious sectoral malpractices, the problem is often something to do with their leaders who are contaminated by bad work style. Some people do not consider a problem or work from the standpoint of the party and state but only take the partial interests of their units into consideration. Some people regard the system and unit under their leadership as their individual kingdom and act like a tyrant or overlord. They accept gifts, take commissions, and even extort and accept bribes and reap ill-gotten gains. Regarding the problems of these people who hold leadership posts, if we do not strictly investigate and deal with them, the unhealthy trends which have sectoral characteristics can hardly be corrected. Therefore, we must strictly investigate and deal with the problems of sectoral malpractices occurring among leaders. We must investigate and deal with those who take advantage of power to seek personal gain, whoever they may be. We must deal with them in the way they deserve. We must conduct education in discipline, in professional ethics, and in serving the people for the great majority of workers.

To eliminate sectoral malpractices, we must take action and work in a down-to-earth manner. Only by eliminating sectoral malpractices can we promote the basic improvement of party style and general mood of society and the development of all undertakings.

SHAANXI: DEVELOPMENT OF LATERAL ECONOMIC TIES URGED

HK050621 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2330 GMT 4 May 86

[Radio talk: "Study and Popularize Experiences of Baoji, Promote Development of Lateral Economic Ties and Integration of Urban and Rural Areas"]

[Text] Facing the new situation of economic reform in both the urban and rural areas, the party and government leaders of Baoji City made the best use of the situation and promoted the practice of transferring industry, science and technology to the rural areas which delivered agricultural and sideline products, as well as peasants' labor and funds into cities. They advocated the slogan of two downs, two ups and one construction, which aims at building small towns. This is an effective measure for continuing to develop lateral economic ties, promoting exchanges between the urban and rural areas, and promoting economic development of the urban and rural areas. Once this measure was taken, both the urban and rural areas were integrated. This has achieved the aim of putting counties under the jurisdiction of cities and giving full play to the cities' role of being the center, as well as the counties' role of being the grass roots. Therefore, the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial government believe that Baoji's experiences are very significant in connection with the present situation, and should be greatly popularized throughout the province.

In order to learn from Baoji's experiences we must first study ways of boldly breaking away from the outmoded concepts of restricting the work to regions and departments when handling matters. Also, we must study innovative ways of implementing the central principles and policies.

Second, we must master the skill of judging from the overall situation and grasping the focal point. We must take the development of lateral economic ties and the promotion of integration of the urban and rural areas as an important task concerning the overall situation. That is, we must grasp this focal point.

Third, we must study their ideology and work style in which leadership means service. The leading comrades of the city CPC Committee and city government took the lead in offering services at the grass roots, in enterprises and at the forefront of production. They solved problems for comrades at the grass roots in a down-to-earth manner. They helped comrades find the best solutions and made on-the-spot decisions. This is an important part of promoting the leader's work.

Judging from the province as a whole, the work of popularizing Baoji's experiences also gives us a great deal of enlightenment. That is, we must attach great importance to the work of medium-sized cities. Generally speaking, the province's medium-sized cities must have a number of large and medium-sized industrial enterprises, have rather strong technological and educational forces, and be easily accessed. They should be the commercial and trading centers of nearby areas, and occupy an important position in the province's national economy. Compared to the large cities, they should have room for management development, and use it to advantage. Therefore, strengthening the building of medium-sized cities, and promoting reforms and the economic construction of these cities will inevitably bring good results in the development of the whole national economy. We expect that more good examples will be developed in the course implementing reforms.

XINJIANG COMMENTARY PROMOTES NATIONALITY SOLIDARITY

HK040448 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 0000 GMT 4 May 86

[Station commentary: "Learn the Experiences of Zepu and Raise Nationality Solidarity to a New Level"]

[Excerpts] Learning Zepu's experiences and launching a regionwide drive to create model units in nationality solidarity is bound to play a tremendous role and have a far-reaching influence in developing the excellent situation in nationality solidarity in the region and in promoting the great business of developing and building Xinjiang.

The effort to create model units in nationality solidarity can make nationality solidarity work a regular and systematic affair. Xinjiang has scored tremendous achievements in this work since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, and especially in recent years. However, we should also realize that some places and units have not yet assigned this work a regular and important place on their agenda. The work is sometimes grasped tightly and sometimes slackened. The practice of Zepu proves that launching an extensive drive to create model units in nationality solidarity can change this state of affairs and ensure that nationality work can proceed in an organized, thorough and sustained way under leadership.

The fundamental interest of the people of all nationalities lies in strengthening nationality unity. It is the common cause of all nationalities. Only if all levels and sectors are mobilized can we form a situation in which everyone thinks of nationality solidarity and work to promote it through good deeds. A social atmosphere can be created in which the people of all nationalities trust, respect, support, learn from, and make allowances for each other.

COMMENTARY EXAMINES PILOT'S DEFECTION, 'VETERAN SYNDROME'

HK131014 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE in Chinese 1224 GMT 11 May 86

[Commentary by He Shan: "Wang Hsi-chueh and the 'Veteran Syndrome'"]

[Text] Hong Kong, 11 May (ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE) -- In order to visit his aged father after a separation of over 40 years, Wang Hsi-chueh, a China Airlines pilot, flew a jet to Mainland China, causing quite a shock in Taiwan. Some public opinion holds that this kind of "homesickness" is not an individual phenomenon but a demonstration of the "veteran syndrome" which is now epidemic in Taiwan.

A few days ago, while addressing an urgent inquiry to the "Executive Yuan," Hsieh Hsueh-hsien, a "legislator" in Taiwan, pointed out that longing to visit relatives in Mainland China is a popular sentiment among people in Taiwan who are from various provinces in Mainland China. Since some of them had already visited their relatives on the mainland using other channels and the majority of these people have returned to Taiwan after the visit, he suggested that based on humanitarian grounds the authorities should allow people from various provinces in Mainland China to visit relatives in their hometowns and appropriately open person-to-person relations. Otherwise, the losses will outweigh the gains when popular discontent is stirred up, or "illegal acts" similar to the China Airlines incident will happen again.

Wang Hsi-chueh is a senior China Airlines pilot. According to newspapers in Taiwan, he once studied in the air force's junior training school and military academy and was an Air Force officer for several decades. He flew a U2 spy plane to penetrate into the mainland to carry out high-altitude reconnaissance flights on many occasions. Due to his outstanding performance, he was once summoned by Chiang Kai-shek and "had a photo taken together with him." After he joined China Airlines, he got a monthly salary of as much as 150,000 new Taiwan currency. He also enjoyed quite a happy family life. Since he had a situation envied by most of his colleagues, it is really incomprehensible that he determinedly returned to the mainland where conditions are relatively poor and asked to settle there. Nevertheless, this incomprehensible thing did happen. Maybe it was because he missed his hometown and relatives on the mainland too much, as he said at a press conference in Guangzhou. This is quite natural and normal in human relationships.

At present, there are still thousands upon thousands of veteran soldiers originating from various provinces in Taiwan. Like Wang Hsi-chueh, they left their hometowns at a very young age and came to Taiwan with the army. They have not seen their relatives on the mainland for over 30 years and still do not have any hope of being together with them. In addition to having no way to visit their hometowns, they are also prevented from corresponding with their relatives. Some of them who have some means can make use of their trips to foreign countries to meet their relatives abroad or directly visit their hometown at the risk of being punished after returning to Taiwan. However, those who do not have the means to make a trip to a foreign country, either resign themselves to their fate and die in grief or commit suicide after contracting diseases do to homesickness. Nevertheless, some of them take the plunge in desperation and risk their lives to find various means to fulfill their wishes.

Since the beginning of this year, press circles in Taiwan have made many appeals to the authorities to work our feasible methods to let relatives on both sides of the Taiwan Strait meet. Not long ago, the Gaoxiong City Board submitted a motion to the "Judicial Ministry" in Taiwan asking the authorities to allow residents in Taiwan "to correspond with their relatives on the mainland to pacify homesick feelings."

It should not be difficult to satisfy these humanitarian and ethical demands. Moreover, the authorities on the mainland have announced on many occasions that Taiwan compatriots are welcome to visit relatives and friends and travel on the mainland, and are free to go or stay. It seems that the best solution for the Taiwan authorities is to comply with the popular feeling and adopt measures to correctly handle the "veteran syndrome" as soon as possible.

ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE ON TAIWAN NUCLEAR PLANT FIRE

HK150537 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE in Chinese 1031 GMT 14 May 86

[Report; Taiwan's No 3 Nuclear Power Plant Incident Proved To Be the Result of Design Errors"]

[Text] Hong Kong, 14 May (ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE) — A source from Taipei indicates that the main cause of the fire at the No 1 machine of Taiwan's No 3 nuclear power plant on 7 July last year was major design errors in the gas turbine made by the U.S. Giyi [1142 8381] Company.

According to what the specialists of the Atomic Energy Committee of the Executive Yuan revealed the design errors were that the frequency of the mechanic natural vibration of the generating system was not up to design standard and that the frequency of the natural vibration of the low pressure gas turbine was too lose to that of other machines. As a result, resonance occurred and the main axis, the vanes of the low pressure gas turbine, and the hydrogen seal ring were damaged, causing hydrogen explosions which led to a big fire. In the course of investigation, they also discovered something wrong with the manufacture of the vanes of the low pressure gas turbine.

The specialists remarked that the No 2 machine of the plant has the same problems in spite of the recent adjustment of the frequency of the natural vibration of the low pressure gas turbine of the machine. The Taiwan Electric Power Company pointed out that it will take at least half a year to thoroughly correct the design errors. Therefore, the Taiwan Electric Power Company decided that before the generating vanes of the Nos 1 and 2 machines were thoroughly replaced, it would take an expedient measure of dismantling the last vane, and reduce the load and generating volume of the plant to ensure safety in electric generating.

YUAN EXAMINES GOVERNMENT ARMS SALES POLICY

OW090255 Taipei CNA in English 0238 GMT 9 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 8 (CNA) — The nation's exports of military hardware is not aimed at earning money, but to boost the national interest as a whole, the Executive Yuan said Thursday. It is different from the arms sales of many other countries, it added. As arms sale is a sensitive international issue, the government has handled it with a special care to avoid affecting the nation's image and causing possible embarrassment in national diplomacy, the executive body said in a written reply to an interpellation of legislator Wu Chun-hsiung on the development of the national military industry and supply of accessories to military hardware.

It is the set national defense policy to combine public and private enterprises to jointly advance the national defense industry and raise standards of national defence technology, the Yuan said. The government has assisted to establish more than 390 satellite factories for the national arsenal. They have contributed greatly to boosting domestic industrial technology and economic development, the Yuan said. To assure supply of accessories to military hardware, the Yuan said the Defense Ministry has created a computer system to maintain control of stocks, and has often reviewed supply practices to improve the supply system.

NO RADIOACTIVE CONTAMINATION FOUND IN IMPORTED FOOD

OW141443 Taipei CNA in English 1402 GMT 14 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 14 (CNA) -- An examination report shows that no sign of radioactive contamination so far has been found on the foodstuffs the Republic of China imports, says T.P. Wang, director general of the Bureau of Commodity Inspection and Quarantine. Examined food grains included barley, wheat, oat, maize, sesame, and cassava which are imported from Australia, New Zealand, the United States, Thailand, Sweden, Indonesia, India, Canada, Portugal, Hong Kong, South Africa, Japan, Nigeria, Sri Lanka, the United Kingdom, Uruguay, Paraguay, and Singapore.

Since 1973, Wang said, his bureau has cooperated with the nation's Tsing Hua University to engage in inspections for radioactive contamination on imported foodstuffs. During the period of Jan. 1985 till May 1986, all 84 examined cases have been found safe and with no sign of radioactive contamination. Wang made the statement in reply to legislator Hwa Ai's interpellation at a Legislative Yuan's Economic Committee meeting Wednesday.

FUJIAN OFFICIALS HOPE TALKS LEAD TO PRC-TAIWAN CONTACTS

HK150513 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 15 May 68 p 13

[By Ophelia Suen in Fuzhou]

[Text] A provincial official has forecast that the negotiations between CAL [China Airlines] and CAAC [Civil Aviation Administration of China] will encourage further co-operation between Taiwan and China.

The Fujian provincial head [as published] Mr Hu Ping, said of the airline talks: "This is a pleasing sign. We hope that via this matter, Taiwan can (in future) communicate with us." However, he added: "This is not a political issue, it is just an issue between two airline companies." He hoped that a solution satisfactory to both sides could be reached and that this would in turn "motivate cooperation across the Straits." Mr Hu was speaking with Hong Kong and Macao reporters after the opening of the Fifth Session of the Sixth Fujian Provincial People's Congress. About 480 congress members were present for the gathering, which was also attended by more than 600 officials from throughout the province. It is only the second time Hong Kong reporters have been invited to attend the congress. The current session, which is reviewing the Sixth Five-Year Plan (1980 to 1985) and discussing details of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, is due to end on May 22.

Referring to the historical differences between China and Taiwan, Mr Hu said he had visited an island close to Jinmen and found that the atmosphere there was "comparatively friendly." He noted that about 10,900 people from Taiwan visited Fujian last year through various channels. And there were daily contacts between fishermen from both states along the coast. Fujian has eight reception centres for fishermen from Taiwan, which have greatly boosted trade between the two areas.

HSIN WAN PAO ASSESSES SINO-U.S. ECONOMIC RELATIONS

HK130841 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 9 May 86 p 1

["New Talk" column: "There Will Be Further Development in Sino-U.S. Economic Relations"]

[Text] The sixth conference of the Sino-U.S. Joint Economic Committee was convened in Beijing yesterday. U.S. Treasury Secretary Baker led a delegation to the conference. Chinese President Li Xiannian met Baker before the opening of the conference. Li Xiannian said that China is resolute in implementing the policy of opening up to the world and that this policy will remain unchanged in this generation as well as in the next generation. He hoped that more U.S. industrialists will make investments in China.

The Sino-U.S. Joint Economic Committee Conference will discuss problems existing in economic cooperation between the two countries. The heads of the Chinese and U.S. delegations at the fifth conference in Washington last year had also been Wang Bingqian and Baker, the former being Chinese finance minister and the latter U.S. treasury secretary. At the conference last year, both sides exchanged views on macroeconomic management, investments, and credit, as well as problems concerning banking and finance.

Although there are some obstacles to Sino-U.S. economic cooperation, there has been gradual improvement year by year.

At the current conference of the Joint Economic Committee, the two finance ministers reviewed the following situations: 1) Bilateral trade amounted to $7.3 billion last year, about a 20 percent increase over the previous year. 2) By the end of last year, agreements already signed for U.S. merchants' direct investments in China total $2.1 billion and actual investments made exceed $1 billion, a 50 percent increase in 2 years. 3) There has been a marked rise in the sales of high technology products since the United States relaxed its limitations on the export of these products to China, and in addition the United States has taken a step forward in relaxing its limitations on technology transfers to China. 4) Sino-U.S. cooperation in the investment sphere has expanded from tourism and the production of light industrial products to the exploitation of coal, hydropower, offshore and onshore oil, and nonferrous metals as well as the development of aviation and the electronics industry.

The Sino-U.S. Joint Economic Committee holds a conference once a year, and so does the Sino-U.S. Joint Commerical and Trade Committee. The two committees are aimed at developing bilateral trade and strengthening economic cooperation between the two countries. As the two countries are different in terms of social systems, politics, history, culture, and economics, there are certainly difficulties in the course of promoting their cooperation. Imbalance in bilateral trade, imperfectness of China's law on foreign-related economy, and outmoded U.S. economic legislation and measures constitute obstacles to Sino-U.S. economic cooperation. It is necessary for both sides to take proper measures to remove these obstacles.

The expansion of Sino-U.S. trade and the development of Sino-U.S. economic cooperation is definitely beneficial to both sides. Their abnormal relations in the past decades have rapidly turned for the better over the last 3 to 5 years. AS for China's policy of opening up to the world, it is doubtless that the next generation will inherit it from the present generation. Li Xiannian's reiteration of this policy provides a major guarantee for China to carry out economic cooperation with various countries in the world, including the United States.

ABOLITION OF FOREIGN EXCHANGE CERTIFICATES ANALYZED

HK121118 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 11 May 86 p 1

["Special feature" by Kan Wei: "Rumors in Guangzhou That Use of Foreign Exchange Certificates Will Cease at the End of the Year"]

[Text] What will be the fate of the foreign exchange certificates, which have been in circulation in China for 6 years? It seems that there will be an answer to this question soon. Not long ago, it was alleged in Guangzhou that the foreign exchange certificates would cease to be in use by the end of this year. This news is known to almost all and is consistent with the news in Beijing that the State Council is increasing preparations for the abolition of the foreign exchange certificates.

As far as the country is concerned, Guangdong and Fujian should be the two provinces with the greatest amounts of foreign exchange certificates in circulations. Most Overseas Chinese are from these two provinces and many of these Overseas Chinese still have family members there. Many Hong Kong and Macao compatriots also have relatives in these two provinces. In addition, because of their geographical proximity to Hong Kong and Macao, many tourists from Hong Kong and Macao visit or leave these two provinces each day. These people are users of foreign exchange certificates. The relatives of many Hong Kong and Macao compatriots and the families of many Overseas Chinese likely possess a very large amount of foreign exchange certificates. Will these people be effected by the abolition of the foreign exchange certificates? This is a question with which all holders of foreign exchange certificates are concerned.

The latest news from Beijing is that according to some authorities the state will protect the interests of holders of foreign exchange certificates when it announces their abolition and that the new measure adopted will not make things inconvenient for foreign visitors, Chinese naturalized in foreign countries, Overseas Chinese visiting the country and their relatives, or Hong Kong, Macao, and Taiwan compatriots.

This is something like a "notice to reassure the public." In principle, the value of the foreign exchange certificates is equal to that of renminbi notes. Macroeconomically, the purpose of the abolition of the foreign exchange certificates is to put an end to he abnormal phenomenon of the simultaneous circulation of more than one currency in the country and to eradicate the maladies resulting from it. Microeconomicallly, once the foreign exchange certificates are abolished, there will be the problem of clinging to the long-enforced policy that gives preferential treatment to holders of foreign exchange or, in other words, the problem of clinging to the preferential policy regarding overseas remittance.

The foreign exhcange certificates were issued several years ago to facilitate the enforcement of the opening up policy. It was assumed that on the one hand, the use of foreign exchange certificates could prevent the circulation of foreign currencies on the domestic market, the practice of fraudulently buying foreign exchange, and the buying and selling of foreign exchange on the black market and, on the other hand, given the foreign exchange certificates, the preferential policy regarding overseas remittance would remain unchanged, thus continuing to encourage the influx of foreign exchange. The effects of the circulation of foreign exchange certificates have been most significant in Guangdong and Fujian.

In the past, in Guangdong, Fujian, and many other parts of the country, there were shops selling special commodities and giving preferential treatment to Overseas Chinese and their families. Since foreign exchange certificates were put into circulation, similar shops have been established in various parts of the country. These shops give preferential treatment to customers using foreign currencies to buy commodities. For example, only foreign exchange certificates are accepted at the "friendship stores" in Guangzhou and other parts of the country, which sell expensive quality goods and which are frequented by families of Overseas Chinese and Hong Kong and Macao compatriots.

The goods sold there, such as household refrigerators, color televison sets, and other domestic electrical appliances, motorcycles, bicycles, high-quality furniture, and so on, are cheaper than those sold at ordinary shops. This is an effective way to encourage the flow of foreign exchange from the people to the government. So long as the local banks properly implement the measures for controlling the retention of foreign exchange by the enterprises, this is always an effective way to help the state earn more foreign exchange income.

In addition, the circulation of foreign exchange income can also help some Chinese-foreign joint ventures, such as hotels jointly run by Chinese and foreigners, recover their foreign exchange. For example, the hotels jointly run by Chinese and foreigners in Beijing, Guangzhou, and Shanghai mainly accept foreign exchange certificates. This can help foreign investors gradually recover their capital and make a profit. What will the "new measure be to replace the use of foreign exchange certificates" which is said to be under consideration?

Nothing is perfect. Since April 1980, when foreign exchange certificates were issued, undreamed-of adverse effects have indeed been observed throughout the country. Since people with foreign exchange certificates can buy high-quality consumer goods and since enterprises with foreign exchange certificates are allowed to withddraw their foreign exchange from the banks, foreign exchange certificates have become something much sought after and the illegal business of buying and selling foreign exchange certificates flourishes. This practice has spread all the way from the coastal cities to the inland cities and such far-off places as Xinjiang and Xizang. In the streets in Urumqi and Lhasa, there are always people ready to pay dearly for foreign exchange certificates. This practice, if unchecked, can disrupt the financial market and indirectly affect the people's livelihood.

Over the past few years, during the NPC and CPPCC sessions, many NPC deputies and CPPCC members, particularly those who are experienced economists, have focused their criticisms on the maladies resulting from the circulation of more than one currency in the country. In 1983, after listening to the opinions of various parties, the State Council began preparations for the abolition of foreign exchange certificates. However, according to some, because of various considerations and of the State Council's worry that the change may lead to some undesirable consequences, the plan has been shelved. In April this year, at the NPC and CPPCC sessions, the issue was mentioned again and critical views were aired by NPC deputies and CPPCC members. All this has prompted the central authorities to make up their minds.

On 3 April, at a press conference attended by Chinese and foreign reporters, Vice Premier Yao Yilin formally announced that the foreign exchange certificates would be abolished. However, he suggested that the preparations for the abolition of the foreign exchange certificates would be quite time-consuming. He said: "The abolition of the foreign exchange certificates would be beneficial to the development of China's foreign trade and tourism and to the intercourse and exchanges between China and other countries." "We have not decided when to abolish the foreign exchange certificates, but preparations are under way."

The abolition of the foreign exchange certificates, which have been in circulation for 6 years, will inevitably lead to some problems. This requires the specialists to carefully study the issue and to find something to replace them in order to avoid new problems. The hearsay in Guangzhou about the abolition of the foreign exchange certificates at the end of this year has yet to be verified or disproved by an official statement issued by the Bank of China.

PRC MEMBERS OF MACAO TALKS DELEGATION NAMED

[Special dispatch from Beijing: "The First Round of Sino-Portugese Talks Will Be Held in Beijing"]

[Text] According to reliable sources, negotiations between China and Portugal on the question of Macao's future will begin either later this month or in early June. The first round of talks will be held in Beijing and subsequent sessions will be hold once every month. Head of the Chinese delegation is Zhou Nan, deputy minister of foreign affairs. The delegation will be composed of some four to five persons, and among those whose names are expected to figure in the list are: Ke Zhengping (NPC deputy and general manager of the Macao Nanguang Corporation, Shao Tianren (legal adviser at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs), Ke Zaishuo (director of the Hong Kong and Macao Affairs Office of the Ministry of Foreign Affars), Zhu Hua (director of the Third Department at the State Council's Hong Kong and Macao Affairs Office) and Zhao Jihua (deputy director of the Hong Kong and Macao Affairs Office at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs).

PRC SPOKESMAN ON WU XUEQIAN'S EAST EUROPE VISIT

OW141414 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1307 GMT 14 May 86

[Text] Beijing, 14 May (XINHUA) -- A Chinese delegation with He Kang, minister of agriculture, animal husbandry, and fishery, as leader, and Qi Huaiyuan, vice minister of foreign affairs, as deputy leader will attend a UN General Assembly special meeting is scheduled to take place in New York 27-31 May. This was announced by a spokesman of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs at a news briefing this afternoon. According to the spokesman, the meeting, the first special UN meeting to discuss Africa's economic problems, is being held in accordance with a resolution adopted by the 40th UN General Assembly. He added that the meeting will make an overall examination of the problems confronting Africa in its economic recovery and intermediate and long-term development.

Answering a reporter's question on whether or not Foreign Affairs Minister Wu Xueqian's East European tour indicates the thawing of Sino-Soviet relations, the spokesman said that Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian was invited to visit the Democratic Republic of Germany and Hungary, and the trip is to further promote the friendly ties between China and these two countries and to promote friendship between their people.

PRC, USSR, OTHER EXPERTS DISCUSS NUCLEAR SAFETY

OW151603 Beijing XINHUA in English 1552 GMT 15 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 15 (XINHUA) -- Chinese and foreign experts attending an international meeting called today for further strengthening of nuclear instrumentation standardization to ensure nuclear safety. The appeal was made at the current Beijing meeting of the Technology Committee 45 of the International Electrotechnical Commission (IEC/TC 45) which opened here today. Nearly 100 delegates from all over the world, including six from the Soviet Union, will discuss and adopt in 19 working groups more than 50 draft standards concerning nuclear instrumentation, reactor instrumentation and radiation protection instrumentation. All the draft standards to be discussed are closely linked with the designing and building of nuclear power plants and will help promote safety in nuclear power plant operation.

The meeting will also discuss issues concerning radiation protection by nuclear power stations and dose monitoring. The discussion and adoption of draft standards on radiation protection instrumentation will help reduce environmental pollution, safeguarding health of workers as well as safety of nuclear power plants. A non-governmental international standardization organization, the International Electrotechnical Commission was founded in 1906, the earliest of its kind. The commission now boasts of 203 technology committees and subcommittees with more than 600 working groups and has issued 98 standards on nuclear instrumentation.

China joined the IEC in 1957.

Delegates attending the nine-day meeting are from the United States, France, Federal Germany, United Kingdom, Italy, Sweden, Switzerland, the Soviet Union and Japan. Fifty-three Chinese experts are also attending the meeting.

U.S. SAYS SOVIET ARMS PROPOSAL NOT NEW

OW151910 Beijing XINHUA in English 1903 GMT 15 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 15 (XINHUA) -- The United States today termed the latest Soviet arms control initiative as containing "no new, startling approaches" but a restatement of its past proposals. The Soviet Union this morning tabled a draft treaty on limiting medium-range nuclear weapons at a special session of the arms control talks in Geneva. Details, however, were not yet disclosed. White House spokesman Larry Speakes said, "Our initial scan and advice from our delegation indicate there are not any new and startling approaches in the Soviet proposal." "It appears at first glance to be a more formal modification of previous Soviet statements, but we will certainly analyze the proposal to see whether this constitutes constructive movement toward seeking common ground," Speakes said. He added, "We hope this would indicate that the Soviets are becoming serious about the arms control talks."

The issue of reducing medium-range nuclear missiles is one of the three areas at the Geneva arms reduction and space weapons talks between the United States and the Soviet Union, which entered the fifth round last week. The Soviet Union in the past called for a sharp reduction of U.S. and Soviet medium-range missiles in Europe without touching its mobile SS-20 missiles deployed in Asia. The United States, however, demanded global limits that would prevent the Soviet Union from shifting to Asia those SS-20s now targeted at Europe. Washington also rejected Soviet demands to cut British and French nuclear forces.

IAEA WELCOMES GORBACHEV NUCLEAR COOPERATION CALL

OW151437 Beijing XINHUA in English 1431 GMT 15 May 86

[Text] Vienna, May 15 (XINHUA) -- The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) welcomes Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's proposal for closer cooperation among all nations in exchanging information on nuclear power, an agency spokesman said today. Gorbachev, in a televised speech last night, suggested the creation of "a system of prompt warning and supply of information in the event of accidents and faults at nuclear power stations." In his first public assessment of the Chernobyl accident, Gorbvachev also called for an international conference in Vienna under the auspices of the IAEA to discuss safe development of nuclear power. The Soviets are providing radiation data daily to the IAEA under an agreement worked out during a visit to Moscow by Director-General Hans Blix of the 112-nation IAEA, a U.N. agency set up to promote the peaceful use of atomic energy. The agency spokesman said that a direct reaction to Gorbachev's initiative will be made after a board meeting next week.

In another development, Federal German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has hailed Gorbachev's call for an international conference on nuclear power issues as "fundamentally positive." Genscher said in a radio speech today that the Soviet Union should be taken at its word and a conference on nuclear safety topics be set up as quickly as possible. He stressed that cooperation should extend to all areas of nuclear safety, including the offer of aid after accidents. Genscher's call echoed a proposal made by Chancellor Helmut Kohl last week for an international conference to stipulate unified safety standards for nuclear plants and procedures for exchanging information.

PRC REPRESENTATIVE SPEAKS TO UNESCO SESSION

OW140550 Beijing XINHUA in English 0539 GMT 14 May 86

[Text] Paris, May 13 (XINHA) -- International multilateral cooperation is indispensible for the maintenance of peace and the promotion of development, China's Permanent Representative to UNESCO, Lai Hanxuan, said today at the body's 124th session. Lai told the session of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) that China has always believed that it is in the interest of all countries to develop multilateral cooperation based on equality, dialogue and mutual understanding.

No international organization is perfect, Lai said, adding that UNESCO is undergoing internal reform not only because external pressures have forced it to do so, but because reform is necessary in order to revitalize and make relevant UNESCO's work. The Chinese representative said he regretted Britain's and Singapore's withdrawal from UNESCO, which worsened the difficult situation created by the resignation of the United States. But Lai said he believed the future of UNESCO is promising.

The 124th session opened May 7 at UNESCO's headquarters in Paris and is due to end May 23. The main topic is the difficulty caused by the withdrawal of Britain and Singapore, particularly the readjustment of the 1986-87 budget and further reduction of UNESCO's staff.

CAAC ANNOUNCES PLANS TO BUY 10 JUMBO JETS

OW141419 Beijing XINHUA in English 1401 GMT 14 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 14 (XINHUA) -- The Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC), China's national flag carrier, has ordered 10 jumbo jets -- four Boeing 747s, four Boeing 767s and two airbus A310s -- this year, it was announced here today. A CAAC official said," This is part of the program to update and expand the fleet during the Seventh Five-Year Plan period (1986-1990)." He said the airline would continue to buy more jetliners and advanced navigation facilities to meet the growing needs of the domestic and international air services.

In March, CAAC concluded a contract worth 750 million U.S. dollars with the Boeing company of the United States. It signed a 100-million U.S. dollar contract with Airbus Industries last week. According to CAAC, eight Boeing aircraft are scheduled to be delivered from February 1987 to March 1990. They will go into service on international air routes from China to the United States, Singapore, European countries and some domestic cities as well. Two airbus A310s will be delivered in the third quarter of 1987, and will serve on international air routes from Shanghai to far-eastern regions, European countries and large cities in China. In addition to the big jetliners, CAAC has also imported 18 British-made airplanes -- 10 BAE-146s and eight short 360s to serve China's coastal open cities. It was learned that negotiations for aircraft deals are still under way between CAAC and manufacturers in Britain, Canada, France, the Netherlands and other countries.

CUI YUELI ON 'HEALTH FOR ALL' STRATEGY

OW072107 Beijing XINHUA in English 1550 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] Geneva, May 7 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Health Minister Cui Yueli today told the 39th World Health Assembly that the Chinese Government has reinforced measures to speed up attaining "health for all by the year 2000" in China.

Cui indicated that the "health for all" strategy, formulated by the World Health Organization (WHO), is a brilliant one and its implementation will be fruitful. "China is the world's most populous developing country, and its road to this strategic goal is an arduous one. However, we have carried out effective work toward this end and are continuing to do so," the health minister said.

Cui said from 1949 to 1985, the incidence of acute infectious diseases dropped from 20,000 to 800 per 100,000 people, a 96 percent decrease. Incidence and morbidity for other infectious or endemic diseases also have been reduced sharply to one-tenth or less of the levels prevailing in the early 1950s. The five major hygiene areas -- environmental, radiation, school, labor and food -- are now controlled by legislation, he added. "As a consequence of better disease control and hygiene conditions, people's health has improved," Cui told the assembly. He cited statistics showing the overall mortality rate has diminished from 25 per 1,000 in the 1950s to 6.7 per 1,000, and the infant mortality rate has gone from 200 per 1,000 to 34.7 per 1,000. Life expectancy has risen from 35 to 67.9 years. Cui attributed these achievements to the conscientious implementation of the "prevention first" policy, combining health work with mass movement, formulation of feasible plans and concrete measures for disease prevention and health care development, and heeding the development of manpower resources.

The Chinese minister detailed the following six measures that China will adopt to assure health prevention patterns continue in the future:

-- To complete and improve the nationwide urban and rural health network, reinforce dual county and village health care institutions, ensure sound management of funds, manpower and organization at the grassroot level.

-- To undertake the general immunization program in two stages, i.e. by 1988, the immunization coverage rate is to reach 85 percent throughout each province, and the same percentage by 1990 at the county level. In this way, measles, poliomyelitis, diptheria, pertussis and tetanus can be basically eradicated, while other diseases such as rabies, brucellosis, filariasis, malaria, endemic goiter and leprosy can be brought under control or wiped out.

-- To encourage health sectors to collaborate with agricultural and water conservancy departments to supply 80 percent of China's 800 million peasants with safe drinking water by 1990.

-- To strengthen health legislation and enforcement, implement supervision and management of environmental sanitation, occupational health, food hygiene, radiation protection and sanitation of public places. The country will enforce stricter regulations to license pharmaceutical production, to ban all false and inferior quality drugs and to strengthen drug administration.

-- To pay close attention to the 100 medical research projects on malignant tumors, viral hepatitis, epidemic hemorrhagic fever, cardio-cerebral-pulmonary-vascular disease, occupational diseases and birth control techniques, as well as research on new drugs. This will bring into full play the role of traditional medicine and pharmacology, as well as their integration with Western medicine.

-- To strengthen health education programs through intensive health campaigns centered on pest elimination and disease control, sanitation, afforestation, and environment beautification.

IISS REVIEWS EAST-WEST RELATIONS PROSPECTS

OW140052 Beijing in English 0032 GMT 14 May 86

[Text] London, May 14 (XINHUA) -- "Essentially the choice of East-West relations over the next two or three years would seem to lie between states of medium and high tension,'' -- this is one of the major conclusions drawn by the world-famous International Institute for Strategic Studies (IISS) in its latest review of the East-West relations. In its annual report "Strategic Survey 1985-1986" published here today, the London-based IISS says that "above all, 1985 was a year of expectations, many of them unfortunately still unrealized."

IISS Director Robert O'Neil told a London press conference on Monday that the accession of Mikhail Gorbachev to the Soviet leadership had brought "greater promise both internally and internationally. Yet the record of his first year shows that he is essentially a moderniser, not a reformer." He called attention to what the "strategic survey" says about the new Soviet leader: He "sees little wrong with the basic aims of his predecessors, but he believes strongly that they were clumsy, unimaginative and ineffective in the way they pursued their goals." "If the expectation of a positive change in Soviet attitudes under Gorbachev has been dimmed by the experience of the past year," says the survey, however, "the realisation should have dawned on the West that it now has to face a far more sophisticated and effective opponent that it has been for many years."

"The USSR's return to the arms-control negotiations in Geneva and the agreement by the leaders of the two superpowers to meet had fuelled expectations that a real improvement in East-West relations was imminent." Yet, as O'Neil noted, "though the summit meeting did not go badly, the glow faded quickly, the atmosphere has soured, and U.S.-Soviet controversy was high during the year."

Despite the summit meeting, there was no lack of confrontation between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. in 1985 and early 1986, and "much of it centered around regional conflicts and which side was to blame for the various apparent impasses in Central America, Southern Africa, Ethiopia, the Middle East, Afghanistan and South-East Asia," says the strategic survey.

Commenting on the "grand design" of both Gorbachev and U.S. President Ronald Reagan on eliminating nuclear weapons, the IISS says, "To the extent that both leaders know that this goal is unrealizable, they merit the criticism of informed observers for peddling humbug to a gullible and hopeful public." And the basic incompatibility of the two proposed routes for achieving the goal -- banning nuclear weapons or deploying completely effective strategic defences -- "puts an end to any thought of rapid progress in this direction." Although many of the more optimistic expectations of 1985 have not been realized, the very fact, the IISS stresses, that "the two superpowers were once again engaged in serious negotiations showed that they both realized that there is no other way to manage East-West relations."

Another interesting conclusion the IISS reached on East-West relations is that "the balance between the two blocks has inclined in the latter's (West's) favour by what the U.S.S.R. calls 'objective reality'. The Soviet Union has found no new way to translate its military might into political gains" while the West has managed, in the IISS's view, to benefit from some radical changes, like those in Haiti and the Philippines.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON YAO YILIN'S VISIT TO U.S.

Meets Reagan in Washington

OW160042 Beijing XINHUA in English 0025 GMT 16 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 15 (XINHUA) -- Expressing warm welcome to the visiting Chinese Vice Premier Yao Yilin, U.S. President Ronald Reagan told the Chinese guest that his visit is the continuation of a series of high-level mutual visits between the United States and China and is a symbol of the strength of the relations between them. Reagan met with Yao at the White House at 11 a.m. (local time) this morning. Yao arrived in Washington Wednesday to begin his 10-day official visit in the U.S. at the invitation of U.S. Vice President George Bush. It was learned that during the half hour conversation, both the host and the guest expressed the willingness and intention to further deepen mutual understanding to promote the stable and lasting development of the relations between the two countries.

Presidenbt Reagan briefed Vice Premier Yao on his recent meeting with the foreign ministers of the ASEAN countries at Bali, Indonesia, and the Tokyo economic summit.

Yao acquainted the U.S. President with the economic situation in China and its Seventh Five-Year Plan and its position on the question of Taiwan.

Among those present at the meeting from the U.S. side were: Vice President George Bush, Secretary of State George Shultz, Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldrige, White House Chief of Staff Donald Regan, Assistant Secretary of State Gaston Sigur, Ambassador to China Winston Lord.

Among those present from the Chinese side were Ambassador to the U.S. Han Xu and chief of the department of Americas and Oceania of the Foreign Ministry Zhang Wenpu.

Later, Yao called on Shultz at the State Department. It was learned that they exchanged views and explained their positions on a series of international problems, including a number of regional issues. Schultz gave a luncheon in honor of Yao and his party at which U.S. Secretary of Commerce Baldrige and Secretary of Labor William E. Brock III were also present.

Hosts Official Dinner

OW160712 Beijing XINHUA in English 0641 GMT 16 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 15, (XINHUA) -- Vice Premier of the Chinese State Council, Yao Yilin, who is on an official visit here, held a dinner tonight in the Chinese Embassy in honor of U.S. Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldrige. Chines and U.S. Government officials present at the dinner expressed good wishes over frequent toasts for the further development of economic relations.

Attending the dinner were high ranking officials from the U.S. departments of state and commerce. Chinese Ambassador Han Xu and Vice Minister of the Chinese State Planning Commission Gan Ziyu were also present. Earlier today Yao met U.S. congressional committee leaders. They discussed economic and trade relations and issues of mutual concern.

Co-chairs Trade Meeting

OW160220 Beijing XINHUA in English 0159 GMT 16 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 15 (XINHUA) -- The fourth meeting of the Sino-U.S. Joint Commission on Commerce and Trade opened here this morning with both sides expressing satisfaction over the steady development in their trade and economic cooperation. Chinese Vice-Premier Yao Yilin, who is now on an official visit here, and Malcolm Baldrige, U.S. secretary of commerce, co-chaired the opening session. In their opening speeches, the two chairmen, while reviewing progress in bilateral trade and economic and technological cooperation in the past year, examined the obstacles that should be removed, and discussed the prospects for further development of trade and cooperation in the coming year.

In his speech, Baldrige said that in the past year the United States and China witnessed a remarkable expansion of their bilateral economic ties. Trade and investment reached record levels. Many American and Chinese firms signed long-term agreements. However, he continued, in the United States, the free trade policy was fiercely challenged by protectionist sentiments in some segments of the private sector and in the Congress. In China, the economic reform program was tested by excessive demand for domestic capital and by a foreign trade deficit. Despite these challenges, the economies of the two countries remain on course, he added. In the year ahead, Baldrige said, "most importantly, we must oppose protectionism." He hoped that the two countries will try to work out a comprehensive and predictable legal framework for their bilateral commercial activities, and ensure that their bilateral economic agreements are carried out effectively.

Yao Yilin noted in his speech that the two-way Sino-U.S. trade volume totalled 7.3 billion U.S. dollars in 1985, an increase of 20 percent over 1984. With the bless [as received] of the agreement on Sino-U.S. industrial and technological cooperation, the four "work programs' signed by the two governments have been implemented successfully. By the end of 1985, direct American investment in China as shown in contracts reached 2.1 billion dollars and there are now more than 130 Sino-U.S. joint ventures in China. The Chinese vice premier expressed appreciation of the positive actions taken by the United States to improve its economic relations and trade with China, including the decision to simplify the procedure for approving transfer of technology to China, a lift of the embargo on assistance to China in the U.S. foreign aid act, and President Reagan's veto of the protectionist bill limiting imports of textiles.

Yao Yilin said that during the Seventh Five-Year Plan period (1986-1990), China will further develop its foreign, economic, trade and technical exchanges and will appropriately use more foreign funds in different forms. Referring to China's economic restructuring, Yao said, "China is undergoing great changes." He promised that China will steadily increase its economic ties and cooperation with other countries. After the opening session, the commission will hold group discussions on bilateral trade, investment, technology transfer, and industrial and technological cooperation.

ZHANG AIPING MEETS HAIG DELEGATION 15 May

OW151424 Beijing XINHUA in English 1416 GMT 15 May 86

[Excerpt] Beijing, May 15 (XINHUA) -- Zhang Aiping, state councillor and minister of national defence, met a delegation from the United Technologies Corporation (UTC), led by former U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig, and UTC Chairman Harry J. Gray, here this afternoon.

GORBACHEV CALLS FOR COOPERATION ON NUCLEAR POWER

OW141958 Beijing XINHUA in English 1923 GMT 14 May 86

[Text] Moscow, May 14 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev today said the Chernobyl nuclear accident has left nine people dead and 299 hospitalized, while calling for an international conference to discuss safe development of nuclear power. In his TV address tonight, Gorbachev revealed that a sudden burst of power during maintenance work on the fourth reactor caused the Chernobyl accident on April 26.

Gorbachev suggested the creation of an international regime of safe development of nuclear power on the basis of close cooperation of all nations dealing with nuclear power engineering, according to the official Soviet news agency TASS. "A system of prompt warning and supply of information in the event of accidents and faults at nuclear power stations ... should be established in the framework of the regime," the Soviet leader said. Gorbachev said, "Likewise it is necessary to adjust an international mechanism, both on a bilateral and new multilateral basis, for the speediest rendering of mutual assistance when dangerous situations emerge." "For the discussion of the entire range of matters it would be justifiable to convene a highly authoritative specialized international conference in Vienna under the auspices of the International Atomic Energy Agency," he said.

While saying it was too early to pass judgment on the causes of the Chernobyl disaster, Gorbachev added that the apparent cause was an unexpected power surge during a scheduled shutdown of the reactor before a hydrogen explosion.

GORBACHEV SAYS USSR TO EXTEND NUCLEAR TEST BAN

OW141857 Beijing XINHUA in English 1844 GMT 14 May 86

["Gorbachev Announces New Moratorium on Nuclear Testing" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Moscow, May 14 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev announced today he is extending a unilateral moratorium on nuclear testing until August 6 and renewed a call to U.S. President Reagan to meet him in a European city or Hiroshima to discuss a permanent test ban. He said in a nationally televised address, "The accident at Chernobyl showed again what an abyss will open if nuclear war befalls mankind," assessing the Chernobyl nuclear power plant disaster which occurred on April 26. "In conditions when the attention to nuclear matters increased, the Soviet Government ... has decided to extend its unilateral moratorium on nuclear tests till August 6 of this year," Gorbavchev said.

The announcement appeared to be a major Soviet diplomatic move since April 11 when Moscow announced it had ended its eight-month-old self-imposed ban on nuclear testing following one of Washington's detonations. The Soviet moratorium began on August 6, 1985, the day when the United States dropped its first atomic bomb on the Japanese city of Hiroshima 40 years ago. The moratorium, originally due to expire at the end of last year, was extended until March 31. Gorbachev then offered not to conduct any tests if the United States followed suit. Despite the scraping of the ban, Gorbachev said on May 2 that his country was "in no hurry to resume" nuclear tests and still wants an accord with the United States to end atomic explosions. The Soviet leader has repeatedly called upon President Reagan to hold a special summit in a European capital to discuss ways to ban nuclear testing.

GORBACHEV AGREES TO MEET WITH REAGAN AGAIN

OW160016 Beijing XINHUA in English 0051 GMT 16 May 86

[Text] Moscow, May 15 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev today agreed in principle to hold another meeting with U.S. President Ronald Reagan, stressing that the meeting should "bring a tangible practical result if only in one or two matters agitating the whole world." Gorbachev said that the meeting should also bring "an appropriate political atmosphere" in the international situation. He made the remarks during a meeting with American industrialist Armand Hammer and Doctor Robert Gale, a bone marrow specialist, the official news agency TASS reported. Hammer arrived here earlier this week with relief supplies for the victims of the April 26 Chernobyl nuclear accident, while Gale has been treating people injured by the accident. Gorbachev said his meeting with Reagan would be held neither on an American script nor a Soviet one. "A common platform with the orientation at a concrete result must be sought," he said. The Soviet leader said Soviet-U.S. relations have worsened as a result of the anti-Soviet campaign launched by Washington following the accident in Chernobyl. Gorbachev and Reagan agreed at last November's Geneva summit to meet again in Washington this year. After the U.S. air raid against Libya last month, Gorbachev said he would reconsider the meeting if the United States continued its military actions against Libya. In a nationally televised speech last night, Gorbachev proposed a special summit with Reagan in an European capital to discuss a permanent nuclear test ban. Reagan has rejected the proposal.

JAPAN REACTS 'COOLY' TO U.S.-USSR HIROSHIMA TALKS

OW151632 Beijing XINHUA in English 1523 GMT 15 May 86

[Excerpt] Tokyo, May 15 (XINHUA) -- Japan has reacted cooly to a Soviet proposal to hold summit talks with the United States in Hiroshima on a nuclear test ban, the KYODO NEWS SERVICE said Thursday. Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone told reporters that it is more important for the two superpowers to negotiate for "a 50 percent reduction (intercontinental ballistic missiles), inspections for the nuclear testing ban and a concrete efficient way of achieving a nuclear arms ban." "It is necessary first to proceed with the Geneva arms control negotiations," the prime minister added.

Soviet Leader Mikhail Gorbachev Wednesday urged U.S. President Ronald Reagan to meet him "without delay" in Hiroshima or any European capital to discuss a nuclear test ban. "I confirm my proposal to President Reagan to meet without delay in the capital of any European state that will be pepared to accept us or, say, in Hiroshima, and to agree on a ban on nuclear testing," Gorbachev said in a televised address.

The Japanese Government, so far, has made no official comment on the Soviet proposal. Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe, who has been low-key on the issue, told a Diet foreign committee meeting Thursday that he does not believe President Reagan will simply accept Gorbachev's proposal. Meanwhile, Hiroshima and Nagasaki, the two Japanese cities that suffered nuclear attacks at the end of World War II, announced that they welcome Gorbachev's proposal.

NI ZHIFU-LED DELEGATION ATTENDS BANQUET IN DPRK

[By reporter Gao Yaorong]

[Text] Pyongyang, 13 May (XINHUA) -- Zong Kewen, Chinese ambassador to Korea, gave a banquet at the Chinese Embassy tonight for the Chinese trade union delegation's visit to Korea and thanked the Korean comrades for the warm hospitality they had offered to the Chinese delegation.

Ni Zhifu, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, president of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, and head of the Chinese trade union delegation; and Kim Pong-chu, chairman of the General Federation of Trade Unions of Korea Central Committee, both spoke at the banquet. Ni Zhifu said: Through its visit, the Chinese trade union delegation has further understood the tremendous achievements scored by the Korean working class and people in building socialism. These achievements are a mighty inspiration to the Chinese workers and people as well as a positive contribution to safeguarding peace in Asia and in the world.

Kim Pong-chu said: The Chinese trade union delegation's visit to Korea is a tremendous success. In a comradely atmosphere, They expressed their determination to fight shoulder to shoulder from now on. This visit has contributed a great deal to strengthening the relations of friendship and cooperation between the working classes and the trade union organizations of the two countries. He said that he would make strenuous efforts to further develop these relations of friendship.

Attending the banquet were So Yun-sok, member of the Workers Party of Korea [WPRK] Central Committee's Political Bureau and responsible secretary of the Pyongyang Municipal Party Committee; Hyon Chun-kuk; director of the WPRK International Department, and others.

After its arrival in Korea on 9 May, the Chinese trade union delegation was received by President Kim Il-song. The delegation visited some factories and construction sites in Pyongyang and Hamhung. The delegation also placed a wreath on Preimier Zhou's bronze statue at the Hungnam Chemical Fertilizer Plant in Hamhung. The delegation is scheduled to leave Korea for home tomorrow.

GU MU MEETS JAPANESE GROUP ON COOPERATION

OW151154 Beijing XINHUA in English 1127 GMT 15 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 15 (XINHUA) -- State Councillor Gu Mu met a group of Japanese investigators [as received], led by Kazuhiko Honjo here today. The group is here to cooperate with China in drafting a plan for comprehensive development of Hainan Island. Hainan Island has many natural advantages, Gu said. China hopes that the island will develop its economy, culture and education at a faster pace.

Besides financial and material support, the central government will also give the island more decision-making power and help it strengthen its contacts with other parts of the country. Foreigners are also welcome to invest there, he added.

DENG SIGNS ORDER HONORING SOLDIERS ON SRV BORDER

["Central Military Commission Honors Battle Heroes" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, May 15 (XINHUA) -- Two army units and five individual soldiers were commended in a latest order of the Central Military Commission for their heroism in defensive battles in the Laoshan area on the Sino-Vietnamese border in Yunnan Province. In his capacity of chairman of the commission, Deng Xiaoping signed the order yesterday honoring them for defeating Vietnamese troops' assaults and harassment attacks to defend the safety of the people and their property in this border area. The commission designated the two units as "heroic companies" and the five soldiers, including one who died in battle, "heroes." The commission called upon all commanders and soldiers of the Chinese People's Liberation Army to learn from them.

AUSTRALIA'S HAWKE OFF TO JAPAN, PRC, PHILIPPINES

OW141016 Beijing XINHUA in English 0807 GMT 14 May 86

[Text] Canberra, May 14 (XINHUA) -- Australian Prime Minister Robert Hawke left here this morning on a 13-day trip to Japan, China and the Philippines. Although there is no press release about the tour, the aim of the trip is believed to consolidate Australia's good relations with those countries. Hawke is expected to talk with Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone on the outcome of the Tokyo summit held early this month by seven leading industrialized nations. Their discussions will also include nuclear disarmament, East-West relations, the strategic situation in northern Asia and the Philippines, international cooperation and investment, tourism and financial services. It is reported that Hawke is seeking Japan's support of the South Pacific Nuclear Free Treaty Protocols, which were initiated by Australia and are to be finalized at the South Pacific forum in Fiji in August. The United States and Britain have expressed opposition to the treaty.

During his trip to China in 1984, Hawke had announced an initiative to sell iron ore from Kwinana, western Australia, to China. But, government sources have made it clear that world prices now made the Kwinana sales unlikely. Besides, negotiations have been going on over Chinese investment in an iron ore mine at Mt. Channar in western Australia. In 1985, Australian exports to China stood at some 960 million U.S. dollars while its imports from China were only 190 million U.S. dollars.

The coming visit to the Philippines, Hawke's first trip to that country, will further indicate the Australian Government's support for Mrs. Aquino's government.

Australian Foreign Minister Bill Hayden was the first foreign minister to visit Manila after the fall of the Marcos regime in late February. Hayden promised a 50-percent boost in Australia's aid to the Philippines under the new government.

HAWKE INTERVIEW ON UPCOMING PRC VISIT

OW160342 Beijing XINHUA in English 0111 GMT 16 May 86

[Text] Canberra, May 16 (XINHUA) -- Australia and China "must have a broad relationship that goes beyond bilateral economic matters to include foreign policy consultation and people-to-people contacts," said Australian Prime Minister Robert Hawke recently. Hawke made these remarks in an exclusive interview with XINHUA and the Chinese Newspaper, GUANGMING DAILY, before he left here for Japan and China on May 14. Hawke will arrive in Beijing on May 18 for an official visit to China, where he will discuss with Chinese leaders bilateral trade and regional and international issues of common concern.

"It is more than usually important to strengthen our relations at this period," he said. China's four modernizations project and open door policy, he said, "mean not only that China's economy will grow, and that it will grow with the involvement of foreign partners like Australia, but that, partly as a consequence, China will have an even more important role in the political issues of our region and the world.

The prime minister expressed the hope that the two countries should broaden economic cooperation on the basis of complementarity. "Australia produces raw materials needed for China's modernization and we also have expertise useful to China's efforts. At the same time we can provide a market for the products of Chinese industry." "During this visit, I want to give further impetus to our cooperative initiatives in iron and steel, non-ferrous metals, wool, transport and so on," he said.

On Australia's economic relations with other Asian and Pacific nations, Hawke said "We emphasize Asia-Pacific cooperation" "because if stability and prosperity become the hallmarks of our region, we can become a center of world growth and an even stronger voice -- perhaps at times a united voice -- in important international affairs."

JI PENGFEI MEETS VISITORS FROM PHILIPPINES

OW141034 Beijing XINHUA in English 1019 GMT 14 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 14 (XINHUA) -- Chinese State Councillor Ji Pengfei met with Emil L. Ong, Philippine deputy minister of agriculture and food and adminstrator of national food authority, and his party here today. Ji welcomed Emil L. Ong as the first official of the newly-established Philippine Government to visit China. They conferred on the expansion of friendship between the two countries and their cooperation in agriculture and trade. The visitors arrived here May 11 as guests of the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade.

PRC, UK SIGN TWO ECONOMIC AGREEMENTS 16 MAY

OW160612 Beijing XINHUA in English 0549 GMT 16 May 86

[Text] London, May 15 (XINHUA) -- British and Chinese officials today praised two agreements that will promote and protect investments and financial arrangements, saying the accords will contribute to new economic and trade cooperation between the two countries. The agreements were signed by Sir Geoffrey Howe, Britain's foreign secretary, and Zheng Tuobin, China's minister of foreign economic relations and trade.

At today's signing, Howe said he is satisfied with Sino-British relations. "We'd like to see trade between both countries expanding faster than before." The development of economic relations and trade must be mutually beneficial, he added. "We hope these documents represent a foundation for a greater expansion of mutual prosperity," Howe declared.

In his speech, Zheng said, "Sino-British relations in recent years have never been better. The political, cultural, economic and trade relations, as well as technical cooperation have been greatly enhanced." Since agreeing on Hong Kong's future, China and Britain have entered a new era and the two countries "have a bright prospect for economic and trade cooperation,' Zheng added. "The agreements will promote the two-way investments and the cooperation in different forms. It will undoubtedly lead to new development of our economic and trade relations," he said. Zheng said that June's visit to Britain by General Secretary of China's Communist Party Hu Yaobang and Queen Elizabeth's trip to China in October will "open a new page in the history of the bilateral relations between our two countries."

One of the agreements signed today calls for Britiain to supply goods and services for Chinese development projects. This loan is worth 300 million pounds sterling. Projects the loan will cover include a coal-fired power station in Hunan Province, a telecommunications center for the Shanghai area, a seamless steel tube mill at Daye, Hubei Province, and renovation of Luoyang No. 1 tractor factory.

The other agreement is an investment promotion and protection accord, which provides safeguards for investors and is designed to encourage business confidence and the flow of investments. British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher met with Zheng at 10 Downing Street yesterday shortly after Zheng's arrival in London. Mrs. Thatcher told Zheng she is pleased with bilateral relations and the development of British and Chinese trade and economic cooperation. She particularly noted the achievements of China's economic construction. Zheng and the 10-member delegation he is leading also will visit Edinburgh, Scotland.

NI ZHIFU MEETS FRENCH TU DELEGATION

RENMIN RIBAO ON BULGARIAN ECONOMIC REFORM MEASURES

HK141313 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 9 May 86 p 7

[Article by Guo Chunxiao "Bulgaria Makes Further Efforts To Reform Its Economy"]

[Text] At its 13th congress held in early April, the Bulgarian Communist Party [BCP] concentrated on discussing questions on economic reform and scientific and technological revolution. The documents and reports approved by the congress and the series of speeches delivered by Bulgarian leaders prior to the meeting showed that Bulgaria is taking new steps to promote the in-depth development of economic reform.

Bulgaria started its economic reform in 1978. It has scored some successes, but there has been no big headway. With increasingly exhausted potential for extensive operations, the rate of Bulgaria's economic development has gradually dropped. The exceptionally serious drought last year has added to Bulgaria's economic difficulties. In his opening address at the 13th BCP Congress, general secretary of the BCP Todor Zhivkov, pointed out: "The factors stimulating our country's economic development have practically been exhausted and, as a party and a state, we face a new reality." At the plenary sessions of the BCP Central Committee in February last year and January this year, the BCP further defined the focus and orientation of the economic reform, while the 13th BCP Congress held last month issued a general mobilization order to the whole country and the whole party: "We must hack our way through difficulties and carry the reform through to the end."

In light of the development in the contemporary era and the problems in the country's economic structure, Bulgaria has decided to further transfer power to a lower level, to implement a material reward system, and to adopt advanced science and technology in order to achieve economic modernization by the year 2000.

To enable enterprises to enjoy greater freedom and independence in operation and management, production activities, the sales of products, and the distribution of profits, Bulgaria will institute a system of self-government toward the enterprises, defining self-governing economic organizations as the dealers of the means of production and the state as the owner of the means of production. The latter cannot directly deal in the means of production. It only wields macroeconomic decisionmaking power by drawing up plans and promulgating laws and economic standards, but it does not interfere in the trivial activities of the dealers. The principle of departments being put in charge of the work, which has played a positive role in the past, has lost its role under the present conditions. The methods of management which are still used today are no longer suited to the demands of economic development in the era of scientific and technological revolution. It is necessary to institute economic organizational self-government in order to overcome bureacratism in economic leadership work and to make a transition to new methods of management. Toward this end, Bulgaria has abolished eight ministries in charge of economic work and set up three commissions directly under the Councils of Ministers: the Economic organizations and enterprises may establish direct relations with the commissions.

In the field of distribution, the existing Bulgarian wage and reward systems cannot fully reflect the socialist principle of distribution according to work characterized by "more pay for more work and less pay for less work." For this reason, Bulgaria has decided to adopt a flexible form of wages. It has extensively instituted a performance surplus wage system and a collective contracted wage system, which have been tried out in a number of labor organizations, in order to link the individual income of workers with the ultimate production results of the collective. In this way, the initiative of the workers will be aroused and all members of the collective will pay attention to adopting new technologies, reducing material consumption, improving product quality, and manufacturing readily marketable and competitive products.

In an effort to make its products more competitive on the international market, to increase exports, and to earn more foreign exchange, Bulgaria will encourage enterprises to engage in foreign trade and to compete on the international market and the state will adopt economic levers to facilitate competition. In line with the principle of each taking care of foreign exchange itself, the enterprises are allowed to use the foreign exchange they earn through competition on the international market and the state will adopt economic levers to facilitate competition. In line with the principle of each taking care of foreign exchange itself, the enterprises are allowed to use the foreign exchange they earn through competition on the international market to purchase advanced equipment from abroad and to import advanced technology.

At the plenary session of the BCP Central Committee last January, Zhivkov pointed out: "It is necessarsy to conduct a fundamental reform on both the economic base and the superstructure." Accordingly, Bulgaria had decided to institute a system of economic accounting among scientific research organizations, to contract for scientific research projects, and to reward those undertaking research projects not listed in the plans in order to link the material interests of the scientific research workers closely with the achievements in scientific research.

To ensure the smooth progress of economic reform, since the beginning of this year Bulgaria has carried out large-scale personnel readjustments among high-level party and government departments. More than 30 cadres at and above the ministerial level, including the chairman of the Council of Ministers, have been replaced and a number of new people who are in the prime of life, understand professional skills, and have practical work ability have been promoted to leading posts in the party and government.

The Bulgarian economic reform has entered a new stage. Naturally, the progress of the reform is not smooth sailing. As Zhivkov put it: "Out reform is complicated and difficult and the success or failure of our reform depends to a large extent on the correct and unswerving implementation of our new concepts and new methods." However, economic reform is undoubtedly the road Bulgaria must follow for its continuous economic development.

CSSR TO CONTINUE NUCLEAR POWER CONSTRUCTION

OW150252 Beijing XINHUA in English 0152 GMT 15 May 86

[Text] Prague, May 14 (XINHUA)-- Stanislav Havel, chairman of Czechoslovak Atomic Energy Commission, said today that the Soviet Union's Chernobyl accident will not affect Czechoslovak plans to build nuclear power stations. By 1985, Czechoslovakia had completed three nuclear power stations. Four others are planned, according to the Czechoslovak news agency CTK. Energy generated from the nuclear power stations makes up 15 percent of the country's total. Officials predict it will reach 30 percent by 1990, and 60 percent by the year 2000. Havel said radioactive levels have risen throughout the country since last month's Chernobyl accident. But, he added the levels are not considered harmful to people's health.

LIBYAN SPECIAL ENVOY FROM AL-QADHDHAFI VISITS PRC

Meets Zhao Ziyang

OW160952 Beijing XINHUA in English 0933 GMT 16 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 16 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang told a special envoy of Libyan leader Mu'Ammar al-Qadhdhafi here today that China supported the Libyan people in their struggle for safeguarding national sovereignty. The premier also said China was opposed to all kinds of terrorism, and that the country was concerned about the tension in the Mediterranean. He urged all parties concerned to exercise restraint. China condemned the United States bombing raids on Tripoli and Benghazi on April 15. Today, Zhao told special envoy 'Abd-al-Ati 'al-Libaydi that China believed that international disputes should be settled through dialog and consultations instead of force or threat of force.

Modern history had proved that relations between countries should be based on the five principles of peaceful co-existence rather than on ideological agreements or differences. Relations between countries on the basis of the five principles -- good-neighborly relations between adjacent countries in particular -- were in the best interests of the countries concerned, and strengthened regional and world peace. Zhao said China had noted Libya's repeated declarations of its opposition to terrorism. China had been consistently opposed to all kinds of terrorism and the use of terrorism as a form of political struggle because its victims were often innocent people. Libaydi expressed Libya's thanks for China's support. Zhao thanked Ubaydi for an oral message conveyed by him from Al-Qadhafi to Chinese leaders, and for the introduction on Libyan-U.S. relations and the situation around Libya.

Holds Press Conference

OW160812 Beijing XINHUA in English 0752 GMT 16 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 16 (XINHUA) -- Special envoy of Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi, 'Abd-al-Ati al-Ubaydi, said Libya, too, opposes terrorism, while speaking on international terrorism at a press conference here today. Terrorism can not be of much help to national liberation, nor can it win the sympathy of the people, he said. Libya is willing to cooperate with other countries in the struggle against terrorism, and has proposed to the United Nations the convening of a meeting against terrorism. The special envoy gave a brief account of the U.S.-Libyan clashes over the past months. Concerning his current mission to China, he said he was satisfied with it, adding that he was grateful for the support of the Chinese Government and people for the Libyan people's struggle to safeguard their national independence and sovereignty.

The Chinese ambassador reiterated China's consistent policy of support for the Palestine and Arab people.

HU QILI MEETS CAMEROON ASSEMBLY DELEGATION

OW151207 Beijing XINHUA in English 1152 GMT 15 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 15 (XINHUA) -- Hu Qili, member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China (CPC), met here today a delegation from the Cameroon National People's Democratic Assembly headed by its Vice-President Andre Ngongang Ouandji. Hu told the visitors that the coming of the delegation shows the importance the Cameroon Assembly attaches to the friendship between the two parties and two countries. He said that China and Cameroon are both developing countries with many similarities. They are also facing the same task of developing their national economies. In international affairs, they both stand for peace and independence, and oppose arms race and power politics. He also spoke highly of the national rehabilitation policies formulated by Paul Biya, president of the Cameroom assembly.

Ngongang Ouandji said that President Paul Biya, his assembly and the Cameroon people attach great importance to developing their friendly cooperation with China. He said that the achievements of China-Cameroon cooperation fully demonstrate the soundness of such a cooperation, and expressed the hope that cooperation between the two countries will become more diversified.

Hu Qili asked Ngongang Ouandji to convey greetings from Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the CPC Central Committe, to President Paul Biya. Hu hosted a dinner for the visitors after the meeting. The visitors will leave here for other parts of the country tomorrow.

PRC OFFICIAL VIEWS POPULATION POLICY AT CONFERENCE

OW152031 Beijing XINHUA in English 1741 GMT 15 May 86

[Text] Harare, May 15 (XINHUA) -- African countries should formulate their population and development strategies independently depending on their own conditions, says He Ying, member of the Standing Committee of the Chinese National People's Congress (NPC). He made the statement here today in a speech at the All-Africa parliamentary conference on population and development, which opened Tuesday and is aimed at providing opportunities for African parliamentarians to exchange views on the population problem on the continent. He, who is also an expert on African affairs, is attending the conference as an observer. He said the population policy of a certain country is a matter that should be decided by that country alone in line with its own national conditions. "This by no means rules out the efforts to learn from each other and share experience with other countries," he added.

China welcomes the opportunity to carry out cooperation and exchange views on the population question with the African countries, he said.

"In view of our large population and growth momentum, we advocate 'one couple, one child' practice for a period of time in order to slow down the excessively rapid increase of population," he said, explaining China's population control policy to the African parliamentarians. "But this does not mean each couple is not allowed to have more than one child," he said. He said China also seeks to improve population quality while exercising control on population growth. China's family planning program has been worked out in the vital interests of the Chinese people and is aimed at achieving prosperity at a faster pace, he said.

SOPHISTICATED WEAPONS WIN TOP STATE AWARDS

OW151503 Beijing XINHUA in English 1413 GMT 15 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 15 (XINHUA) -- Technological breakthroughs involving underwater submarine launching of a surface missile, and development of surface-to-surface long-range missiles and carrier rockets have won China's highest national award this year, government officials said today.

The announcement of the awards marked the first time China has disclosed that work on sophisticated weapons had been honored.

In civilian research, the 23 special class award winners included a water-injection technique that will enable Daqing, China's largest oilfield, to sustain a stable and high output. Also honored was new technology used to build Nanjing's Yangtze River bridge and the giant Gezhouba power project and related hydroelectric generating units along the Yangtze.

Other military winners included improved methods for treating wartime wounds caused by recently developed weapons, atomic and hydrogen bomb research and refinements of high altitude, high speed interceptor aircraft, recoverable satellites and tracking, and observation equipment used in national defense.

ZHAO ZIYANG ATTENDS SCIENTIFIC AWARDS MEETING

OW160136 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1603 GMT 15 May 86

[By reporters Wu Ming and Zhang Jimin]

[Text] Beijing, 15 May (XINHUA) -- A national meeting to award achievements in science and technology was held ceremoniously today in the Great Hall of the People. Zhao Ziyang, premier of the State Council, addressed the meeting, calling on all scientific and technical personnel in the country to work hard for comprehensive fulfillment of the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

The awards meeting was presided over by Fang Yi. Also present were Wan Li, Xi Zhongxun, Li Peng, Yang Shangkun, Hu Qili, Hao Jianxiu, Liu Lantao, Song Shilun, Zhou Gucheng, Zhang Jingfu, Zhang Aiping, Wang Bingqian, Hong Xuezhi, Zhou Peiyuan, Mao Yisheng, and Qian Xuesen. Nie Rongzhen wrote a message of greetings to the meeting.

The meeting gave awards to 1,761 projects that won the state science and technology progress prizes, 185 projects that won the 1985 state invention prizes, and 115 projects and 37 individuals that won prizes for achievements in solving key problems in science and technology during the Sixth 5-Year Plan. Apart from this, the meeting commended the scientific and technical personnel who were prize winners at the international invention expositions held in Geneva and Yugoslavia and the World Young Inventors' Achievements Exhibition in Bulgaria. China won more than 40 medals at these three exhibitions.

To the tune of cheerful music, representatives of the winners mounted the rostrum and happily received cups, medals, and citations from the hands of the central leading comrades. Warm applause burst out from the nearly 7,000 participants in the meeting. Then, amid the beating of drums, a young pioneer of the capital delivered a message to extend warm congratulations to the scientific and technical personnel on behalf of more than 310 million children in the country.

Zhao ziyang began his speech by expressing appreciation andextending greetings on behalf of the party Central Committee and the State Council to those scientific and technical personnel who had performed meritorious deedsfor the motherland and the people.

He said: The projects winning awards this time are all capable of providing significant economic or social benefit. Many of them can provide an annual benefit of over 1 million yuan, quite a few can yield an annual benefit of more than 10 million yuan, and the benefit from some projects is over 1000 million yuan or even over 1 billion yuan. This is a result of your continued efforts to make further explorations on the basis of your predecessors' achievements and the joint efforts made by you and the broad masses of physical laborers. As a principal force in accomplishing the projects, you have no doubt played a special key role in creating and applying these achievements in science and technology.

He said: Very good work was done in completing the key scientific and technological projects contained in the Sixth 5-Year Plan. Of these projects, 98 percent met the time schedule and other requirements called for by the contracts, while 80 percent were put into use. This shows that we should not underestimate our capabilities. Even though we had a relatively poor foundation to start with and our present conditions are still unsound, the Chinese scientific and technical personnel have aspirations and are capable. We should be proud of our contingent of scientists and technicians.

Zhao Ziyang said: The tasks currently faced by the people of the entire country are to strive to accomplish the Seventh 5-Year Plan. The tasks laid down in the Seventh 5-Year Plan are more arduous than those of the Sixth 5-Year Plan. But accomplishing the Seventh 5-Year Plan will definitely bring greater benefits to the people, and therefore it is greater and more glorious than the Sixth 5-Year Plan. The Seventh 5-Year Plan presented a series of new and more challenging tasks to our scientists and technical workers. Key development projects listed in the Seventh 5-Year Plan cannot be copied from what we already have. The technological level of the great majority of these projects should reach that attained by developed nations in the late 1970's and early 1970's and early 1980's and many technological problems remain to be solved. He stressed: While actively developing modern industries, we should step up our efforts in modernizing our conventional industries. All kinds of advanced and applicable technologies should be widely employed as early as possible by large, medium, and small enterprises, including village and township enterprises. Agricultural, forestry, animal husbandry, and fishery industries should study new technologies and species that will possibly bring breakthroughs to production. In order to raise our scietific and technological level, to develop new technologies, and to gain a better knowledge of our natural environment and resources, we should also devote greater effort to the study of relevant basic and applied sciences and employ modern sciences and technologies on management of economic affairs. To achieve the goal of quadrupling the total industrial and agricultural output value by the end of the century, and to strive to improve the quality and living conditions of 1 billion people is a task involving all sectors of our society, and is the major battlefield for our science and technology front. He said: In addition, we should organize some of our most capable scientists and technological workers to keep us in step with international progress in some of the most important high technological fields to make us technologically prepared for further domestic economic development early in the next century.

Zhao Ziyang said: We have quite a few difficulties in the Sixth 5-Year Plan. In retrospect, we find that difficulties did not surmount us, but instead we overcame all of them.

In the coming 5 years, it can be expected that extensive reform of the economic and science and technology systems, and amending and perfection of policies on various issues will provide a new impetus for closely integrating scientific and technical work with economic development. The party Central Committee and State Council believe that with the joint efforts of the veteran, middle-aged, and young scientists and technical workers who are known for their glorious traditions and hard working spirit, our scientific and technological work will progress year after year.

Yang Jun, chairman of the State Committee for Evaluating Scientific and Technological Progress, and Zhang Shou, head of the leading group for preparations for the meeting to commend outstanding scientific and technological achievements in the Sixth 5-Year Plan, briefed the meeting on the evaluation of scientific and technological progress and on summing up scientific and technological accomplishments in the Sixth 5-Year Plan.

Before the meeting, party and government leaders had a photo taken with the representatives of the recipients of the scientific and technological achievement awards and the representatives attending the meeting to commend outstanding scientific and technological achievements in the Sixth 5-Year Plan.

SPACE EXPERT ON PLANNING FOR SPACE STATIONS

HK140629 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0243 GMT 13 May 86

[Report by ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE reporter Dai Yaping: "Focusing Our Eyes Upon Space Stations -- A Visit to Noted Chinese Aerospace Expert Ren Xinmin"]

[Text] Beijing, 13 May (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- In 30 years of time, China's aeronautics [as received] industry has succeeded in making three breakthroughs: to fly in space, to return to earth, and to launch synchronous telecommunications satellites which are harder to launch and of more complicated technology.

What is planned for the next step in the development of China's astronautics industry? This question concerns people at home and abroad.

Recently, this reporter interviewed Ren Xinmin, chairman of the Science and Technology Committee of the Ministry of Astronautics Industry and asked this No 1 technological authority in China's astronautics industry.

Ren Xinmin said that in the past 30 years, China formulated its medium-term plan for the development of its astronautics industry and fulfilled, in the light of the targets of that plan, the tasks of researching manufacturing and launching Changzhen 1 and Changzhen 2 rockets and various types of satellites and telecommunications satellites. At the same time, it established an integrated astronautics industry with design, research, manufacture, launch, tracking, measuring and control systems. Since 1975, we have succeeded seven consecutive times in recovering the recoverable satellites launched by Changzhen 2 carrier rockets and succeeded in launching synchronous telecommunications satellites with Changzhen 3 carrier rockets twice in a row. Following the United States, the Soviet Union, and France, China has become a country with a developed space technology.

China's modernization program has raised urgent demands for its astronautics technology.

For example, it wants the technology to relay its television broadcasting to its vast land area, to satisfy the urgent demands for improving its backward post and telecommunications technology, to ease the thirst of our agriculture and other sectors for accurate weather forecasts, and to live up to the great hopes that its education, mineral resources, measuring and mapping, communications, seismologic, archeological, and other departments have placed on the development and application of China's astronautics technology.

Ren Xinmin said that in order to maintain the rate of continuous development of China's astronautics technology, in order to provide more advanced research means for modern science and technology, and in order to apply advanced astronautics technology to its national economic construction, China's next goal should be to establish its own space station by the end of this century.

He said that the space station being planned would be a kind of modular structure to be assembled in space. Therefore, China must first develop and manufacture space shuttles, which should be medium-sized. In addition to sending astronauts to work on the space station, these space shuttles could also be used to carry out tasks such as launching, repairing and recovering industrial experiements and processing in space. From now on, China will begin to carry out the theoretical and preparatory research into these two projects and spend small amounts of funds to carry out necessary investment and preparatory work.

Ren Xinmin told this reporter that in Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the Seventh 5-Year Plan, he clearly raised the tasks of striving to score relatively great achievements in researching and developing new and higher technology and making great efforts to achieve new developments in astronautics and other technology in order to create conditions for putting our national economy on a new technological foundation. In the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, China will launch a number of satellites for practical purposes.

When we parted, Ren Xinmin said that as the development of the astronautics undertakings were closely related to the prosperity and progress of the whole nation, it was necessary to set up a unified national organ to coordinate and direct the development of astronautics technology in the whole country. He called on all the people in the country to show concern for the development of China's astronautics industry.

WORLD'S MOST ADVANCED LASER DEVELOPED IN TIANJIN

OW140850 Beijing XINHUA in English 0634 GMT 14 May 86

[Text] Tianjin, May 14 (XINHUA) -- Scientists at Tianjin University in north China said today they have developed the world's most advanced laser for the study of microscopic electronic, chemical and biological processes.

Called a "collision mode-locked laser," it can sense light differences occurring in as little as 0.03 trillionths of a second, according to Wang Qingyue, one of the seven inventors at the university.

The next most sensitive laser, developed in 1981 in the United States, can sense differences occurring in 0.1 trillionths of a second, Wang said.

LIAOWANG ON TECHNOLOGICAL IMPORT PRACTICES

HK140657 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 18, 5 May 86 pp 14-15

[Article by Cao Jiarui: "The Present Condition of, and Problems in China's Technological Imports (Part 1)"]

[Text] Abstract: Importing foreign advanced technology is an important component of opening the country to the outside world. In recent years, a planeless, chaotic situation has emerged in the import of technology. The article holds that the drawbacks of the sociliast economic structure characterized by planned management and a comprehensive balance have led to a planeless, chaotic situation in technological imports originally placed under unified planning. The author pointed out that the problem does not lie in whether or not the plan is unified but in whether or not the planning structure is rational and the planning method is correct. The article penetratingly analyzes the limitations of the current practice of relying on departments in charge of comprehensive management to coordinate imported items and the lack of a scientific approach in the practice of relying on administrative means to examine and approve imported items.

How can we solve these problems? The author will continue to explore them in the follow-up parts of this artcile. Part 2 will concentrate on discussing, from a microeconomic point of view, the internal motive force lying behind the import of technology by enterprises and part 3 will explore, from a macroeconomic point of view, the state's strategy for technological imports and the management measures that should be taken. [end abstract]

Three Great Changes

By and large, three great changes have taken place in China's technological imports since 1978.

1. Before 1978, China imported technology primarily through the import of "complete sets of equipment" and the building of new factories. This played a positive and useful role in laying a foundation for China's industrialization, filling in the gaps, and meeting the urgent needs of national economic development. However, it also led to a certain "polarization" in industrial production -- a small number of new plants equipped with advanced machinery and a large number of obsolete and backward enterprises. With the readjustment of the national economy, the transformation of existing enterprises as stressed by the central authorities, and the implementation of a policy of opening up to the outside world, numerous forms of technological imports based on the "licenced trade" have rapidly developed since 1979 but the number of "complete sets of equipment" imported into the country has dropped considerably. This shows that the work of importing technology has rapidly been reoriented to the technological transformation and progress of the existing enterprises.

2. Before 1978, the import of technology was primarily arranged by the central authorities under unified planning and the local authorities at various levels had little role in the matter. In recent years, with the implementation of the policy of opening up to the outside world and invigorating the domestic economy, all provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities directly under the central authorities, as well as many large and medium-sized cities, after passing through the stage of "three forms of import processing, and compensation trade" (processing with supplied materials, designs, and samples, and compensation trade) in the initial period, have energetically planned, arranged, and participated in the work of importing technology for the localities. In the past 3 years, technological imports have become routine work throughout the country.

3. With the promulgation and implementation of the "Law Governing Chinese-Foreign Joint Ventures" in 1979, technological imports have been integrated with the work of attracting direct foreign investments. The proportion of industrial production in Chinese-foreign joint ventures is growing year by year.

Over the past 7 years and more, hundreds of imported technological projects have yielded notable results. These results can generally be summed up in the following aspects:

1. We have speeded up the development and production of new products. Generally speaking, a relatively successful project can narrow a 20-30 year gap in output level in about 2 years...

2. We have learned new ideas on product designing and operational and managerial skills, which have not only improved the competence of the enterprise technical force but also, with the improvement of operations and management, increased the economic and financial profits of the enterprises.

3. The import of technology has stimulated the development of some relevant technologies, prompting the development of their results in a lateral direction.

However, many problems still exist in the work of importing technology. These problems are hindering the further development of technological imports.

Problems and Drawbacks of the Existing Structure

Comments on problems in the work of importing technology largely center on duplicate imports, decentralization in dealing with foreign firms, and the digestion and assimilation of imported technology. In fact, the problems in technological imports are much more than the three points mentioned above. Why are the macroeconomic results of technological imports? How have the import substitutes and expansion of exports been handled? Why has the assembling of parts been on the increase? Why is it difficult to raise the quality of our own products? What is it that technological imports have been "suddenly checked" particularly since the spring of last year? Under such circumstances, it is of far-reaching practical significance to raise the question of studying and solving the management of technological imports on the macro level. This is a difficult problem. Our historical experience shows that, when it comes to such problems as management, we have always failed to break away from the framework of "control leads to rigidity and decentralization causes disorder." To break away from this framework, we have to concentrate on analyzing the drawbacks of the existing structure.

China is a country practicing planned economy. All technological import projects are listed in the plans of either the central or local authorities and all imports are conducted according to a legal procedure. As a matter of fact, however, a planless, chaotic situation has emerged. For example, we have imported over 100 color television assembly lines. If all of them go into operation, the output will be many times larger than the calculated market capacity. However due to our failure to solve the problem of producing the parts in the country, the assembly lines have consumed a lot of foreign exchange. The situation in refrigerators, washing machines, and so on is also similar. Floppy disks, which are used in computers for storing memory, should preferably be mass produced. But, with almost all provinces and municipalities wanting to produce floppy disks themselves, the production scales are very small and the management is decentralized.

Some people say that so long as we strengthen unified planning, the problem can be readily solved. In appearance, this is a fairly reasonable argument. Since we only have one plan, we shall be able to avoid duplication, decentralization, and lack of coordination. In truth, the fact is not so simple. Some years ago, when all civil engineering and installation work for the four imported projects of the Wuhan iron and steel complex was completed and everything was ready, the plant could not operate properly because of the lack of electricity. This is a problem occurring under highly unified planning. A high tide of imports centering on 32 "complete sets of equipment" emerged in 1978. In one year we signed contracts with a total value doubling that of the contracts signed in the previous 5 years. This was followed by an "emergency brake" in early 1979 and the revocation, termination, or cancellation of contracts. There are many similar examples. We can thus see that the problem does not lie in whether the plan is unified or concerted but in whether China's planning system is rational and our planning method is correct. Or, speaking in more concrete terms, where does the demand for, and the motive force behind, technological imports come from? What are the purpose and objective of technological imports? Who are the genuine policymakers and what are the bases for making policy decision?

The Limitations of the Departments in Charge of Comprehensive Management in Coordinating Work

The crucial point of our existing system is the division of departments and regions, which develops into a series of complicated contradictions between different departments, between department and region, and between different regions. Duplicate imports and decentralization in dealing with foreign firms are related to the above-mentioned contradictions because everyone wants to have a system of his own. Therefore, some people expect the department in charge of comprehensive management to do the coordination and balancing work. This method may be effective but practice in the past several decades has proved that the departments in charge of comprehensive management also have limitations in coordinating work and, therefore, it is obviously unrealistic to rely on the departments in charge of comprehensive management to coordinate everything.

Two different departments imported basically the same technology for producing a fireproof material used in glass smelting furnaces. For this reason, some people said that was a case of duplicate imports. However, the two projects were approved by the same commission one after another at short intervals and were undertaken by two different bureaus of the commission.

Optical waveguide telecommunications are a new technology that China should urgently develop. Because the telecommunications undertaking is characterized by its relatively high concentration, some people suggest that, if we can make use of, and give scope to, the achievements and advantages of the departments concerned in the study of optical waveguide in coordination with technological imports and use this as a starting point to develop a comprehensive system in China, for the designing and construction of a project to the supplies of equipment and materials, as well as the production of fibers, cables, optical parts, and necessary accessories, we shall be able to attain immediate results in the development and application of China's optical waveguide telecommunications technology. This will plan a positive role in putting an end to the backwardness of China's telecommunications undertaking. However, who will organize and solve this problems?

The present conditions are such that, for the production of optical waveguide fiber and optical waveguide cable alone, one unit is holding talks with the (Commins) [kang nin 1660 1337] Company of the United States, another with the Philips Company of the Netherlands, a third with the (Furukawa) [gu he 0657 3109] Company of Japan, and there may be possibly a fourth and a fifth company. If each of them strikes a bargain, the production capacity will again exceed the demand by several times. Two departments at the central level have been appointed to coordinate the work of importing optical waveguide telecommunications technology. However, since they do not stand above, but are involved in, the contradiction, whether their coordination efforts are effective will still be judged through practice.

Can We Ensure Soundness by Relying on the Examination and Approval Procedure?

There are also people who hold that duplicate imports and decentralization in dealing with foreign firms are caused by inadequate information facilities. But information exchange does not necessarily solve the problems of duplicate imports and decentralization. Others hold that we should rely on the examination and approval procedure to ensure soundness. However, that is the basis of our doing so?

In 1980 China imported from the FRG a technology for manufacturing small square base [fang pi 2455 0999] continuous casting machines under cooperative production. We manufactured a few sets, which were used in several steel plants with satisfactory results. This news has been reported in the newspapers, this machine has been on display in exhibition halls, and this project has been cited as a successful example on numerous occasions. Considering the circumstances and judging by common sense, if steel plants in our country need this type of continuous casting machines in their technological transformation, they should first choose the products manufactured in our country with foreign technology. The State Council stipulated this guideline in explicit terms in its circular as early as in 1981. However, a certain plant wanted to import a small square base continuous casting machine from abroad in 1985. The provincial branch of a certain bank made an "assessment report" similar to a feasibility study. The report pointed out that because of the lack of necessary accessories and insufficient production capacity, the imported manufacturing technology could met the needs of this project. As far as we know, the unit making the "assessment" neither contacted nor consulted the plant which had imported the technology and was manufacturing and supplying the small square base continuous casting machines. Nor did it contact the higher authorities in charge of the plant. It can be said, therefore, that its conclusion was not drawn from realistic investigation and study but was drawn with the aim of catering to a certain intention. Since there was an "assessment report," the economic commission of the province, which is responsible for examining and approving import projects, granted the plant permission to hold talks with foreign firms and to sign a contract for the import of the machine. By "approving" the import, it has ignored the stipulations of the State Council and the spirit of seeking truth from facts. We can thus see that it may not be enough to rely on the examination and approval procedure to ensure soundness.

This example has given rises to two questions:

First, what is the function of feasibility study? Second, is it necessary to protect the fruit of technological imports?

Usually, feasibility study is a process of scientific investigation, studies, analyses, forecasts, and demonstrations and is aimed at verifying the feasibility of the original plan and providing policymakers with the basis for making policy decisions. In China, however, a feasibility study seldom draws a different conclusion. This is because these "feasibility studies" are in most cases a mere formality in the examination and approval procedure. First, there must be an intention; then, investigation and study are carried out with a certain prejudice to prove the feasibility or correctness of the intention; and lastly, the policymakers (who are probably the ones having the intention) make policy decisions according to the results of the feasibility study. and its function are forfeited.

Importing foreign technology is aimed at increasing China's capability to be self-reliant. However, if we still import what we can produce and supply following the imports of foreign technology, how can we reflect our "original intention" of importing advanced technology? This example is not confined to the import of small square base continous casting machines alone. This practice will also adversely affect the initiative of the foreign firms supplying advanced technology. Senior personnel of several American companies indicated that, if China does not take some protective measures to protect the fruit of technological imports, they will no longer be interested in transferring technology to China.

There are so many problems that it is impossible to exhaust them in this article. We should not be afraid of problems. What we should be afraid of is to attempt to conceal the problems and the roots of the problems. To sum up, great changes have occurred in our technological imports since 1979. However, one thing has never changed, namely, technological imports are still placed within the framework of government administrative command based on the power structure and the emergence and existence of numerous problems today are closely related to this reality. If we merely make provisions as the problems stand or adjust the division of power among various government organs, it will be difficult to solve these problems. The administrative system of technological imports based on effective control over major issues while allowing flexibility on minor ones can only be gradually established by reforming the economic structure. The questions of adopting macroeconomic control measures toward technological imports, as well as the motive force lying behind the technological imports, will be further discussed in the ensuring parts of the article. RESEARCH, FOREIGN S&T IMPORTS TO CONTINUE

["China To Push Ahead With Scientific Research" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, May 13 (XINHUA) -- China will continue pursuing its own scientific and technological research over the next five years while introducing more foreign technology, a national meeting here was told today.

The country will conduct 76 major scientific and technological research projects during its Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-1990), twice the number carried out in the past five years, said Song Ping, state councillor and minister in charge of the State Planning Commission.

He was speaking at today's opening session of a three-day meeting on scientific and technological achievements of the past five years.

Song said that the new projects, some of which were already under way, covered both agriculture and industry.

The agricultural projects would help improve major varieties of grain, cotton, and oil-bearing crops, as well as provide the public with more meat, eggs, poultry and fish. The industrial projects were intended to enable China to catch up with advanced world technology of the late 1970s and early 1980s.

Meanwhile, minister in charge of the State Economic Commission Lu Dong told the meeting that China would continue introducing foreign technology and "key equipment", which the country "cannot produce in the short term, but is currently capable of importing". However, Lu said that China must quickly digest this advanced technology. Such introduction and digestion would provide "a short cut" for China in its bid to catch up with developed countries.

PROGRESS IN NUCLEAR, OTHER ENERGY FIELDS NOTED

HK150631 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 18, 5 May 86 pp 16-17

[Article by Yi Xiao and Zhang Yaoliang: "Chinas Energy Policy and the Daya Bay Nuclear Power Station"]

[Text] Recently, the Guangdong Nuclear Power Joint Ventures Company, jointly run by the Guangdong Nuclear Investment Company and Hong Kong Nuclear Investment Company, signed a letter of intent with British and French manufacturers on equipment supply and engineering services for Shenzhen's Daya Bay nuclear power station. According to this letter of intent, the Daya Bay nuclear power station will purchase two 900,000 kw-class pressurized water reactors (nuclear island) [he dao 2702 1497] from Framatome of France and a complete turbogenerator (conventional island) [Chang gui dao 1603 6016 1497] from Britain's [General Electric Corporation] GEC. Electricite de France will offer engineering services.

Six years has passed since both sides began to discuss the construction of this project. In the first 4 years, they carried out feasibility studies, surveyed the area where the power station will be located, and established a joint company. At the same time, some basic projects were started. In the following 2 years, talks were held on some major technical, commercial, and price problems concerning ordering of equipment and engineering services. The signing of the letter of intent shows that satisfactory results have been achieved. Now the construction of the nuclear power station can be advanced. It is estimated that the formal contract will be signed in September this year.

New Development of China's Energy Policy

The achievement symbolizes a new development of China's energy policy, showing that nuclear power has become a part of China's entire energy strategy.

The shortage of electric power, which is a kind of reproduced energy, is a key problem in China's construction of the four modernizations. The nationwide shortage of electric power has already lasted more than 10 years, and there has been an increasing contradiction between supply and demand. To satisfy the needs of economic development, China's total energy consumption will be doubled in the next few decades, and there will be a particularly urgent need for electric power.

Although China has a vast territory with rich hydropower, geothermal, coal, oil, and other primary energy resources, when shared by the 1 billion people, these resources are still very few. Take coal resources for an example -- China's per capita reserve is only about half of that of the world's average figure.

Moreover, its distribution is also uneven. The coastal areas in south-eastern China from the Changjiang Delta to the Zhujiang Delta are the most developed areas in China. However, they are also the areas seriously lacking electric power and most deficient in energy resources. For this reason, priority has been given to them, and the first two nuclear power stations are to be built in Zhejiang and Guangdong.

The construction of nuclear power station requires a large investment. But since fuel consumption is small, the energy used for transporting coal can be saved. Besides, pollution caused by burning coal be be reduced. Along with the development of science, nuclear power has become a safe, clean, and economic type of energy resource. Moreover, the development of nuclear energy can also promote the development of the most advanced branches of science and technology. It will also be conducive to improving the electric network in eastern and southern China. It may be appropriate to say that by developing nuclear power, which is a supplement to China's energy structure, in the coastal areas, China is actually using the best steel to make the knife's edge.

China's energy policy has been worked out after repeated deliberations, consultations, and practice over a rather long period. On nuclear power alone, it has taken many years to repeatedly discuss matters concerning technological and economic as well as macro and micro problems. For example, on technological problems, what kind of reactor should be adopted, a light-water reactor, heavy-water reactor, pressurized-water reactor, or boiling-water reactor? On economic problems, since China is a large country with rich water, coal, and oil resources, is it reasonable to develop high-priced nuclear power stations? On the question concerning the energy structure, in what position should it be placed? Furthermore, since China is already a nuclear power having a comparatively perfect nuclear industrial system and considerable nuclear fuel reserves as well as the ability to build 600,000 kw-class nuclear power installations with its own efforts, although it started later than other countries in using nuclear energy for peaceful purposes, should it mainly rely on its own efforts or mainly rely on foreign equipment purchased from abroad in developing nuclear power?

More than 10 years have passed since Premier Zhou Enlai proposed in the early 1970's that China should organize forces to build nuclear power stations. Now, after several setbacks, China has already worked out a comparatively perfect and realistic energy policy. According to this policy, energy construction will be carried out concentrating on electric power. In developing the power industry, all power plants, big or small, hydropower, thermal power, or nuclear power plants, whether owned by the central or local authorities, by the state or the collective, with Chinese or foreign investment, will be developed simultaneously. In developing nuclear power, while layng stress on self-reliance, it is also necessary to do all we can to seek the support and cooperation of foreign technology. We can introduce foreign technology in diverse ways, such as introducing complete sets of equipment and technology as we are doing for Daya Bay, or introducing single-item technology when necessary during construction. Only by bringing all factors into play can we ensure that the increase of our electric power will satisfy the needs for attaining our strategic goal of "quadrupling" the total industrial and agricultural output value by the year 2000.

According to calculations by the Energy Research Institute of the State Economic Commission, the total generated energy should reach at least 1,200 billion kilowatt-hours a year by that time even though measures are taken to economize on energy. For this reason, during the Seventh 5-Year Plan, the investment in power construction will constitute more than 50 percent of the total investment in energy development. Compared with hydro and thermal power, nuclear power is but a supplement to the former in China's recent power development plan. But recently, the State Council decided that developing nuclear power should be taken as the main task of the Ministry of Nuclear Industry. Now the ministry is drafting a plan for developing nuclear energy on a considerable scale in order to fulfill the state's Seventh 5-Year Plan. At the beginning of this year, the Daya Bay nuclear power station was formally put under the administration of the Ministry of Nuclear Industry. From all this we can see that there are vast vistas for the development of nuclear power in China.

New Progress in the Policy of Opening Up

What should be pointed out is the Daya Bay nuclear power station is not only an achievement of China's policy of opening up to the outside world, but also shows that China will firmly and unswervingly carry on this policy. The total cost of building the Daya Bay nuclear power station is about $3.7 billion, second only to that of the Baoshan Iron and Steel Complex among all the imported projects. Being a Chinese-foreign joint venture, the scope is also unprecedented. The safety shell for the 300,000 kilowatt-class generator at the Qinshan nuclear power station, which is located at Haiyan, Zhejiang Province, is now under construction. In addition, two 600,000 kilowatt-class generators will also be built. Although this power station is being build in accordance with the policy of self-reliance and is designed by China itself, it does not exclude cooperation with other countries on technical items and purchase of necessary equipment from abroad at reasonable prices. This shows that under the guidance of the policy of opening up to the outside world, China no longer sets introducing technology, equipment, and funds against the policy of self-reliance, but has ingeniously linked up the two.

Expression of Resolution and Confidence in Hong Kong's Economic Prosperity and Stability.

The responsible person of the Guangdong Nuclear Power Joint Venture Company told reporters that the construction of the Daya Bay nuclear power station is not merely aimed at solving the problem of the lack of electric power in this province, it is also an investment by China to maintain the prosperity and stability of Hong Kong. According to the agreement, after the power station is completed, some 70 percent of the generated energy will be supplied to Hong Kong. Two generators will be put into operation in 1992 and 1993 and will be linked with the electric network of Guangdong and Hong Kong. At present, Hong Kong's electric supply is more than sufficient. The plan for transmitting nuclear power to Hong Kong is based on the general estimation of Hong Kong's steady economic growth, that is, an estimation of an annual increase o 6 percent in electric power consusmption. Obviously, this shows that China has full determination and confidence in the development and prosperity of Hong Kong during the transitional period and after the year 1997. This responsible person also pointed out that since this is a large project, it will certainly benefit Hong Kong's economy even during the construction period, because it may bring about a great deal of business activity. Now, on the busy Daya Bay worksite, construction teams from Hong Kong are already engaged in constructing the first-phase project. Some Hong Kong contractors have joined hands with China's engineering teams in bidding for certain civil engineering projects.

Moreover, Guangdong and Hong Kong are preparing to build an energy storage power station in Guangdong so as to increase the economic returns of the nuclear power station and change Hong Kong's current unitary thermal power strucure into a more reasonable one of simultaneous development of hydropower, thermal-power, and nuclear-power. Now both sides have already completed feasibility studies for this plan.

New Development of Friendly Relations Between China and Britain, France

The Daya Bay nuclear power station, China's largest cooperative project with West European countries so far in terms of investment, reflects a new development of Sino-British and Sino-French friendly relations.

France was the first to propose nuclear cooperation with China. As early as in 1975, former President D'Estaing said that France could provide China with nuclear reactors. In the same year, both governments signed an agreement on nuclear cooperation. Since then, this matter has been given serious attention by the top leaders of both countries. Chairman Deng Xiaoping. Premier Zhao Ziyang, and French leaders, including former President D'Estaing, former Prime Minister Barre, and President Mitterrand, have all taken part in relevant talks. When Fabius, former French Prime Minister, was minister of industry, he signed a memorandum with the Chinese Government on providing China with nuclear power equipment. After that, groups of Chinese nuclear power engineers and technicians were trained in France. Many of them are now working at the Daya Bay worksite. During his vist to France in 1979, Chairman Deng Xiaoping said that, conditions being equal, China would give first consideration to the purchase of French equipment.

Similarly, both Chinese and British leaders have also given serious consideration to the question of purchasing turbogenerators from England, when Premier Zhao Ziyang met with Mrs Thatcher last September, both sides expressed their common desire to facilitate this business.

As a result of the friendly cooperation of the three governments, China, France, and Britain finally reached uanimity in their talks over equipment prices last year, which had had some troubles in the past. In the first round of talks, there was a great disparity between the prices quoted by the British and French manufacturers and what was expected by the buyer. The opening bid made by the Guangdong Nuclear Power Joint Venture Company was based on a thorough investigation of the international market of nuclear power equipment. They knew very well about the prices of more than 100 sets of nuclear power equipment throughout the world, especially the actual selling prices of some of those made in France. Moreover, in expending large sums of foreing exchange, questions such as the ability to repay debts and the time limit for loans had also be taken into consideration. It was also necessary to calculate the production cost so that the users would not be overburdened with heavy charges. For this reason, the Chinese side had to act with caution in the talks, striving for more reasonable prices. On the other hand, since this was to be the first time that the British GEC had contracted to build this type of 900,000 kilowatt-class generator (the conventional island), and since the conventional island and the nuclear island would be separately made by Britain and France, the British and French manufacturers had overestimated and raised the coefficient of risk, for fear that there might be some unforeseen difficulties. After the first round of talks, the British manufacturer reduced the quoted price by 4 percent, while the French manufacturer offered 10 percent less. But the latter required that half of this reduction should be subsidized by the government, otherwise it could not make the offer.

Encouraged by the French Government, during the second round of talks, Framatome of France reduced its price several times. In consideration of the possible development of China's nuclear industry, Guangdong Nuclear Power Joint Venture Company cut down on some service items which could be done by China itself so that differences between the two sides might be diminished. After the Chinese side put forth a package proposal on the prices of technological equipment and loans, the French manufacturer once again reduced its price. However, it was still unacceptable by the buyer. Thus, during his visit to Eastern Europe, Vice Premier Li Peng made a detour to Paris and had a friendly exchange of views with Mrs Cresson, former French industrial minister. Then the two governments reached an understanding on sharing this price difference.

During the second round of talks, due to the difference between both sides on the question of prices, on one occasion the British GEC quit the talks. This soon aroused serious attention from the government as well as the public. Some 33 Conservative Party Members of Parliament jointly put forward a motion, demanding that the government facilitate this "most valuable contract in British modern history." Then through the common efforts of both sides, an agreement on the purchase of the turbogenerator was finally signed.

What should be particularly pointed out is that in order to promote this cooperation, the British and French Governments have also made great efforts to make the terms of loans favorable to China. It is not at all exaggeration if we say that the Daya Bay nuclear power station is an outcome of Sino-British and Sino-French friendly relations. It will certainly promote the further development of these relations.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION ON 'RIGHT TRACK'

OW130924 Beijing XINHUA in English 0641 GMT 13 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 13 (XINHUA) -- Officials who have just completed a month-long investigation in 26 provinces and autonomous regions, say that Chinese agricultural production is on the right track according to the polices laid down by the central government.

Led by minister He Kang, about 300 officials of the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fisheries have conducted rural surveys in more than 300 counties since March. Measures have been taken to reduce the prices of chemical fertilizer and supply of electricity, and to stabilize cotton production following the investigation.

The State Council has stipulated that investment in agriculture must increase steadily to meet the needs of the developing economy, espcially by introducing modern technology to the farms. During their visits to 1,000 households, the officials found local peasants were enthusiastic about signing more contracts for grain production. The total grain-producing areas of the country have been expanded by 1.4 million hectares and investment in fertilizer and building irrigation systems has also been increased.

Summer grain fields have been enlarged by 600,000 hectares compared with last year. One official estimated that the 1986 grain output will surpass that of last year if there are no serious natural disasters.

The provinces of Guizhou, Hubei, Guangdong, Sichuan, Guangxi and Shaanxi have invested 450 million yuan in the capital construction on farmland. Jiangsu, Anhui, Hubei, Hebei and Henan plan to raise capital investment in agriculture to the highest level yet in the next three to five years. Economic crops, except cotton, have shown good signs of growth, especially fruits.

Services have been improved in irrigation, fine-seed multiplication, and supply of farm tools and machinery, an official said. According to a survey of 14 provinces and municipalities, the total industrial output value of rural enterprises was 13 percent up compared to the same period of 1985.

Meat, poultry, eggs and milk are being supplied to markets in sufficient quantitites thanks to the development of animal husbandry and specialized production. However, officials called for more attention to be paid to existing problems in the price system of chemical fertilizer, sales of farm products and spread of agrotechnology.

ARTICLE COMMENTS ON 1ST QUARTER PRICE SITUATION

HK120812 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 18, 5 May 86 pp 21-22

[Article by Chang Qing: "Comments on China's Price Situation in the 1st Quarter of This Year"]

[Excerpts] China's State Council has made the policy decision of "consolidation, digestion, supplementation, and perfection" on price reform this year. This decision was very effective in the 1st quarter of this year: The overall market situation was stable and prices were on the whole stable while tending to drop.

Market Prices of Capital Goods Weakened

What is most spectacular is that the market prices of capital goods weakened, slightly lower than the level of the 4th quarter of last year. On the whole, they dropped by 1 to 2 percent. In March, the price of wire rods dropped by 3 percent compared with that in December last year. The price of hot-rolled steel sheets dropped by 4 percent. The price of soda ash remained basically the same and those of coal, automobiles, and China fir logs dropped by double-digit percent. Only those of cement, caustic soda, aluminum, and pig iron increased.

Market Prices of Consumer Goods Remained Stable

In January and February, the retail sale volume of social commodities reached 72.59 billion yuan, 7.8 percent over that in the same period last year, of which the retail sale volume of consumer goods increased by 8.6 percent. Consumers were confident in the stability of prices and did not rush to purchase daily necessities because they could buy what they wanted at any time. The bank savings of residents increased by a big margen. In the 1st quarter of the year, the total volume of bank savings throughout the country reached 178.8 billion yuan; bank savings in urban and rural areas increased by 16.6 billion yuan. Last year, we issued more currency without withdrawing any, but this year we withdrew currency in circulation without issuing any. It is expected that the index of retail prices would be lower than the average level year. If the factor that restrictions on the prices of nonstaple food were not removed in the 1st quarter of last year is also taken into consideration, the price index would be relatively low.

The Prices of Nonstaple Food Tended To Drop

According to statistics made by price information newspapers and magazines in various localities, the prices of nonstaple food tended to drop. In February, the price of pork dropped by 1 percent compared with that in the same period last year; in January, the price of hens' eggs dropped by 1.5 percent compared with that in the same period last year; and in February, the prices of vegetables increased by 28 percent, which was less than the average of 34.5 percent for the whole year of 1985. In cities in which restrictions on prices were first removed last year such as Guangzhou and Wuhan, the index of prices of fresh vegetables dropped by double-digit percent. Prices during the Spring Festival in Hebei Province were much lower than those during the Spring Festival last year, and there the price of fresh eggs dropped 3 jiao per catty after the Spring Festival. In Harbin and Shanghai, the supply of fresh eggs exceeded demand and their price dropped.

Tendency Forecast

Viewed from the trends of development, no major changes will take place in the 2d and 3d quarters and market prices will not rise or drop abruptly.

Existing Problems and How To Solve Them

The general price situation in the 1st quarter of this year was quite satisfactory. However, some problems remained unsolved, and we should provide for rainy days.

First, the total demand may increase and the market prices of capital goods may rise again. The prices of capital goods in the 1st quarter remained at a high level, but the prices of a few items rose in March. This is an important signal demanding that we should tighten various measures instead of relaxing them. On the basis of strictly controlling the total demand, we must exercise structural management and treat specific cases on their merits. We must resolutely stop excessive demand for investment.

Second, remnants of unstable factors still remain in the consumer goods market. The increase in bank savings indicates that the people have delayed their consumption, but does not mean they have stopped consumption. At present, changes in consumption in China are not quite normal. There is a tendency of blindly comparing our consumption with that in developed countries, thus shortening the life cycle of products. The shift from 1-door refrigerators to 2-door refrigerators, for example, took 10 years to complete in foreign countries, but in China, it took only 1 year. Much of the consumption is borne by the state and personal income has increased too rapidly, thus turning consumption into a concentrated impact-type consumption, constituting a latent threat to market prices. Therefore, we must constantly widen the range of consumer goods and guide people to consume in a reasonable manner. To be specific: 1) Make use of price levers. Set higher prices for better goods. Encourage production of high-quality products. Restrict the demand for high-grade durable consumer goods. 2) Publicize reasonable consumption and eliminate the influence of propaganda on high consumpton in the past period. 3) Provide objective information about ways, contents, and history of consumption in foreign countries.

Third, the supply structure needs further improvement. At present, products that are easily marketable are still not quite sufficient, but their resources are being used by some small enterprises that produce many products of inferior quality sold at high prices.

Distribution of resources between regions and problems related to scale and economic results remain unsolved. There, we must widen the circulation channels, strengthening lateral economic association, and carry out price reform.

Fourth, we must further improve price management. The cycle of abrupt rise and fall of agricultural and sideline product has already attracted the attention of the academic circles in China and relevant government departments have also worked out ways to solve problems in daily life and in production caused by abrupt fluctuations. In this respect, prices of a guiding nature is a promising form of price management.

OFFICIAL EXPLAINS DROP IN DEPARTMENT STORE SALES

OW091403 Beijing XINHUA in English 1337 GMT 9 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 9 (XINHUA) -- Total first quarter sales of China's 12 largest department stores dropped 21.57 percent this year to 718.38 million yuan, but a high government official today called the decline "natural and reasonable."

Qi Zhuomao, operations chief at the Ministry of Commerce, told XINHUA today sales should soon pick up in the state-owned stores as summer goods become available. He attributed the first quarter drop in sales to "stable consumer psychology" after last year's frenetic buying and to current state restrictions on work unit purchases.

"Last year's buying explosion was ignited by fears of future price increases," he said. "Now most consumers believe prices will remain stable."

This "stable consumer psychology" has led to increased bank deposits, said Qi, an increase confirmed by the People's Bank of China.

The bank has reported that the country's savings deposits totaled 178.9 billion yuan, up 10.3 percent from the end of 1985.

Economic analysts here say the sales drop could pressure manufacturers to produce more marketable goods and state-owned department stores to improve their mangement to increase sales.

MARKET NEWS, a Beijing weekly specializing in information about commercial enterprises, reported earlier this month that many Chinese want to upgrade their family electronic appliances and other household goods, but balk at doing so when confronted with goods "with an old face," a Chinese expression referring to out-of-date styles and features.

Another Beijing Newspaper, THE ECONOMIC DAILY, recently accused some state-owned department stores of catering to purchasers of expensive, high-profit items such as color television sets and refrigerators at the expense of those wanting such small items as buttons and shoelaces.

URBAN RESIDENTS' SAVINGS AT ALL-TIME HIGH

HK140542 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0803 GMT 10 May 86

[Text] Beijing, 10 May (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- The Industrial and Commercial Bank of China recently announced that savings deposited by urban residents in this bank had exceeded the major mark of 100 billion yuan and created an all-time record.

By the end of April 1986, the total amount of saving deposited by urban residents in the Industrial and Commercial Bank was 101,288 billion yuan, or 11.73 billion yuan more than the figure at the end of 1985.

The saving deposited by urban residents in the Industrial and Commercial Bank account for 80 percent of the total savings in the whole country. The main reason for the rapid increase in savings is that the wage reforms in state institutions late last year led to a 24 percent increase in people's wage incomes. Meanwhile, the wage readjustments in enterprises also increased worker's incomes, and more and more individual traders and peasants also deposited their savings in cities. In addition, in the first 4 months of this year, the import of some high-class durable consumer goods decreased, and this left more money in the consumers hands.

In order to attract more savings deposits, Industrial and Commercial Bank branches in many provinces and municipalities have adopted the method of giving awards by drawing lots to lucky holders of savings accounts and have offered the services of optional accounts which may be taken as both time deposits and current deposits. These measures have aroused people's enthusiasm for depositing their savings in the bank.

STATE COUNCIL TO PROMULGATE 162 NEW LAWS IN 1986

OW151555 Beijing XINHUA in English 1548 GMT 15 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 15 (XINHUA) -- The State Council will examine, promulgate and draft 162 new laws and regulations this year, more than the figure for the past two years, a State Council official said here today.

At a meeting of ministerial officials in charge of legislation work, Wang Shirong, deputy director of the Legislation Bureau of the State Council, said that of the 162 laws and regulations, 65 will be examined and promulgated this year, 53 will be examined and issued if conditions permit and another 44 will be drafted.

He said the 65 laws and regulations include the land law, bankruptcy law, law governing Sino-foreign co-production enterprises, customs law as well as regulations on self-employed traders, individual income tax and the land utilization tax, in additon to the fishery law, law on mineral resources, the law governing foreign-owned enterprises in China and law on compulsory education which were promulgated earlier this year.

The other 53 laws and regulations include the law on state-owned industrial enterprises, law on post and communications, law on air pollution control and regulations concerning sino-foreign cooperative exploration of China's land oil resources and vocational-technical education.

Wang's bureau was set up last month. It is responsible for and coordinates the legislative work of all the ministries and commissions.

LABOR, WAGE, JOB ASSIGNMENT REFORM TO CONTINUE

OW071027 Beijing XINHUA in English 1002 GMT 7 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 7 (XINHUA) -- China will continue to reform its labor, wage and job assignment systems over the next five years, participants at a national conference agreed here today.

Top priorities for reform, they said, would be the wage system in state and collective enterprises, the job assignment and transfer system, and the streamlining of government institutions.

A new wage system linking pay to job responsibilities — rather than seniority — has already been established within the central government, a senior official from the Ministry of Labor and Personnel told the more than 500 personnel officials attending the conference.

Ten million workers in state enterprises, or 15 percent of the total, are already being paid according to a responsibility system that ties income to output, he said.

As a result, "earnings in government and state enterprises have gone way up," the official said.

Since 1982, according to the official, the government has been hiring people for fixed terms and the tradition of lifetime tenure for officials has been abolished. Some enterprises have been experimenting with the fixed-term system as well, he said.

Several conference participants called for an overall management system to make sure officials do their jobs in productive ways.

JIA SHI INTERVIEWED ON TRADE PROMOTION COUNCIL

HK140427 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 5 May 86 p 2

[Report: "Jia Shi, chairman of China Council for Promotion of International Trade, Interviewed on Domestic Economic Service of the Council"]

[Text] Before the end of the first congress of the members of China Council for Promotion of International Trade (hereinafter simply called Trade Promotion Council of China), Jia Shi, chairman of the council answered questions of our reporters.

Question: What kind of organization is the Trade Promotion Council of China?

Answer: The Trade Promotion Council of China is a national nongovernmental organization which promotes and pushes forward China's economic and trade relations with other countries. It was founded in May, 1952, and organized by the well-known personages of the trade and economic circles. As we all know, during the first few years after the founding of the People's Republic of China, only few foreign countries had diplomatic relations with our country and imperialism imposed an economic blockade and trade embargo against our country. Under such circumstances, our country could only develop trade relations with the western world through nongovernmental channels. The Trade Promotion Council of China played an important role in this regard. Since 1970's along with the development of the international situation and our country's implementation of the policy of opening up to the world, the Trade Promotion Council of China has begun to shift the focus of its work to external trade and external economic and technological cooperation which stresses earning foreign exchange through export. The council has continued to further develop business relations with the relevant organizations, entrepreneurial circles and financial circles through nongovernmental channels ever since.

In order to adapt itself to the new situation of opening up and invigorating the domestic economy and better develop its role as an external chamber of commerce, the Trade Promotion Council of China decided to implement the membership system after consulting its branches in various areas of the country. The membership system symbolizes that our council's work has entered a new historical period. While facing the whole world, the Trade Promotion Council of China will also face the broad masses of domestic economic entities, coordinate the external economic activities of all the members, act as go-between and pave ways for all the members so as to enable our country's external economic and trade relations to develop in greater depth and width.

Question: What are the main tasks of The Trade Promotion Council of China in the future and how will the council carry out these tasks?

Answer: Our main task at present and for a period in the future is to facilitate the development of business, economic and technological relations between China and all the countries in the world through various forms and promote mutual understanding and friendship between the Chinese people and the people of all the countries in the world and between the economic and trade circles of China and the economic and trade circles of all the countries in the world.

At present, there is such a view which seems to play down the importance of nongovernmental exchanges. This is a misunderstanding. The nongovernmental exchanges between different countries in the world were necessary in the part, are necessary at present and will continue to be necessary in the future.

Question: How will the Trade Promotion Council of China face the domestic economic entities and how will it serve the broad masses of members of the council?

Answer: To face the domestic economic entities is a fundamental reform in the work of the Trade Promotion Council of China. As far as I know, in implementing the policy of opening up and developing external economic and trade relations, many departments, localities and units, especially factories, mines and enterprises, urgently need to know about the situation of the international market, trade opportunities, products and technology, and need to open up channels and find trade partners, and need to know about the economic laws and regulations and business measures of foreign countries. Since our council carries out many exchanges with foreign countries and has numerous channels, our council can provide the broad masses of members of the council with all forms of consultancy services.

Question: What are the new business fields of the Trade Promotion Council of China?

Answer: To hold exhibitions and trade fairs and expand external trade are the common practices in the world. Between 1950's and 19670's, we paid attention to holding exhibitions abroad. However, this is not enough. What is more important is to sell our products on the international market, open up international markets, facilitate export and earn more foreign exchange. In order to do this, over the past few years, we have carried out a series of reforms on our way of holding exhibitions, the structure of exhibits, and the composition of as well as expenditure of exhibition delegations to be sent abroad. The Trade Promotion Council of China has adopted the methods of holding exhibitions by itself, sponsoring exhibitions, jointly holding exhibitions with the units concerned or organizing the relevant units to hold exhibitions by themselves so as to enable more foreign trade companies, industrial trade companies and local trade companies to have a chance to hold exhibitions abroad and expand their export trade.

We have also carried out a series of reforms regarding the exhibitions held by foreign countries in China so as to closely link foreign exhibitions with our country's import trade.

Last year, the Trade Promotion Council of China started to act as an agent dealing in foreign-related patent business. Our council's work concerning legal affairs has also experienced some development. Apart from continuing to act as a trade-mark agent and be responsible for the external economic and trade aribtration, marine arbitration, testimony and attestation, average adjustment and some other business, the council also provides lawyers for both the foreign and domestic interested parties.

As far as consultancy service is concerned, last year, the council received 36 technology-exchange delegations, organized 179 domestic units to attend symposiums on technology, sent 10 tons of technological materials to the relevant units in the whole country and transmit over 500 items of information concerning technological products.

BEIJING SHELVES 400 CITY CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS

OW110315 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 9 May 86

[Excerpts] Our station reporter learned from the meeting of the Beijing Planning and Construction Committee today that in order to strictly control the scale of capital construction projects in the capital, the Beijing Planning and Construction Committee has decided to shelve some construction projects this year. The State Planning Commission, the Beijing Municipal Planning Commission, the Beijing Municipal Construction Committee, and other departments in charge of urban construction are strictly screening all the construction projects.

The Beijing Planning and Construction Committee has decided to shelve more than 400 construction projects this year with the exception of key projects. As for the building of offices for government organs, those who attended the meeting endorsed the plan put forward by the Beijing Municipal Construction Committee to build large office buildings for rental or sale. The meeting also decided to attach great importance to building living quarters.

Chen Xitong, director of the Beijing Planning and Construction Committee, hoped that party, government, and Army organizations and all the people in the capital would take the whole situation into account and make even greater contributions to developing the capital's modernization program.

'HUGE INVESTMENT' IN PORT FACILITIES PLANNED

[By staff reporter]

[Text] Shanghai -- China is planning a huge investment to upgrade and build new port facilities and install modern cargo handling equipment, Li Jisan, secretary general of the China Ports and Harbours Association, told CHINA DAILY.

During the Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-90), 120 deep water berths and 80 medium- and small-size berths will be constructed in China, raising the country's present cargo handling capacity to 550 million tons a year, an increase of 67 percent over 1985, Li said.

The number of off-shore berths will increase to 1,200 with 300-320 deep-water berths and the handling capacity for cargos such as coal, crude oil, ore, grain and timber will be greatly increased to meet demand, Li said.

In some suitable off-shore harbours, capacity could be increased by adding extra anchorage and berthing facilities.

Prospects for China's ports look good, but problems still remain. To help facilitate the modernization of the country's exhibition will be held in Shanghai in March next year. Shanghai is one of the 10 largest harbours in the world and the largest in China.

During the exhibition, academic exchanges between international harbours will be organized on new technology and new equipment, Li said.

By the end of last year, cargo transported by the main harbours reached 350 million tons with an annual 10.1 percent increase, while 54 deep-water berths of the 10,000-ton-class or more have been constructed, 46 percent more than the previous five-year plan.

In another development, construction work has begun on new anchorage facilities at Nanjiang district, a key project for Tianjin port during the Seventh Five-Year Plan. The project, which involves a total investment of 49.7 million yuan ($16 million), will greatly ease the transport jam in the port.

Seven berths of 10,000-ton-grade or more will be built on the district's waterfront, which will increase the cargo handling capacity of Tianjin port by 1.1 million tons when in operation, according to TIANJIN DAILY. At present, the port has 24 berths for 10,000-ton ships. Tianjin is an international port with trade links to 150 countries.

AGRICULTURAL BANKS CARRY OUT COOPERATION PROGRAMS

OW111216 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1518 GMT 9 May 86

[By reporter Yuan Guanghou]

[Text] Chongqing, 9 May (XINHUA) -- During a meeting here today, agricultural banks of Guangzhou, Wuhan, Shenyang, Chongqing and Changzhou -- five cities designated to experiment with restructuring the banking system -- decided to set up lateral financial cooperation among themselves.

According to officials of these five cities' agricultural banks, their cooperation is necessitated by the need to expedite the restructuring of the banking system and support lateral economic ties. They have agreed on the following;

1. Providing each other the need circulating funds: Beginning in June 1986, they will inform each other every 10 days of the availability or needs of capital. The relevant parties will consult with each other about borrowing or lending, as well as the amounts of loans and their terms, interest rates, and other relevant matters. Each quarter, these banks will inform each other on their credit situation.

2. Exchanging information: On a regular basis the banks will exchange journals about the progress of experiementing with banking reform and other information.

3. Operating as credit agents: The service, which is provided either free of charge or for a fee, shall be decided by the relevant parties. The commissioned bank shall be responsible for assessing the feasibility of providing the various credit services. It shall also be responsible for the supervision and management of how the loans have been used after they are extended. Should there be any problem after the extension, it should immediately notify its principal.

4. Remitting money by telegram: This service will be provided among operating branches under the agricultural banks of the five cities.

5. Endorsing credits: Services of endorsing credits will be provided among agricultural banks of the five cities.

The agricultural banks have also decided in their agreement that more cooperative projects will be introduced following the development of the experiment in restructuring the banking system and the development of the commodity economy.

The leading comrades of the central authorities, Hunan Province, and Yueyang City first inspected students' classrooms, bedrooms, and cultural and recreation rooms.

Children presented white hats to leaders and performed literature and art programs with nationality characteristics.

Prior to departure, the children had a group photo taken with the leading comrades of the central authorities, Hunan Province, and Yueyang City to mark the occasion.

LI PENG URGES SCHOOL GRADUATES TO BECOME TEACHERS

OW111114 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1448 GMT 10 May 86

[Text] Beijing, 10 May (XINHUA) -- A meeting to mobilize the 1986 middle school graduates to apply for entrance into teachers schools and universities was held this afternoon at the Great Hall of the People. Li Peng, vice premier of the State Council and minister in charge of the State Educational Commission, attended and addressed the meeting. He expressed the hope that graduates of senior and junior middle schools of Beijing and the whole country, in particular, outstanding ones, step forward and accept the people's selection when the nation needs teachers most.

Li Peng stressed: In order that the four-modernization drive progresses smoothly to build our country into a modern socialist power with a high degree of civilization and democracy, we need hundreds of millions of specialists in all fields to generally enhance our nation's scientific and cultural quality. To attain this objective, we have to develop education, especially to better our elementary education. Comrade Deng Xiaoping has said: Ours is a big country of 1 billion people. If education is well developed in our country, our tremendous superiority in the resource of talented people can be matched by no other country. With this superiority plus the advanced socialist system, we will be assured of achieving our goal.

Li Peng said: Many things have to be done to perfect our elementary education. The most important and fundamental one is to build up a contingent of teachers of a sufficient number and fine ideological and professional quality. Without such a contingent, to enforce the 9-year compulsory education system would be an empty talk and to enhance the nation's quality and produce more and fine qualified personnel, an impossibilty.

Li Peng pointed out: At present we have such problems about our middle and primary school teachers as numerical insufficiency, unfit specifilization, and, partly, inferior professional standard. To solve these problems, we have to train incumbent teachers for their betterment on the one hand and run teachers schools well at all levels to cultivate large numbers of qualified new teachers to continuously supply new blood to the contingent of teachers on the other hand.

He said: To run teachers schools at all levels successfully and cultivate qualified teachers of the people, the people's governments at all levels must show tremendous concern and take effective measures to improve the conditions for running teachers schools as soon as possible. In addition, we have to enlist fine graduates of junior and senior middle schools into teachers schols to heighten the quality of freshmen. This is a key measure to improve the quality of normal education and cultivate qualified new teachers.

Li Peng said: We need large numbers of scientists, engineers, medical doctors, men of letters, artists, lawyers, and political workers for our four-modernization drive. Of course, it is a high ideal to become any of them and their work is an enviable occupation, indeed. However, without middle and primary school teachers assiduous labor of top quality, it is impossible to have men of best quality in all specializations. We now can see how important a contingent of teachers of a sufficient number and high quality is to the cultivation of qualified personnel of all categories.

Li Peng finally said: All parents hope that their children get good education and be taught by good teachers. So all parents should support their children in applying for admission to teachers schools. This not only conforms to the interests of the state and society but also of all members of the society.

Xu Weicheng, deputy secretary of the Beijing Municipal CPC Committee, said at the meeting: By the year 2000, Beijing will lack 39,000 each of middle and primary school teachers. Without a large number of qualified teachers, Beijing can hardly play its due role as the country's political and cultural center. He expressed the hope that middle school graduates consider it their duty to devote themselves to the cause of the people's education and enthusiastically apply for admission to teachers schools.

Wang Biling, teacher, special grade, of Beijing No 11 Middle School, Ruan Guojie, young teacher of Beijing Teachers University's Second Affiliated Middle School, and Liu Hong, 1986 graduate of the Senior Middle School of Beijing University's affiliated Middle School, also spoke at the meeting.

He Dongchang, responsible comrades of departments concerned, and some 8,000 of Beijing's 1986 middle school graduates attended the meeting.

ZHU HOUZE, RUI XINGWEN AT SHANGHAI BALLET

OW141118 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 0000 GMT 14 May 86

[Text] Gao Zhanxiang, vice minister of culture, watched the mythological ballet "Ta Yu" in Shanghai last evening. After the performance, he said: It is very sensational to stage the story of Ta Yu [Founder of the Xia Dynasty]. The story and the dance were both beautiful. I hope you will continue to revise and improve it according to popular opinion so that it will become even better.

Zhu Houze, head of the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee, and Rui Xingwen, secretary of the Shanghai municipal party committee, also watched the show. After the show, they went up to the stage to greet the performers on their success.

SHANDONG: SIX ZONES DESIGNATED FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

HK140821 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0244 GMT 13 May 86

[Report by Yuan Chonghe: "Shandong Designates Six Major Economic Zones"]

[Text] Jinan, 13 May (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Shandong, China's second richest province, has made strategic arrangements for its economic deveopment. In line with the favorable conditions in various localities, it has designated six major economic zones in the hope of shifting its advanced technology from the Yantai-Jinan ad Tianjin-Pukou railways to both sides of each the railways.

The Jiaodong peninsula economic zone includes the three cities of Qingdao, Yantai, and Weifang, which will play the radiating role of key cities in building Shandong Province into the most advanced, outward-oriented economic zone.

The central Shandong economic zone, mainly dealing in the petrochemical industry, includes Zibo, Dongying, and Huimin. The Shengli oil field, China's second largest, is situated in the central Shandong economic zone.

The southwestern Shandong economic zone, rich in coal resources, is famous for its coal production in Yanzhou, Jining, Zaozhuang, and Tengxian. This zone will be built into an energy base focusing on coal and electric power production.

The Jinan-Taian economic zone will concentrate on the development of tourism, science, technology, education, and culture. It will become a comprehensive and multifunctional economic zone.

The southern Shandong economic zone, which is a little backward, will engage mainly in mineral production, forestry, and the building material industry. The northeastern Shandong economic zone will develop industry, forestry, animal husbandry, and the processing of agricultural and sideline products.

Shandong's gross industrial and agricultural output value amounted to 89.4 billion yuan in 1985, ranking second in the country. However, economic development in various localities in Shandong is unbalanced. To bring into full play the superior conditions of various localities, Shandong Province, basing itself on macroeconomic arrangements, has designated six major economic zones, aiming to strengthen dialogue between its "eastern, western, southern, and northern" regions and to take a larger step forward in economic construction.

BRIEFS

ANHUI RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT -- Hefei, 6 May (XINHUA) -- Through comprehensive efforts to develop the resources of Anhui Province, the Shanghai Economic Zone has turned a unitary, local advantage into an overall advantage for the entire economic zone. By the end of April this year, Anhui Province had signed agreements for more than 100 joint development projects with Shanghai, Jiangsu, and Zhejiang, thereby raising some 300 million yuan of capital. When completed, these projects will increase the Shanghai Economic zone's output of coal, pig iron, cement, and iron sulphide by 1.8 million, 400,000, 2.5 million, and 600,000 metric tons respectively. They will play an important role in easing the long-term shortages of energy, and raw and semifinished materials in areas south of the Chang Jiang. GUANGDONG PARTY RECTIFICATION FORUM HELD

HK150832 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 0300 GMT 14 May 86

[Text] Yesterday afternoon, at the provincial forum on party rectification work at the district level in the rural areas held by the provincial CPC Committee, Guo Rongchang, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and deputy head of the provincial CPC Committee's group for guiding party rectification, emphasized: It is necessary to further and penetratingly carry out party rectification at the district level in the rural areas. This forum was held in Guangzhou from 9 to 13 May. The forum exchange and summed up the previous experiences in party rectification and made arrangements for party rectification work at the next step. At yesterday afternoon's closing ceremony, while Comrade Guo Rongchang was talking about how to further and penetratingly carry out party rectification work at the district level in the rural areas, he pointed out:

1. The key lies in the fact that the city, prefectural, and county CPC committees, particularly the county CPC committees, must continuously strengthen guidance to party rectification at the district level, overcome their slack and complacent mood, find out the weak links, and continue to grasp this work to the end.

2. It is essential to do a good job in comparison and examination.

3. It is imperative to do well in grasping party rectification work in the units under the dual leadership of a county and a district and to prevent doing things perfunctorily and superficially.

4. It is necessary to simultaneously carry out rectification and correction and to develop party rectification in depth in the course of rectification and correction.

5. We must really do well in building the leadership groups.

GUANGXI'S CHEN HUIGUANG OUTLINES JOURNALISTS' DUTY

HK150744 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 14 May 86

[Excerpts] At the second congress of the Guangxi Journalists Association and the Guangxi Press Association, regional CPC Committee Secretary Chen Huiguang said that journalists must make contributions in building the two civilizations. Newspapers, radio, and television must give much publicity to the excellent situation in Guangxi. They must do well in reporting the work of helping the poor, and must inspire the poor first in helping them. Comrade Chen Huiguang said: To fulfill Guangxi's Seventh 5-Year Plan, we must rely on the efforts of journalists, properly carry out propaganda work, and conduct education so as to enchance our vigor to unite the fight for the fulfillment of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. (Zhong Jiazuo), Standing Committee member and secretary general of the regional CPC Committee, also delivered a speech at the congress. At the congress, 56 members were elected directors of the boards of the Guangxi Journalists Association and the Guangxi press Association. After discussions, the directors elected (Zhong Jiming) honorary president of the two associations, and (Dong Puihua) president of the two associations. The congress was held from 11 to 13 May in Nanning. (Zhang Yang) and (Li Shoufa), deputy directors of the Propaganda Department of the regional CPC Committee, attended and spoke.

HUBEI ELECTS NEW CPPCC OFFICIALS 14 MAY

OW142120 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1340 GMT 14 May 86

[Text] Wuhan, 14 May (XINHUA) -- On the basis of the resignations of Shi Zirong, Xue Wei, Zhou Jifang, Xu Jinbiao, Tao Yang and Yang Rui because of their advanced age, the Fourth Meeting of the Fifth Hubei Provincial CPPCC Committee which closed today agreed that they be relieved of their posts as vice chairmen of the provincial CPPCC Committee. At the same time, the CPPCC elected, afOer full consultations, Mu Changsheng [4476 1603 3932], Hu Hengshan [5170 1854 1472], Dong Yusen [5516 3768 2773], Mao Gensu [3029 2577 3936], Tang Zhensheng [0781 2182 3932], and Han Wenquing [7281 2429 0615] as vice chairmen of the provincial CPPCC Committee. HUNAN FIGHTS FORCED SALES OF UNMARKETABLE GOODS

HK070909 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 5 May 86

[Text] Some state-run wholesale and retail commercial units in the province have recently engaged in the malpractice of selling goods together with unmarketable goods to customers.

The provincial commerce department issued a circular on 4 May to all commercial departments of all prefectures, cities, and counties, calling on them to resolutely curb the malpractice of selling goods together with unmarketable goods to customers. The circular reads: The problem of selling goods together with unmarketable goods has appeared time and again in wholesale and retail commercial units and has become increasingly serious recently. This malpractice infringes upon consumers' interests, gives protection to backward products, results in waste, and defames state-run commerce.

The circular demands that all wholesale and retail enterprises earnestly implement the regulations recently issued by the State Council on quality responsibility of industrial products and previous circulars issued by the Ministry of Commerce on prohibiting the malpractice of selling goods together with inferior and unmarketable goods to customers. It is absolutely impermissible to sell fine-quality products together with inferior products, to sell famous-brand products together with ordinary products, and to sell marketable products together with unmarketable products. Efforts should be made to fight the malpractice regularly.

The circular demands that commercial departments in all localities actively guide and promote production units to produce fine-quality and famous-brand products in accordance with market needs. They must also ensure the quality of goods they purchase so that the goods are marketable. It is necessary to oppose the malpractice of forcibly selling goods together with inferior and unmarketable goods.

The circular demands that responsible commercial departments at all levels strengthen supervision and examination of the operation style of enterprises under their administration, promptly curb the malpractice if it is discovered, and affix the responsibility of wholesale and retail units. In serious cases, units and persons involved should be fined economically and punished administratively. It is necessary to deal severely with a handful of people who offer and take bribes to purchase unmarketable goods and then forcibly sell the unmarketable goods together with other goods to customers.

GUIZHOU COMMENTARY URGES CADRES TO STUDY MARXISM

HK140606 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 9 May 86

[Station commentary: "New and Old Cadres Alike Must Seriously Study Marxism"]

[Text] Recently, the central leaders repeatedly urged that new and old cadres alike must strenghten their study of basic theory of Marxism, and strive to heighten their theoretical standards. The provincial CPC Committee has conveyed the suggestions of the provincial CPC Committee propaganda Department on strengthening the study of theory among cadres. The department urged all cadres to seriously study Marxist theory. In the course of building socialism with Chinese charactersitics, it is very significant that new and old cadres alike do well in studying basic Marxist theory as well as mastering the basic principles and basic methods of Marxism.

The new and old cadres are leaders of departments and units in all localities. The line, principles, and policies formulated by the CPC Central Committee are mainly implemented by them. How well the new and old cadres can master the theory of Marxism plays an important role in the implementation of the party's line, principles, and policies, as well as in the achievements of their local departments and units. In building socialism with Chinese characteristics, new situations and new problems develop one after another. Only when we seriously study the theory of Marxism and master its stand, viewpoint, and methods can we analyze the new situation in a scientific way and correctly solve new problems. Then, we can promote our undertakings in various areas in an innovate way. Without the guidance of the theory of Marxism, there is a risk of getting lost.

Marxism is a complete and scientific system. When studying Marxism, we must also take a scientific method and a scientific attitude. First, we must act industriously and systematically and seriously read several books, so as to master Marxism as a complete system. Second, we must correctly understand the relations between the practice of upholding Marxism and that of developing Marxism. Marxism is not a rigid dogma, but a guide to action. Its growth follow in the wake of the development of the times. We should follow its basic principles and basic methods and, by integrating them with the ever-changing situation, solve new problems. We should not simply focus on each of its specific conclusions. Thus, we not only study Marxism but also augment and develop Marxism.

GUIZHOU TO UNDERTAKE 13 MAJOR PROJECTS IN 5-YEAR PLAN

SICHUAN HOLDS MEETING ON CORRECTING MALPRACTICES

HK150745 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0930 GMT 13 May 86

[Excerpts] On 11 May the provincial CPC Committee held a meeting on straightening out sectoral malpractices to develop party rectification in depth. Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Yuang Rudai and other leading comrades listened to reports given by responsible comrades from some units and delivered important speeches.

The meeting held that to straighten out malpractices, first, we must have a correct ideological understanding. In the preceding stage, the province corrected the malpractices of party and government organs doing business and running enterprises, seriously straightened out party style, and dealt with important and major cases. All this has made a good start for straightening out malpractices with sectoral characteristics. But we need to continue these efforts.

Straightening out sectoral malpractices is a requirement for straightening out party style, an urgent demand of the people, and a requirement for building material and spritual civilization. It is also the concrete manifestation of correcting the guiding thought on our work. Second, leading cadres at all levels must be familiar with the malpractices in various sectors and must seriously deal with those malpractices in their own sectors about which the masses have a lot of complaints. They must mainly deal with such malpractices as taking advantage of one's power and position to practice fraud, to blackmail and extort from others, and to seriously violate the interests of the state and people.

The meeting also pointed out that to straighten out sectoral malpractices, it is necessary to uphold the principle of seeking truth from facts, to pay attention to implementing policies, and to take into account the situation when the malpractices actually emerged. As for general mistakes, so long as the persons involved have corrected their mistakes, it will be all right. It is not necessary to check people one by one. It is however necessary to severely punish a handful of people who have made serious mistakes, made a bad impression on the masses, and violated criminal law.

In conclusion the meeting stressed that we must, in connection with characteristics in all sectors and on all front, straighten out malpractices in all sectors in a planned way and, step by step, and treat the straightening out of malpractices as an important part of straightening out party style. We must straighten out party style to bring about the improvement of the general social mood and to further improve party style.

PROSPECTS FOR TAIWAN-MAINLAND RELATIONS ASSESSED

HK090456 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese 5 May 86 p 2

[Article by He Fang of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences: "The Future Relations Between Taiwan and the Mainland" -- based on a speech at the "Taiwan in the Coming 10 Years" subcommittee meeting at the 38th Annual Conference of the U.S. Asian Society]

[Text] Over the past few years, the future of Taiwan has become a favorite topic of the domestic and overseas press and there have been more and more academic discussions about it. This suggests that the Taiwan issue has become an increasing urgent topic on the agenda. The question of what course Taiwan will follow is not only a matter of great concern for the 1 billion compatriots on both sides of the strait, Overseas Chinese, and foreign citizens of Chinese origin, but has also drawn international attention. Naturally, the Taiwan issue is an internal affair of China, the settlement of which should only be negotiated by the Chinese on both sides of the strait. However, it also has its international aspect, which mainly refers to U.S. involvement. In addition, the Taiwan issue also concerns the stability of the situation in Asia, the Far East in particular. Therefore, it is understandable for foreign academics to objectively make an academic study and investigation into the Taiwan issue. Their studies and research should be welcome.

In the final analysis, the future of Taiwan we are now talking about refers to its relations with the mainland. Therefore, in this article I will air my personal views on the future relations between Taiwan and the mainland in terms of economic, political, and international environments, in the hope of soliciting advice from fellow participants.

I

This conference is entitled "Taiwan in the Coming 10 Years." In view of the fact that any economy is the basis of politics, in the world today it is difficult to imagine that economic confusion can result in political stability. I will therefore first talk about economic problems, which, I think, will not digress from the subject.

Over the past 20 to 30 years, Taiwan's economy has rapidly developed owing to the relaxation of the situation in the Taiwan Strait, which has been advantageous to the international situation, and as a result of the hard work of the Taiwan people. The people on the mainland have always been deeply gratified at the achievements made by their compatriots. The present economic situation in Taiwan can be said to be stable, and there is certain potential for future development. But we should also understand that Taiwan's economy is at a turning point. We should not be too optimstic about its development. Taiwan's authorities and the press have talked much about Taiwan's economic difficulties. This is well-known, so I will not deal with it in detail. What I would like to talk about is that the weak points of Taiwan's economy lie in the shortage of material resources and the narrowness of its internal market. Its economic development relies to a large extent on foreign trade. The world economy is now in a period of slow development, and many countries are carrying out economic structural adjustment. Such a rapid growth rate as in the past will probably not be seen again by the end of this century. It is hard to witness great development in world trade. Competition will become sharper and sharper. Trade protectionism will continously increase.

Under such circumstances, Taiwan will be faced with more and more economic difficulties. For example, its traditional industry is declining, its technology-intensive industry has not developed, and it is losing its original superiority. It is good that the prices of raw materials and fuels have dropped, but the loss of the competiveness of its products will make it difficult for its exports to increase. As its internal market is small and comsumption has dropped, Taiwan finds it difficult to sell its export commodities on the internal market. In particular, people do not have much condience in their future, so a "troubled mental state" has arisen, bringing about a capital outflow and a decline in people's desire to make long-term investments. This situation markedly sharpened in 1985. Things will continue to deteriorate if no effective measures are taken, and it wil be very difficult to maintain economic stability.

There is no need to deny the fact that for a period of time in the past, that is, in the 1960's and the 1970's, economic development was slower on the mainland than in Taiwan. This was because China could not find an economic development mode suited to its specific conditions and made some big mistakes in its work, in addition to the problems of a vast expanse of land, a large population, a poor foundation to start with, and boycotts by foreign countries. In particular, it lost a lot of time during the 10 years of turmoil. Nevertheless, not only was its economic development rate in the first 30 years unprecedented in Chinese history, it was also fast among the Third World countries.

This can be seen in comparison with India, which has conditions similar to those of China. A fundamental change has taken place in the situation since the beginning of the 1980's. Over the last 5 years, the economic development rates of Taiwan and the mainland have turned the other way. This trend will probably continue to develop with the implementation of economic structural reform on the mainland. The mainland is still far behind Taiwan in terms of per capita output value, but for a large country, it is inevitable for economic imbalance to occur from region to region. Not only is there a gap beteen the mainland and Taiwan, but a big difference can be found between Shanghai and Qinghai or between Jiangsu and Gansu. Of course, the mainland still has many problems with its economy, such as inadequate capital, backward technology, a low managerial level, and uneven economic reform, but the main thing is that the mainland has taken the correct road of development. The people throughout the country are energetic and full of confidence. The prospects are bright. This is known to the whole world.

The mainland and Taiwan have their own difficulties with their economies, but the nature of these difficulties is entirely different. The mainland's difficulties are related to the course of progress. The orientation has been ascertained and the route has been opened. With this, various problems can be settled one-by-one. Taiwain's economic difficulties involve the question of seeking a way out. It will be hard for Taiwan to go forward without looking for a new path. Last year, when world trade was depresssed, the situation in Taiwain's foreign trade worsened, with a drop of 8.4 percent in imports. Exports, however, witnessed a slight increase of 0.9 percent as a result of a rapid rise in indirect trade with the mainland (a 250 percent rise in its indirect trade with the mainland through Hong Kong in the first 7 months). Otherwise, its foreign trade would have continued to drop. Hong Kong is an example: It has strengthened its economic ties with the mainland following the smooth settlement of the Hong Kong question. Last year its commodity exports to the United States, Europe, and Japan dropped by a large margin. However, Hong Kong still witnessed a 6.2 percent rise in the total volume of its exports and re-exports as a result of a 35 percent increase in its exports to the mainland and a 64 percent increase in its re-exports to the mainland. These are facts, and it is not difficult for people to draw their own conclusions.

II.

At first glance, the present political solution in Taiwan is stable, but people are very concerned over how long it will last. Although the wind is not likely to blow in the political situation in Taiwan, factors affecting the stability of the political situation keep increasing and are becoming more prominent. First, economic difficulties inevitably affect political stability. As I have dealt with this point in the passages above, I will not go into further details here. Second, Taiwan is faced with the problem of taking over and inheriting political power.

Some people believe that after Mr Chiang Ching-kuo, Taiwan will possibly shift to collective leadership to maintain political stability. It is true that we should not thoroughly reject this possibility, but judging from the KMT's history and traditions as well as the present situation in Taiwan, it seems that the problem of shifting to collecting leadership is not so simple. As there are many factions in the KMT, it will be hard to realize collective leadership, what is more, to realize it smoothly. Third, the contradiction between the KMT and "other parties" has long been a hidden worry of the Taiwan authorities. The Taiwan people's demand for democratic reform and the abolition of the so-called "martial law" is becoming stronger. This has made their problems more complicated. If the Taiwan authorities carry out suppression, stronger dissatisfaction will arise among the Taiwan people; if they relax their control, they are afraid that the momentum of democratic movements will run higher. They are in a dilemma, walking on thin ice.

Fourth, the "three no's" policy of "no contact, no negotiation, and no reconciliation" is meeting with stronger opposition and is therefore difficult to continue. Although many people in Taiwan do not understand much about the situation on the mainland and the CPC's policies, due to long estrangement and anticommunist propaganda, the vast number of Taiwan compatriots want to have more ties and exchanges with the mainland, to remove estrangement, and to solve relations with the mainland through equal negotiations. Their desires are breaking through all barricades and converging into a mighty, irresistible current. As contradictions in Taiwan are complicated and are becoming increasingly acute, if they do not judge the hour, size up the situation, and change their course, but continue to go against the trend and the people's will and to persist in their rigid stand, then "what Ji Xun has to worry about is not Zhuan Yu, but trouble from within." In such a case, how can we say that the situation is stable?

Mainland compatriots and the CPC leaders do not wish to see a turbulent situation in Taiwan, as a turbulent situation will endanger the peaceful life of Taiwan compatriots. In addition, some separatists and foreign powers will use it to hamper the peaceful reunification of the motherland. This will also be detrimental to the smooth carrying out of economic construction on the mainland. On the mainland, not everything is as good as everyone expects. However, the present excellent situation of harmony, stability, and unity has rarely been seen in Chinese history. The mainland also had the problem of taking over and inheriting political power, but it was solved at the national conference of party delegates held last year. Now the whole nation is repudiating bureaucratism, unhealthy practices, and corruption. If this is continued for a long time, a fundamental change for the better will certainly be realized.

Although there will be problems and difficulties in the course of our advance, the stability of the political situation on the mainland and long-term adherence to the basic principles are ensured. Some people do not trust the CPC's policy on peaceful reunification and even say that the CPC wants to create disturbances in Taiwan so that it can have the opportunity to use force against Taiwan.

This is, at least, a misunderstanding or prejudice. But one point is certain, the Chinese people and government will never allow foreign power to use disturbances in Taiwan to interfere, or separatists to engage in the so-called "Taiwan independence" or "self-determination" movement. We also hope and are deeply convinced that the great cause of peacefuully reunifying the motherland will soon be realized. The situation in recent years has developed toward this end. Insofar as Taiwan politics is concerned, there are two possible alternatives: One is confusion as a result of long delay and the other is "unification as a result of being resolute."

III.

The international situation undoubtedly has a certain impact on relations between Tawian and the mainland. Looking to the future, U.S.-Soviet confrontation and contention will continue for a long time to come, but its influence on international affairs will consistently be reduced. The world is going forward toward multipolarization, and this trend is unalterable. The development, growth, and mutual cooperation of the Third World are drawing more and more attention. The danger of war still exists, but the factors for preserving peace have outstripped this danger. Therefore, it is not easy for a large-scale war to break out. In a peaceful international environment, the Chinese Mainland will witness rapid development in construction in various fields, and its national strength will certainly thrive. There will be brighter prospects for its foreign relations. The development of the international situation has become more favorable to the peaceful reunification of the motherland. This is as bright as a blazing fire.

It is undeniable that some foreign powers would not like to see China's peaceful reunification. Some people in the United States still insist on the policy of "one China, one Taiwan." but more and more people in the world understand and support China's peaceful reunification. This is the general trend. The adverse current which hinders China's peaceful reunification cannot last long. Some sensible persons in the United States understand that the peaceful settlement of the dispute between Taiwan and the mainland will be good for all. As the development of Sino-U.S. relations is stable, the major obstacle to the relations between the two countries will certainly be removed. This is independent of man's will. Even during the 10 years of turmoil, the United States attached importance to developing relations with China, and this will continue in the future, as China will grow stronger. The further development of Sino-U.S. relations will be beneficial not only to the interests of both sides, but also to safeguarding peace in Asia and the rest of the world.

Taiwan's foreign relations are known to all. There is no need to give a detailed explanation. The so-called practical foreign relations mainly refer to foreign economies and trade. As I have said above, this road is becoming narrower. It is hard to even maintain the present state of affairs, let alone develop it. The Taiwan authorities have all along persisted in the concept of "one China" and opposed separatism. But they refuse the offer of peaceful reunification and are content to exercise sovereignty over a part of the country. They are, in fact, contradicting themselves. Those who try to separate Taiwan from the mainland forever or to make "Taiwan independent" place their hope on foreign powers. This is national betrayal and is very unreliable. Viewed from Chinese history, no separatist regime living on foreign support lasted long, let alone at present, as the situation is greatly different from the past.

In the final analysis, the future of Taiwan is determined by its relations with the mainland. The question of solving Taiwan-mainland relations is an internal affair of the Chinese nation. Since people on both sides of the Strait maintain that we are Chinese, it should not be difficult to solve problems of our family.

The old saying goes: "There will be reunion after long separation." This is a good description of the relations between Taiwan and the mainland. As to how to "unify," this can be discussed. The CPC has suggested the realization of the peaceful reunification of the motherland on the basis of the concept of "one country, two systems" through bilateral negotiations. The CPC will not force its existing system on Taiwan, but stands for the principle that neither side will take over the other.

But it is unrealistic for Taiwan to unify with the mainland under its present system. We should admit that over the past 2 years, Taiwan has relaxed its relations a little with the mainland. But it still persists in the "three no's" policy and is determined to pursue this policy for a long time. This is very unsensible. It is not workable to tackle the changing situation with an unchanged stand. What is the way out? It seems that both sides should solve their relations through equal negotiations by taking account of the national interests of both sides and realities on both sides of the strait, including the wishes of the Taiwan people. All problems and misgivings can be discussed, with the exception of the sacred principle of "one China" and the "reunification of the motherland" (this is the great common wish of both sides). Therefore, our task of top priority is to strengthen our contracts. Once negotiations start, problems are easy to solve.

It is well-known that the political situation on the Chinese mainland is stable, that its economic construction is developing by leaps and bounds, and that its international position is becoming increasing important. It is estimated that by the end of this century, China's GNP will exceed that of Italy, Britain, or even France, and will rank fifth in the world. Although its per capita output value is comparatively low and its science and technology are below world levels, it is doubtless that it will become a country with a powerful economy. If the peaceful reunification of Taiwan and the mainland can be realized during this period, the international position of the entire Chinese nation will be greatly enhanced. In the coming 40 to 50 years, it is possible for China to approach the levels of developed countries in terms of economy, science, and technology and to realize the wishes of Mr Sun Yat-sen and the desires all noble-minded Chinese have cherished over past century, thereby making greater contributions to preserving long-lasting peace in the world and to the progress of mankind.

In conclusion, Taiwan compatriots, Overseas Chinese, foreign citizens of Chinese origin, and foreign friends who are concerned with China and the study of the China problem are welcome to visit the mainland for the purpose of strengthening contacts and increasing mutual understanding. I hope that I will see you in Beijing.

[Text] Hong Kong, 15 May (ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE) -- Li Chen-Yang, assistant manager of China Airlines' Hong Kong office, was interviewed this afternoon by a ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE reporter.

He reiterated China Airlines' position on the direct talks that China Airlines' Taipei headquarters has agreed to hold with the Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC), saying that China Airlines will demand the return of the crew, the cargo plane, and the cargo aboard.

The reporter asked: Does this include Wang Hsi-chueh? Li Chen-yang said: Yes.

The reporter asked: Is this different from China's position that the three crew members are free to decide whether to stay or leave? Li answered: That is their (refering to the mainland) attitude.

Through what channel did Taipei tell China its willingness to hold the talks? Li said: Taipei passed this message to China through Cathay Pacific Airways. How did Cathay Pacific Airways pass this message? Li said: I do not know.

Commentary Views 'Business Talks'

OW151229 Taipei Domestic Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 13 May 86

[Station commentary]

[Text] For humanitarian reasons and after careful deliberations, China Airlines [CAL], in order to reduce the crew of its cargo plane No 198 which is now in the custody of the Chinese Communists, decided yesterday to ask Cathay Pacific to relay a message to the Chinese Communists' Civil Aviation Administration [CAAC] that CAL will dispatch representatives of its Hong Kong branch to negotiate with CAAC in Hong Kong on the return of the 747, its crew, and cargo.

CAL also stressed that the landing of its cargo plane in Canton's Pai Yun Airport was nothing more than an aviation incident. Thus, the negotiations on the return of the plane and its crew and cargo are nothing more than business talks between two civil aviation companies.

Ever since Wang Hsi-chueh, pilot of the CAL 747 cargo plane, landed his plane on the China mainland, the other crew members, Tung Kuang-hsing and Chiu Ming-chih, have clearly expressed their wishes to return to Taiwan. However, the Chinese Communists have not allowed these two to publicly meet the press. On the other hand, the Chinese Communists took Wang Hsi-chueh to Peiping to hold a press conference and ask CAL to send a representative to Peiping to negotiate the return of the plane and its crew. Moreover, they have rejected demands for the return of the plane and crew presented by third parties including the Interntional Red Cross, a foreign insurance company, as well as Cathay Pacific, acting as CAL's agent.

Their intention to use the plane and crew as tools for a united front offensive against us is very clear. Such conduct has also revealed the Chinese Communists' true features of not respecting international organizations and disregarding norms governing international civil aviation. Following the incident, CAL, on the other hand, has communicated with the Chinese Communists through various channels seeking the return of the plane and crew.

Plotting a united front offensive against us, the Chinese Communists have in recent years continued to harp on the tune of establishing with us commercial, postal, and shipping services as well as economic, scientific and technological, sports, and cultural exchange. Internationally, they have also tried to create an image that they are peace-loving and friendly. But our government has ignored these tricks, knowing the Chinese Communists' intentions behind them, and kept to the stand of having no negotiations, no contacts, and no compromises with the Chinese Communists.

After the CAL plane landed on the China mainland, the civil aviation authorities have always expressed their concern for the plane and the safety of the crew and have fully supported CAL in taking all possible measures to rescue the crew and recover the plane and its cargo. Eleven days after the incident, CAL, after careful deliberation, has now decided to authorize representatives of its Hong kong branch to discuss related matters with the Chinese Communists' CAAC in Hong Kong.

Although CAL is the nation's flag carrier providing transworld services, it is basically a nongovernmental company. Thus, having business talks with the Chinese Communists' CAAC for the purpose of rescuing its personnel, CAL does not violate the government's stand of having no negotiations, no contacts, and no compromises with the Chinese Communists. We believe that this sensible decision will have the nation's support.

Here, we also urge CAL to be fully prepared for the talks, take a firm stand, and make every effort to deal with the other side. We also think that the meeting should be held publicly under [words indistinct] so that the Chinese Communists will have no chance whatsoever to exploit the situation and carry out their blackmail. It is our hope that Tung Kuang-hsing and Chiu Ming-chih will regain their freedom and that the plane and its cargo will be returned soon.

AFP Analyzes Attitudes to Talks

HK161005 Hong Kong AFP in English 0911 GMT 16 May 86

[By ierre-Antoine Donnet]

[Excerpts] Beijing, May 16 (AFP) -- Chinese and Taiwan negotiators are to meet on neutral ground in Hong Kong Saturday for their first direct talks in almost 40 years, but China is not expected to make any great fanfare of the event, analysts say here.

The talks were sparked by the defection to the mainland of a commercial pilot and his cargo plane May 3, a real windfall for China, but the defection must be treated with utmost care by Beijing in order to lay the groundwork for an eventual dialogue between the two sides, the analysts said.

(Three Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC) officials and three from Taiwan's China Airlines (CAL) will meet in the British colony to discuss the return of a cargo plane and two crew members flown to China by a defecting pilot May 3, a CAL official said in taipei Friday. China's NEW CHINA NEWS AGENCY (NCNA) said Friday that two three-member delegations would be involved in the Hong Kong talks. The talks are to start at 10 am (0200 GMT), in the Hong Kong offices of Cathay Pacific Airways (CPA), which has acted as mediator over the incident, CAL's lin Liang-chin told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE.)

But analysts in Beijing said that China was unlikely to gloat over Taiwan's agreement to hold the talks, although Beijing has long sought to establish direct contact with the taipei government as part of its efforts towards reunification. It is rather expected to adopt a "low profile" and a modest stance, avoiding any moves which might jeopardize the success of this first contact since the Communist victory over the Nationalists in 1949, they said.

China initially took a firm line when pilot Wu Xijue landed his China Airlines (CAL) Boeing 747 at Guangzhou on may 3, indicating that only direct talks on the mainland with Taipei officials would permit the return of the aircraft, its co-pilot Dong Wangxing and technician Qiu Mingzhi.

Then on Sunday, Beijing softened its stance, stressing that there would be "no political issues involved" in the talks and agreeing to let Taipei name a venue outside mainland China.

It was this concession in particular which two days later enabled Taiwan's ruling Nationalists to agree to meet with Beijing and still "save face" with an assertion that the talks would not mean a change in their official policy of "no contact, no talk, no compromise," with the communists, the analysts said.

(Mr Lin in Taipei Friday reiterated that "in principle, we still insist on the three no's policy," and that the Taiwan Government's attitude was that the issue was commercial, not political. He added that the delegation would request not only the return of the plane and two crew but also the "release" of Captain Wang, adding that the pilot did not land in China of his own free will.)

However, a conciliatory approach from Beijing at the talks is still unlikely to mean much hope for Taiwan of securing the return of the plane's pilot, observers in Beijing said. Western diplomats in Beijing said the communist authorities were quite aware of the implications for the future which will be at stake at this historic meeting. Even if they hold the trump cards at Saturday's talks, the Chinese must also prove their moderation and restraint, particularly by keeping to their promise not to raise any political issues, the diplomats added.

Editorial Advises Position for CAL

HK161140 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE in Chinese 1051 GMT 16 May 86

[Text] Hong Kong, 16 May (ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE) -- According to Taipei sources, today, CHUNG-YANG JIH-PAO published an editorial on the cargo plane case to be handled by the two airlines to elaborate on the "position to be adhered to by China Airlines" in the course of the talks.

This editorial, which is entitled "China Airlines Must Be Steadfast and Persevering in Order To Attain the Goal of Bringing Back the Aircrew and the Airplane," says: "China Airlines finds itself in a special situation by holding talks with a "CPC airline" as a civil airline." Thus, in the course of the talks, "China Airlines must stick to its own position and must be very careful in order to avoid playing into CPC hands."

It is suggested in the editorial that in order to avoid unnecessary complications, "China Airlines must insist that the two airlines should be empowered only to discuss the return of the airplane and its crew and try its best to make the negotiations proceedings direct and the things discussed simple." "In particular, it should make adequate preparations in advance, adhere to the proper position, and be thoroughly prepared for relevant technical problems."

DENG XIAOPING URGES RECTIFICATION IN PARTY STYLE

HK160208 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 16 May 86 p 1

[Special dispatch by correspondent Kung Shuang-yin: "Deng Xiaoping Again Urges Rectifying Party Style; Time for Rectification May Be Extended 1 Year"]

[Text] CPC Central Advisory Commission Chairman Deng Xiaoping recently demanded that the whole party vigorously grasp the question of party style without relaxing it for a single day. Vigorous efforts should be made for 2 years to transform the party style.

Deng Xiaoping put forward this demand in an important speech at a recent meeting of the CPC Central Committee Political Bureau Standing Committee. Bo Yibo conveyed Deng Xiaoping's instructions at a meeting to report on the work of party rectification inspectors.

Deng Xiaoping said: We proposed at the 12th party congress that a fundamental turn for the better in party style and social mood be accomplished in 5 years. There is now only 1 year left. We must get a vigorous grasp on this work without relaxing it for a single day. If this 1 year is not enough, then we should add 1 more year, and make vigorous efforts for 2 years to transform the party style. It would even have taken 10 years to restore the party style and social mood of the 1950's, when they were at their best.

Bo Yibo demanded that the party rectification inspectors uphold party principles and dare to tackle tough problems. Speaking on the question of the "network of relationships" in the CPC at the present, he said that it is not principles but human feelings that are stressed in party life in many places and units. The moment the time comes to handle specific problems, all kinds of personal relationships appear, with people talking about old subordinates, sons, daughters, relatives, and comrades with whom they have been through thick and thin! This and similar things in fact constitute networks of relationships of various kinds. If you fall into that net, you cannot get out of it. This "net" is not as simple as a spider's web; it is like sugarcoated candy on a stick, strung together; it has an impact and plays a role all round. Some people depend on such a "network of relationships" for their livelihood.

On the question of daring to tackle tough problems, Bo Yibo said that "tough" refers to those things that are not easy to touch and involve some risk in touching; for instance, things like "networks of relationships," factionalism, powerholders who violate law and discipline, and major and important criminal cases in which certain figures holding considerable power act as the bosses behind the scenes. However, it is not right to adopt a laissez-faire approach and lack boldness for tackling these things just because they are a bit "tough" and might affect one's interests or even one's safety.

PRC CULTURE MINISTRY LEADERSHIP, POLICY ANALYZED

HK150525 Hong Kong CHING PAO in Chinese No 106, 10 May 86 pp 56-57

[Article by Yi Sha: "Rong Gaotang Handles 'Difficult and Complicated Cases'"]

[Text] What Happened Before Wang Meng Assumed Office
At least 8 months have elapsed since Zhu Houze, an official from Guizhou Province (53 years old), replaced the 72-year-old former head of the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department who was known for "opposing pollution."

However, the leading body of the Ministry of Culture remained unchanged. Some people misunderstood that Zhu Muzhi was a "roly-poly." Actually, this is not true. It is only because no suitable successor could be chosen to take charge of the Ministry of Culture, which is generally regarded as the most troublesome department.

After New Year's Day this year, it was said that a certain senior official recommended Gao Ji [7559 7162], a secretary of the Jilin Provincial CPC Committee in charge of agriculture (please note he is not veteran journalist Gao Ji), to succeed Minister Zhu in taking charge of the nation's cultural work. However, the hearsay soon vanished like mist and smoke.

Not long after the spring festival, Gao Zhanxiang, a secretary of the Hebei Provincial CPC Committee in charge of cultural and educational work, was appointed first vice minister of culture (namely, standing vice minister). He comes from a worker's family. He was originally an amateur writer of prose and occasionally wrote commentary on literature and art. During his tenure of office in Hebei, he was enlightened and openminded. However, it is impossible for a standing vice minister to have the final say in all matters relating to the State Ministry of Culture. Thus, hearsay was spared that Xu Huaizhong [1776 2037 0022], a well-known writer in the army, would take up the post of minister of culture (he is now deputy director of the Cultural Department of the General Political Department of the CPC Central Military Commission the film "Heartless Lover" starring the actress Liu Xiaoqing, is a stage version of his novel). But it was soon said that Xu flatly refused the post. Since then there has been no news about the new appointment whatsoever.

In the second half of March this year, it was said in Beijing that the Organization department of the CPC Central Committee decided to ask Wang Meng (vice chairman of the Chinese Writers' Association and secretary of its secretariat) to take up the post of minister of culture. He first politely refused but failed, so he had to assume office on 3 april. With the help of three vice ministers, Gao Zhanxiang, Liu Deyou, and another, Wang Meng is now in charge of the Ministry of Culture.

The outcome is a foregone conclusion. The third vice minister is described as "very young" and is said to be a son of the late General Xu Haidong, who worked as general secretary of the State Publishing Bureau but now works as head of the Ministry of Culture Personnel Department. Actually, he has already taken part in the leadership work of the "ministry's leading party group." At the same time, the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department headed by Zhu Houze officially announced that poet He Jingzhi remains in office as deputy head and takes charge of the nation's literary and artistic work. It seems that there will be no drastic personnel changes in the next 2 or 3 years in the cultural, art, press, and publishing circles.

Two Arguments on the New Leading Bodies of the Ministry of Culture and the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department

Informed sources said that Wang Meng really did not want to be appointed minister of culture for fear that as long as he occupied this highest but thankless post, his "enlightened image" as a writer would be marred for the sake of "party spirit." However, he had no choice but to "serve the needs of the party organization" under the pressure of repeated persuasion by senior officials. There is good reason for the statement widely rumored outside China that "from now on, China has one more bureaucrat in charge of the cultural activities but has lost an outstanding writer." Wang Meng has been described as "a cultural official of the CPC" in Europe and the United States for a long time. However, in any case, he is a writer who was once labeled as a "rightist" and exiled to Xinjiang for more than 20 years. Probably, this "laurel" is much more beautiful and important than the minister's throne to him.

Since the leading bodies of the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department and the Ministry of Culture were reorganized, there have been two arguments on the new leading bodies. One argument holds that Zhou Houze's prestige is not high because he assumed power not long ago and must become familiarized with his profession. Wang Meng, a writer with the title of CPC Central Committee membership, of course dares not pay less attention to the "four basic principles," but he also highly treasures his background as a "rightist" writer.

For this reason, neither is likely to adopt a "leftist" pose in handling problems relating to culture and literature and art. The two new leading bodies will most likely take on a moderate look and will be patient in launching any "repression" or "cricicism." The other argument, which is entirely different from the first, holds that the CPC senior officials in charge of social ideology probably chose Zhu Houze, whose ability and qualifications are mediocre and who does no enjoy high prestige, to act as head of the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department because he is easy to control. Among senior policymakers, there is no lack of such people who still take the failure of "eliminating pollution" to heart, so it is hard to say that they will not stage a comeback in the future and they will most likely use Wang Meng's good reputation to "strengthen political and ideological work."

However, some people pointed out that not long after he was rehabilitated upon the smashing of the "gang of four," Minister Wang indeed wrote some good books lashing the "anti-rightist campaign" and the "Cultural Revolution," and made a breakthrough in ideological content. But in his work "Bolshevik Salute" (an autobiographic novel of Wang Meng), he proved his loyalty to Zhongnanhai. (It is by no means the loyalty as described in the novel "The Second Loyality"). Not long after the publication of the book, he was elected candidate member of the CPC Central Committee. Since then, noticeable changes have occurred in Wang Meng's works.

In particular, he has pulled in his horns and "refrained from going beyond the limits" in ideological content, but he has made breakthroughs in writing technique and form of expression and spared no effort to make use of technique of expression and writing displayed in literary and artistic works of Western countries. For this reason, is it possible that cultural work and work in the literay and artistic fields, under the leadership of Wang Meng, will follow the style of his works, namely, to remain orthodox in content (or even more conservative) but open and creative in form?

The Central Advisory Commission Handles "Difficult and Complicated Cases"

However, this reporter has heard a piece of very interesting good news in Beijing, that under the leadership of the "Central Advisory Commission," its general secretary Rong Gaotang has set up "a group that is specially aimed at handling difficult and complicated cases." This is how it happened: When the propaganda media of the CPC and the Central Film Art Bureau (it was not then incorporated into the Ministry of Radio and Television) found that some top leaders admired the film "An Enchanting Band," they immediately decided to give it a boost, but finally things went contrary to their wishes. The failure also gave these top leaders much food for thought.

This was why they decided to entrust Rong Gaotang, who is believed to have built good relations with literary and artistic circles long ago, to set up a "group that specially handles difficult and complicated cases". (It is not known whether this is an official title). The group immediately rehabilitated two new films -- "The Heipao Incident" and "Heartless Lover" -- which had been shelved. It also unfroze the two films and gave permission to release them at home and abroad. Of course, it is unavoidable that some minor amendments were made to the two films before they were shown publicly. Rong Gaotang won in the very first battle.

This has also kindled a gleam of hope in the hearts of writers and artists. Some people describe "difficult and complicatec cases" as ideological deadlocks. It is really not easy for the group headed by Rong Gaotang to produce a cushioning effect and to work as a "peacemaker" in ironing out shart differences of views. It is not strange at all that people place great hopes on General Secretary Rong because he is experienced, knowledgeable, quick thinking, and one of the policymakers for the amazing "pingpong diplomacy." It is hoped that the group will be able to "cure" more knotty problems, not only those relating to films and television.

However, some people are pessimistic regarding this group. They say that it is under the "Central Advisory Commission" and the most it can do is only "grind out sime advice." If authorities do not empower him, does Rong Gaotang dare to willfully handle any "difficult and complicated cases"? In addition, differences in the ideological sphere are now claimed to be very grave. For example, there has been a heated dispute over the "grand mixed performance" (a hodgepodge-like performance which includes both traditional opera and popular songs, and both recitation and ballad singing and serious artistic songs, and both traditional Beijing opera and "model revolutionary theoretical productions," which were very popular during the "Cultural Revolution") and over the programs prepared by the two televison stations for the lunar new year. Some big shots point out: at the time of mistakenly launching the "Cultural Revolution" for 20 years and at the time of terminating the "Cultural Revolution" for 10 years, it is absolutely intolerable to perform "model revolutionary theoretical productions." This means nothing but "turning back" and "retrogression."

However, some people did not agree with the view, arguing that "Red Red Lantern," Shajiabang," and "Taking Tiger Mountain by Strategy" are good literary and artistic works which have been highly finished and loved by the people. The beautiful music for these operas is unforgettable. These operas themselves have no problems, it is only because Jiang Qing usurped the creation resuls of these operas that problems existed.

Regardless of being pessimistic or optimistic, it is devoutly hoped that the group headed by General Security Rong will write more prescriptions and cure more chronic and stubborn diseases.

JI PENGFEI WELCOMES 'DIFFERENT VIEWS' ON HONG KONG

HK160530 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 16 May 86 p 16

[Text] Since the concept of "one country, two systems" is new, it is necessary for people to pool their wisdom to correctly put it into practice. Although different views will arise kin the drafting of the Basic Law, they only reflect different perspectives and China welcomes different views in discussions, according to the director of the Hong Kong and Maca Affairs Office, Mr Ji Pengfei. Mr Ji was speaking to a 22-member delegation of the Chinese Manufacturers' Association [CMA] during a recent 15-day visit to China. A CMA press release yesterday said Mr Ji told the delegation China and Hong Kong shared a common goal -- to maintain stability and prosperity in Hong Kong -- and with this in mind, people should feel free to offer their opinions.

On the canvassing of views on the Basic Law, CMA's vice-president, Mr Leung Nai-wing, told Mr Ji Hong Kong industrialists were cautious in expressing their views publicly to avoid controversy on certain issues. Mr Leung suggested the balance of interests between employers and employees should be emphasized in the drafting of the Basic Law and the legislative review on labour laws should not hamper the industrial development of Hong Kong. On external trade, Mr Ji said Hong Kong would remain a centre of free international trade with its products catering mainly for international markets rather than China.

SATELLITE LAUNCHING SERVICE ATTRACTS INQUIRIES

[By staff reporter Xu Yuanchao]

[Text] The country's satellite launching service is attracting numerous inquiries from overseas as American officials began to discuss insurance coverage from a U.S. satellite to be launched by a Long March carrier rocket next year.

Uker, vice-general manager and senior engineer of the Great Wall Industry Corporation under the Astronautics Ministry, told CHINA DAILY yesterday that China's satellite-launching technology using Long March carrier rockets had proved itself. But, he said China was not willing to co-operate with foreign countries on military projects.

The Great Wall Corporation signed a memorandum with Teresat Inc of the U.S. last month to launch a communications satellite. Uker said China expected to sign the contract with the Texas-based company before September, and launch the satellite in October next year. He said that Chinese experts were discussing the satellite's insurance with U.S. officials. "China will not undertake the whole insurance of the American satellite unless the U.S. manufacturer lets us know the entire procedure for manufacturing the satellite. But the U.S. Government has not yet expressed its willingness to let us know the technology," he said.

The American satellite will be carried by a Long March-3 rocket to a certain height in outer space and then it will be released into geostationary orbit.

Chinese experts suggested that a combined insurance policy be provided by both Chinese and American insurance companies. Uker said: "China can undertake insurance of the launch. Once the satellite is positioned in its orbit it could be insured by American companies." The U.S. satellite manufacturer was persuading its customers to discuss the idea with American insurance companies, the official said.

Uker said since 1970, China has launched 18 satellites using the Long March carrier rockets, with only one total failure. He said that his company was contacting Western Union of the U.S. to sign a second memorandum and another satellite was expected to be launched in December next year or some time 1988.

In the last few months, he said, nearly 10 countries including some in Western Europe has expressed interest in using the Chinese rockets for launching satellites. A delegation from a French company are in Beijing at the moment discussing the possibility of using the Long March rocket to launch a French satellite.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON YAO YILIN'S ACTIVITIES IN U.S.

Meets Bush, Baker

OW170140 Beijing XINHUA in English 0127 GMT 17 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 16 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Vice President George Bush today met with visiting Chinese Vice Premier Yao Yilin at his residence and gave a luncheon later in Yao's honor. During the meeting and at the luncheon, they exchanged views on a number of international and bilateral issues.

Yao came to the U.S. for an official visit at the invitation of Bush.

Earlier, in the morning, the Chinese vice premier met with James Baker, U.S. treasury secretary, who came back a few days ago from a visit in China where he co-chaired with Chinese Finance Minister Wang Bingqian the sixth meeting of the China-U.S. Joint Economic Commission.

Yao also met today with A.W. Clausen, president of the World Bank, in the Madison Hotel where Yao lodges. The Chinese vice premier expressed his thanks and appreciation to the role played by Clausen in promoting cooperation between the World Bank and China.

Trade Commission Session Ends

OW170222 Beijing XINHUA in English 0200 GMT 17 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 16 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice-Premier Yao Yilin and U.S. Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldrige described the fourth session of the China-U.S. Joint Commission on Commerce and Trade which closed here this afternoon as "constructive" and "fruitful."

Yao Yilin and Baldrige were speaking at the closing session of the China-U.S. Joint Commission.

The current session, Yao Yilin said, "has enabled us to have a deeper understanding of the present level, potential and prospects of development of our bilateral economic and trade relations as well as the outstanding problems yet to be solved through our further efforts."

He noted that the latent potential in Sino-U.S. economic and trade cooperation has been gradually tapped. So long as both sides, in the interest of the long-term cooperation, act according to the principles embodied in the agreements concluded, reasonable solutions can be found to all difficulties and problems through friendly and sincere consultations.

The Chinese vice-premier stressed China appreciates the position of the U.S. Administration in opposing trade protectionism. He expressed the belief that as long as the two sides work hard to open up new vistas for cooperation in keeping with the principle of equality and mutual benefit and overcome difficulties, the prospect of having a prolonged, stable, healthy and all-round development of the Sino-U.S. economic relations and trade will certainly come around.

Baldrige said, the United States values its friendship and cooperation with China, and is fully prepared to assist China's efforts to modernize the economy and raise the living standards of the Chinese people. He noted, "we are pleased to know that your Seventh Five-Year Plan reaffirms China's commitment to an open economic policy."

He said he firmly believed that there exists a tremendous potential for growth in U.S.-China trade and investment relations. "Together, we can bring our trade and investment to substantially higher levels," he added.

"Our long-term goals should guide us to new initiatives, which will resolve problems, reduce commercial barriers, and lead to an open and equitable system of trade between our countries," the U.S. commerce secretary concluded.

Immediately following the closing session, a ceremony was held at which four documents were signed. Chinese Ambassador to the U.S. Han Xu and U.S. Commerce Secretary Baldrige signed a protocol on China-U.S. cooperation in the field of telecommunications. Under the China-U.S. accord on industrial and technological cooperation, the two sides signed a work program for industrial and technological cooperation in the machine building industry. In addition, the two sides also signed two agreements on U.S. provision of funds for two feasibility study projects in China involving the treatment of toxic waste and conversion from oil to coal for boilers of power stations.

Urges Support for Reunification

OW180720 Beijing XINHUA in English 0635 GMT 18 May 86

[Text] New York, May 17 (XINHUA) -- Peaceful unification of China accords with the desire of the people on both sides of the Taiwan Strait and the "one country, two systems" policy constitutes the best solution to the Taiwan issue, visiting Chinese Vice-Premier Yao Yilin said here today.

Speaking at a reception given in his honor by Ruan Keshan, China's acting consul-general in New York, the vice premier called on the Chinese residents in the United States and Chinese-Americans present at the occasion to make joint efforts to help unify China peacefully.

On behalf of the State Council, he thanked the Overseas Chinese and Chinese-Americans organizations in the New York area for their contribution to the promotion of Sino-U.S. relations.

The Chinese vice premier also told the guests that the life of the Chinese people has been steadily improving with the development of the economy, and that China's Seventh Five-Year-Plan period (1986-1990) is vital to its all-around economic reforms. China will continue to vigorously develop its economy and persist in its policy of opening to the outside world, he added.

Among those attending the reception were Han Xu, China's ambassador to the United States, and Liang Yufan, deputy representative of China's permanent mission to the United Nations.

Before leaving Washington for New York this morning, Yao was seen off by U.S. Under Secretary of State Michael Armacost at Hotel Madison, where Yao was staying. Yao will pay a three-day visit to New York.

PLA CHIEF OF STAFF CONCLUDES U.S. VISIT

Meets U.S. Commander in Hawaii

OW170727 Beijing XINHUA in English 0702 GMT 17 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 16 (XINHUA) -- Yang Dezhi, visiting chief of General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army, today met with Commander in Chief of the U.S. Pacific Command Admiral Ronald Hays at Camp H.M. Smith, Hawaii, and was briefed on the current situation in the Pacific area.

Earlier today, Yang and his party flew aboard a U.S. Army helicopter to Schofield barracks for a visit to the U.S. 25th Infantry Division there.

Yang and his party arrived Thursday evening at the Hickam Air Force Base, Hawaii, where they are scheduled to stay for three days. Hawaii is the last stop of Yang's trip to this country.

They also toured the national training center in Fort Irwin, California and watched live shot practice there Thursday.

Departs for Home

OW190646 Beijing XINHUA in English 0610 GMT 19 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 18 (XINHUA) -- Yang Dezhi, chief of the General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army (PLA), today left Hawaii, the last stop of his 16-day trip to the United States, for home.

According to a report from Honolulu, Yang, accompanied by Vice Admiral Huntington Hardisty, deputy commander in chief and chief of staff of the U.S. Pacific Fleet, visited the Arizona memorial and a U.S. Navy warship on the island Saturday. The Chinese guests toured the Polynesian cultural center where they were entertained with a movie show.

Yang visited the United States at the invitation of Admiral William Crowe, chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff. His trip was actually in reciprocation of a visit to China by General John Vessey, former chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff, last year. He was accompanied by his wife Shen Gejun and Deputy Chief of the General Staff Han Huaizhi.

[Text] Beijing, May 16 (XINHUA) -- State Councillor Fang Yi met a delegation of the American National Academy of Sciences led by Frank Press, president of the academy, here today.

The 12-member delegation arrived here May 14 for a high-level meeting with the Chinese Academy of Sciences. Subjects discussed at the meeting include interrelationship among natural laboratories, universities and industries and their role in national economy.

After the meeting, the state councillor attended a banquet given by Lu Jiaxi, president of the Chinese Academy of Sciences in honor of the guests.

ARKHIPOV IN IZVESTIYA ON IMPROVING TIES

OW151337 Beijing in Russian to the USSR 1800 GMT 14 May 86

["China Through the Eyes of Foreigners" program]

[Text] Ivan Arkhipov, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, visited China from 15 to 21 March at the head of a Soviet delegation to the first meeting of the Sino-Soviet Commission of Economic, Trade, and Scientific and Technical Cooperation. After the meeting, he visited the southern towns of Wuxi and Nanjing. Back in the fifties, Ivan Arkhipov worked in China for a long period; he visited China again in December 1984.

Recently, in an interview with IZVESTIYA, he dwelled on his impressions of China and noted: My impressions are vivid. China is in the process of energetic activity. There is industrial construction, and the construction tempo in some regions is high.

Arkhipov told IZVESTIYA: I worked for a long time in China during the fifties; therefore, my visit to China was twice as interesting. On the outskirts of Beijing, the delegation visited a metallurgical combine. This enterprise is economically independent. Owing to high profits, the combine is reconstructing and broadening its shops and solving social problems without state budget financing. We visited a reconstructed sintering shop. The reconstruction was done at a high technical level. We also visited a rolling mill which was built in the fifties and fitted with Soviet equipment. The head of the mill told us that the equipment works well and is reliable. Many years ago, the mill exceeded its planned capacity. The quality of the products is consistent with high technical expectations.

Beside visiting enterprises near Beijing, the delegation also visited the large industrial centers of Nanjing and Wuxi and visited two subsidiary enterprises [words indistinct].

Arkhipov further told IZVESTIYA: In Beijing, Nanjing, and Wuxi, we met Chinese specialists who received their education in the Soviet Union and who worked with Soviet specialists in the fifties. We spoke to them in Russian. I would like to say that after meeting members of the Chinese delegation, workers at enterprises, and leading Chinese activists, it is possible to reach the conclusion that they are well informed about the work of the 27th CPSU Congress and its decisions. They showed great interest in the documents of the congress and the social and economic programs of the Soviet Union. The head of the Chinese Government announced that the course of accelerating economic and social development and the attainment of econmic reforms in the Soviet Union is of great interest.

Arkhipov said that the delegation was certain that the progress in trade, economic, science, and technology cooperation will help improve relations in other spheres as well. This is consistent with the long-standing and basic interests of the peoples of the Soviet Union and China.

AUSTRALIA'S HAWKE VIEWS PRC, JAPAN, ANZUS POLICY

OW162006 Beijing XINHUA in English 1509 GMT 16 May 86

[Text] Tokyo, May 16 (XINHUA) -- Australian Prime Minister Bob Hawke said Friday that his country will maintain defense relations with the United States even if Washington decides to cut its military ties with New Zealand. Speaking at the Japan National Press Club in Tokyo, Hawke said defense relations between Australia and the United States will remain unchanged despite New Zealand's anti-nuclear policy. Hawke described as "logical" the current U.S. policy toward New Zealand. Australia will maintain the ANZUS treaty even if New Zealand abrogates it, he said, adding, however, that Canberra will alalso maintain its defense with Wellington. New Zealand's ban on port calls for U.S. nuclear-armed or nuclear-powered ships has strained relations between those two nations and raised questions about the future of ANZUS, the three-way defense pact between Australia, New Zealand and the United States.

The prime minister, who arrived here Wednesday for a five-day visit, has also called on Japan to import more beef from Australia. Australia hopes that Japan will soon enter into talks on imports of Australian beef before the present bilateral agreement on the beef import quota expires in 1988, he said.

On relations with China--where Hawke heads next--the prime minister said his government supports the open-door policies that China has adopted. These policies, he said are not only in the interests of Australia, but also of great importance to the region and the world. Hawke said that Australia's increased trade with China will in no way affect its trade with Japan. To Canberra, relations between Australia and China and between Australia and Japan are equally important, he added.

The prime minister also criticized the growing Soviet presence in the South Pacific. Australia does not welcome these developments, he said, adding he hopes that fishery agreements can be reached between island countries in the region to limit the activities of the Soviet fishing fleet.

Hawke is scheduled to leave for China on Sunday to continue his three-nation Asian trip that will also take him to the Philippines.

AUSTRALIA'S HAWKE BEGINS WEEK-LONG VISIT TO PRC

Arrives in Beijing 18 May

OW180856 Beijing XINHUA in English 0842 GMT 18 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 18 (XINHUA) -- Australian Prime Minister Robert Hawke arrived here by special plane this afternoon for a six-day official visit to China as guest of Chinese Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang. This is his second visit to China after he became Australian prime minister in 1983. During the visit he will confer with Chinese leaders on international issues of common interest and the growth of bilateral relations, economic relations and trade in particular.

Accompanying the prime minister on the visit are Mrs. Hawke and their daughter, as well as more than 20 high-ranking officials including Mike Codd, secretary general of the department of the prime minister and cabinet.

Hawke and his party were greeted at the airport by He Kang, chairman of the Chinese Government Reception Committee and minister of agriculture, animal husbandry and fisheries, Zhu Qizhen, vice minister of foreign affairs and Australian Ambassador to China Ross Garnaut.

Holds Talks With Zhao Ziyang

OW190821 Beijing XINHUA in English 0737 GMT 19 May 86

[Text] Beijing May 19 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and visiting Australian Prime Minister Robert Hawke held talks in the Great Hall of the People here today. Sources attending the talks said that they covered international affairs, disarmament, Kampuchea and Korea, and that both men shared similar views on these issues. Zhao noted that no essential changes had occurred in the recent international situation.

The atmosphere for some time following last year's Soviet-United States summit in Geneva had been somewhat relaxed. But the fundamental positions of the two sies remained the same. He believed the posture of both confrontation and dialog would continue.

On disarmament, Zhao said that both the Soviet Union and the United States had proposed cutting half of their nuclear arsenals, but their differences remained very wide.

On the Kampuchean issue, Zhao said that the eight-point proposal put forward by Democratic Kampuchea was reasonable and realistic, and should serve as the basis for a political settlement. Both premiers believed that following the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea, the country should become an independent, neutral and non-aligned country. Zhao said that if Vietnam withdrew its troops from Kampuchea, this goal could be achieved through the joint efforts of the South-East Asian nations, Australia, China and other countries concerned.

Hawke, after explaining Australia's position on Kampuchea, said Australia found the eight-point proposal, rejected by Vietnam, to contain positive elements. Zhao called for continued pressure from the international community to compel Vietnam to accept the proposal.

With regard to the situation on the Korean peninsula, Zhao said that in recent years, there had been positive changes moving towards the stabilization and relaxation of tension there. But the U.S. and South Korean decision to go ahead with mass military exercises had led to the suspension of dialog between the North and South of Korea. It was now important for the United States to show flexibility and sincerity. "We hope that the United States and South Korea will agree to a tripartite dialog with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea," he said. Hawke said that despite the fact that no major progress had yet been achieved in the dialog, Australia had a certain degree of optimism about it.

He stressed that Australia attached great importance to the disarmament issue, saying that his country wished to discuss the issue more regularly with China. He welcomed China's recent announcement that it had decided to halt nuclear tests in the atmosphere. He also welcomed China's efforts to develop its relations with South Pacific nations, and promised to support China's initiative in this respect.

Zhao repeated China's support for the proposal to make the South Pacific a nuclear-free zone. He stated that in the event of the approval of the three additional protocols to the nuclear-free treaty, China would take positive steps to support this just aspiration of the South Pacific nations.

The two leaders also reviewed with satisfaction the developments in Sino-Australian relations. Zhao said that China hoped to put such relations on a long-term stable basis, and Hawke said economic co-operation between the two countries in various fields was progressing well. They discussed specific issues, such as trade and bilateral co-opertion on iron and steel and technology.

Earlier today, Zhao presided over a formal ceremony to welcome the Australian Prime Minister in the Plaza East of the Great Hall of the People. He then met Hawke, Mrs. Hazel Hawke, their daughter, Rosslyn Dillon, and members of the accompanying Australian delegation in the Great Hall of the People before the talks began.

Attending the ceremony and the meeting were State Councillor Ji Pengfei, his wife, Xu Hanbing, and Agriculture Minister He Kang, who is chairman of the reception committee. [Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin at 0300 GMT on 19 May carries a similar report with the following additional information: "Kang Keqing, vice chairman of the CPPCC National Committee, and chairman of the All-China Women's Federation had a meeting at the Great Hall of the People this morning with Mrs Hazel Hawke, wife of Prime Minister Hawke, and their daughter Rosslyn Dillon. They had coridal and friendly conversation."]

[Excerpt] Beijing, May 19 (AFP) -- Chinese President Li Xiannian has been hospitalized "with a cold" and is therefore unable to receive a visiting head of government as scheduled, a Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman said Monday. "He has a cold and is in the hospital, we're not very clear about the details," the spokesman said.

Mr Li was scheduled to receive Australian Prime Minister Bob Hawke on Monday afternoon, but a Chinese official accompanying the delegation said Monday morning that the meeting had been cancelled because Mr Li was in the hospital with a cold.

Meets With Zhao

HK190532 Hong Kong AFP in English 0522 GMT 19 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 19 (AFP) -- Australian Prime Minister Bob Hawke Monday told one of the main architects of China's economic reforms about a near-legendary Australian who had radical ideas on the redistribution of income, highwayman Ned Kelly.

The bushranger, who led a gang of highwaymen in the state of Victoria late last century, figured in exchanges Mr Hawke had with Chinese Primer Zhao Ziyang in the Great Hall of the People.

Mr Hawke, who arrived Sunday from Japan, was welcomed by Mr Zhao in a 19-gun salute ceremony in front of [the] hall where the two reviewed an honour guard and a group of children who sang, danced and waved silk ribbons.

Sitting down to formal talks, Mr Zhao observed that "about 40 percent" of the Australians in Mr Hawke's delegation wore beards and compared them with Liang Ruchang, a famous general of China's eastern Han Dynasty more than 2,000 years ago.

Mr Hawke said Australians also had a famous bearded folk hero, Ned Kelly.

"He believed in the fundamental redistribution of income," said Mr Hawke. "He adopted very direct means."

Ned Kelly is often hailed as a working-class victim of the ruling class, who fought for justice. He was hanged for the murder of two policmen.

Mr Zhao noted that Karl Marx and Frederick Engels also had been bearded "so many people may think that those with beards are Marxists."

Plan for Mr Hawke to meet with Chinese President Li Xinnian in the afternoon were cancelled in the morning because Mr Li was in hospital with a cold, a Chinese offical said.

The Australian leader was to meet Chinese Vice Prêmier Wan Li on the tennis courts in the late afternoon in a re-match of a game played between the two during Mr Hawke's first visit here in 1984.

Mr. Hawke was to meet Tuesday with top Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping before travelling to the provinces with stop in southwestern Chengdu where he is to meet Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang, and Nanjing, east China, where he will meet Hu Qili, a fast-rising member of China's so--called third tier leadership.

[Excerpts] Gu Xiulian, governor of Jiangsu, and Cain, premier of the state of Victoria, Australia, held talks at Jinling Hotel in Nanjing this morning. Both Governor Gu and Premier Cain expressed satisfaction with the growing cooperation between Jiangsu and Victoria in the past 6 years since the establishment of friendship ties between the province and the state. Owing to the support and kind concern of the governments of the two countries and the province and the state and the solid work done by both sides, gratifying achievements have been made in personnel exchange, technical cooperation, bilateral trade, and holding of exhibitions in each other's countires.

After the talks, officials of departments concerned from the two sides discussed the expansion of personnel exchange. In the afternoon, Premier Cain, his wife, and their party visited the Nanjing Physical Culture College in the company of Governor Gu Xiulian. They were given a warm welcome by Zhou Weigao, chairman of the provincial Physical Culture and Sports Commission, and the faculty and students of the college.

AUSTRALIA ROUNDS OFF FIRST 'CHINA WEEK'

OW181404 Beijing XINHUA in English 1343 GMT 18 May 86

[Text] Sydney, May 18 (XINHUA) -- The first "China Week" in Australia, preluded by the establishment of friendship-city relations between China's southern metropolis of Guangzhou and Sydney on May 12, was rounded off here today.

During the past week, this largest industrial and financial center of Australia has seen a rich variety of Chinese cultural and artistic programs, including four acrobatic and martial art shows, a painting and woodcut exhibition, a photo exhibition, a film festival, a trade fair and a trade seminar.

The programs were highly appreciated by local audiences, particularly the Overseas Chinese. Some said that the exhibited photos, which depicted the majesty of the Chinese capital and the beautiful landscapes and daily life of China, had inspired their desire to visit China. The 6,000-seat entertainment center was packed to capacity at every show of the acrobatics and martial art.

A 10-man friendship delegation of Guangdong Province, of which Guangzhou is the capital, led by Vice-Governor Yang Deyuan attended the week-long activities.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON WU XUEQIAN'S EUROPEAN VISIT

Visits Factories in Sweden

OW161130 Beijing XINHUA in English 1113 GMT 16 May 86

[Text] Stockholm, May 15 (XINHUA) -- Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian today watched lantern slides taken by Hasselblad equipment of an American moon landing when he toured a plant of this famous Swedish camera corporation in Goteborg (Gothenburg), Sweden's second largest city on the western coast. Wu paid a one-day visit to Goteborg, capital of Bohus County, where he was warmly received by County Governor Ake Norling, Major Soren Mannheimer and city council chairman Jorgen Linder. The Hasselblad management used 15 projectors at the same time to show Wu how wonderful their products can work in photography.

Another enterprise Wu toured in the city was the well-known Volvo car maker, where the Chinese foreign minister saw the assembling of vehicles. Major Soren Mannheimer hosted a lunch part for Wu, at which he acquainted the guest with the characteristics of the city's industry and the cooperative projects his city plans to undertake with Shanghai. The Chinese foreign minister expressed appreciation of the pioneering role which Goteborg had played in fostering trade and cultural ties between Sweden and China. The Chinese foreign minister left Goteborg for Stockholm in the evening after attending a reception given in his honor by Bohus Governor and Mrs Norling.

Visits Palme's Tomb

[Text] Stockholm, May 16 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian laid a wreath this morning at the tomb of the late Swedish Prime Minister Olof Palme in Stockholm's Adolf Fredrik church cemetary. Wu, joined by Lars Bergquist, Swedish Ambassador to China, and Chinese Ambassador Wu Jiagan, stood in silent tribute to Palme who devoted his life to world peace. Palme was assassinated during the night of February 28 by an unidentified gunman who is still at large.

Swedish King, Speaker Receive Wu

OW161436 Beijing XINHUA in English 1427 GMT 16 May 86

[Text] Stockholm, May 16 (XINHUA) -- Swedish King Carl XVI Gustaf received Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian here today. Wu, also a state councillor, conveyed the regards of Chinese President Li Xiannian and Premier Zhao Ziyang to the king, who also asked his guest to give his best wishes to the two Chinese leaders.

In his talks with Ingemund Bengtsson, Swedish Parliament speaker, the Chinese minister passed on to Bengtsson the regards of Peng Zhen, chairman of the Standing Committee of the Chinese National People's Congress. Bengtsson gave his best wishes to his Chinese counterpart through Wu. Bengtsson and Wu briefed each other on the organs, functions and work of both the Swedish Parliament and the Chinese National People's Congress. Bengtsson invited a Chinese National People's Congress delegation to visit Sweden at a convenient time.

Meets Swedish Industrialists

OW161552 Beijing XINHUA in English 1521 GMT 16 May 86

[Text] Stockholm, May 16 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian, during a meeting with Swedish industrialists today, expressed the hope for greater economic cooperation with countries in western and northern Europe. All countries and industrial enterprises in the region, regardless of size, will have a chance to assert themselves in economic cooperation with China, Wu added. The Chinese foreign minister is here for a four-day visit on the second leg of a nine-country European tour.

Wu opened the forum attended by some 100 industrialists with an account of China's ongoing economic reforms. He said China's reforms -- launched at the start of the 1980's -- have proven to be a good step. He added that last year, China fulfilled ahead of schedule the production targets set in its Sixth Five-Year Plan. The reforms have boosted economic development which, in turn, has cleared the way for more reforms, he said. China is invigorating its economy and opening to the outside world, Wu said, and added that in recent years China has been striving to expand its foreign trade by pursuing a preferential policy for investment and the introduction of new technologies, equipment and personnel. All this is aimed at creating a favorable climate for foreign investments and ensuring rational returns for foreign investors, Wu said.

After speaking about economic relations with Sweden and other west and north European countries, Wu expressed the hope for greater cooperation and promised a greater share for these countries in China's external trade. Lennert Petri, [name as received] president of the Sweden-China Friendship Association, reviewed trade between the two countries and expressed pleasure at China's economic growth. He indicated his country's readiness to export expertise and modern machines to help with China's industrial management, and welcomed more joint ventures with China.

Gives Press Interviews

OW170800 Beijing XINHUA in English 0734 GMT 17 May 86

[Text] Stockholm, May 16 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian told the press here today that the Chinese Government hopes the Soviet Union cease to dodge removing the three obstacles to better Sino-Soviet relations. Wu, on the third day of his first and six-day visit to Sweden, granted interviews to Swedish television, newspaper and wire service reporters in the Haga Palace where he lives. Sino-Soviet relations was one of the questions of interest they shared in common. Wu said thus far there has been no progress in overcoming the three barriers -- the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan, the Soviet-aided Vietnamese occupation of Kampuchea and the presence of massive Soviet troops along China's borders -- as the Soviet Union has all along refused to address the issue. "We hope the Soviet Union change this attitude so that Sino-Soviet relations will improve substantively," he said.

Answering questions about the Afghanistan issue, Wu said that China always maintains that the Soviet Union should pull out its troops in Afghanistan. As for what type of government should be established there following the Soviet military withdrawal, it is a matter of internal affairs that should be treated by the Afghan people themselves, Wu declared.

On the Kampuchean issue, the Chinese foreign minister expressed support for the eight-point proposal put forward recently by the three resistance forces. China believes the proposal to be a reasonable one, Wu said. He added that the tensions on the border between China and Vietnam have resulted from Hanoi's military provocations.

In his replies to reporters interested in China's economic reforms, Wu said these reforms are not the decision of Deng Xiaoping alone, but one made collectively and one enjoying the support of the overwhelming majority of the people. The reforms have proved to be a great success in the countryside where they have been underway for a number of years. Now the cities have become the main scene for such reforms, which will be fundamentally completed in five years. Wu told the press that the special economic zones in China give foreign investors preferential treatment and make China open wider to the outside world, but the public sector remains the backbone of the economy there.

When asked about China's position on terrorism, Wu said China is always opposed to terrorism of all descriptions and holds that to eliminate terrorism one must remove its root cause. The Middle East issue should be solved before the tensions there can be relaxed, he added. The large scale U.S. air raid on Tripoli, he said, violated Libya's sovereignty. Actions as such to counter terrorism will only result in a vicious circle.

Wu told Swedish reporters that China seeks to solve the Taiwan issue peacefully under the formula of "two social systems in one nation", whereby Taiwan can retain its troops and ruling party. As the first step towards a peaceful reunification of the fatherland, the government has proposed communication between the mainland and Taiwan in three ways, in commerce, post and travel, Wu said. He expressed the regret that the Kuomintang on Taiwan has kept people in the dark, and the belief that China will surely be reunified in peace some day.

Holds Reception, Meets Press

OW180805 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1310 GMT 17 May 86

[Excerpt] Stockholm, 16 May (XINHUA) -- Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian held a return reception at the Chinese Embassy here this evening to thank the Swedish Government for the lavish hospitality accorded him during his current visit. Nearly 100 government functionaries -- including Minister of Foreign Affairs Sten Anderson, Minister of Education Lennart Bodstrom, and Minister of Trade Mats Hellstrom -- and people of various circles in Sweden attended the reception. Both hosts and guests toasted the further development of Sino-Swedish relations. This afternoon Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson and Foreign Minister Anderson separately met with Wu Xueqian. The two foreign ministers also held talks and signed an agreement on avoiding double taxation and preventing tax evasion between the governments of the People's Republic of China and the Kingdom of Sweden.

This afternoon, in answering a question put by a reporter, Wu Xueqian said that when he met with Prime Minister Carlsson, both sides expressed satisfaction with the development of relations between the two countries since the establishment of diplomatic relations and held that there are bright prospects for economic and trade cooperation between China and Sweden in the future. Discussing his talks with Foreign Minister Anderson, Wu Xueqian said that they exchanged views on matters of common concern, including on the international situation, China's foreign policy, the current world disarmament issue, and regional conflicts. Both sides held identical or similar views on many issues.

In addition, Wu Xueqian talked about China's stand on the question of nuclear energy. He said that, learning a lesson from the Chernobyl nuclear power station accident, China has taken steps to strengthen safety measures for its first batch of nuclear power stations.

Departs Sweden for Norway

[Text] Stockholm, May 18 (XINHUA) -- Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian left here for Norway today after a four-day visit to Sweden. During his stay here, Wu had separate meetings with King Carl XVI Gustaf, Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson, Foreign Minister Sten Andersson, and Swedish Parliamentary leaders. Wu and Andersson signed an agreement on the avoidance of dual taxation and the prevention of tax evasion on behalf of their respective governments. The Chinese foreign minister, who arrived here Wednesday on the second leg of a nine-nation European tour, visited Uppsala Agricultural University and the University of Uppsala yesterday. He also visited the home of the great Swedish botanist Carl Von Linne.

Begins 3-Day Visit to Norway

[Text] Bergen, Norway, May 18 (XINHUA) — Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian arrived in Norway's second biggest city of Bergen today to begin a three-day visit to this Nordic country, the third stop of Wu's nine-nation European tour. He was greeted at the airport by Norwegian Oil and Energy Minister Arne Oien and Mayor of Bergen Henrik Lisaeth as well as Chinese Ambassador Zhang Yougkuan. Wu is scheduled to visit the world's largest drilling platform in the North Sea tomorrow. Bergen, the commercial and cultural center in Western Norway, has become a supply base for Norway's booming offshore oil industry. The Chinese foreign minister will leave for Oslo tomorrow where he is to meet with King Olav V and Prime Minister Harlem Brundtland and have talks with Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund.

Interviewed by Norwegian Paper

OW190608 Beijing XINHUA in English 0548 GMT 19 May 86

[Text] Bergen, Norway, May 18 (XINHUA) — Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian told BERGENS TIDENDE, Norway's third largest paper, here today there were no fundamental differences, but common goals, between China and Norway. Wu gave a wide-ranging interview, primarily on Sino-Norwegian relations, to the paper while cruising in the picturesque Bay of Bergen.

Wu Xueqian, who arrived here this afternoon from Sweden on his first visit to Norway, said he hoped his visit would further increase mutual understanding and cooperation between the two countries, although much had already been achieved in this respect. He noted specifically that China and Norway had been actively helping each other as oil producers. As energy was most crucial to China's economic modernization, China, apart from developing its oil industry, would also try to produce more coal and set up more hydro and nuclear power stations, Wu said.

However, the foreign minister stressed, China would learn from the lessons of the Soviet nuclear reactor accident at Chernobyl, which had resulted in great losses to the Soviet Union and caused radioactive contamination of other European countries.

On the resumption of American-Soviet disarmament talks in Geneva, Wu said that China welcomed it as it was better than continuing to have the negotiations suspended and had somewhat eased the tense international atmosphere. But, Wu said, a real lessening of tension would require the two nuclear giants to negotiate seriously and reach some form of agreement on nuclear disarmament not to the detriment of the interests of other nations. Wu went on to say although both sides had advanced not a few proposals, it was unlikely that agreements would be reached in the near future. The Chinese foreign minister expressed the hope that small and medium-sized countries in northern Europe would play their due role in bringing the United States and the Soviet Union into agreement on nuclear disarmament.

Wu Xueqian is in Norway on the third lap of his current tour of seven north and west European countries which has already taken him to Finland and Sweden. After the sightseeing of the Bay of Bergen, Henrik Lisaeth, Mayor of Bergen, gave a banquet in honor of Wu in the evening.

PRC, UK TO INCREASE CULTURAL COOPERATION

OW161901 Beijing XINHUA in English 1846 GMT 16 May 86

[Text] London, May 16 (XINHUA) -- Britain and China have agreed to increase cultural exchanges by scientists, artists and scholars for the next two years. The two countries will specially encourage cooperation between learned societies, universities and other academic institutions under a program signed here today. China and Britain are to reciprocate more art exhibitions and performances during the period.

The April 1986-March 1988 program was signed by Timothy Gee, director of Cultural Section of the British Foreign Office, and Zhang Jinshu, deputy director of the External Cultural Relations Bureau of the Chinese Culture Ministry, who is on a week-long visit to Britain.

"We are very glad that we are able to sign a new program on Chinese-British cultural exchanges," Gee said after the signing ceremony. Zhang said the past few years have been fruitful for Chinese-British cultural exchanges. The visits to China by the BBC Philharmonic Orchestra, the Royal Ballet and the Festival Ballet and the visits to Britian by China's exhibition and performing art groups have helped greatly the development of cultural exchanges between the two countries.

XINJIANG PROTESTERS URGE NUCLEAR ARMS BE REMOVED

OW190822 Tokyo KYODO in English 0814 GMT 19 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 19 KYODO -- A group of residents in Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region has called for an end to nuclear tests and removal of nuclear weapons from the western frontier province, according to informed sources here. The sources said the group, calling itself the "Committee of Uygurs for Nuclear-Free Zone Movement in Xinjiang," has sent an antinuclear declaration to foreign organizations based in the capital. Details of the group are not known.

China has a nuclear test station near Lop Nur, a lake about 600 kilometers southeast of Urumqi, the provincial capital. The base has been reportedly used since the mid-1960s. The group also supported street demonstrations held by Uygur students in Beijing, Shanghai and Urumqi last December seeking a nuclear test ban and improvement of the political status of the province, a vast land of rocks and deserts, which borders the Soviet Union. The action indicated the strength of local residents' complaints about the central government's policy on nuclear arms development and minority groups.

But later reports said the dispute had been settled through talks between authorities in the province and students. In the declaration, the committee also demanded abrogation of an agreement which allows other countries to dump or store radioactive materials in the province. The committee added, however, it has no intention of separating the province from other parts of China as an independent state, according to the sources.

BO YIBO CHAIRS RURAL PARTY RECTIFICATION FORUM

OW180400 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0743 GMT 17 May 86

[Text] Zhengzhou, 17 May (XINHUA) -- In order to strengthen leadership and press on without letup to conduct party rectification successfully from start to finish, the CPC Central Committee has agreed to let the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification convene party rectification work forums to be attended by secretaries of provincial, regional, and municipal party committees in charge of this work. The purpose of such forums is to discuss both how to further strengthen the guidance for rural party rectification, and to study the important problems to be resolved in this regard and grasp the question of consolidating and developing the fruitful results of party rectification in units at and above the county level. In view of the varying local conditions, separate forums will be held for different areas. The forum attended by party committee secretaries from 11 provinces and municipalities in the north was held from 8 to 16 May in Zhengzhou. Bo Yibo, permanent vice chairman of the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification, presided over this northern forum. He talked and held discussions with the secretaries of the provincial and municipal party committees and delivered a speech at the forum. There will be three other forums to be attended by party committee secretaries from the other provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities.

In accordance with the plan made by the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification, full-scale party rectification has begun at district and township levels in all rural areas.

Based on information from Beijing, Hebei, Shanxi, Liaoning, Jilin, Heilongjiang, Shandong, Anhui, Henan, Shaanxi, and Gansu, as revealed at the northern forum, the work of rural party rectification over the past few months has helped implement the policy of promoting and ensuring the progress of reform and economic development, and, in general, met the requirement of "solving problems while maintaining order." The work has developed healthily and the trend is good. The party committee leadership at the provincial, prefectural, and country levels has attached importance to this work, and the measures they have taken are effective. Dynamic education has been conducted to promote party spirit. The broad masses of party members have received an education in the fundamental purpose of the party -- that is, serving the people wholeheartedly -- and have thus raised their ideological awareness. Some cadres with party membership who had made severe mistakes in abusing their power for selfish ends and violating law or discipline have been subjected to investigation and dealt with seriously, resulting in a turn for the better in party style and in the standard of conduct in rural areas. After conducting party rectification, most grass-roots party organizations have improved the party members' democratic activities and reinforced their fighting strength. A few leading bodies at the grass-roots level that had numerous problems have now been consolidated or readjusted, thus purifying the organization. In addition, rural party rectification has given a powerful impetus to building up the party and promoting socialist spiritual civilization in rural areas for the new period and has brought about the ensured the development of rural reform in depth and in breadth. Seeing the new changes resulting from party rectification, the masses have said joyfully that "the party is now what it should be, and it is controlling itself." They have praised the current party rectification as "little said but much done" and as a task that has resolved problems rather thoroughly.

At the forum, the comrades have seriously analyzed the problems existing in rural party rectification. The main problem, they said, is uneven development. In some localities and units, the force of leadership is not as strong as required, and it is not of a high standard. It has failed to set forth strict demands and cannot resolve as many problems as it should, and what it has done is to give vague and general directions for the work of party rectification. In a few localities and units, party rectification has been carried out even in a perfunctory manner.

Comrades from the provinces and municipalities in the north unanimously held that the forum is another important meeting in the course of party rectification, which will certainly give a strong impetus to the in-depth development of party rectification, especially at the village level. After comparing notes on the situation of party rectification work in the countryside, they contended that party rectification at the village level is indeed relatively difficult. However, we can fully achieve the expected goals provided there are correct guiding principles, strong leadership, solid work, and effective policy, measures, and methods. They aired their views fully and conducted a heated discussion on the two topics of the forum. They presented facts and analysis at the forum and offered some very good opinions and suggestions.

On the afternoon of 15 May, Bo Yibo delivered an important long speech by summing up the opinions of forum participants. He pointed out first: We must fully and realistically affirm the achievements of party rectification. The party has made progress in consolidating ideological unity, rectifying the party's work style, strengthening discipline, and purifying the party organization. High-level leading organs which underwent the first stage of party rectification have achieved rather notable progress in straightening out operating guidelines, thoroughly negating the "Great Cultural Revolution," and eliminating "leftist" ideology.

They have further emancipated their minds, become clear about the orientation of reform, and genuinely shifted the focus of work to serving socialist modernization. In implementing party rectification, units at the prefectural and county levels have paid attention to educating party members in party spirit and scored some progress in this regard. They have developed a number of grass-roots organs armed with strong party spirit and designated a great number of party members as models. At the same time, they have also dealt with big, major cases. Party rectification at the district and township levels has been carried out rather steadily, and the situation looks good. Practice has shown that this party rectification is of great significance and the effects of its profound impact must not be underestimated.

On behalf of General Secretary Hu Yaobang and the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification, Bo Yibo extended warm greetings to the leading comrades of party committees at all levels as well as the personnel of party rectification offices, liaison men, inspectors, and publicists who have worked diligently and conscientiously in the forefront of party rectification in the past 2 years or so. He expressed the ardent hope that they will continue to work hard and do not slacken off so as to carry out party rectification successfully from start to finish.

Bo Yibo made some important suggestions with regard to party rectification at rural grass-roots units, the consolidation and enchancement of party rectification results, and exercising more effective leadership over party rectification work. He pointed out: Rural areas must further define the guiding principle for party rectification, uphold the policy of promoting and guaranteeing reform and economic development, and resolutely carry out the party's policy in rural areas. All party rectification tasks must be conducive to rural reforms, to the further development of rural productive forces, to the enlivening of the rural economy, and to the enhancement of peasants, enthusaism for production. Besides a clearly defined guiding princple, the key to implementing this policy is that we must take a very cautious approach in dealing with major problems and in deciding on a policy to solve the problems. The general requirements for party rectification at the village level are to uphold the policy of education and guidance, stress education by positive example, achieve ideological unity, pay attention to enhancing the political consciousness of the vase number of party members, and ensure the promote reforms.

He said: "Solving problems while maintaining order" is a very important experience we gained from this party rectification. The relation between solving problems and maintaining order represents a dialectical unity, with solving problems as the prerequisite. We must carry out rectification steadily under this prerequisite and avoid deviations. If we do not base ourselves on solving problems but exclusively stress maintaining order alone and turn a blind eye to the problems that should and can be solved, party rectification will become a mere formality, and nothing will be accomplished.

He pointed out: The stress in rural party rectification should be placed on solving conspicuous problems existing among the district, township, and village leading cadres with CPC membership, particularly such problems as serious abuse of power in seeking private interests and serious law and discipline violators among them.

On how to consolidate and enhance party rectification results, Bo Yibo pointed out: To consolidate and enhance party rectification results is a deepening and continuation of party rectification and an important phase of linking the past with the future, in which the party members after a period of party rectification will gradually bring the party back to normal in ideology, organization, work style, and discipline.

He said: To consolidate and enhance party rectification results means that the achievements made during party rectification should be truly consolidated and that problems exposed and problems reported by grass-roots units during party rectification should be solved without delay, if they have not yet been solved, thus closely integrating consolidation of party rectification results with solving problems. He said the results of this work hinge to a great extent on how major cases are investigated. He pointed out: To ensure a sound system of democratic life is an important measure to consolidate and enhance party rectification results. In our party life, we should stress the importance of correct ideology and principles and political awareness. Whether or not an organization can arouse the party members' enthusiasm for reform, innovation, and the four modernizations, create a vigorous political situation, and correctly and promptly solve new problems in the course of party rectification is to a great extent decided by whether or not it has a sound system of inner-party democratic life. He said: The consolidation and enhancement of party rectification results must not become a mere formality. The secretaries in charge of party rectification should personally take a hand in the work. The party rectification offices, the groups of improving party style, and the discipline inspection, organization, propaganda, judicial, and public security departments should cooperate with one another.

On how to further strengthen leadership over party rectification, Bo Yibo said: To strengthen party leadership is a key to completing the two aforesaid arduous tasks. To strengthen the leadership calls for three things. First, the principle leading comrades of party committees at all levels should in their minds truly attach importance to party rectification and fully understand the extreme importance of improving the ruling party to accomplishing the party's great tasks during the new period. Second, the leadership must be effectively exercised. Third, we must have concrete measures and solve problems. He called on the leading cadres, particularly those in charge of party rectification, in provincial, prefectural, and county party committees to go deep into the realities of life, analyze typical cases, discover the situation, and give concrete guidance for party rectification. He urged them to integrate organically the efforts to rectify grass-roots party organizations with efforts to consolidate and enhance the party rectification results of leading organs at and above the county level and of enterprises and institutions, make the two kinds of efforts promote each other, and ensure a successful completion of party rectification.

GUANGMING RIBAO ON HUNDRED SCHOOLS OF THOUGHT

HK190408 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 30 Apr 86 p 3

[Article by Su Shuangbi: "Several Questions Concerning the Promoting of the 'Contention of a Hundred Schools of Thought'"]

[Text] Abstract: "Letting a hundred schools of thought contend" is a resolute principle of our party and state for science development. China's academic circles have experienced a bumpy zigzag in implementing the principle in question over the past 3 decades. Generally, academic debates do not have the nature of a class struggle in socialist society. The differences in academic views can only be solved by "letting a hundred schools of thought contend," as well as the method of criticism, counter-criticism and self-criticism. We should not arbitrarily escalate academic problems to political ones, and even more so should we refrain from academic refutation. Only then, will it be possible to create a situation of ease and harmony, in which people boldly conduct more experiments.

"Free discussion should be advocated, and no conclusion should be rashly drawn" concerning academic issues. We must adhere to the principle that all people are equal before the truth. The academic understanding of an expert, an authoritative person, or a leading cadre made public in academic debates is but one of the diversified views; and individually, his view is only one of the "hundred schools of thought," and he should submit to truth whether he is right or wrong concerning the issue in debate. Under the new situation of opening up to the world and invigorating the domestic economy, it is necessary to deal with Western science and culture introduced to China with analysis in a dialectical approach. Western science and culture should not be regarded as synonymous with decadence and negative factors, neither should they be given total and uncritical acceptance. They should be critically accepted in a down-to-earth way, and those rational elements should be actively absorbed in order to enrich China's science and culture. In implementing the principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend," socialist academic workers should work hard, full of confidence in exploring for the truth, develop Marxism, and make socialist science and culture thrive under the new situation. [end abstract]

The Central Committee and Comrade Mao Zedong formally proposed the principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend" first in 1956. The principle has been a resolute one for our party and state to develop, and to make academic activities thrive. "Letting a hundred schools of thought contend" does not have a class nature in itself; and any class may adopt it. The proletariat advocated this principle in order to make socialist science and culture thrive. Determined by the nature of the socialist state, this principle is inevitably guided by Marxism. However, in implementing this principle over the past 3 decades, China's academic circles have experienced heartbreaking lessons. The principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend" has gone through the same bumpy zigzag in its implementation and development with the historical process of China's socialist society. Whenever the principle was well implemented, academic and cultural activities would thrive. However, academic and cultural development could also be affected and injured. That has been the basic situation over the past 3 decades. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the situation has been greatly changed in the implementation of the principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend." However, some traditional practices and conventional concepts still hold sway because the long standing "leftist" influences in academic circles have not been entirely eliminated. The unfolding of the principle does not seem to be a natural and comfortable process. Of late, the relevant leading comrade in the Central Committee has on several occasions proposed the need to implement the principles of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend" in a down-to-earth way, in order to create a situation of ease and harmony in which people will be bold at making experiments. This is necessary for the development of the new situation amidst the waves of reform in China. The theoretical, ideological and academic circles must promptly explore the new problems surfacing in the reform. However, reform is an entirely new and complicated work; it will fail to make healthy progress without correct theoretical explanations, and science will fail to make development without in-depth academic explanations. This requires the academic and theoretical circles to implement the principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend" in a down-to-earth way. Objective factors such as "leftist" influences account for the failure in appropriately implementing the principle in question over the past 3 decades or more, but it has not been made explicit enough in the law, principle and policies of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend" itself, which needs further exploration and explanation.

Here, I should like to make some analysis on some problems that may emerge in implementing the principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend," and I should like to invite the readers' criticism.

1. Academic Contention in Socialist Society Generally Does Not Take on the Nature of Class Struggle

Since the founding of the PRC, the completion of the socialist transformation of the private ownership of production means in particular, class contradictions have tended to relax because of the conclusion of large-scale class struggle, particularly since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the practice of artifically intensifying class contradictions has been gotten rid of, and the intellectuals in socialist society, who support the party and socialism, belong to the proletariat. Therefore, disputes between different academic views are often because of such factors as differences in understanding, the access to data, and the level of Marxist application, which do not have the marked nature of a class struggle. Such examples are many. Take for instance, the theory on the periodic division of the ancient history of China. We have such different concepts as the feudalism of the Western Zhou Dynasty, the feudalism of the Spring and Autumn period, the feudalism of the Qin Dynasty in unifying China, the feudalism of the western Han, the feudalism of the eastern Han, and the feudalism of the Wei and Jin dynasties. Take for another instance. Opinions are diametrically opposed on the evaluation of such historical personalities as Confucius, the first emperor of the Qin Gynasty, Wu Zetian, Zhang Xianzhong, and Li Xiucheng. The concepts of evaluation on the westernization movements in modern Chinese history also differ; for example, the 1898 institutional reform and the 1911 revolution. But those with different concepts on whether the periodic division of history or the evaluation of historical personalities mentioned above have based themselves on certain historical data.

As to which concept is materialistic, which idealistic, which is Marxist and which non-Marxist, it should be gradually grasped by further mastering more historical data, carrying out in-depth research, and conducting down-to-earth academic discussion. We should not oversimplify and label one academic concept as Marxist, and another as bourgeois. Despite the differences in concepts in academic discussion in socialist society, the overwhelming majority of the discussants have started from making academic activities thrive in seeking truth. The differences in academic concepts can be solved by in-depth research and the contention of a hundred schools of thought. We should also see that the correctness or errors that emerge in academic views, whether it is materialistic or idealistic, does not necessarily have any connection with the political attitude and position of certain academic workers. Those who have an erroneous academic concept and idealistic view can be supportive of the party and socialism politically. Some people do not like the term non-Marxist view in academic discussion, regarding it as quite serious a label. A non-Marxist view in academic discussion is nothing reactionary, and it should not be confused with an anti-Marxist view; it is, in fact, a matter of one's world outlook and theory of cognition. Moreover, concerning academic concepts themselves, not all non-Marxist concepts are wrong. Marxism itself came into being by inheriting the most precious ideology and historical heritage of mankind. Regarding many academic workers in socialist society, their academic concepts may include both Marxist and non-Marxist views at the same time.

In the multiple and diversified academic concepts, the majority of those of some discussants conform to Marxism, but some of their individual views may not. On the contrary, with some academic workers, the majority of their academic concepts may not conform to Marxism, but some do. Therefore, among the erroneous concepts in academic disputes, idealist and non-Marxist views are not infrequent, and they are nothing to be suprised at, neither should they be dealt with roughly by such oversimplified methods as suppression or refutation. Moreover, the right or wrong of an academic concept is not so easily discerned. Sometimes, truth is in the hands of the minority, when the conventional understanding of the majority may not be truth. If some people should try to pass judgment on the right or wrong concerning some academic disputes by the arbitration or suppression, it would be a thankless undertaking. History has proved that forced refutation could not solve academic disputes. The practice of academic refutation could not solve academic disputes. The practice of academic refutation would fail to solve ideological problems, and the academic concept would remain intact with the people involved overthrown and the result that academic workers are injured, and academic activities brought to a stalemate. Therefore, academic problems should by no means be solved by mass criticism. The differences in academic views can only be solved the the contention of a hundred schools of thought, reasoning with facts, and the method of criticism, counter-criticism and self-criticism, in order to overcome the erroneous, idealistic and non-Marxist views one has gradually come to see. If one has not come to see that one's own academic concept is really wrong, one should not submit oneself to the opinions of the majority or the criticism from some authoratative people against one's own will. Because such submission against one's own will may lead to two consequences: first, not being really convinced, even if one's concept is wrong, it is not possible for one to correct it; and second, the concept one is compelled to give up against one's own will may eventually be truth, or contain some rational elements. Therefore, in the contention of a hundred schools of thought, we should adhere to the principle of adhering to truth, revising mistakes, absorbing rational elements in contention, when revising or giving up the irrational elements in one's own academic concept.

Only then will it be possible for correct academic concepts, materialistic and Marxist academic views to develop in contention. Moreover, we should believe that different academic views can be gradually converted through discussion, and erroneous, and non-Marxist views can also be converted into correct and Marxist views by absorbing new nutrients and learning from others' strong points to offset one's weaknesses through discussion and contention. So we can see that in socialist society, the practice of treating different academic concepts as different positions and classes is an over-simplified method of thinking, which often fails to explain things clearly in practice.

Then, can we say that the academic disputes in socialist society do not involve the question of right or wrong in politics? Of course not. Although the exploiting as classes no longer exist in socialist society, the ideology of the exploiting classes and the habitual forces of the old society continue to exist for a rather long period because of the relative independence of ideology, With the changes in the international and domestic situation, the effects of the ideologies of the exploiting classes and the old habitual forces are at times rather conspicuous. However, the economic base generating such ideologies of the exploiting classes no longer exist in our socialist society. This is the reflection of a specific kind of class struggle in ideology under a specific historical condition.

So long as the proletariat overcomes such effects in a tit-for-tat and down-to-earth way with its own advanced ideology through criticism and self-criticism, and overcomes some incorrect views in academic discussions, such effects will be gradually reduced. However, we do not exclude the possibility of individual people being affected deeply by the exploiting classes in ideology, who not only spread some erroneous views but take some fallacies as truth and spread them. If we should fail to see the existence of these effects, thinking that the question of right and wrong, correctness and mistakes no longer exist in the realm of ideology, and let the ideologies of the exploiting classes exert their influence and the old habitual forces develop themselves freely without restricting and overcoming them with the proletarian ideology, it would mean that the proletariat is making an announcement to lay down its arms, and let the ideologies of the exploiting classes flood unchecked. Such effects will gradually lead to very grave consequences.

2. Academic Concepts and Political Views Should Not Be Confused

Regarding social sciences, it is sometimes not easy to distinguish academic problems from political ones. However, academic and political problems belong to different categories, and the overwhelming majority of academic problems can be differentiated from political ones. How then to strictly differentiate academic from political problems when possible? In my opinion, the most basic point is to refrain from arbitrarily escalating academic problems into political problems. Some academic problems related with current policies are really not so easy to differentiate from political issues. Before any decisions are adopted, the Central Committee will conduct discussions in order to encourage the free airing of views, to distinguish right from wrong, and to weigh the gain and loss. Despite the fact that different concepts are related with politics, they still fall into the category of academic problems. For instance, the discussion on whether to adopt the contracted responsibility system in the rural areas a few years back. There were different views at the beginning, but those views were not escalated to political problems. Through discussion, people's understanding came together, and the effect has been remarkable since its implementation. The course of discussion is one of reasoning with facts. Not only the masses are educated but they also enabled to differentiate right from wrong, and to decide on which side to take in discussion. The advantages are manifold.

Refraining from applying political views to whatever academic concepts in academic contention should and can be achieved regarding the differentiation of academic problems from political problems. For example, some discussants are just fond of classifying different academic concepts as being "leftist" or rightist, and referring to one academic concept as too "leftist" and another as too rightist. This is not the right thing to do. At present, the concepts of being "leftist" or rightist are chiefly political ones, but not academic. Generally speaking, academic concepts should not be classified as being "leftist" or rightist, in which there are only the differences between correctness and errors, between idealism or materialism. We should make concrete analysis of the concrete question, and classify a concrete question as it stands. Demonstrating an academic concept in simple political terms will easily confuse the relation between academic and political concepts. However, when we say academic concepts should not be classified as being "leftist" or rightist, it does not mean that the question of being "leftist" or rightist does not exist in formulating a policy of academic contention, and its handling.

For example, going in for academic refutation in academic contention, arbitrary escalation of academic problems to political problems during the 10 years of turmoil, labelling, attacking with big sticks, seizing on mistakes, all this is an expression of "leftism," and unfavorable to academic contention. The expression of such "leftist" effects can still be found today, and it must be overcome in a down-to-earth way.

Academic contention itself is a kind of experiment. Diversified opinions are inevitable, and the emergence of some strange concepts is possible. All this is advantageous to enlivening the atmosphere of contention. We should refrain from calling different academic concepts "liberalization," which is a political problem and should be dealt with meticulously. With the exception of marked political heresy, the practice of arbitrarily labelling a certain academic concept as "liberalization" should be refrained from. Neither should we call those people who adhere to traditional concepts as "ossified." Mutual labelling will make it very difficult for the discussion to be relaxed and to naturally unfold. However, concerning the academic circles, the spirit of being bold in making experiments should be promoted at present, in order to create an atmosphere for truth-seeking and harmonious discussion. To achieve this, it is necessary to take into consideration the 10 years of turmoil. Many scholars are not entirely rid of their lingering fear. So we should refrain from arbitrary political labelling. We should see that most of the discussants have made some explorations and gone through serious pondering before putting forth their views in a debate; even with erroneous views, they may provide a new angle for their opponents in thinking. The free airing of views in contention will enlighten each other and broaden the path of thinking. Among them, some new ideological concepts may not be complete and perfect, but new sparkling academic understanding may emerge through intensifying and upgrading in the course of debate. Only truth-seeking and free exploration and discussion will allow academic issues to blaze new trails and reach a higher level.

The reason why it is necessary to promote the spirit of being bold at making experiments also lies in the fact that under the new circumstances of reform, many new problems have been put forth in political and economic theories, as well as the academic concepts and approaches in research involving all branches of social sciences, which need to be given fresh explanation and study. Marxism itself continues to develop in practice, so the academic and theoretical problems that have emerged cannot be easily given a clear explanation with conventional concepts. Here are two possible situations: First, the student has failed to have a good grasp of the basic tenets of Marxism, mechanically copying them in disregard of a specific condition. And when he tries to explain theoretical and academic problems with Marxist views, he lacks the ability to demonstrate new problems in a dialectical approach, and futilely attempts to explain them with points he himself has not grasped. This does not help in formulating new theories to explain new problems that have emerged but injures theoretical and academic development. Second, with the development of the times, individual Marxist principles and approaches are no longer suitable; and a clear demonstration of many problems will be impossible if they are not given fresh explanation according to Marxist tenets.

Only by being bold at making experiments and conducting free discussion will it be possible to make progress and achieve development in academic problems. The free discussion and study of problems and new developments in academic issues are possible only in a relaxed and happy atmosphere.

3. Everyone in the "Hundred Schools of Thought" in "Contention" Is Equal

Because the principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend" aims at developing academic activities and exploring truth, the quality of the "hundred schools of thought" in "contention" should be advocated. The debate between different views should subject to truth only, and not the maneuvering of experts, authoritative people or power. History is characteristic of continuity, so are academic discussion and concepts. The shaping of every academic concept has gone through a process of summing up and absorbing the accomplishments of predecessors, and new problems are discovered and new opinions proposed on this basis with serious and in-depth research. It is the same with those experts and authoritative people who have acquired their present status with some originality and breakthroughs in the realm of social sciences on the basis of summing up, absorbing, and criticizing the accomplishments of their predecessors. Therefore, in the contention of a hundred schools of thought, we advocate that young academic workers should attach great importance to, and prize the results of research by social scientists of the older generation, and seriously absorb the rational elements in them. But it does not mean to copy or follow closely the outmoded doctrines of experts and authoritative people, regarding them as the criteria for differentiating right from wrong. Such practice has no future, and there will be nothing original in one's research, nor will it upgrade one's academic level. Only by modestly absorbing the results of our predecessors, when being bold at making a breakthrough of their accomplishments, seriously exploring new topics in new realms, and drawing new scientific conclusion, will new accomplishments be possible.

In fact, with the continuous development of society and the continuous advance of history, people's understanding level will continue to make itself complete and perfect. Therefore, new concepts often emerge in the contention of a hundred schools of thought. To those experts and authoritative people, these new concepts are likewise unfamiliar; and they, too, have the problem of absorbing new results. It was precisely by absorbing the most rational parts in Hegel's dialectics and Feuerbach's materialist ideological system through critical inheritance that Marx founded dialectical materialism and historical materialism. In writing "The Origin of the Family, Private Property, and the State," Engels chiefly utilized the materials in Lewis H. Morgan's "Ancient Society." Regarding their academic concepts, both Mark and Engels had absorbed the finest scientific results of their predecessors before reaching the peak of science.

Subjective assertion should be avoided in academic contention. This is because the question of right and wrong in academic issues is not to be told promptly, and nobody should act the wise judge in academic contention. Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out: "It is necessary to be careful about questions of right and wrong in the arts and sciences, to encourage free discussion and avoid hasty conclusions." ("Correct Handling of Contradictions Among the People.") Then, here is the question, namely, should the academic opinions made known in public by leading cadres of the party and government at all levels be regarded as a kind of conclusion? Because diversified academic views are aired in academic contention, and any discussant belongs to one of the "hundred schools of thought," his view is just one of the many diversified views. So how could the views of leading cadres in such contention be regarded as conclusions? But many of our leading cadres are lovers or experts of some branches of social sciences.

They have a higher theoretical level and their opinions on certain academic problems are often helpful in enlightening people. Therefore, the academic circles should welcome them in contention, and give attention to their opinions. At the same time, different views and criticism of their academic concepts by other discussants should be allowed. when leading cadres take the lead in participating in contention, and regard themselves as one of the "hundred schools of thought," the atmosphere of contention will be all the more harmonious, which is favorable to the development of academic contention.

4. Dealing With the New Problems Brought About By Opening Up to the World in Academic Contention in a Dialectical Approach

With the implmentation of the principle of opening up to the world and invigorating the domestic economy, it is inevitable that some academic concepts of the capitalist world will affect China's academic circles through various channels. However, those practical effects brought about by the principle of opening up to the world must be regarded in a dialectical approach. First, opening up to the world inevitably provides chances for the capitalist world to introduce science, culture and other ideolgoies (including academic concepts, to China, which are likely to bring about some changes in our ideology. But not all Western science, culture and other ideologies are synonymous with mistakes and decadence. There must be something fine and rational in them worthy of our critical inheritance in order to enrich the science and culture of socialist society with those rational elements. Second, the wide exchanges in science and culture with the West can widen the vision of Chinese scholars at home, and break down the narrow mindedness of some people, which is generated from the basis of long-term feudal autocracy and small-scale production. This is helpful to enlighten the scholars in thinking things out from a wider angle in academic contention. And third, capitalist ideology, including its academic concepts will affect us, and infiltrate our minds. For instance, some bourgeois metaphysical and idealistic academic concepts are faked as scientific ones to counter Marxist academic concepts, and some out-and-out imperialist and colonialist concepts are peddeled by some bourgeois scholars. But some of us have accepted these academic concepts, which are adopted and spread in our academic contention, either because they are not quite familiar with Marxism or have more remnants of those bourgeois concepts in their ideology. Then, as outsiders of our socialist country, some bourgeois scholars abroad with ill intentions against Marxism have made arbitrary round ups and distortions of the different views emerging in our academic discussion. Based on their subjective will, they have lauded some academic concepts which they regard as countering to Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought. We must be particularly careful about such phenomena, and soberly examine their movements. If they laud some views with marked mistakes, we should be vigilant. Determined by their class interests, some bourgeois scholars may comment at will on whatever academic and theoretical concepts emerge in our debates. Sometimes, they may take some correct views as anti-Marxist, and spread them in distortion. Under such circumstances, we should be particularly sober in distinguishing and analyzing them. We should by no means interject our normal academic discussions with some of their views.

In short, we have our own criteria for right and wrong in our contention of a hundred schools of thought, and by no means should we be swayed by some of their speeches. On the other hand, we should see that the majority of foreign scholars are friendly and good-intentioned. Their participation in our academic contention is helpful to making China's science and culture flourish. They should be welcomed. Besides, many of their academic concepts are valuable, and we should attach attention to absorbing their helpful academic concepts. Even so, any foreign expert or scholar belongs to one of the hundred schools of thought in our academic contention. He is on an equal footing with the Chinese scholars; likewise, his academic concept may be subject to the agreement or criticism of the discussants. All this is normal.

Invigorating the domestic economy, opening up, and reform share the common aim of adhering to the socialist road. It is a positive policy of the party to strengthen the cultural and academic exchanges and ties with the capitalist world. So long as we give active guidance and deal with it seriously, some helpful concepts can be absorbed by the method of critical inheritance, and turned into part of the culture and science of the proletariat. This is helpful to the building of both socialist spiritual and material civilizations. If capitalist science and culture are indiscriminately regarded as erroneous, criticized and rejected, that would be an expression of narrowmindedness. But regarding some markedly harmful views, such as the demonstration of the inferiority of socialist society, or whether China's present stage is socialism, and even slandering communism in the form of academic discussion, these must be rejected. We must adopt the Marxist position, viewpoints and approaches to explain our academic concepts, and reject and criticize some harmful concepts. In the course of these academic debates, our own contingent will be trained and strengthened, its qualities upgraded, and China's science and culture will further develop and flourish.

PROBLEMS IN DISTRIBUTION OF CONTRACEPTIVES NOTED

[By staff reporter Hu Sigang and Su Zhen]

[Text] Many couples find it hard to believe that contraceptives are so hard to find when they hear that birth-control products are piling up in factory warehouses.

The authorities concerned say they are trying to co-ordinate production and supply better to ease the problem.

The issue came to the public's attention after an official in charge of family planning at Nanjing Aeronautical Engineering Institute wrote a letter to PEOPLE's DAILY.

The official complained that many married couples could hardly find contraceptives in Nanjing. Only one type seemed to be available and even that in only a few chemists. "This has been the case here for two years," the official said.

A young government employee in Beijing also complained to CHINA DAILY that when he got married last year he and his wife were refused contraceptives at a premarital health examination centre, because, they were told, all the centre's contraceptives had passed their "use by" date. Neither could they get what they wanted after searching several pharmacies.

An official of the State Family Planning Commission acknowledged that the problem does exist in some areas. "However, China is not short of family planning products. In fact, supply exceeds demand," said Wang Yongfa.

Take condoms for example, he said, the country had 600 million in stock by the end of last year. However distribution is poor and a condom factory in Dalian, Liaoning Province, is facing backruptcy as supplies pile up in their warehouses, Wang said.

The central government has spent around 100 million yuan a year in the past few years on contraceptive research and production, according to Wang Fengshu, an official of the State Pharmaceutical Administration.

China started research and trial production of contraceptives in 1962. Since mass production started in 1967, more than 19 varieties have been devised. The products include long, short-term and quick-acting pills, long-term injectable contraceptives, diaphragm, spermicide, vaginal ring, IUD (intrauterine device) and Vas blocking agents (for male sterilization), according to Li Xuzhen, director of the technical department under the China Pharmaceutical Industry Corporation.

"Party and state leaders are very concerned about contraceptive development," she said. "Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang has said several times that the best materials should be used in making contraceptives. And he once said that if the supply of the necessary materials could not be guaranteed domestically, they should be imported from other countries.

"The problem of 'shortage' of family planning products does not lie in production but in distribution and the service sector," she said.

Contraceptives are distributed free through two channels: chemists run by pharmaceutical companies or neighbourhood family planning committees and those in people's workplaces.

Wang Fengshu said: "Since the contract responsibility system was introduced in drug stores in some areas, many of these goods that don't earn any profit have been taken off the shelves and put in some inconspicuous place. People who are shy to ask cannot find them." Formerly most chemists displayed contraceptives openly so that people could help themselves.

Though "shortages" exist in cities such as Beijing, Nanjing, Suzhou, Wuxi, Chengdu and Wuhan, an official of the Shanghai Family Planning Commission, said they never had any complaints as people could easily get contraceptives.

The State Family Planning Commission, State Pharmaceutical Administration, China Pharmaceutical Industry Corporation and some other parties are coordinating to make birth-control products readily available everywhere in the country, which has a population of bearing-aged women of around 240 million.

NONGMIN RIBAO URGES CONTINUING ECONOMIC REFORM

HK190210 Beijing NONGMIN RIBAO in Chinese 10 May 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Should Reform Encounter Difficulties, We Must Advance Rather Than Retreat"]

[Text] In restructuring our economy in the rural areas, invigorating the economy in different areas, and improving the people's living standard, we have confronted numerous vexatious problems such as: Imperfections in economic contracts; disputes between two parties over a contract; not planting trees on contracted barren hills; slow selling farm and sideline produce; carrying out predatory business operations only for immediate interests; and so on and so forth. Our economic restructuring is newly emerged and none of us have experience in doing this, so the emergence of some problems is not unusual, Compared with the successes achieved in the development of production and the improvement of living standards, these problems are nonessentials and can certainly be resolved. The crux of the matter is whether we press forward or beat a retreat in the face of difficulties.

What does "pressing forward" mean? And what does "beating a retreat" mean? On these two questions there are two different ways of understanding. We are of the opinion that transferring from the practice of "eating from one big pot" to the system of contracting responsibilities with payment linked to output, transferring from single productive activities to diversified productive activities, and developing agricultural production into the circulation sphere are all great progressions made in improving the rural production system under socialist conditions. However, there are different views on this question. Some comrades believe that the higher the degree of public ownership of the means of production is, the more progressive our society will be. In their opinion, the fixing of output quotas based on individual households is regarded as a "retrogression" and allowing peasants to enter the circulation area strikes a "compromise." Now that difficult problems have appeared, of course, it is better to restore the status quo. Comrades having such a view are very few, but they misconceive that the vigorous and progressive principles and policies formulated since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee are an expedient measure for a passive retreat. The influence of such a view hampers the smooth progress of reform.

The ownership of the means of production is an important factor in production relation but is not the unique factor. Ours is a socialist country and the economy of public ownership is predominant in our country. In terms of a certain area or a certain unit, whether production relations are progressive or not cannot be determined by the degree of public ownership of the means of production, but should be determined by the development of the productive forces. When talking with foreign guests in early 1985, Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out: "If we do not develop the productive forces and if we do not improve the people's living standards, it cannot be said that we can meet the needs of socialism." A high degree of public ownership cannot be regarded as progressive if it is out of step with the level of consciousness of the people, if it dampens their enthusiasm, and if it hinders the development of the productive forces. We must firmly bear in mind historical lessons. In developing the planned socialist commodity economy, production relations which can arouse the enthusiasm of the people should be regarded progressive even if the degree of public ownership is not high and big collectives are changed into small collectives, or even if it contains an individual economic sector.

Of course, in the course of promoting commodity production and circulation, some individual dealers combine together in order to stimulate competition and achieve greater economic results. Such combinations are also progressive. There is no need for reticence because at present there are diverse forms of economy and various forms of ownership of the means of production in rural areas. The experience of Sunjiatuan village is highly commendable because leaders there do not sidestep the "forbidden zone" of reforming ownership of the means of production and solve problems realistically. Therefore, production there has been expanded and they have won support from the people and the admiration of the central leaders.

In this year's Document No 1 the central authorities pointed out: All vexatious problems emerging in the execution of the reform should be solved by carrying out the reform in depth. There is no way out by retreating. Carrying out the reform in depth means that we should make use of all complex production relations, including public ownership of the means of production, to promote the development of productive forces to the maximum. What has been done in Sunjiatuan village conforms to this principle, so we must encourage and support it.

'CRISIS' SEEN IN NOVELS ON MILITARY THEMES

HK160800 Beijing WENZHAI BAO in Chinese No 310, 8 May 86 p 5

[Report: "The Current Crisis in Novels on Military Themes"]

[Text] In an article written for the third issue of DANGDAI WENYI SICHAO, Zhou Zhengbao points out: The creation of novels on military themes is now confronted with crisis and the range of subject matter is quite narrow. Especially young and middle-aged Army writers limit their subject matter to description of barracks life of peacetime and depictions of battles in the southern theater. However, some of our novels on military themes published in the past depicted and reflected the great national wars and civil revolutionary war. In selecting subject matter, our writers pay too much attention to the present and ignore the past and are eager for quick success and instant benefit. This practice is not good. They must make self-examination. Otherwise, it will be unfair to history. At the same time, our writers also go to extremes in exploring new subject matter. For example, in describing human feelings and the human nature of our soldiers in battle, there is a tendency of a certain blindness and lack of aesthetic standards. In order to describe human feelings and human nature, they blindly fabricate fantastic plots for their novels. This tendency shows that they have neglected observing and learning from real life. However, some writers now more often like to link such fabrications with the idea of contemporary novels. The crisis occurs in the fact that our writers lack experience of life and, in particular, they have become estranged from and even apathetic toward the current life of our soldiers. Most of our professional writers, and even young and middle-aged writers, who are productive in literary and art creation, have drifted apart from grass-roots companies for more than a decade or even 20 years and more. However, the political integrity and cultural level of our PLA men are entirely different from those of 20 years ago.

RENMIN RIBAO ON REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

HK151321 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 9 May 86 p 5

[Article by Sun Xiaoliang: "How To Use Favorable Conditions -- an Important Question in Drawing Economic Development Plans"]

[Text] Many localities have recently been studying economic development strategies for their regions in an effort to work out development plans. Judging from what I observed, the noteworthy question is how to use favorable conditions. Here are my personal views:

1. Regional development plans focusing on cities and the development plans of every province and autonomous region all belong to the category of regional development plans. In studying regional economic development strategies, the most important question is not just how to develop various industrial departments in a coordinated way but what favorable conditions to be brought into plan and what strong points to be formed. Therefore, in planning regional economic development, we should mainly stress bringing favorable conditions into play.

2. Favorable conditions embrace priority industries and products. What priority industry to develop is a high-level question on the content of industrial structures, while what priority products to develop is a low-level question on the content of product structure. In terms of the needs of working out regional economic development plans, we should primarily study what priority products to develop, as it can be seen touched and is relatively specific and easier to fulfill.

3. There is only one criterion for deciding what products will be priority products, namely, the market shares. The products with a larger market share in the province, the country, and the world should be the priority products of the province, the country, and the world. Thereby, we can turn this abstract concept of priority products into something to be quantitatively analyzed and make it easier to measure while drafting plans. As for the size of market share to determine a priority product, there should not be a fixed standard. For example, if the market share of a product produced in a city is 5 percent for the whole country, this means that 20 factories of equal size can meet all the demand. I think that such a product could be regarded as a priority product. Of course, market share should follow the idea of "the larger, the better," as a larger market share means more favorable conditions.

4. A product with a larger market share must at least be supported by two conditions: First, both the quality and standard must be the best; and second, the cost must be small but the return must be big. With either one of the two, a product can constantly expand its market share and become a priority product. Of course, it is better to have both. A clear understanding of this point will be very useful for studying how to bring into play the favorable conditions, as it has pointed out the main direction of attack in our work.

5. Priority products are of two kinds: real priority products and potential products. Regarding the real priority products, while working out plans, we should consider how to support their development or how to expand their market share. As for the potential priority products, we must take note of turning them into real priority products.

Neither should be overemphasized at the expense of the other. If we do not plan to make potential products become real priority products, economic development will come to a standstill. The reason I raise this issue is because this tendency occurs in many localities when drawing up development plans. In a sense, the future of a region's economic development hinges on whether or not it can unceasingly discover potential priority products and turn them into real priority products.

6. To develop real priority products, it is necessary to do two things: First, we must increase output according to market demands; and second, we must constantly raise quality and standards. In comparison, the latter is more difficult and important, because a priority product must go through the test of market competition to maintain its priority position. If it cannot constantly raise its quality and standard, a priority product of today may become an inferior product of tommorrow.

7. To turn potential priority products into real priority products, it is also necessary to do two things: First, discover; and second, promote. These two tasks are difficult and unfamiliar to us.

A potential priority product can only be decided by various innate and acquired conditions, not by the people at will. The innate conditions include natural resources, climate, soil, geographical position, and so on. Of these, the condition of natural resources is the most important, as the distribution of natural resources is a natural basis for the regional division of labor. The acquired conditions include the levels of production technology and management, transportation conditions, coordination environment, and so on, which were shaped in the development of history. Both the innate and acquired conditions are objective.

The work of discovering potential priority products means making a specific investigation and analysis of various innate and acquired conditions so as to decide which products can become priority products in the region and which cannot. Divorced from the analysis of objective conditions in "discovering" priority products, we would be doomed to failure.

Making an analysis of the objective conditions, it is often found that a certain natural resource is abundant in contrast to the relevant processing technology. How to make a choice under this condition is a trial for decision makers. There are two general rules: First, regional development strategies should be subordinate to the national development strategy; and second, economic returns should be held as the ultimate criterion.

In addition to discovering potential priority products, we should also support their transformation into real priority products so as to "create favorable conditions." The aim of "discovering potential products" is to "create favorable conditions." The creation of favorable conditions is something in which people can bring into play their roles through subjective efforts.

8. We are required to develop the real priority products and discover the potential priority products and facilitate their transformation into real priority products. First, we must make plans. Second, we must work out policies. How do we make specific plans? What kind of policy do we need? This is something which local governments and relevant departments should investigate and study. However, the general principle is to develop priority products and abandon non-priority products.

The essential distinction between an economic region and a natural economic zone lies in bringing into play favorable conditions. This includes developing one's own priority products, meeting the demands of other economic regions through exchange, abandoning one's own inferiority products, and getting supplies from other economic regions through exchange.

9. There is a main difference between national economic development plans and regional economic development plans. The former stresses that every industrial department should develop in a coordinated way according to the proportion of the whole it occupies, with proportion determining the development scale, development scale determining the development speed, development speed determining the investment distribution, and investment distribution determining the construction projects. However, the latter stresses bringing favorable conditions into play and focuses on developing favorable conditions in drafting development plans.

10. The actual contents and drafting methods of regional economic development plans focusing on bringing into play favorable conditions are quite different from the traditional concepts and methods. The following procedures are suggested for consideration:

-- Based on market shares, we must analyze and determine the real priority products so as to weed out the target of increase for the market share of every priority product.

-- By analyzing the objective conditions, we must determine the potential priority products and the time schedule and requirements for every potential priority product to become a real priority product.

-- We must determine the enterprises that will produce the priority products.

-- We must formulate economic policies on developing or promoting priority products, including the promotional policies on the transformation and introduction of technology, the exploitation of products, the forming of production, and so on.

-- By summing up the development plans for various priority products, we must work out a general regional economic development plan.

-- While drafting economic and social development plans, efforts should also be made to include the plans for the social conditions and the construction of infrastructures necessary to creating and bringing into play the favorable conditions.

As the above is only a general idea, there are still many problems to be resolved and studied in practice. Nevertheless, a change in idea is of decisive significance. Only new ideas can provoke new specific methods. If old ideas are not discarded, "new methods" will just be variations of old methods.

JINGJI RIBAO URGES PROMOTING GRAIN PRODUCTION

HK081149 Beijing JINGJI RIBAO in Chinese 26 Apr 86 p 3

[Article by Ding Shengjun: "Promoting Stable Increases in Grain Output Is China's Long-Term Policy"]

[Text] Generally speaking, after China's total grain output reached more than 800 billion jin, the basic problem concerning the people's food and clothing was solved, putting an end to the long history of grain supply falling short of demand and beginning the change from "having enough to eat and wear" to "being comparatively well off." This is undoubtedly a great achievement of the government since the founding of the state. However, in China, which is a country with a large population, little cultivated land, and poor foundation, the main contradiction in this respect remains that we must make efforts to prevent shortage in grain supply rather than being afraid of oversupply. Therefore, in the new situation, China must continue to take promoting stable increases in grain output as its long-term policy.

Objective economic law shows that either in the general system of the national economy or in the branch system of the rural economy, agriculture remains a foundation, and grain remains the foundation of this foundation. A mere analysis of the status quo and the development trend of grain consumption will easily convince the people of this. The so-called grain consumption refers to the consumption of edible grain, industrial grain, fodder grain, and seed grain as well as other natural consumption. At present, due to various reasons, the scope of grain consumption in our country is expanding and the quality of grain consumed is increasing. First, since China has a very large population, even if the birthrate is strictly controlled, there will also be an increase of 12 million in the national population each year, which will reach 1.2 to 1.25 billion by the end of this century. Thus, consumption of edible grain will also increase. Second, large numbers of peasants have changed from agricultural production to nonagricultural production and from grain producers to grain consumers. Third, with the development of food processing and the change in the food structure, grain consumption will naturally increase. Without exception, countries with developed food processing industry and animal husbandry and taking animal food as their main food are high grain consuming countries. Now, in Beijing, Tianjin, and Shanghai, which are consuming comparatively more animal food in our country, the per capita annual consumption of grain has already reached 900 to 1,000 jin. From this we can see that the more the food structure is improved, the more the food industry and animal husbandry are developed, the greater the demand for grain will be.

It is calculated that by the end of this century, in order to satisfy the needs of the Chinese people to become comparatively well off, the total grain output should reach 1,020 and 1,062.5 billion jin a year, if the per capita annual consumption is 850 jin. In other words, in the year 2,000, the annual grain output should increase by 220 to 262.5 billion jin, or at an average of 14.66 to 17.5 billion jin a year. If this strategic target is not attained, it will be difficult to satisfy grain consumption needs. Animal husbandry, which consumes a large quantity of grain, will be the first to be affected, reform of the economic structure mainly carried out in the cities will be damaged, and the readjustment of the rural production structure and the development of the national economy will also be restrained.

Both the objective law governing the development of the rural economy and the trend of constant increase in grain consumption require that grain production should be grasped firmly rather than relaxed, so as to ensure its steady growth. Stable increase in grain output, though entirely contrary to "restricting and reducing production," does not mean, "the more the better." It requires that the total grain output of our country be steadily increased year by year so that sharp rising and falling may be avoided. The targets set for the increase in grain output should be stable and reliable and the measures should be effective and applicable, so that they may suit the increasing demand for grain by the national economy and the peoples's livelihood.

Since this increase is based on a higher starting point, there will be more difficulties. Therefore, it is necessary to effectively and firmly grasp production, promote circulation, and enhance the reserve strength.

1. It is necessary to protect agricultural resources and increase substantial investment.

First, we must treasure the cultivated land and strictly forbid illegal and indiscriminate use and occupation of land, so that we can have sufficient land for grain production. According to the experience of some provinces, it is better to maintain the proportion of grain production area at about 75 to 80 percent of the total plant growing area. Second, we must firmly grasp irrigation works, which is the lifeblood of agriculture. Over the past few years, due to improper maintenance and the ageing of equipment, the irrigated area has reduced by more than 7.5 million mu. This should arouse our attention. Both the state and the localities must make overall plans and organize necessary human, material, and financial resources to build water conservancy projects, strengthen the construction of basic facilities, and improve productive conditions so as to ensure steady growth in grain production and constantly enhance our reserve strength.

2. It is necessary to protect and evoke the initiative of grain producers. There are now more than 100 million peasant households engaging in grain production. They form the main force in this field and their initiative has a sensitive bearing on the increase or decrease in grain output. Protecting and evoking the initiative of grain producers means protecting and strengthening grain production capability. The key to mobilizing their initiative lies in the correct policies and the correct handling of relations among various sectors. In view of the current situation, it is particularly necessary to correctly handle the relations between the state and the peasants, between grain-supplying areas and grain-dependent areas, between grain production and the development of a diversified economy, between the main channel of state marketing of grain and multi-channel marketing, between grain production and grain consumption, and between grain production in China and the production in other countries. According to a calculation in certain areas of Jiansu Province, there is a great disparity in the net annual income between various plant growing businesses. The per mu income of grain fields is 80 yuan, that of cotton fields is 120 yuan, that of mulberry fields is 200 to 220 yuan, and that of seedbeds is more than 500 yuan. There is a still greater disparity between agricultural and industrial production. The disparity in income has become a negative factor obstructing the increase in grain output. It is necessary to adopt some new policies and measures as soon as possible to get rid of the hidden danger. First, it is necessary to adopt a price policy favorable to the harmonious development of both grain and industrial crops. Second, it is necessary to continue to supplement agriculture with industry, especially in areas in which town and township enterprises are comparatively more developed. In this way, the income from low-profit grain production may be increased and the problem of equal labor but unequal remuneration may be solved. It is conducive to both the steady development of agricultural and grain production and the strengthening of the material basis of industrial and sideline production. So, it is necessary to carry it out for a long period to come. Third, it is necessary to adopt an allocation policy that is conducive to grain production and circulation. In the past, grain-supplying provinces and regions had to bear the necessary expenses while provinces, municipalities, and regions that were allotted grain did not have to bear any expenses. The latter were able to rely on low-priced grain to develop high-profit industrial and sideline production and a diversified economy. Therefore, it is necessary to take the following two steps to change this phenomenon, which is obviously unfair: The first step, to enable the grain-supplying areas not to sustain losses; and the second, to make the grain-demanding areas bear the necessary expenses other than those paid by the state so that the grain-supplying areas may benefit from this and that nobody may "eat from the big pot" again. When these new economic policies are adopted and the interests of various sectors become more reasonable through readjustment, the income of the peasants engaging in grain production will certainly be increased and their initiative mobilized. This will become a powerful motive force for stable increases in grain output.

3. It is necessary to promote specialized and commercialized grain production. At present, the degree of intensive farming in China's grain production is still very low, and the commodity rate is only a bit higher than 30 percent. Grain production is chiefly characterized by self-sufficiency of the peasants, who work to satisfy their needs for grain, fodder, and seeds. Since it can neither satisfy the increasing needs of society for commodity grain nor suit the needs for increasing the economic returns of grain production, this situation should also be changed.

An important road we must follow in order to change the situation is to raise the level of specialization and commercialization. To this end, we must first raise the economic returns of production in a suitable scope. Since conditions vary from place to place, it is impossible to set a fixed standard for the scope of grain production. The experience of some household farms shows that it is most suitable to limit the scope of production within 20 to 30 mu of land under ordinary conditions. Thus, both operation and economic returns may be effectively improved, and labor productivity and the commodity rate may be markedly raised. The peasants will be able to become rich through growing rice. This will inject enduring motive force and vitality into grain production.

Second, we must give play to the initiative of the central and local authorities as well as the broad masses of peasants, and must build more commodity grain production bases. This will be conducive to bringing into full play the natural and technological advantages of the areas suitable for grain production and to raising the commodity rate of grain. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, we established 60 commodity grain production bases in relevant counties (or cities) through joint ventures by the national and local authorities. Very good economic results have been achieved in 50 such bases, and construction of the other 10 continues. From 1983 to 1985, the grand total of grain produced by the 50 counties (or cities) was 166 billion jin; the quantity of grain sold was 70 billion jin. Thus, the commodity rate was over 40 percent, more than 10 percent higher than the national average in the same period. At present, while consolidating and improving the existing commodity grain production bases in both north and south China, it is necessary to build up a number of new bases. For example, we can build some large-scale grain production bases for the state in central and southern Jiangxi, where conditions are comparatively better and where there are greater potentialities. All provinces and autonomous regions can also establish some medium-sized and small bases in the areas suitable for grain production through their own efforts. It is necessary to pay attention to the rational distribution of grain production and raising the grain production ability of the grain-demanding provinces and autonomous regions step by step and in a planned way. For example, we can establish some new commodity grain production bases in Gansu's Hexi corridor, in the irrigated Hetao area in Ningxia and Nei Monggol, in Qinghai's Qaidam Basin, and in the areas suitable for agricultural production in Xinjiang, Yunnan, and Guizhou, so as to raise the degree of self-sufficiency of these provinces and regions in grain supply and to harmonize relations among various grain production areas of our country. This strategic deployment will be of far-reaching significance to reducing the pressure and financial burden caused by long-distance allocation and transportation of grain, to readjusting the rural production structure, and to ensuring steady development of grain production.

Third, it is necessary to support enthusiastically households specializing in grain production. Households specializing in grain production, which have appeared in large numbers as relatively independent commodity producers, are all good hands at farming. By making full use of idle funds in the countryside and giving play to their special technological skill, they have expanded the scope of production. Their labor productivity and the commodity rate of the grain they produce are usually higher than ordinary peasant households. Therefore, they are really a vital new force in grain production.

The state must give priority to them in the supply of productive means and offer them necessary social services. Besides, under the principle of voluntariness and mutual benefit, it is also suitable to develop cooperation and association of these households in order to promote grain production. In this way, grain production may be gradually concentrated on the land suitable for grain production and be conducted chiefly by skillful farmers.

A necessary condition for developing specialized and commercialized grain production is to perfect and improve the social services system. The more grain production is specialized and commercialized, the more it demands that various services be separated from the process of production and become relatively independent and socialized services, such as information, consultation, credit, breeding of improved varieties, chemical fertilizer supply, the prevention and control of plant diseases and pests, technological exchange, irrigation works, and the purchase and marketing as well as the storage and transportation of products. What is most important is to promote circulation. As to the orientation of development, it is necessary to extend the range of market regulation under the guidance of state planning, to make prices more reasonable for purchase and marketing, to find new circulation channels and new commercial forms, and to establish gradually a system of planned market. In 1985, the system of state monopoly for purchase and marketing of grain was abolished and was replaced by the system of purchase by contract. This was an important reform of the grain purchase system. The system of purchase by contract is a new form of state purchase of grain in a planned way. It is a bridge that has brought grain production of tens of thousands of peasant households into line with the state plan and a lever that is effectively regulating and guiding grain production. For this reason, implementing and perfecting this system is of great significance to stimulating circulation and promoting production. At present, in order to perfect this system, we must follow the following principles: First, we must adhere to the principle of equality, mutual benefit, and reaching unanimity through consultation and must respect each other's economic benefit and perform our obligations well. The state may give priority to those who sell more grain in supplying the means of production and granting agricultural loans. Second, the quantity of grain purchased by contract must be limited within a certain range and be gradually reduced in light of the development of the situation so as to extend the range of market regulation. Third, the varieties for purchase by contract should chiefly be rice, wheat, corn, and soybeans in the main production areas, while allowing other varieties of products to be purchased and sold freely. Fourth, the task for purchase by contract must be set chiefly for the main grain production areas, commodity grain bases, and peasant households specializing in grain production so as to promote the production of commodity grain. Fifth, the contract on purchase of grain should be signed before the sowing season so that it can more effectively play the role in guiding production.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, by adhering to the policy of "never slacken grain production, actively develop a diversified economy," we have created a new situation in the rural economy. At present, we must consolidate the achievements we have already made and make further efforts to promote stable increases in grain output and the overall development of the rural economy.

SHANGHAI LEADERS STRESS ECONOMIC REFORM, LATERAL TIES

OW141136 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 0000 GMT 14 May 86

[Excerpts] A meeting on restructuring Shanghai's economic system successfully concluded yesterday afternoon. The main topic of discussion was the development of lateral economic ties between Shanghai and other areas. After opening on 16 April, the meeting, in plenary sessions and in group discussions, examined Shanghai's progress in restructuring its economic system. In a practical manner, it also analyzed the problems caused by replacing an old system with a new and set forth this year's reform projects as well as measures to promote lateral economic ties.

Rui Xingwen, secretary of the Shanghai Municipal Party Committee, and Jiang Zemin, mayor of Shanghai, attended and addressed yesterday's meeting, which was chaired by Vice Mayor Li Zhaoji. Also attending yesterday's meeting were Huang Ju, Ni Tianzeng, Wang Daohan, and other leading comrades.

In his speech, Mayor Jiang Zemin pointed out: The significance of establishing lateral economic ties between Shanghai and other areas should by no means lie in sustaining Shanghai's industrial production with materials from other provinces and cities. It is more important that Shanghai achieve its development strategy by promoting lateral economic ties with other areas. When Shanghai is developed, it can support other parts of the country and serve the four modernizations more successfully.

At yesterday's meeting, Comrade Rui Xingwen spoke on the relationship between lateral economic ties and economic reform and on reform trends. He also urged cadres at all levels to take a positive approach toward reform. He said: Cadres at all levels must do a good job in carrying out reform to promote lateral economic ties with other areas. In the course of reform, they should strive to make themselves more proficient. At the same time, they should study the new situation and new problems. Under the premise of achieving better economic returns, they should take positive measures to boost production.

PRC, TAIWAN MEET IN HONG KONG TO DISCUSS CAL 747, CREW

Taiwan Policy on PRC Unaffected

OW161443 Taipei CNA in English 1435 GMT 16 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 16 (CNA) -- The Republic of China's [ROC] basic stand and national policy of "no compromise, no contact and no negotiation" with the Peiping regime remains unchanged, Dr. Chang King-yuh, director general of the Government Information office, said Friday. Commenting on the Saturday's talks in Hong Kong between China Airlines [CAL] and Peiping's Civil Aviation Administration of China [CAAC] on the release of the CAL cargo jet and its three crew members stranded on the mainland, Chang said that this is "a single and special case."

Chang said that CAL is a private company, it has agreed to hold such talks with Peiping's CAAC simply based on humanitarian grounds, seeking the return to the ROC of the Boeing 747 cargo plane which diverted to a Canton airport May 3 and the three crew aboard as soon as possible. "The CAL-CAAC talks will not hold any political portents and have nothing to do with the set policy of the ROC," he stressed.

CAL Talks Concern Only Jet, Crew

OW161533 Taipei CNA in English 1447 GMT 16 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 16 (CNA) -- China Airlines [CAL] reiterated Friday that its representatives will hold talks with their Communist Chinese counterparts in Hong Kong for the return of the CAL Boeing 747 jet plane, crew and cargo stranded in the China mainland since May 3, and no other topics will be touched.

Ranking CAL officials who preferred anonymity said the CAL representatives would immediately turn down any suggestion by representatives of Peiping's Civil Aviation Administration of China [CAAC] that discussions touch on matters other than the return of the CAL jet, crew and cargo in the talks to be held in Hong Kong Saturday. They added that if the talks could not continue because CAAC raised other issues than the return of the CAL, jet and crew, then CAAC would be held responsible for it.

According to the officials, CAL's instructions to its representatives in the scheduled talks are:

-- The talks are purely business-oriented between the two airlines; and

-- The talks will concentrate on the procedures for the return of the CAL B198 jet, three-man crew and cargo only and no other topics will be touched.

CAL-CAAC Talks Begin 17 May

HK170337 Hong Kong AFP in English 0334 GMT 17 May 86

[Text] Hong Kong, May 17 (AFP) -- Officials from Taiwan and China met for the first time in almost 40 years here Saturday to negotiate the return from the mainland of a cargo plane and its crew, airline officials said.

Cathay Pacific Airways (CPA) spokesman David Bell said he understood the talks had started on time at 10 a.m. (0200 GMT), but said he did not know where in Hong Kong they were being held. "I can confirm that the meeting has already started," Mr Bell said.

CPA, Hong Kong's main airline, has acted as go-between in the cargo jet affair since Captain Wang Hsi-chueh landed the CAL Boeing 747 and two other crew members at the southern Chinese city of Canton on May 3 and said he wanted to defect.

Talks Adjourn; Agreed To Meet Later

HK170418 Hong Kong AFP in English 0417 GMT 17 May 86

[Excerpts] Hong Kong, May 17 (AFP) -- Officials of Taiwan and China held their first direct talks in nearly 40 years here Saturday but failed to agree on how to sort out the aftermath of a defection to the mainland, a spokesman for the discussions said.

A statement issued by Cathay Pacific Airways, which served as an intermediary in arranging the sensitive negotiations, said the two parties adjourned their talks and agreed to meet at a later date.

Cathay later issued a statement, which it said was based on a phone call from one of the parties. It would not say which. The statement read:

"Representatives of China Airlines of Taiwan and the Civil Aviation Administration of China, Beijing, met in Hong Kong this morning to discuss the return of the CAL B747 cargo jet and crew members. The talks concluded with differences still to be resolved on the method of delivering the aircraft and the parties have agreed to meet again at a later date."

Cathay spokesman David Bell told journalists that the meeting ended about 11:15 a.m. (0315 GMT). He did not give any details on the contents or atmosphere of the talks and could not say when they would resume. A spokesman for CAL said that the airline would make an announcement in the early afternoon.

CAL Seeks Release of Pilot

OW171455 Taipei CNA in English 1436 GMT 17 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 17 (CNA) -- China Airlines, [CAL] is trying its best to rescue all three crew members of its Boeing 747 cargo jet stranded on the China mainland since May 3, CAL spokesman Larry Lin reiterated Saturday. He noted that representatives of Peiping's Civil Aviation Administration of China [CAAC] agreed to release only two of the three-man crew, co-pilot Tung Kuang-hsing and flight engineer Chiu Ming-chih, in the 80-minute talks held at the Hong Kong Country Club in the British colony Saturday morning. Lin stressed that the CAL representatives are instructed to rescue all the three stranded crew members, the B198 jumbo jet and its cargo.

When asked if Peiping's CAAC refused to release the captain of the cargo jet, Wang Hsi-chueh, Lin said, "we would, of course, agree to rescue Tung Kuang-hsing and Chiu Ming-chih and bring them home first. But we will never give up our efforts in trying to rescue Wang Hsi-chueh." Wang's family members also requested China Airlines Saturday to try every possible means to bring the captain back home after learning of CAAC's intention to release only Tung and Chiu.

'Friendly Atmosphere' Noted

HK170542 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 0530 GMT 17 May 86

[Excerpt] Hong Kong, 17 May (XINHUA) -- Representatives of the Civil Aviation Administration of China and of China Airlines [CAL] met in the country club, Hong Kong, this morning to begin talks on the question of handing back to CAL Boeing freighter 747 No B-198 and two crew members. XINHUA has learned that the representatives of the two sides discussed the time, place, and procedure for handing back the aircraft and crew members. Each side stated its position. The talks proceeded in a friendly atmosphere. The two sides will continue the talks.

Talks Participants Disclosed

OW170947 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 1103 GMT 17 May 86

[Text] Hong Kong, May 17 (XINHUA) -- Discussion opened at the Shenshuiwan Country Club this morning between the Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC) and Taiwan's China Airlines (CAL) on the return to CAL of a Boeing 747 cargo plane, two crew members and the cargo. The discussion covered the time, place and procedures of the hand-over, it was learned. The representatives from CAAC and CAL stated their views in a friendly atmosphere. They will meet for further talks.

Taking part on the CAAC side were Zhang Ruipu (manager of CAAC Hong Kong office), Lu Ruiling (a CAAC deputy departmental director) and Liu Yuanfan (chief engineer of the CAAC Beijing bureau).

On the CAL side were Zhong Zanrong and Chen Xunwei, manager and deputy manager of the CAL Hong Kong office, and Chen Enjin (special assistant to the CAL general manager and chief of planning section).

CAL Issues Statement on Progress

OW171009 Taipei CNA in English 0941 GMT 17 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 17 (CNA) -- The first round of talks between China Airlines [CAL] and Peiping's Civil Aviation Administration of China [CAAC] over the return of a CAL jumbo jet and its crew and cargo concluded at 11:20 a.m. Saturday at the country club in Hong Kong, according to a CAL press statement.

The statement said that representatives of the two civil airlines will meet again Sunday morning to discuss the handing over of the Boeing 747 stranded on the Chinese mainland since May 3. But the statement did not mention the exact venue for the second-round talks.

During Saturday's meeting, the statement said, CAAC representatives suggested that CAL send its personnel to the southern mainland city of Canton to get back its plane, cargo and crew members. But the ROC [Republic of China] national flag carrier rejected the proposal in consideration of safety. CAL instead recommended either that the handing over be held in Hong Kong or that CAL entrust a third party to go to Canton to take delivery of its aircraft, cargo and crew. The CAAC delegates said they will "study" the proposals, the statement said.

During the talks, CAL asked the Chinese Communists to release all the three crew members on board, namely, pilot Wang Hsi-chueh, copilot Tung Kwang-hsing and flight engineer Chiu Ming-chih. But CAAC only agreed to return the latter two, according to the CAL statement.

Talks To Stretch Into Third Day

HK180448 Hong Kong AFP in English 0446 GMT 18 May 86

[Excerpt] Hong Kong, May 18 (AFP) -- Historic talks between Taiwan and China over the return from the mainland of a cargo jet and its crew will stretch into a third day, Chinese officials said after a second meeting here Sunday. The two sides met Sunday for two hours according to informed sources in the exclusive Hong Kong Club in the business centre of the British territory. The meeting ended around 12 noon with the three member Chinese delegation emerging first from the first floor conference room in the 21-storey building. Before being driven away in a mercedes car, one of the Chinese team, Liu Yuanfang told reporters: "The meeting will start again tomorrow at 10 am." He did not say where the talks would be held.

Asked how the talks had gone, Mr Liu, a Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC) [official] from Beijing said: "CAAC insisted that the handover (of the cargo jet and crew) should be in Guangzhou." He did not say whether CAAC was also insisting to stick by the proposal it put to the first round of talks here Saturday that Taiwan send representatives to Guangzhou to receive the aircraft and crew. Nor did he say what China had replied to three counter proposals from Taiwan.

Taiwan rejected the Chinese proposal for the handover at Saturday's meeting in a luxury country club on the south side of the island. Instead they gave three alternatives: The plane and crew be flown to Hong Kong, be picked up by a third party in Quangzhou or sent back directly.

The Chinese side at the talks, all officials of CAAC, said Saturday they would reply to the Taiwan proposals at their next meeting.

The venue for Sunday's talks was again kept secret in an apparent bid by both sides to keep the meeting low-key.

Saturday's meeting was originally scheduled for the offices of Hong Kong's Cathay Pacific Airways (CPA) which has acted as an intermediary in the affair, but was switched to the plush Hong Kong Country Club on the south side of the island in an apparent bid to keep the talks low key.

Site of Plane's Return Snags Talks

HK180600 Hong Kong Commercial Radio in English 0530 GMT 18 May 86

[Text] Talks between China and Taiwan failed because of China Airlines [CAL] refusal to send a crew to Guangzhou to receive the aircraft. At a news conference after a 2-hour meeting with China Airlines representatives the chief Chinese negotiator said Beijing is insisting that it is an internal matter and won't allow a third party to pick up the plane. Fanny Fung has been covering the story.

[Begin recording] Airline officials from both sides held two hours of talks at the Hong Kong Club building in Central. Afterwards CAAC [Civil Aviation Administration of China] chief representative Zhang Ruipu gave a news conference at the NEW CHINA NEWS AGENCY [NCNA] office in Happy Valley. Mr Zhang said both sides have again failed to reach an agreement and further talks need to be held. He said Taiwan had already agreed to get back the plane in Guangzhou but through a third party.

Mr Zhang said CAAC rejected this, because this is an internal matter which should only be solved by both sides. He added China's principle is to return two crew members, the aircraft, and its cargo altogether but stressed CAL must sent someone to Guangzhou to do the deal. Mr Zhang said both sides did not touch on the number of crewmen to be returned, but he reiterated China would respect the will of the pilot Wang Xijue to allow him to stay in the mainland. This is Fanny Fung at the NCNA for Commercial Radio news. [end recording]

Another round of talks has been arranged for tomorrow but the venue has not been disclosed.

CAAC Representative on Talks

OW180714 Beijing XINHUA in English 0656 GMT 18 May 86

[Text] Hong Kong, May 18 (XINHUA) -- Discussion continued here this morning between the Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC) and Taiwan's China Airlines (CAL) on the hand-over to CAL of a Boeing 747 cargo plane, two crew members and the cargo. The two sides were reported to have exchanged views in a warm and friendly atmosphere. A representative of CAAC said that it was natural to have differences of opinion on some details and expressed the belief that "there is no problem that cannot be solved between brothers." The two sides agreed to continue the discussion tomorrow.

'No Progress' in Second Round

OW181501 Taipei CNA in English 1450 GMT 18 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 18 (CNA) -- China Airlines Taipei headquarters said Sunday that the second-round meeting between China Airlines and Peiping's Civil Aviation Administration of China held in Hong Kong Sunday resulted in no progress at all on the return of the CAL cargo jet and crew stranded on the China Mainland since May 3.

CAL Spokesman Lin Liang-chih said that the Chinese Communist side still insisted that CAL send representatives to Canton to receive the jet, crew and cargo and that no "third person" will be allowed to act on behalf of CAL. Lin reiterated CAL's stand of not sending people to the mainland but affirmed that CAL will never give up its decision to rescue the plane and its crew members.

He said CAL decided not to send people to Canton for security reasons. Who should be responsible for problems that might arise on his way [words indistinct] pilot to Canton to fly back the plane, Lin asked. He pointed out that the cargo jet has been moved to Peiping and any evil intention could cause unimaginable results.

Lin said CAL's representatives asked in the meeting to talk by phone with the jet crew member Tung Kuang-hsing and Chiu Ming-chih who have expressed their wishes to return to the Republic of China. CAAC didn't accept the proposal but agreed to study it.

CAL and CAAC will meet in a third round Monday, Lin said.

Break Off of Talks Denied

HK190510 Hong Kong Commercial Radio in English 0430 GMT 19 May 86

[Text] Taiwan has dismissed reports that it will break off talks with China on the China Airlines [CAL] plane and crew members if the Chinese maintain their present stubborn stand. CAL spokesman Larry Lin rejected the report on the phone a short while ago to our reporter Fanny Fund.

[Begin recording] [Lin] Thats not true. In order to rescue our crew members from the mainland to Taiwan we will make all the efforts to do so. We will continue to talk with the Civil Aviation Administration of China [CAAC] people this afternoon in Hong Kong to solve this problem. We hope an agreement to be accepted by both parties to be reached this afternoon during the talks. I think there should be something that both parties can accept.

[Fung] You mean today?

[Lin] Well, if not today, maybe tomorrow. I don't know how many times the talks will be coninued. But, since they agreed to release the crew and aircraft, and want to receive the crew members and aircraft, there's only a matter of procedure, so I think agreement should be reached [sentence as heard]. [end recording]

The third round of talks is scheduled to start at 4 o'clock [0800 GMT]. There have been several reports of different venues for the meeting but the latest is that it will be at the Jockey Club in Happy Valley. The previous two rounds have been deadlocked over the method of returning the cargo plane and its crew members. China wants Taiwan to send a team to Guangzhou to fly the plane and crew out, but Taiwan wants a third party to do this.

CAAC To Deliver Plane to Hong Kong

HK191036 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 0947 GMT 19 May 86

[Text] Hong Kong, 19 May (XINHUA) -- Today, at their third round of talks, the representatives of the Civil Aviation Administration of China. [CAAC] and China Airlines [CAL] agreed to respectively hand over and receive the CAL's B198 Boeing 747 cargo plane, its two crew members, and its cargo load in Hong Kong.

During the talks over the past 2 days, they disagreed on the place to deliver and receive the plane. The CAAC representatives suggested that direct delivery in Guangzhou was reasonable. On the other hand, although the CAL representatives agreed to go to Guangzhou, they wanted to ask a third party to receive them. Otherwise, they preferred to receive them in Hong Kong.

Today, Zhang Ruipu, a CAAC representative, described the talks over the past 2 days as fruitful. He said: We always think that all problems can be solved between brothers after holding sincere, cordial talks. As far as the question of where to hand over the plane is concerned, we have repeatedly suggested that the best plan would be to hand over it in Guangzhou and have promised not to play any tricks.

In order to convey our greatest sincerity and to make an early reunion possible between Mr Tung Kuang-hsing and Mr Chiu Ming-chih and their families, and having taken into consideration the difficulties indicated by our CAL counterparts, we have agreed to hand over the plane in Hong Kong.

Zhang Ruipu immediately added: However, we must, out of necessity first, reach an agreement on the problem of handing over the plane in Hong Kong and on such things as security, handover formalities, methods, and other technical problems in order to make delivery safe, fast, and smooth.

The representatives of both sides are glad that an agreement has been reached and they have agreed to continue with the talks tomorrow afternoon.

Taipei Comments on Negotiations

OW171254 Taipei Domestic Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 16 May 86

[Station commentary: "Display Wisdom and Courage To Win the Negotiations"]

[Text] Dear listeners: CAL representatives are scheduled to hold negotiations with the Chinese Communist CAAC in Hong Kong today to resolve problems regarding the incident of the CAL B-198 cargo plane's landing at the Canton airport. According to international practice, it is not necessary to hold negotiations on incidents similar to this, which have occurred frequently in international affairs. Last March a British Golden Lion Airlines passenger plane was diverted to our country's Chiang Kai-shek Airport because of closure of the Hong Kong airport. Mechanical problems prevented the plane from continuing its flight. Acting according to international practice, we took proper care of the plane and its passengers, and did not try to find fault with the dozen Chinese Communists personnel among the passengers, who, after the plan was repaired the next day, left with other passengers.

Based on this example, in handling the incident of the CAL cargo plane, the Chinese Communists should have released the plane and its crew on the same day. Harboring a sinister scheme, the Chinese Communists have played all sorts of tricks to retain the plane and its crew since its landing at Canton's Paiyun Airport, and so far have not brought the two crewmembers before the press. Their behavior shows that they are deliberately trying to create contradictions and utilize the incident to carry out their united front conspiracy and force us to break away with our policy of no negotiations with the communists, thereby creating an illusion of a beginning a dialogue.

As a result of our careful arrangements, steadfast stand, and negotiations through the third party, Cathay Pacific Airways, and based on the humantarian stand to recover the plane and its crew, the Chinese Communists were compelled to accept a decision that the civilian-run CAL will hold negotiations with the Chinese Communist CAAC in Hong Kong and that the scope of negotiations will be limited to business between the two airline companies.

The Chinese Communists' unreasonable and unlawful retention of the plane and its crew has already exceeded the time limit. Their conspracy is now (?seen through) by international public opinion, which doubts and criticizes the Chinese Communists for using the incident to carry out political blackmail. Thus they are placed in an increasingly awkward position and under growing pressure. We can deal with the Chinese Communists' deceitful tricks only with an open aboveboard attitude, and use the rightful humanitarian stand and international practice to make them give up their unjustifiable retention of plane and crew and their political blackmail [words indistinct].

Our reasonable stand has already won broad (?sympathy) abroad, while the Chinese Communists are caught in a quagmire, as if having been handed a hot potato. However, known for their deceptive negotiating skills, the Chinese Communists will undoubtedly resort to all sorts of crafy tricks. Hence, our CAL representatives should be well prepared at every stage of negotiations and grasp [words indistinct].

First, negotiations for (recovering CAL's plane and crew) should be based on international practice and relevant civil aviation rules and regulations. Other conditions and demands that unexpectedly crop up but are irrelevant to the negotiations should be rejected.

Second, it is necessary to insist upon the immediate return of both the plane and crew at the same time. If the Chinese Communists persistently demand to keep Wang Hsi-chueh as a defector to the communist side, he should be given an opportunity to publicly state his intent without any pressure. As for Tung Kuang-hsing and Chiu Ming-chih, whom the Chinese Communists have already declared as wanting to return to Taiwan, they should not only be returned to Taiwan right away but also [words indistinct].

Third, as the Chinese Communists have demanded that their negotiations with CAL representatives should be closed-door, it is necessary to avoid erroneous reports and outside interference in the course of negotiations. However, after the negotiations are concluded, their results should be published immediately so that the Chinese Communists cannot make up their own story.

We deem it a most difficult task to negotiate with the communist bandits, and a slight negligence could lead to [words indistinct]. We hope that, backed by the rightful stand, CAL representatives will display their greatest wisdom and courage, adhere to the principles and stand, and assume neither an overbearing nor servile attitude in carefully conducting the negotiations in order to smash their opponents' tricks and successfully complete the mission.

CHINA POST Editorial

[Editorial: "The CAL, CAAC Talks"]

[Text] The final agreement on the CAL and CAAC talks in Hong Kong beginning at 10 a.m. today will pave the way for an eventual settlement for the return of the CAL jumbo cargo jet which landed at Canton under mysterious circumstances.

China Airlines has demonstrated great patience in handling this incident. It demanded the return of the jumbo cargo jet with its cargo and crew from the very beginning without any political implications or considerations. It has treated this incident as a pure and simple aviation matter just as CAL handled a similar plane incident involving Chinese Communist personnel on board. In that case -- the forced landing of a British civil flight carrying many Chinese Communist personnel on board -- the CAL took good care of the passengers by permitting them to spend a comfortable night at the airport hotel and allowing them to leave the next day without any fuss.

The final agreement by the CAAC authorities to talk to CAL representatives in Hong Kong Saturday instead of next Monday shows their awakening to the fact that there is not much they can gain by playing this incident up to gain political advantage internationally. Even the parading of Captain Wang Hsi-chueh with his jumbo jet in Peking to meet his 82-year-old father had failed to win a favorable impression for the Chinese Communists. Wang, with a stone-cold expression upon meeting his father, belied the Chinese Communist claim that he "defected" because he was homesick for his father and other family members.

CAAC director Hu Yi-chou's claim that other crew members, co-pilot Tung Huang-hsing and flight engineer Chiu Ming-chih, were free to leave the Chinese Mainland in a few days was also found to be a lie as they disappeared from public view for many days and were certainly not "free to come and go" as foreign wire dispatchers reported.

CAL's insistence on not going to the Chinese Mainland to negotiate except through the third party of the Cathay Pacific Airways (CPA) has certainly born fruit. It is hoped that the CAAC representative will not drag the talks on for days with irrelevant issues other than returning the jumbo jet, its crew members and compensation for the spoiled cargo.

If the CAAC representatives should bring up any irrelevant issues, the CAL representatives should resolutely reject such introductions and stick to the demands of returning the plane, crew members and compensation for the cargo. CAL has handled this situation well and all the people should support the representatives in Hong Kong to win a victory in this fight.

ZHONGOUO TONGXUN SHE Commentary

HK190230 Hong Kong ZHONGOUO TONGXUN SHE in Chinese 1022 GMT 18 May 86

["Short commentary" by Kuo Feng: "Favorable Atmosphere at CAAC-CAL Talks"]

[Text] Hong Kong, 18 May (ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE) -- The talks between the Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC) and China Airlines (CAL), which have attracted worldwide attention, were resumed today. Due to differences of view, the meeting was again adjourned. However, it was held in a favourable atmosphere and there was some progress.

The question regarding the number of crew members to be returned has been basically settled at today's talks. The CAAC will return Tung Kuang-hsing and Chiu Ming-chih. The site for handing over the crew members, aircraft, and cargo has also been settled. CAL has agreed to receive them at Guangzhou. However, there is still a divergence of views on the methods of receiving them. CAL wants to entrust a third party with the work but the CAAC disagrees. Judging from this, the meeting today is "one floor higher" than it was yesterday. Although the talks were adjourned on two occasions owing to differences of view, they have not reached an impasse.

The reasonable attitude of the CAL has come as a surprise. Prior to the talks, the CAL had repeatedly stressed that the CAAC should return three crew members, including Wang Hsi-chueh. The question of Wang Hsi-chueh is most likely to lead the talks to an impasse because the CAAC, in line with the principle of "one's own free will," will surely categorically reject the demand. Hence, there will be nothing to be negotiated. However, CAL did not engage in endless quibbling over the Wang Hsi-chueh issue so that the talks could come to substantive issues in a little over an hour.

CAAC refrained from giving this matter wide publicity before the talks. This can be regarded as great sincerity on the part of CAAC. For example, it proposed that the venue be kept secret, it maintained silence toward the media, and it refrained from exerting pressure through public opinion. Its proposal to return the crew members, aircraft, and cargo in Guangzhou does not make things difficult for the other party in the least. (CAAC cited the reasons for this as easy, convenient, and time-saving.) It is fair and reasonable that the aircraft should fly from where it landed.

CAAC and CAL did not make the venues for the two talks public. From this act, people sensed that there seemed to be a tacit understanding between both parties. For example, before the first meeting was held yesterday, CAAC had kept silent about the venue, while CAL had repeatedly stressed that it would be held at the Swire Building. There seemed to be a great divergence of views. However, at the appointed time, both parties immediately went to the Country Club in Clearwater Bay and thus prevented themselves from being tracked down by hundreds of Chinese and foreign reporters. It would have been difficult to achieve this without prior tacit understanding. The two rounds of talks did not involve political issues and were held in a good atmosphere. The atmosphere at the talks today was even more harmonious, showing the tacit understanding between both parties.

The good sense on the part of CAL, the sincerity on the part of CAAC, and the tacit understanding between both parties have presented people with a hope that the talks will be successful.

TAIWAN SUCCESSFULLY TESTS AIR-TO-AIR MISSILE

HK180938 Hong Kong AFP in English 0935 GMT 18 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 18 (AFP) -- Taiwan has successfully test-fired its first self-developed air-to-air missile, military spokesman Major General Chang Huei-yuan announced Sunday.

Maj. Gen. Chang told a press conference the infrared "Tien Chien" (Sky Sword) missile successfully made a pursuit attack on a supersonic Hawk missile in a test April 17 at an unspecified military base.

Two videotapes showing the test firing and the development process at the Chungshan Institute of Science and Technology (CIST) in northern Taiwan were also shown to reporters.

The announcement of the successful test firing, described by Maj Gen Chang as a breakthrough in advanced national defence technology, came as Taiwan and Chinese airline officials held a second day of talks over the return of a Taiwan cargo plane flown to the mainland by a defecting pilot May 3.

The talks are the first between the rival governments in almost 40 years.

The development of Taiwan's first air-to-air missile was the result of joint efforts by science and technology experts in military, state and private enterprise coordinated by the CIST, a weapons research center under the supervision of the defense ministry, Maj. Gen. Chang said.

"It marks a big step forward in the development of our country's highly sophisticated weapons," he added.

Taiwan made a successful test-firing of its first ground-to-air short-and-medium range, all-purpose missile "Tien Kung (Sky Bow)" March 27.

LIU ZAIFU INTERVIEWED ON PRC 'CULTURAL ATMOSPHERE'

HK161236 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 16 May 86 p 2

[Special article by reporter Kung Shuang-yin: "Liu Zaifu Discusses the Cultural Atmosphere"]

[Text] "Double Hundred" Policy Causes Strong Repercussions

In an interview with newspaper reporters, Liu Zaifu, director of the Institute of Literature under the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, said that the present economic reform must be given a complete and systematic exposition in the area of historical rationality, in order to really strike a note in the hearts of the people.

The 45-year-old literary theory specialist Liu Zaifu delivered his inaugural speech in 1984, when he assumed the post of director of the Institute of Literature, on implementing the "double hundred" (Let a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend) policy and creating an academically free and culturally healthy atmosphere. The speech caused strong repercussions at home and abroad. He always insists on the theory and principle that there are "academic freedom, academic dignity, academic virtue and academic characteristics." Over the years, he has proposed a series of new viewpoints concerning literary theory, such as the "dual combination of human nature" and the "stereoscopic nature of literature." These viewpoints have caused strong repercussions and discussions in literary circles. Not long ago, HONGQI magazine published a 15,000-character long article by literary theorist Chen Yong, which totally negates Liu Zaifu's viewpoints concerning literary theory. This article has received much attention from academic circles.

The critical article by Chen Yong did not change Liu Zaifu's practice of expressing his views.

We Must Carry Out Reforms in Our Soul

Li Zaifu held that reforms will end in failure if there is no strong ideological and theoretical foundation. He said: In the modern history of Asia, there have been two major reforms, namely the Meiji Revolution in Japan, which was a successful one; and the revolution in Iran, which was an unsuccessful one. Though the two revolutions were carried out voluntarily from top to bottom and conformed to the historical development trend, the former was supported by a strong ideological theory which stimulated the Japanese nation's enthusiasm for revolution, while the latter lacked the corresponding ideological conditions and it thus failed.

On China's present reforms, Liu Zaifu contends that the work of propaganda still focuses on the situation, principles and policies, and it has not reached the higher plane. We must also give theoretical exposition to our reforms so that the people will accept reforms by basing it on a deeper structure, the soul. Thus, the people will strengthen their psychological endurance in reforms. For this reason, we must advocate the spirit of pioneering, developing and exploring within the nation. And for the sake of this great and arduous exploration, we must create a corresponding cultural and pyschological environment. He said that our cultural propaganda must become the motivating force for reforming and modernizing the culture, and avoid the situation in which the open economy and the closed, conservative culture conflict with each other.

We Must Not Simply Classify Things Into Two Opposing Extremes

He also believes that in order to cause people to strengthen their psychological endurance in reforms, we should discuss some crucial theories. For example, we must get a clear idea about the relationship between the doctrine of history and that of ethics. Many things that are classified evil by the standards of the doctrine of ethics are good when we judge them by the standards of the doctrine of history. For instance, "breaking the egalitarian practice of eating from the same big pot" violates China's several centuries old ethical concept of not worrying about the number of people but worrying about uneven distribution. Judged from the doctrine of history, however, it is necessary to give full play to one's potential ability. Reforms are a historical process which offer people opportunities to compete rather than providing them with instant benefits. Otherwise, there would only be tens of millions of sluggards.

Liu Zaifu also believes that to create an atmosphere marked by academic freedom, academic characteristics, academic dignity, academic virtue, and a healthy culture is the ideological and cultural condition for scoring successes in reforms. He advocated that we must not hastily or simply classify the value of things into set categories. Instead, we should provide ample time and conditions for testing a new theory and viewpoint. When judging the rights and wrongs of a case, we should not act in a bookish way and take a statement from a certain text as the criterion for measuring the value of the case. Instead, we should judge whether or not the case conforms to the historical facts and can stand the test of practice. He said that in the academic study of ideological theory, we must advocate positive and active ideology and must not simply focus on criticism and negation. If a new idea, which has been developed after years of hard work, is simply and completely discarded with a single stroke, we shall never develop the normal cultural and academic atmosphere of stressing facts and reasoning. The people's mode of thinking will also become simplified, one-sided and influenced by thinking in terms of absolutes.

Cherish Outstanding Thinkers

In order to create a cultural atmosphere and psychological environment that corresponds to reforms, and in order to ease the psychological burden on reformists, Liu Zaifu called for cherishing those thinkers and theorists who support the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, support reforms and are outstanding. These theorists have a good foundation in terms of Marxist theoretical training, are far-sighted and are extraordinary people. It is completely correct that we should gradually restore their right to speak. It is hoped that we shall listen to their speeches more.

WEN WEI PO DETAILS GUANGDONG FAMILY PLANNING MEASURES

HK190249 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 19 May 86 p 3

[Special Dispatch: "Slight Relaxation in Guangdong Family Planning"]

[Text] Guangzhou, 18 May -- Yesterday (17 May), the 20th meeting of the 7th Guangdong Provincial People's Congress Standing Committee approved a resolution on a number of regulations on revising the "Guangdong Provincial Family Planning Rules."

According to the revised rules, an urban couple (referring to state cadres, workers, and urban residents) should have only one child. Those who are covered by one of the following five special cases may arrange to have a second child in accordance with the population plan target and the proper interval between births, after gaining the approval of the family planning departments of the county (city) or of a district subordinate to a country-level city:

1. If it has been verified by a family planning technical group at county-level and above that the first child is crippled as the result of a non-hereditary disease, and cannot grow into a normal laborer;

2. if one party to a remarriage has had only one child and the other party is childless; or if, before this marriage, both parties had had a child but these had been allotted by law to their former spouses, leaving the new couple childless;

3. if a woman who has been legally pronounced sterile becomes pregnant after adopting a child;

4. if the only child of a couple has already married;

5. if a person has been working in a mine or at sea for more than 5 successive years and is still engaged in such work.

For the rural population, it is advocated that each couple have only one child. If a couple wants a second child, this must be dealt with and rational arrangements made by the township government in accordance with the population plan target and the interval between births. Priority consideration can be given to those who meet the stipulations of the first four special cases listed above for an urban couple to have a second child, and also to a couple who has only had a daughter. The interval between births for those having a second child must be at least 4 years; the specific interval is to be laid down by the city or county people's government. It is strictly forbidden to have a third child, or a second child that is not covered by the plan.

The draft also sets out explicit regulations regarding family planning for minority nationalities. Minority-nationality couples dwelling in minority-nationality areas can have two children and, in special cases, three. They are strictly forbidden to have a fourth child, or a third child that is not covered by the plan. The autonomous prefectural and autonomous county people's governments will issue specific regulations in light of the local conditions and report them to the provincial people's government for approval.

The regulations also point out that cadres and workers who are marrying late (late marriage is reckoned as 3 years after the legal age of marriage) may have an extra 10 days holiday on their marriage. Those practicing late child-bearing (a woman's late child-bearing is reckoned as having a first child at the age of 24) will have an extra 15 days vacation when the child is born. Urban individual laborers, persons awaiting employment, and peasants who practice late marriage and child-bearing will be commended and suitably rewarded by their local people's government.

The revised regulations add three more rules to the family planning policy;

1. If one of the parties in the marriage is a state cadre, a worker, or an urban resident, and the spouse is a peasant, the arrangements for them should follow those in force in the wife's place of household registration.

2. Family planning for returned Overseas Chinese and dependents of Chinese living abroad will be carried out in accordance with the regulations of the state departments concerned; Hong Kong and Macao compatriots' spouses who are living in the interior will follow the interior family planning regulations.

3. It is advocated that people practice good child-care and resolutely follow the "Marriage Law" regulations banning marriage to close relatives. People who have been confirmed by hospitals at and above county-level to be suffering from serious hereditary diseases may not have children; pregnancies among such women must be terminated.

SINO-PORTUGUESE TALKS ON MACAO TO BEGIN IN JUNE

OW200834 Beijing XINHUA in English 0800 GMT 20 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 20 (XINHUA) -- Talks between the Chinese Government and the Government of Portugal on the settlement of the question of Macao will begin in Beijing in the last week of June, according to a press communique issued here today. The decision has been made by the two governments through friendly consultations, the press communique said.

The full text of the press communique reads:

"The Government of the People's Republic of China and the Government of the Republic of Portugal have decided through friendly consultations to begin talks in the last week of June 1986 in Beijing on the settlement of the question of Macao, which is a question left over from history. The head of the delegation of Chinese Government is Zhou Nan, vice-minister of foreign affairs, and the head of the delegation of the Portuguese Government is Ambassador Ruy Barbosa Medina."

PRC POSITION ON WORLD PEACE OUTLINED AT UN

OW171120 Beijing XINHUA in English 0939 GMT 17 May 86

[Text] United Nations, May 16 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Ambassador to the United Nations Liang Yufan stated today that maintaining world peace and international security are major objectives of China's foreign policy. The Chinese Government supports all efforts contributing to realizing these objectives, he said. In a letter to U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, Liang detailed China's position on world peace and security in response to a resolution adopted by the 40th session of the U.N. General Assembly.

Liang noted that today's world is in a turbulent situation and the danger of a world war still exists. However, "So long as the peoples of all countries in the world make a joint and unremitting effort, peace and security in the world can be maintained." Liang stressed the priority is "to halt the arms race and rivalry between the superpowers...and to ease tensions in the world." On how world security and national security are interrelated, Liang said China believes that "violation of a nation's independence and sovereignty jeopardizes world peace."

The ambassador said, "The strict adherence of the principle of peaceful coexistence in international relations is one of the effective ways to strengthen international security." He also urged countries to follow the guidelines for peaceful coexistence advocated by a group of governmental experts appointed by Perez de Cuellar. These experts declared in a report that "the concept of peaceful coexistence is applicable not only between countries with different social systems, but between countries sharing the same social system. When this concept is violated, even nations of similar social system may find themselves in sharp conflict."

Liang stressed that "peace is a necessary condition for development, and economic growth of developing countries and better relations between the north and the south are the important constituents for maintaining peace." China, he said, supports the developing countries' demand for a new international economic order. Liang also emphasized that dialogue and cooperation between the north and the south can promote economic development throughout the world, which in turn will contribute to world peace and security.

PRC ELECTED TO WHO EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

OW170844 Beijing XINHUA in English 0610 GMT 17 May 86

[Text] Geneva, May 16 (XINHUA) -- The World health Organization (WHO) ended its 39th conference here Friday with the adoption of several resolutions and reports aimed at providing health facilities for everyone by the year of 2000. In one resolution, WHO appealed to its members to strengthen sanitary systems, focusing on primary sanitary needs, and urged support to developing countries' needs in this field. The conference condemned Israel's policy to annex Arab territories and reiterated that Palestinians should have the right to establish their own sanitary and medical systems. During the conference, which began May 5, China and 10 other members were elected to WHO's Executive Committee.

PRC TO EXPAND AGRICULTURAL ASSISTANCE TO AFRICA

OW171907 Beijing XINHUA in English 1357 GMT 17 May 86

[Text] Guangzhou, May 17 (XINHUA) -- China will expand, to the best of its ability, its agricultural assistance to African countries confronting serious food problems, according to a six-day Asia-Africa workshop on food policy, which closed here today. The assistance will first aim at food production projects and small- to medium-scale rural industries. It will also aim at intellectual cooperation by expanding training, research and management opportunities both in Africa and in China. The workshop was organized by the United Nations World Food Council, with the purpose of introducing Asian countries', especially China's, experience in food production to African countries. African food policy makers and experts said that since China is now self-sufficient in feeding its billion population, its food production experience is of great significance to Africa.

They identified the following seven areas where more specific cooperation and exchange of experience could be useful in helping solve African food problems:

-- Water management and small-scale irrigation technology;
-- Dry-land farming and anti-desertification measures;
-- Rural energy production, such as through bio-gas technology;
-- Institution building, notably in the area of farm cooperatives;
-- Training in agricultural support services, including extension, animal husbandry and veterinary services;
-- Exchange of seed germplasm and assistance in seed production technology;
-- Small-scale rural industrial development.

Considering the limited financial resources of both Africa and China, African and Chinese participants called for "triangular cooperation", which consists of Chinese experience and technology and African resources and manpower, coupled with financial assistance from international organizations and developed countries.

A document entitled "Conclusions and Recommendations" was distributed at the closing ceremony of the workshop toady. It will be presented to the 12th ministerial session of the World Food Council to be held in Rome from June 16 to 19. World Food Council officials said the ministerial session will focus its attention on concrete follow-up actions by Asian and African governments, as well as by bilerateral and multilateral agencies assisting African countries in solving their food problems.

WFC To Consider Proposal

OW171823 Beijing XINHUA in English 1517 GMT 17 May 86

[Text] Guangzhou, May 17 (XINHUA) -- Maurice J. Williams, executive director of the United Nations World Food Council [WFC], called China's proposal for agricultural assistance to Africa "an excellent suggestion." China proposed to help African countries to develop agricultral production by using funds from international organizations and developed countries, China's experience and technology and Africa's manpower and resources at the six-day Asia-Africa workshop on food policy, which ended here today.

Speaking at a press conference, Williams said the World Food Council would convene a ministeral session next month to study China's "triangular co-operation" proposal and try to win support from the international community. He said the World Food Council considered China's experience and technology in agriculture "feasible." China has solved th problem of feeding its billion people and so far has signed 75 projects of assistance in 4 African countries.

If China could gain funds from the international community, he said, its cooperation with African countries in food and agricultural fields would surely expand and work better. He said he would raise more funds for China's aid projects in Africa. Since the Organization of African Unity decided last July to give priority to agricultural development and double the investment in agriculture in the next five years, China's experience would be of greater significance to Africa, he noted.

PRC JOINS 96 WORLD SCIENTIFIC, TECHNOLOGY BODIES

OW171221 Beijing XINHUA in English 1109 GMT 17 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 17 (XINHUA) -- China is a member of 96 international science and technology organizations, it was announced here today. Speaking to a group of Chinese reporters, Chen Shengwu, member of the secretariat of the China Association for Science and Technology, said that in the past five years Chinese scientific societies have joined their international counterparts as China's sole legitimate representatives. Over 200 well-known Chinese scientists,such as Zhou Peiyuan, Qian Sanqiang, Cao Tianqin, Zhang Wei and Wu Jieping, now hold leading posts in international science and technology organizations, he added. Chinese Academic Institutions of Science and Technology have established ties with their counterparts in 40 countries and regions, Chen said.

Chinese scientists and technicians will continue to pursue scientific and technological exchanges with their foreign counterparts in a bid to promote the progress of the cause of mankind," he said. Statistics show that the China Association for Science and Technology and Chinese academic societies sponsored more than 300 international academic seminars, and nearly 1,000 lectures in China in the past six years; they were attended by some 10,000 foreign specialists. Meanwhile, China has also sent abroad more than 1,000 scientists and technicians to study and lecture so that they may acquaint themselves with the latest developments in their fields. Speaking on the scientific and technological exchanges between both sides of the Taiwan Straits, Chen Shengwu said that international exchanges help scientists from both the Chinese mainland and Taiwan start exchanges among themselves.

LIAOWANG ON SINO-U.S. SURVEY OF WESTERN PACIFIC

HK150247 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION No 18, 5 May 86 pp 32-34

[Article by Chen Ming: "Chronicle of the First Sino-U.S. Cooperation in the Survey of the Tropical Western Pacific"]

[Excerpts] From last winter to this spring, the China-made Xiangyanghong No 140 scientific survey ship traveled across the Eastern and Western Hemispheres and the equator, covering 15,500 nautical miles in 75 days and successfully completing the task of surveying the sea-atmospheric mutual reaction in the western Pacific as set in the first Sino-U.S. cooperation.

This was the first activity of the Sino-U.S. cooperation in the 4-year survey of the tropical western Pacific, which is the main component of the plan on the study of the international sea atmosphere and the global atmosphere. It has been listed as one of China's scientific and technological projects during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period. Therefore, this voyage has drawn the attention of the countries on the Pacific coast as well as the rest of the world.

A Severe Challenge

Through over 80 years of analysis and study, scientists have discovered that the tropical western Pacific area has the highest temperature of the world's large oceans. Not only is this where typhoons that attack China originate, but it is also a key area that causes abnormal weather throughout the world. Therefore, the study of the reaction on each other of this sea area and atmosphere has become a major subject of common interest among the world's oceanologists. In July 1984, China's State Oceanography Bureau and the U.S. National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration signed a "Sino-U.S. plan for cooperation in the study of the mutual reaction of the sea atmosphere in the tropical western Pacific."

Sailing Across the Eastern and Western Hemispheres

On 12 December 1985, this ocean going scientific survey ship left the Huangpu harbor for the vast Pacific, carrying 119 Chinese scientists, surveyors, and crew members.

At 0230 on 14 December, the survey ship was sailing into the Pacific after passing the Balintang Channel north of the Philippines.

At 0346 on 24 December Beijing time, the Xiangyanghong No 14 was crossing the international time change line and entering the Western Hemisphere.

Hawaiian Garlands Expressing Deep Feelings

After sailing 6,300 nautical miles, the Xiangyanghong No 14 scientific survey ship arrived at its first stop on the morning of 27 December -- Honolulu, capital of the Hawaiian Islands. This was China's second ship to visit Honolulu since the establishment of Sino-U.S. diplomatic relations, but was the first visit by a Chinese scientific survey ship. The local press and telecast gave much publicity to the arrival of the ship, and Overseas Chinese, citizens of Chinese origin, and Chinese students studying there came to see the ship.

Exploring the Mysteries of Oceans

In Hawaii, nine American scientists boarded the ship to take part in explorations. By way of Johnston Island southwest of Honolulu, the Xiangyanghong No 14 arrived at its first comprehensive survey station in the second section of its voyage on 9 January. The Chinese and American scientists on board the ship held fast to their posts in spite of the bad weather.

The "Native Place of Winds and Storms"

The sea area near the equator was the main area to be surveyed by the Chinese and American scientists. This is where the highest sea temperature lies. It is a key area affecting the atmosphere throughout the world. People call it the "native place of winds and storms" and the "heart of warm currents."

American scientist Richard Baber is a famous professor of zoology and botany. He has made a profound study of oceanic organisms and elementary productive forces and engaged in on-the-spot surveys of the Indian Ocean, the Atlantic, and the eastern Pacific. He was very happy and excited in his first survey of the western Pacific with the Chinese scientists. He said: "20 years ago, the Soviet Union surveyed a large area of the western Pacific. But the methods were very backward at that time, so little was achieved. Today, we are in the era of computer automation. With advanced implements, it is possible for us to obtain richer and more complete material and to make greater progress. In this way, we will be able to make contributions to solving the problem of abnormal weather in the world." Professor Baber was friendly to the Chinese scientists. He gave them a lecture on the atmospheres in tropical oceans and the world and patiently answered their questions. During the survey, the Chinese and American scientists closely cooperated with each other, discussed problems, and made suggestions on improving work.

Coordinated Cooperation

On 19 January, the Xiangyanghong No 14 survey ship arrived at a point 165 degrees east longitude which intersects with the equator, where the scientists were ready to place a moored buoy that could automatically observe the sea environment. This would be the first sea observation station to be built by China and the United States on the equator in the western Pacific. With it, they would be able to transmit to a satellite information concerning sea meteorology and sea environments, no matter how bad weather conditions would be. Therefore, placing the anchored buoy would be one of the major projects in Sino-U.S. cooperation in the survey of the western Pacific.

Many Good Results Achieved

In their survey from the Eastern Hemisphere to the Western Hemisphere, the Chinese and American scientists conducted observation work in 4 sections at 251 stations. They obtained first-hand data and material concerning marine physics, marine chemistry, marine biology, marine meteorology, sea currents, sea temperatures, and salinity. In addition, they obtained for the first time material concerning the atmosphere 27,000 meters above this sea area and sent meteorological material to their satellite on 220 occasions.

The joint survey by the Chinese and American scientists on both sides of the Pacific suggests that scientists of the two countries are taking the lead in exploring the atmospheric changes throughout the world.

The Chinese scientists also made prominent achievements during this voyage. Of all the items probed during the survey, 78 percent were carried out by China for the first time. For the first time, too, China succeeded in carrying out a survey in and obtaining samples from a depth of 4,500 meters. The material concerning the structure of tropical salt, nutritious salt, chlorophyll, and carbon-14 was obtained by China for the first time in the western Pacific. All this will provide evidence on sea-atmospheric mutual reaction and bases for estimating the fishery situation in the western Pacific area. The material concerning carbon dioxide in the air, soil, and rain samples is very important to the study of weather changes. The Xiangyanghong No 14 survey ship returned to Guangzhou safe and sound on 24 February. The motherland extended both of its arms to welcome its triumphant sons and daughters. At a welcoming ceremony, Chen Dehong, deputy director of the State Oceanography Bureau, said excitedly that the success of the first voyage served as a good beginning in the 4-year Sino-U.S. joint survey. China will further expand its international cooperation and, together with scientists of other countries, make greater contributions to mankind!

PLAN BY WEST TO STABILIZE CURRENCY RATES ASSESSED

HK200346 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 13 May 86 p 7

["New Analysis" by Zhang Liang: "Drop of U.S. Dollar and Backer's Currency Program"]

[Excerpts] The currency exchange rate is the focal point in the discussions on economic questions at the Tokyo summit of seven nations. The summit finally adopted the "backer's currency program" proposed by the United States, which stressed stabilizing the currency exchange rate through strengthening the coordination of economic policies. Public opinion in the foreign countries believe that the "program" will turn the present system under which currency exchange rates fluctuate "freely" into a system under which currency exchange rates fluctuate in a "controlled" way.

According to "Tokyo Economic Manifesto," the basic points of the program are to install the so-called "Conference of Ministers of Finance of the Group of Seven Countries," including Italy and Canada, and to enable the ministers of finance of the seven countries to cooperate more often and more closely and jointly supervise the economic policies together with the International Monetary Fund.

The summit admitted that the "uncertainty about the trend of currency exchange rates" is a serious challenge faced by the world economy today, and believed that efforts must be made to stabilize the currency exchange rates. As a result, the summit finally adopted the program proposed by U.S. Treasury Secretary James A. Baker. In fact, the program is only an agreement in principle and does not provide any specific regulations on how to stabilize the currency exchange rates, thus leaving the disagreements and contradictions on the question of currency exchange rates between Europe, Japan and the United States basically unsolved. Some Western papers commented that owing to the different situations and conflict of interest among the countries concerned, the countries concerned will eventually have different interpretations of the agreement and act in their respective ways. U.S. Treasury Secretary Baker also said that the agreement "should not be viewed as a mechanism which interferes in the currency market," and the actual effect of the agreement will mostly be decided by the concrete implementation of the agreement by the countries concerned. So the implementation of the program will probably become a hard nut for all the member countries of the summit to crack, and the exchange rate between the U.S. dollar and the Japanese yen will probably continue to be the focal point in the future disputes.

YAO YILIN ON ECONOMIC, TRADE RELATIONS WITH U.S.

OW200850 Beijing XINHUA in English 0811 GMT 20 May 86

[Text] New York, May 19 (XINHUA) -- China looks forward to the furtherance of Sino-U.S. economic and trade relations through joint efforts by both sides, said visiting Chinese Vice Premier Yao Yilin today. Speaking at a luncheon given in his honour by the Asia Society, the Foreign Policy Association and the National Committee on U.S.-China relations, Yao said, to reinvigorate the domestic economy while opening to the outside world is China's longterm basic state policy.

Yao said during the 6th Five-Year Plan period (1981-1985), China had achieved great successes in its modernization drive. The annual growth rate of the gross value of its industrial and agricultural production averaged 11 percent and the people's living standards improved markedly. In future development, Yao noted, the Chinese economy will turn from a closed or semi-closed mode to an open one characterized by active engagement in international exchanges and from a unitary planned economy to a planned commodity economy coupled with market regulations. China's foreign trade has grown considerably in the last five years, Yao said. The volume of China's foreign trade reached 69.62 billion U.S. dollars in 1985. China has obtained in various ways 10.3 billion U.S. dollars of external loans, absorbed 5.4 billion dollars of direct foreign investment and established a number of joint ventures and ventures with exclusive foreign investment. During these five years, China imported more than 10,000 items of advanced technology, he added.

The vice-premier said, taking the entire Sixth Five-Year Plan period as a whole, China's import and export are in the main balanced with moderate surplus. The decline of China's foreign exchange reserve from the end of 1984 to 1985 was soon brought under control. Despite the confusion caused by oil price plunge in world market, China's export in the first quarter of 1986 was higher than the same period in 1985. Yao yilin said, in the 7th Five-Year Plan period (1986-1990) there will be an even greater development in China's foreign economic relations and trade. But China is a developing country. The expansion of its export is the key to the further growth of its foreign trade. And therefore, the scope and scale of its foreign economic relations and trade and technological exchanges with foreign countries will depend on its export abilities for foreign exchange.

Vice-Premier Yao Yilin said, China-U.S. "bilateral trade and economic and technogical cooperation have already scored encouraging achievements." Now the United States has become China's third largest trading partner. In 1985, the volume of China-U.S. trade reached a record 7.3 billion U.S. dollars. By the end of 1985, contracted direct investment by American businessmen in China exceeded 2.1 billion dollars and China-U.S. joint venture enterprises reached 130. He said, as China is now engaged in large-scale economic reconstruction and needs to import advanced technology, equipment and necessary materials, as a result, China is a practical market.

Yao stressed, "The Chinese Government attaches great importance to the progress of Sino-U.S. economic and trade relations." Although China-U.S. economic and trade relations have developed rapidly in recent year, he continued, they still fall far short of a desired level. One of the main reasons is that China's traditional exports still face various restrictions in the U.S. market. "We wish together with our American friends to make concerted efforts to help more Chinese products enter the U.S. market and correspondingly, more American products into the Chinese market," he said, adding that China welcomes American industrialists and business executives to cooperate with their Chinese counterparts in the production and marketing of Chinese export products.

Earlier today, the Chinese vice premier had breakfast with Edward Irving Koch, Mayor of New York City, at Koch's residence and visited the New York Stock Exchange later.

Meets Businessmen in New York

[Text] New York, May 18 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice-Premier Yao Yilin met U.S. business executives during his stay in New York. Yao met Charles I. Brown, chairman of the board of American Telephone and Telegraph (A.T. and T.), yesterday afternoon after the vice-premier's arrival from Washington. Yao attended a breakfast hosted by Maurice R. Greenberg, president of the American International Group, Inc., at its headquarters this morning. Yao attended a reception and dinner given in his honor by Martin S. Davis, chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Gulf and Western Industries Inc., later this evening. During their talks, both sides exchanged views on developing Sino-U.S. economic relations and technological cooperation. Yao and his party also visited the headquarters of the United Nations and the World Trade Center and made a helicopter tour of New York City, Manhattan district and Liberty Island.

SINO-U.S. ECONOMIC COMMISSION MEETING VIEWED

HK200750 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 20, 19 May 86 pp 32-33

[Article by Feng Xiuju and Jiang Lurong: "Increase Understanding, Promote Cooperation -- on the Sixth Meeting of the Sino-U.S. Joint Economic Commission"]

[Text] The U.S. Government delegation led by U.S. Treasury Secretary James Baker took part in the sixth meeting of the China-U.S. Joint Economic Commission in Beijing from 8 to 10 May. The China-U.S. Joint Economic Commission is one of the first joint commissions established between China and the United States. Since 1981, the commission has held meetings every year in Washington and Beijing in turn. The sixth meeting of the commission was presided over jointly by State Councillor and Financial Minister Wang Bingqian and Treasury Secretary Baker. During the meeting, both sides exchanged views on their respective economic development, macroeconomic policies, and investment work as well as bilateral economic cooperation and international economic issues of common interest.

The Chinese and U.S. delegates unanimously held that the current meeting, like all previous ones, has been successful and fruitful. The meeting has deepened mutual understanding and will be conducive to resolving some specific problems in Sino-U.S. economic cooperation. As Premier Zhao Ziyang said: The meeting "will be of great significance to further developing relations between the two countries, particularly economic and trade relations."

Secretary Baker visited China twice with Bush and President Reagan. He was very happy to have the honor to visit China the third time on 7 May. He said: "I have brought hope for increasing mutual understanding between the two governments and peoples. It will be conducive to further improving the economic and trade relations between the two countries." During the short period of only 3 days, Wang Bingqian and Baker held two rounds of talks. Amid the friendly, invigorating atmosphere, the Chinese delegation comprising 43 members and the responsible persons of the Department of Commerce and the Export-Import Bank, the special assistant to the President, and other senior officials on the U.S. side totaling more than 30 members held 6 rounds of serious and frank panel discussions.

While gaining a better understanding of the economic situation of each side, the parties also reviewed the development of trade and economic cooperation between the two countries and held that there are bright prospects for such cooperation. According to statistics, the total volume of Sino-U.S. trade in 1985 reached $7.3 billion, an increase of around 20 percent over 1984, setting a new record. However, the volume of Sino-U.S. trade now accounts for only 1 percent of U.S. foreign trade. During a meeting with Baker, Premier Zhao Ziyang said there is great potential for the development of trade between China and the United States. It is necessary to take note of maintaining a balance of trade between the two countries. Hence, while further expanding bilateral trade, we hope that the United States will import more goods from China.

Over the past 2 years, the United States has taken some measures in lifting the restrictions on technology transfer to China. The cooperation between the two countries is now focused on large and medium sized projects. The spheres of cooperation have expanded from tourism and light industry to coal, hydropower, offshore and terrestrial oil, exploitation of nonferrous metals, aviation, electronics, and other major industrial, scientific, and technological sectors.

During this meeting, both sides noted the new progress obtained in the development of cooperation between the two countries in the area of investment. Up to the end of 1985, of U.S. businessmen's direct investment in China, the value of contracts already signed reached $2.1 billion. There were more than 130 Sino-U.S. joint venture enterprises accounting for 57.5 percent of the total of Chinese-foreign joint venture enterprises. According to statistics, the total amount of U.S. businessmen's direct investment in China, or the number of projects involved, was after only that of the Hong Kong-Macao region ranking first among other countries. The total number of Sino-U.S. joint venture enterprises established in 1985 and the amount of investment involved all exceeded the total 5 years ago. The area of U.S. businessmen's investment covered 13 sectors, including the chemical industry, coal exploration, the automobile industry, and so forth, distributed over 12 provinces and municipalities including Beijing, Shanghai, Jiangsu, and so forth. Some of the relevant enterprises achieved splendid economic results.

Both sides considered that as things now stand, despite great progress scored in Sino-U.S. economic cooperation, there is still a big gap between the two countries' scale of economic cooperation and their respective economic strength. There should be more development in the relations of economic cooperation between the two countries. Both the Chinese and U.S. sides hope that more U.S. enterprises will come to invest in China. Baker said: This is compatible with not only the interests of the Chinese people but also those of the American people. He also expressed the hope that the Chinese side would create a more favorable environment for foreign investors. Wang Bingqian expressed the hope that both the Chinese and U.S. sides would continue making joint efforts in the spirit of friendly cooperation and mutual understanding, so that an agreement to protect investments by both countries could be signed at an early date.

During the meeting, Wang Bingqian and Baker, and also the two work groups, frankly exchanged views on certain concrete problems remaining in the relations of economic cooperation between China and the United States. The Chinese side expressed the hope that the U.S. side would complete legislative procedures as quickly as possible to give early effect to the agreement on the prevention of double taxation and tax evasion that President Reagan signed during his visit to China in 1984. During the current meeting of the joint Economic Commission, both sides had friendly talks on the problem of concrete interpretation of particular stipulations in the protocol and reached unanimity in their views. On this, Wang Bingqian and Baker signed a protocol.

During the meeting, both sides also exchanged views on the problem of debt, the supply of official aid by developed countries to developing countries for development, and the matter of fighting trade protectionism. At the end of the meeting, Baker invited Minister Wang Bingqian to Washington next year for the seventh meeting of the Sino-U.S. Joint Economic Commission.

U.S. DEFENDS POSITION ON NUCLEAR ARMS REDUCTION

OW150953 Beijing XINHUA in English 0722 GMT 15 May 86

[Text] Washington, May 14 (XINHUA) -- The White House today defended the U.S. position on nuclear arms reduction and nuclear testing, accusing Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev of being misinformed on both issues. In response to Gorbachev's televised address to the Soviet people, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said the United States "is eager to speed up negotiations (with the Soviet Union) to achieve a 50 percent reduction of strategic nuclear weapons as soon as possible." He said the United States and its allies support "balanced, substantial and verifiable reductions" in arms. In this respect, "the United States has made concrete proposals and is waiting for a constructive Soviet reply." Speakes said the Soviet Union has not responded to a U.S. proposal that experts from the two countries meet to initiate a dialogue concerning nuclear testing.

Referring to a Soviet proposal that leaders of the two superpowers meet in Europe to discuss a nuclear testing ban, Speakes said the "rationale" of such a meeting is "difficult to understand. The Soviet Union has up to now been unwilling to authorize a discussion at the expert level." Speakes said there has been no reply from Gorbachev on setting a date for a second summit meeting with U.S. President Ronald Reagan. The spokesman said, "The President has invited Mr. Gorbachev to visit the United States in late June to discuss the entire range of issues. Gorbachev has not yet responded to this invitation." "Nevertheless, it is clear that a meeting between the two leaders is possible this year if Mr. Gorbachev desires," Speakes added.

Speakes also denied Gorbachev's charges that the United States and some other Western countries tried to exploit the Chernobyl nuclear accident by telling "a veritable mountain of lies." "There has been no effort by this government, or its partners at the Tokyo economic summit, to make political capital out of the Chernobyl tragedy," Speakes declared.

They exchanged views on strengthening the scientific and technological exchanges between the people of the two countries. The guests arrived here this week as guests of the China Science and Technology Exchange Center.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON VISIT OF AUSTRALIA'S HAWKE

Deng Forecasts Development

OW200701 Beijing XINHUA in English 0647 GMT 20 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 20 (XINHUA) --Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping today gave a footnote to China's development target for the first half of next century, a subject he often discussed with visiting foreign government heads. According to Deng, China will come close to the level of economically developed countries by year 2050.

Today, in his meeting with Robert Hawke, Australian prime minister, Deng expounded his idea further when he explained that after China meets the target of Quadrupling the 1980 per-capita national income in the 20-year period ending year 2000, China will proceed further to quadruple its per-capita national income again, as he put it, in "30 to 50 years, to be more exact, 50 years". This means the per-capita national income then will amount to 4,000 U.S. dollars," Deng stated, taking into consideration China's population growth in the years to come. China's per-capita national income in 1980, according to Deng, was 250 U.S. dollars.

In working out our development goals, he added, "We follow a realistic approach. We do not hope to catch up with or surpass the developed countries. In fact, we will then be up to the medium level of development." Deng Xiaping said that the means to achieve these objectives was the economic restructuring which China was presently engaged in. He invited all friendly countries to get involved in China's program for restructuring its economy.

Hawke commented that China was confident of itself in its economic reforms and said he believed China would succeed. He told the host that Australia was willing to do whatever it could to assist China and develop cooperation with China to the mutual benefit of both countries.

Deng Xiaoping told Hawke that China faced numerous tasks, but the two overriding, co-related tasks were to develop its economy and work for world peace. When China and other peace-loving countries become more developed economically, this would benefit the cause of defending world peace. His meeting with Hawke lasted for one hour. At the beginning of the meeting, the two leaders agreed that China and Australia had extensive contacts at the leadership level. Hawke said that this was a clear indication of the close relationship between the two countries. Deng said, in addition to the personal friendship between the leadership of China and Australia, the two countries should also become good friends. "There is a wide range of areas in which our two countries can cooperate", Deng said.

Zhao Ziyang Hosts Banquet

OW191432 Beijing XINHUA in English 1416 GMT 19 May 86

[Text] Beijing May 19 (XINHUA) --Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang stressed today that the development of Sino-Australian friendly relations will not only benefit the two peoples, but also contribute to the stability and development of the Asian-Pacific region. Zhao was speaking at a banquet to welcome Australian Prime Minister Robert Hawke, Mrs Hawke and their party here this evening at the Great Hall of the People.

Australia is now the sixth major trading partner of China, Zhao noted, adding that progress has been and is being made in cooperation between the two sides in the areas of iron and steel, wool, communications and transporation and non-ferrous metals. He said Sino-Australian friendly relations of cooperation on the basis of equality and mutual benefit have made healthy development. The Chinese premier declared that there is no major conflict of interests whatsoever between China and Australia and the prospects of bilateral friendly relations and cooperation are very bright. Zhao announced that the Chinese Government will send a delegation to attend the celebrations marking the Australian Bicentenary in January 1988 and also take part in the 1988 World Exposition on Leisure in the age of technology to be held in Brisbane.

Referring to the international situation, Zhao said China pursues an independent foreign policy of peace and will not enter into alliance with any big power nor take part in the big-power arms race although the level of China's military expenditure and armament is far below that of other big countries, China has resolutely cut back on its military expenditure and reduced the size of its troops. China, he said, has explicitly undertaken not to be the first to use nuclear weapons under any circumstances and recently declared that it will conduct no more atmospheric nuclear tests. These facts, he continued, testify to China's sincerity in actively promoting he cause of peace and disarmament. China is ready to work with Australia and all other peace-loving countries and continue to make contributions to world peace and social progress.

Responding, Hawke said it is now 13 years since the establishment of diplomatic relations between Australia and China. The relationship between them has been close and is growing, and their economic relations have grown in line with the development of the political relations. Hawke noted that the volume and value of trade with each other has grown enormously since the two prime ministers met in 1983. "We are conscius of the fact that the growth has been more prounounced in Australia's export trade with China than in our import trade." After giving an account of what Australia has done to increase imports from China, Hawke said the two countries have signed a number of contracts on joint ventures, and more agreements are under discussion.

China has shown active interest in large-scale investment in the Australian resources sector and educational, scientific, cultural and sports exchanges have lent additional substance to the relationship, he said. The Australian prime minister announced that the Australian Government has appointed former Prime Minister Gough Whitlam the new chairman of the Australia-China Council. Whitlam's contribution to Australia-China relations was vitally important, he noted. Hawke went on to say that it is regrettable that tensions still exist in the Asian-Pacific region, most notably in Indochina, Afghanistan and the Korean Peninsula. It is the common hope of the two countries that juste and peaceful settlements may soon be found in these areas of potential danger, he added.

Tennis Match With Wan Li

OW191232 Beijing XINHUA in English 1202 GMT 19 May 86

[Text] Beijing, May 19 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Australian Prime Minister Robert Hawke played against Chinese Vice-Premier Wan Li in a tennis match here today. This was the third international match between the 70-year-old Chinese vice-premier, who received a Gold Olympic Order last month for his efforts to promote sports, and visiting foreign dignitaries. Wan played Hawke during the latter's visit to China in 1984 and U.S. Vice-President George Bush last year.

The 57-year-old Australian prime minister, paired by the secretary of the Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet Mike Codd, took on Wan and his partner, Li Furong, three times world table tennis runner-up, in a doubles match at an indoor tennis court in the International Club here this afternoon. Wan, who is also honorary chairman of the Chinese Tennis Association, and his much younger partner overwhelmed the Australian pair with their clever placements and fast volleys in two straight sets 6:3 and 6:2.

With Mrs Hawke looking on, and Australian and Chinese diplomats and journalists cheering, Hawke and his partner fought tenaciously with powerful drives, drives, though lagging behind in the score. When the match finished, Hawke and Wan agreed to play another set. The Australian pair beat Wan and his partner, Zhao Jingxin, a 67-year-old professor at the Beijing Foreign Trade University, -- 6:2. Wan and Zhao won a recent tournament for aged tennis players in Beijing.

Hawke announced at the end of the game that his country has agreed with China in principle to hold annual tennis tournaments in turn in each country. Australia is now preparing for the first tournament to be held in Melbourne in December. He poroposed that the two countries cooperate in training their young players. Wan thanked Hawke for Australia's efforts in helping China raise its level in tennis. He said he believed that the exchanges between tennis players of Australia, "a superpower i tennis", and China will not only help promote tennis in China, but also strengthen the friendship between the two countries.

BRIEFS

SYDNEY "CHINA TODAY" EXHIBITION -- Sydney, 14 May (XINHUA) -- The photo exhibition "China Today" opened at Sydney Town Hall here today with more than 200 people attending the opening ceremony. John Brown, federal minister for sport, recration and tourism officially declared the exhibition open. The exhibition is the first of its kind arranged by the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY of China and the Australian Foreign Affiars Department under the China-Australia Cultural Agreement. It was also sponsored by the Cathay Pacific and other organizations. Douglas Sutherland, lord mayor of Sydney, said in his opening speech, "This exhibition gives us a unique chance to gain an insight into Chinese culture and tradition. It's beauty and diversity offer us a rare vision of the Chinese landscape and people." "I take this opportunity to encourage all Sydney residents to come and enjoy it," he said. Among the 210 photos, there are also pictures presented by the Hong Kong China Travel Service and the Sino Studio (International) Ltd. of Hong Kong. Many visitors were deeply impressed by the fantastic Chinese scenery. The 2-month long picture exhibition will also be displayed in 4 other major cities -- Melbourne, Adelaide, Perth, and Canberra. FURTHER REPORTAGE ON WU XUEQIAN'S EUROPEAN TRIP

Visits Norwegian Oilfields

OW200208 Beijing XINHUA in English 0158 GMT 20 May 86

[Text] Oslo, May 20 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian today visted the world's largest cement-structured offshore platform -- platform B in Norway's north sea "statefjord" oil field. Accompanied by Minister of Oil and Energy Arne Qien, Wu was shown well drilling, oil extraction methods as well as workers' living conditions. He was also briefed on the construction of the platform and its oil production.

Two hundred and seventy one meters in height and 816,000 tons in weight, platform B began operating in 1981. Total cost of construction was 14 billion kroner (2 billion U.S. dollars), totally invested by Norwegian companies.

At the end of the tour, Wu said that he had been deeply impressed with what he had seen. Since Norway's oil extraction is very developed and China is expanding its oil production, cooperation between the two countries has great prospects, he pointed out. China's ambassador to Norway Zhang Yongkuan accompanied Wu on the oil-drilling platform

The Chinese foreign minister arrived this afternoon in Oslo from Bergen, the second biggest city in Norway. He was met at the airport by his Norwegian counterpart Knut Frydenlund. Afterwards they visited Vigeland Park, famous for its sculptures. Wu will leave for Denmark tomorrow afternoon.

Feted by Norwegian Counterpart

[Text] Oslo, May 19 (XINHUA) -- Norwegian Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund said tonight that his country is willing to strengthen cooperation with China in energy, transportation and other fields. At a dinner honoring Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian, Frydenlund said Norway and China "held similar views on many things." Economic cooperation is an important factor in the countries's relations, he stressed.

Frydenlund said he had been watching closely China's modernization efforts in its ambitious economic reform and new policy of opening to the outside world. Chinese and Norwegians have had long and good relations, Frydenlund said, who observed there has been an increase in exchange visits of leaders and in the signing of bilateral agreements. Norway, Frydenlund said, while aware of the strategic and economic importance of Southeast Asia and the entire Pacific region, welcomes China's increasing interest in Europe.

Wu said China admires Norway's stand in maintaining stability and security in Western Europe, opposing the arms race, advocating disarmament and easing international tension. China has long cherished its friendship with Norway, Wu said, adding that through common efforts, relations between the two peoples would be further developed.

Wu, who arrived in Norway's capital this afternoon from Bergen is on the third leg of his European trip. He already has been to Finland and Sweden. Chinese ambassador to Norway Zhang Yongkuan also attended the dinner.

RENMIN RIBAO ARTICLE ON ECONOMIC CONTENTION

[Article by Li Yining: "Contention in Economics and Flourishing Economics"]

[Text] Both Developing Marxist Economic Theory and Propagating Developed Marxist Economic Theory Require Courage

Like all other scientific branches, the life of economics lies in constantly bringing forth new ideas. In the research of socialist economics, this means integrating the universal truth of Marxism with the concrete realities of the socialist countries, studying the new situation, resolving new problems, and setting forth new theses. Marxist economic theory is a scientific theory constantly developing in the course of combining with the new reality. Taking a scholastic approach toward classical works and regarding several formulas and conclusions of Marxist classics as doctrines that can never be changed of even allowing no doubt, no supplement, and no revision is not a practice that will safeguard Marxism but one to distort it.

The socialist economic theory of Marxism emerged in socialist practice. It is enlivened and examined by practice. Since real life is constantly developing forward, only when we study new problems in the economic field under the guidance of Marxism and in accordance with the principle of combining theory with practice can we promote the development of the socialist economic theory. We cannot imagine that we can separate ourselves from the reality of our economic field to a new level.

We must study and research the Marxist classics, but we must never think that only giving notes and explanations for the Marxist classics are the subject of study for researchers of Marxist economic theory. In order to develop Marxist economic theory, researchers must face reality, go deep into the realities of life, and discover and study the problems in real life. They must take this as their main task.

Actuated by the sense of responsibility toward socialist revolution and construction, toward science, and toward marxist economic theory, we can set forth and discuss problems that have not been expounded by the Marxist classics and set forth our own views; we can also set forth our views on problems that have been expounded by the Marxist classics but that we feel need to be restudied in light of the new situation. Similarly, we can also use some new terms and new categories and adopt some new methods and metrological techniques that have never appeared in or adopted by the Marxist classics. All this is entirely normal, because we should not restrict ourselves in scholastic research and we do not wish to become such researchers.

Both developing Marxist economic theory and propagating developed Marxist economic theory require courage. In the process of doing so, we may be misunderstood by some people. However, if we had a strong sense of responsibility toward the society, if we understand that Marxist economic theory can have great vitality only when it is further developed and that China's pratical problems in building socialism can be resolved only by developed Marxist economic theory, we will have such courage. In the current overall reform of the economic structure, we need still more courage of boldly blazing new trials.

To a theoretical worker in the economic field, could there by anything more important than developing Marxist economic theory and resolving the practical problems in socialist construction?

Blazing New Trials in Economics is Linked With Contention in Economics. The Former Is the Outcome of Collective Wisdom and Is an Endless Process

In the field of socialist economic research, blazing new trials is not the task of a small number of people, nor can this task be fulfilled by a small number of people. As a scientific theory closely related to practice and as an applied science, socialist economics must rely on the accumulation of collective wisdom for its continuous development. No research work of an individual economist can be divorced from the research work and achievements of his predecessors or from the direct and indirect enlightenment, influence, and help that his contemporaries give him in various respects. of course, we do not deny that some specialists have made prominent contributions in blazing new trails in economics.

Blazing new trails in economics needs a fine academic environment. It cannot be separated from contention. Only in an academic environment of contention can collective wisdom be brought into a full play. The discussion on a series of economic issues since the 3rd Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee most clearly proves this. None of us should look down upon the academic discussions and contention among our economic theoretical circles in the past few years centered on the goal of socialist construction, socialist ownership, socialist commodity economy and law of value, the relationships between socialist planning and market, and other issues. These discussions and contentions have played a useful role in blazing new trails in economics. The source of a river 10,000 li long like the Chang Jiang perhaps consists of countless small streams. From its source to where it pours into the sea, it takes in the water of many big rivers and each of these big rivers is the convergence of countless small tributaries, the source of each of which is small streams. Is it not precisely the same for the process of blazing new trails in economics?

A review of the situation in the past few years reveals that in our economic theoretical circles, there have to be the convergence of many discussions, many articles, many suggestions and opinions, and much critcism and self-criticism before we can gradually and finally sort out some accepted theses on certain economic issues. Only by so doing can people gain some new understanding on some economic issues. This process of blazing new trails cannot be divorced from contention, from the debates between different academic viewpoints, or from criticism and self-criticism. However, the process of blazing new trails in economics differs from that of rivers flowing into the sea. The flow of a river comes to an end when it reaches the sea, but the blazing of new trails in economics is endless. Since it is endless, it requires that the academic environment of contentiontion exist forever.

Have all of us not published long or short articles in newspapers and magazines in the past few years? Have all of us not taken part in the study and discussion of the Sixth and Seventh 5-Year Plans? Have all of us not taken part in rural and urban social economic investigation or written work reports, investigation materials, and policy proposals? What is even more universal -- have all of us not spoken about what we learned from current economic issues and our understanding and opinions on these issues in the departments and units where we work?

In short, the necessary and useful discussions on major economic issues that our economic theoretical circles have carried out over the past few years have played a very satisfactory role in pushing forward our economic construction. However, from the point of view of the academic theoretical cirlces as a whole, these discusssions are far from enough. Only the better implementation of the double-hundred principle and the removal of all resistance and interference can faciliate the prosperity of and the blazing of new trails in our economics.

Different Schools Emerging in the Study of Socialist Economics Will Help Promote the Further Development of Economics

Following the profound development of economic strucutral reform and the socialist economy, it s necessary to boldly expore several major theoretical problems in socialist economics and to study the application of socialist economics. In the course of this study, different schools of socialist economics under the guidance of Marxist theory will emerge, each maintaining it own academic views. The division of schools results mainly from the difference of analytical methods. The division of schools is based on the difference of theories and views. The difference of theories and views leads to the differenece of analytical methods, and the difference of analytical methods results in the difference of policies. These three are interrelated to each other, with the difference of theories and views forming the most important factor.

It should be pointed out that the difference of theories and views of different schools involves their attitude toward the socialist system and Marxist economics. They do not hold different views on the socialist system and Marxist economics. The difference of theories and views refers to their different explanations of the operation of the socialist economy, to their different views on the role of different socialist economic factors, and to their different interpretations on the cause of the emergence of economic phenomena and economic problems as well as their trend of development.

The difference of analytical methods refers to their emphasis on which analytical methods to use in the study of the operation and development of the socialist economy. For example, they should decide on the use of the following analytical methods: the quantitative analytical method, the econonic quantitative mode, sociopsychoanalysis, historical analysis, or economic theoretical analaysis.

The difference of policies they propose refers to the difference of regulatory measures for the government to take while regulating the socialist economy and society, as well as to what development strategy to apply while developing the socialist economy and society. For example, which is more imporant: The financial regulatory measure or the monetary regulatory measure? Should we speed up or slow down price system reform? To what extent should the capital market be opened? To what extent should the labor force be transferred? In a given economic situation, is it necessary to adopt a deflation policy?

Therefore, the arguments between different schools in the study of socialist economics are not arguments between teh "proletarian and bourgeois sides" or between the "Marxist and anti-Marxist blocs." These different schools devote their common efforts to the socialist cause. Contention in economics is the only way to the prosperity of economics.

Different schools emerging in the study of socialist economics will exchange their views and learn from each other. This academic atmosphere will make its proper contributions to the development of socialist economics and to socialist construction.

Efforts Should Be Made by Departments in Charge of Ideological Work To Create a Good Environment for Academic Discussion, so as to Enhance the Confidence of Economists

Economists should neither forget their missions entrusted by the socialist construction causes nor cast away their sense of social responsibility. Therefore, when some of their works and viewpoints are criticized by others and when their errors that cannot stand the test of practice are pointed out by others, they should have the courage to admit and correct their errors. During discussion, economists should take a correct attitude towards unavoidable criticism that is not based on facts. Neither discouragement nor complaint is conducive to carrying out further studies.

Departments in charge of ideological work should necessarily create environements for academic discussion and conditions for economic contention. If leaders of relevant departments attend the discussions and contentions in the capacity of academic researchers and on an equal footing, it will be helpful to deepening the academic discussions and creating good conditions for the discussions. This should be welcomed and encouraged. If they adopte the administrative means to interfere flagrantly with the academic contention or even level rude criticism at it, it will bring about very bad influence on the academic research and discussion. Who is the most qualified to judge the issues of socialist economics under discussion? In the final analysis, it should be judged by neither a certain authority nor explanations made in any previous works but by the practice of socialist economic construction. The test of practice will make a fair judgment. Nevertheless, it often needs a period of time for testing the economic contention in practice. This is called "the delayed verification for economic theories." It will do no good for economic construction and the development of economics itself if people just treat themselves as authorities and tend to pass hasty conclusions but fail to understand "the delayed verification for economic theories." Event these wrong viewpoints, which have already been proved wrong in practice, should also be resolved through academic discussion and criticsms and self-criticism.

We should have notice that in work, some persons who can neither do nor suggest anything often become the best qualified persons to blame others in case they think something goes wrong. Of course, this is very abnormal. In economic research, the same phenomenon might arise: some persons who usually neither study realistic issues nor air opinions on realistic issues can often become "representatives of the correct viewpoints" who are the best qualified to criticize those who study realistic issues. Isn't this normal? We just cannot let this phenomenon reappear.

JIEFANG RIBAO URGES EXCHANGE OF OPINIONS

OW180134 Shanghai JIEFANG RIBAO in Chinese 14 May 86 p 1

[Commentary: "Reform Needs a Relayed Environment for Public Opinion"]

[Text] Over the past few days, newspaper, radio, and television in Shanghai have devoted extensive coverage to a Shanghai seminar on strategies for cultural development and published a host of articles and speeches by leaders, scholars, and experts of the capital and the municipality, arousing keen interests and concern among readers. This has undoubtedly created a favorable environment and atmosphere for airing public opinion to stimulate reform and exploration in the ideological and cultural fields and develop Shanghai's cultural establishments.

The ongoing comprehensive reform in the economic, political, ideological, and cultural fields is an unprecedently gigantic undertaking. Its aim is to build socialism with Chinese characteristics. The practical experience in reform over the last few years has proven that in order to carry out the reform in a penetrating, extensive, and sustained manner, we urgently need a favorable environment not only in the political, economic, and social fields, but in the mass media.

Our party has always attached great importance to the role of public opinion in revolution and construction and given due attention to bringing into full play the enthusiasm, initiative, and creativity of mass media as the mouthpiece of the party and the people in mobilizing, encouraging, and inspiring hundreds of millions of cadres and people in their struggle to realize the party's general line and objective. The ongoing comprehensive reform represents a penetrating, extensive, and sustained revolution. It is necessary for us to do a meticulous job in order to enable the broad masses of cadres and people to adapt themselves to the transformation from an old system to a new one and to be better prepared ideologically and mentally for the changes in economic benefits, human relations, lifestyle, modes of thinking, and traditional concepts that come along with the new system's establishment. To bring into full play the role of mass media is indispensable fo promoting reform with the cooperation and support of public opinion.

There are no ready models on the road of reform, and we have to take one step at a time and totally rely on ourselves in exploring new trails. Reform should be preceded by an ideological breakthough, which necessitates an exploratory process which risks treading on "forbidden zones." Since it is a process of exploring and blazing new trails, we will inevitably encounter mistakes and have relapses and have to compare different models and test experimental theories. This urgently requires that we create an environment for encouraging the broad masses of cadres and people, ideological and cultural workers in particular, to bravely explore and blaze new trails. It should be a relaxed, harmonious, united, and lively environment for airing public opinion characterized by mutual understanding, trust, and support in an atmosphere of free and equal debate.

To create such an environment, of course, is not only the responsibility of the mass media, but also that of all poublic opinion (including discussions under all circumstances).

Currently, a considerable number of ideologial and cultural workers still have a lingering fear of the mass media. This is nothing unusual. In the heyday of "taking class struggle as the key link" as previous political campaigns escalated, almost invariably the mass media always fired the "first shot," the "signal," against ideological and cultural workers on most occasions. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the mass media have eliminated chaos, restored order, and undergone a fundamental change. Gone is the tempestuous environment in mass media. However, occasional "light rain showers" have aroused all sorts of speculation among the ideological and cultural workers, making them worry constantly about the "changeable weather" and guard against "electric shocks." This shows that our environment for public opinion needs to be further improved and adapted to the comprehensive reform.

In order to create a relaxed environment for public opinion to facilitate the reform, the mass media shoulders a heavy responsibility. We should never carry out tempestuous campaigns again nor let the clouds of "great criticism" linger over our heads. We should, however, as a leading comrade has said, bring in a drizzle and gentle breeze, i.e., the spring breeze and rain that educate people in silence, to enable the reform to sprout froim the soil and grow steadily in spring. Of course, it is necessary to distinguish between right and wrong concerning problems and contradictions cropping up in the course of reform. However, in order to convince people by reasoning, it is also necessary to conduct factual and effective analyses in an earnest spirit and under proper guidance. In this way, we will be able to cultivate a relaxed and harmonious environment for public opinion to promote reform and encourage people to bravely explore and blaze new trails, thus unfolding contention among a hundred schools of thought in searching for new ways for reform. This is precisely what awaits all our journalists!

ARTICLE ASSESSES DENG TUO'S NEWS COMMENTARIES

HK200420 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 11 May 86 p 5

[Article by Zhou Xiuqiang: "Features of Deng Tuo's News Commentaries and Their Contributing Factors" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Excerpts] Comrade Deng Tuo was a learned man who was gifted in many ways. Comrade Deng Tuo also made a lot of important contributions in many aspects. He was not only an experienced newspoaper editor and a celebrated historian but also a gifted writer, poet, calligrapher and a man who had a strong ability to appreciate cultural relics. However, as far as his whole life is concerned, Deng Tuo mainly devoted himself to the proletarian journalistic cause.

Deng Tuo believed that editorials were the banners of newspapers, and the official party newspaper must always have its own voice so as to relay the party's line, general and specific policies, and requirements, so he paid particular attention to commentaries.

For over 20 years, he paid special attention to commentary work, organized, examined and revised numerous commentaries, and wrote a large number of commentaries himself. This article will try to carry out a preliminary exploration of the characteristics of Deng Two's news commentaries and their contributions and offer a few basic remarks by way of introduction so that others may come up with valuable opinions, and further research in this regard can be carried out in order to commemorate Comrade Deng Tuo, a faithful proletarian journalistic fighter.

The Characteristics of Deng Tuo's Commentaries

In his career as an editorial writer and commentator, Deng Tuo summed up a relatively complete set of theories regarding the writing of newspaper editorials. These theories guided his practice. So Deng Tuo's editorials and his own style and features. From Deng Tuo's commentaries, we can see the following features:

1. DENG TUO'S COMMENTARIES POSSESSED A HIGH THEORETICAL STANDARD AND POLITICAL FORESIGHT.

2. DENG TUO 'S COMMENTARIES PROVIDED AUTHENTIC ARGUEMENT AND CONVINCING CONDENSATION.

3. DENG TUO'S COMMENTARIES WERE SHARP-POINTED, PUNGENT AND STRONGLY REALISTIC.

4. DENG TUO's COMMENTARIES CONTAINED A WIDE RANGE OF KNOWLEDGE AND READ SMOOTHLY.

5. THE LANGUAGE IN DENG TUO'S COMMENTARIES WAS SIMPLE, VIVID AND PUNGENT.

The Contributing Factors of Deng Tuo's Commentaries

How could Deng Tuo become so successful as an editorial writer? How could Deng Tuo's commentaries have their own characterisitics?

We should try to find the answers in Deng Tuo's ideology, life, work and study.

FIRST OF ALL, DENG TWO WAS DEVOTED TO THE PARTY, THE PEOPLE, MARXISM, LENINISM AND MAO ZEDONG THOUGHT, AND SELFLESSLY DEVOTED ALL HIS LIFE TO THE CHINESE PROLETARIAN JOURNALISTIC CAUSE. During his stay in the Jinchaji border areas, Comrade Deng Tuo braved the enemy's gunfire and "ran the newspaper on eight mules" by overcoming numerous difficulties in the cruel war environment. He was not only the commander but also the chief editor. Some comrades said that Deng Tuo "ran the newspaper by running a risk of being killed under a hail of bullets," and that was true. After entering the cities, he was ordered to take charge of RENMIN RIBAO when he was still ill. However, he not only worked hard to develop the official newspaper of teh CPC Central Committee and organized propaganda for he various major policies and questions put forward by the CPC Central Committee but also wrote editorials day and night. Not only during the years of the revolutionary war but also after the founding of the People's Republic of China, Deng Tuo never posed as a journalistic bureaucrat.

While leading and organizing all of the newspaper work, Deng Tuo stuck to writing, especially to writing editorials day and night, and sometimes even forgot food and sleep. He was absolutely devoted to the party and was honest, and dared to speak the truth. Although later he suffered misfortune because of these, he was still devoted to the party as much as he had been before. "The style is the man." Only with Deng Tuo's devotion could there be Deng Tuo's commentaries.

SECONDLY, DENG TUO KEPT ON LEARNING DILIGENTLY, ALWAYS HAD A BOOK IN HIS HAND, AND READ NUMEROUS BOOKS. Deng Tuo came from a "literary family" and received good education when he was young. All these things exerted an imperceptible influence on him and helped him lay a solid literary foundation. Later, he accepted Marxism while taking part in the struggle and studies. After joining the revolutioin, Deng Tuo still always had a book in his hand and took reading books as a kind of rest. A comrade who had been Deng Tuo's secretary for many years said that his main duty as a secretary is to buy, borrow and copy books. Deng Tuo marked the books he wanted in the new-book list with a circle and then asked him to buy them; Deng Tuo asked him to borrow the books he needed: Deng Tuo make marks in the books and asked him to make copies. Deng Tuo often told his comrades that when reading books, it was of great importance to grasp the basic principles of Marxism. No matter what happened, all the comrades must think about the basic principles of Marxism. Deng Tuo conscientiously read the works of Marx, Engles, Lenin, Stalin and Comrade Mao Zedong and made systematic notes.

THIRDLY, DENG TUO THOUGHT A LOT, WROTE A LOT AND REVISED A LOT. Deng Tuo's works have not yet been collected, arranged and examined, so no one can tell how many works he had written. Some comrades said that Deng Tuo had written several million characters. That was only an estimate, and the meaning of the word "several" is not so clear. However, it is true that Deng Tuo had written a lot. Deng Tuo believed that all the reporters and editors, no matter what position they were in, should continue writing. He himself set a good example in this regard "write as long as one has a breath in one's body."

The theories on editorials and a large number of editorials written by Deng Tuo are the precious wealth of the proletarian journalistic cause, which should be studied and carried on by the comrades engaged in the work of the official party newspaper. What is more important is to study the basic points which had enabled Deng Tuo to become an outstanding commentator.

IDEOLOGICAL-POOLITICAL WORK FOR STUDENTS STRESSED

OW161440 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1228 GMT 15 May 86

[XINHUA commentator: "Pay Attention to Improving Ideological and Political Work in Institutes of Higher Learning"]

[Text] Beijing, 15 May (XINHUA) -- Institutes of higher learning have the mission to cultivate a new generation of people both morally and intellectually outstanding. Their graduates should be knowledgeable persons who ardently love the socialist motherland, support the party's leadership, adhere to the socialist road, endorse reforms, have the spirit of devoting their lives to serving the people, master scientific and general knowledge, and are healthy and sound. It is impossible to meet these requirements without forceful ideological and political work.

Our party has a fine tradition of carrying out ideological and political work. However, while conducting ideological and political work today, we must adapt ourselves to the new situation, constantly explore new contents and methods, and sum up fresh experience.

We are in the new period of conducting reforms, opening to the world, and stimulating domestic economy at present. In this new period, the social contradictions generated by the transition from the old system to the new one and the various trends of thoughts prevalent at home and abroad are unavoidably spreading to campuses and they affect the students. The principal exploration and improvement we must make in ideological and political work in institutes of higher learning is how to eliminate obstructions and guide students to conscientiously study and correctly understand the policies pursued ever since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and to support the building of China into a socialist power with Chinese characteristics. For this reason, we should conduct education in the history of social development; in Chinese history, particularly its modern and contemporary history; in the party's present policies; and in policies on current events among students in whatever forms to their liking.

Past experience and lessons tell us that in our ideological and political work, we must integrate the promotion of democracy with strict enforcement of discipline. On the one hand, we should promote democracy and encourage students to emancipate their minds, deliberate on problems, practice self-education and self-control in order to create a vivid and vigorous political atmosphere and an academic climate of democratic discussion. On the other hand, we should set strict campus regulations and school discipline to maintain a good campus and academic style and cultivate the students' good character of abiding by the discipline and law. Both are very important.

Under the unified leadership of the party and in addition to full-time political workers, the ideological and political work in institutes of higher learning should also rely on the masses including the students taking up the work themselves and, more importantly, on teachers bringing their role into full play.

BEIJING URGES NEW IDEOLOGICAL, POLITICAL WORK

OW161107 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 2130 GMT 15 May 86

[Station commentary: "Adapt to the New Situation, Improve and Strengthen Ideological and Political Work"]

[Text] Attaching importance to ideological and political work is a basic experience of our party in leading revolution and development. The entire history of our party has shown that development and success of our undertakings have been based on correct leadership and the consciousness of the masses and that the consciousness of the masses must be inspired by effective and lively ideological and political work.

Economic work is currently a central tasks. After invigorating the economy and opening to the outside world, people have broadened their vision, improved their abilities, and enriched themselves with new knowledge and concepts generated by modern civilization. At the same time, this new situation has brought about some negative and unhealthy elements. This requires that we resolutely resist the trend toward capitalist decadent thought and lifestyle and oppose the ideas and practice of putting money above everything else and seeking personal gain at the expense of the public.

As we continue to carry forward democracy and encourage the people to emancipate their minds, we must also adhere to centralism, enhance discipline, and persist in carrying forward the four cardinal principles. All this requires much ideological and political work.

Ideological and political work is a daily work of our party, and it should be carried out everywhere all the time. We should not have the idea that ideological and political work means putting on a long fact to lecture others and not allowing others to express their opinions. The key to conducting ideological and political work among the people is reasoning. The purpose of conducting ideological and political work is to publicize and lecture party members and the masses on the party's theories, lines, and policies on revolution and development; to inspire their awakening, and to make them willingly follow the party's leadership and accept correct view points. Thus, we can struggle with one heart and one mind to accomplish our revolutionary and development tasks.

Experience hs shown that sheer rudeness and high-handed attitudes are not scientific ways to conduct ideological and political work. Ideological and political work should be a force to create a relaxed environment, active thinking, and a united and harmonious work force.

Ideological and political work in the new period should adapt to the new situation and meet the new requirements emerging from reform and opening to the outside world. We should create new forms of ideological and politcal work in the new period, adopt new methods to carry it out, and enable it to play a greater role. In addition, we should have different forms and contents of ideological and political work to suit people of different strata and ages.

We should encourage the young to emancipate their minds and express their views; we should help them educate themselves. We should also give them necessary guidance and incentives, provide them with persuasive materials, offer them convincing viewpoints, and provide them with some basic knowledge, such as the history of mankind's social development, the histroy of Chinese social development, particularly Chinese modern and contemporary history; the party's current lines, principles, and policies; and major current events of the world. We should help peasant adapt to the changes in rural areas and grasp the key points of ideological and political work. Peasants in most areas have become better off, and therefore, current ideological and political work in rural areas should be aimed at encouraging peasants to lead a life of socialist spiritual civilization, to resist capitalist and feudalistic ideas and to change their traditional, backward ways of thinking. Cadres and educated comrades in rural areas should persuade peasants to trust science, pay more attention to civility, transform social traditions, and foster new ways of thinking. They should also extensively launch healthy and colorful cultural and sports activities so that peasants, who have become better off, can enjoy a rich cultural life.

BEIJING RADIO COMMENTS ON IDEOLOGICAL WORK

OW200526 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 19 May 86

[Commentary by station reporters (Tang Yulong) and (Zhou Yuchun): "There Are Great Prospects for Ideological and Political Work"]

[Text] This station recently broadcast Comrade (Liu Jie's) three-part lecture on his experiences in ideological and political work.

He served as secretary of the (Xiexing) Woolen Mill party committee in Wuxi for several years, during which he and other members of the committee sought effective ways to carry out ideological and political work in the new period, and achieved remarkable results in this regard. They summed up the following basic viewpoints of such practice: The masses should be respected as masters of the country, the Marxist principle on material benefits should be implemented while doing ideological and political work, people should be viewed from a dialectical standpoint, stress should be put on actual results, and ideological and political work should be done in connection with the modernization drive.

They hold that ideological and political work is basically aimed at arousing everyone's enthusiasm for the four modernizations, making advanced elements more advanced, middle ones catch up with the advanced, and the less advanced become advanced. It is most difficult to do ideological work among the less-advanced elements. They made painstaking efforts to work among such people.

They have gradually realized, through practical work: Ideological work cannot be effectively done among the less advanced elements in a leftist way, nor by resorting to coercion. Thus, people cannot be coerced into consenting, nor can one be over-anxious for quick results in doing ideological and political work; people can only be brought around through persuasion. In other words, people should be touched by having feelings for them and persuaded by reason. Therefore, political workers should enthusiastically do their persuading and guiding work among people by placing themselves on an equal footing with the latter. Only thus will people be ready to accept their opinions.

Ideological and political work is a science as well as an art, and it cannot be effectively done only with zeal and without a scientific approach. The scientific approach here means grasping the change in the people's way of thinking in the new period, and then doing ideological and political work among people to convince them of a definite purpose. The result will be just the opposite if one uses only old methods to do this work.

Our country is carrying out reforms and opening to the outside world, while people are changing their thinking. There are new questions to study and solve in this regard. The practice of (Liu Jie) and other comrades in this respect shows that there are great prospects for ideological and political work. Large numbers of political workers can certainly achieve gratifying results in ideological and political work, provided that they, with a new attitude, strengthen their spirit, learn from the experiences of (Xiong Yuanqi), (Liu Jie), and other comrades, and seek new, effective, and vigorous ways characteristic of the new period to do this work.

PROPAGANDA DEPARTMENT STRESSES NEWS REPORTING

OW170619 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1431 GMT 16 May 86

[By reporter Yu Youhai]

[Text] Beijing, 16 May (XINHUA) --A responsible person of the CPC Central Committee's Propaganda Department pointed out today that all news reporting units must give priority to publicizing economic structural reform and economic construction and strive to improve the quality of economic reports in order to contribute to mobilizing the people of the whole country to wrest new victories during the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

The responsible person of the Propaganda Department met with more than 100 representatives of the press yesterday morning and this morning to discuss questions of how to implement the Seventh 5-Year Plan and improve economic reporting. Comrades of the State Economic Commission briefed them on the current situation in economic reform and development in China, while comrades of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences gave the meeting participants economists' views on these questions.

Addressing the discussion meeting, the comrades said that the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan is crucial for China, as the old strategy of economic development and the old economic system are being replaced. Therefore, it is a glorious task for journalists to widely publicize the state of current economic reform and development, and to mobilize the people of all nationalities throughout the country to fulfill the Seventh 5-Year Plan under the leadership of the Communist Party of China. According to information released by the meeting, various news reporting units in Beijing have done a great deal of work to this end. In particular, they have given wide publicity to the burgeoning lateral economic cooperation among enterprises and institutions. Some news reporting units have also kept the public interest in mind by commending the advanced and reporting realistic problems. However, it must be noted that many new items, situations, and problems have cropped up in the current structural reform of the economy and economic development, and that the press still lacks breath and depth, mass character, and vividness in news reporting. Therefore, it should take the initiative in exploring and advancing boldly, to keep abreast of the times.

Addressing the discussion meeting, the responsible person of the CPPCC Propaganda Department said: We are in the midst of an era of reform. News reporting units should have a clear-cut idea that news reporting should center on economic structural reform and development. Meanwhile, they should introduce new ideas in news reporting and try to reform it. All quarters concerned should also create favorable environment for the accomplishment of this goal, by permitting and encouraging bold discussion and study of problems arising in the course of the reform to restructure the economy. Of course, as the mouthpiece of the party, the press must release reports and statements conducive to, not detrimental to, the implementation of the party's line, principles, and policies. I hope that all news reporting units, in publicizing the party's line, principles, and policies, do their work creatively, enliven and improve economic news reporting, and do their utmost for the accomplishment of the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

GUANGMING RIBAO STRESSES MAKING BREAKTHROUGHS

HK161027 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 4 May 86 p 3

[Article by Dong Jingquan: "The Vitality of Marxism Lies in Continuously Making Breakthoughs and Innovations"]

[Excerpts] Continously Making Breakthroughs and Innovations Is in Line With the Spirit of Marxism and Is the Way To Maintain the Vitality of This Doctrine

The entire developmental history of Marxism is a process of continuously making breakthroughs and innovations on the basis of adhering to basic principles.

Since the founding of Marxism, many major breakthroughs have been made: The combination of Marxism with the concrete practice in Russia's revolution and construction gave rise to Leninism; the combination of Marxism with the concrete practice in China's revolution and construction gave rise to Mao Zedong Thought; and proletarian parties and their leaders in other countries have established their own scientific theoretical systems by combining Marxism with the concrete practice in their countries' revolution and construction. They are all the result of breaking through some old conclusions of Marxism on the premise of adhering to the doctrine's basic principles.

Marxism is a thorough and integrated world outlook and a huge, inclusive system of thought. It is different from Hegel's close and fixed system of absolute truth. It is an open system of scientific theory which is continuously developing along with the advance of the times. It is facing mankind's material production, social political struggle, scientific practice, and all activities in the cultural and ideological fields, and is continuously summing up all historical experiences of mankind. Marxism will not substitute for and cannot be separated from other branches of science. It is closely linked with the development of all natural and social scinces and thus can reach new conclusions and summaries for its world outlook and methodology. Marxism is a science that deals with the struggle for the emancipation of the proletariat and the working people and a science that deals with the construction of socialist and communist societies. As the process of the struggle and construction is very complicated and things in this process are continuously changing and developing, Marxism must also make new breakthoughs in order to adapt itself to the changing situation, to reveal the regularity of the objective movements, and to chart out the course of advance in good time. It must not stay on the same level and stick to some conclusions. The living soul of Marxism is its dialectic methodology, which is a comprehensive and profound doctrine about the development of things. The most important point of dialectics is to negate all closed and ossified things and to oppose a dogmatic attitude.

There are two meanings in making breakthroughs: First, it is necessary to break through a small number of theories and conclusions which have been proved outmoded or not completely correct by practice; second, it is necessary to break through the form of expression and the developmental level of the basic principles of Marxism and the whole of scientific doctrine. Breaking through some theories and the previous forms of expression and developmental level, replacing them with new theories and new forms of expression, and adding to Marxism the theories summarized from the practical experience in the new historical conditions, so as to raise Marxism to a new level, are all innovation.

One of our basic principles is to adhere to Marxism. However, if we do not break through a small number of conclusions which have been proved outmoded or not completely correct by practice and do not break through the doctrine's form of expression, which is too old and not very scientific, we will not be able to really uphold the basic principles of Marxism. Social practice is always advancing and will never stop at any time, and all conscious practice must be subject to the guidance of certain theories.

If Lenin had not broken through the viewpoint that socialism must win victory in a number of countries at the same time and had not replaced it with the new idea of winning victory first in one country, would it have been possible to adhere to basic Marxist principles on the proletarian revolution in Russia? If Comrade Mao Zedong had not broken through the old formula of staging a revolution in central cities to seize political power, and had not replaced this with China's new formula of using the rural revolutionary bases to surround the cities, would it have been possible to adhere to basic Marxist principles on the proletarian revolution in China? Similarly, our party's scientific thesis that the socialist economy is a planned commodity economy built on the basis of public ownership is also a major breakthrough in the old conclusion of Marxism and the old economic system, and this breakthrough is the best way to adhere to the basic Marxist principles on socialist economic constructon. Without making breakthroughs and innovations and without finding new answers and conclusions in the scope of new and important practice, the upholding of basic Marxist principles will merely be empty talk.

Adhering to the Basic Principles of Marxism Is the Premise and Foundation for Making Breakthroughs and Innovations

However, the breakthroughs in some individual theses of Marxism must be subject to the premise and foundation of adhering to the basic principles of Marxism. The basic stand of a proletarian party lies in upholding the basic principles of Marxism. By adhering to Marxism, we mean that we must adhere to the scientific world outlook and methodology of Marxism and adhere to the correct orientation of the historical development which represents the fundamental interests of the proletariat and the people. Without adhering to Marxism, we may lose our bearings when making breakthroughs and may deviate from our main course, and then we will not be able to judge whether the things we have done are real innovations and developments of Marxism or not.

The Key to Making Breakthroughs and Innovations in Marxism Lies in Closely Linking the Theoretical Studies With the Reality of Our Reform and Construction

To make breakthroughs and innovations, we must not sidestep the major issues in our reform and socialist modernization construction, but should direct our main efforts and attention to these issues. In the handling of these issues, modern Marxism will be brought into full play and can be further developed and enriched. In addition, we should pay close attention to the new achievements of the contemporary technological revolution and their far-reaching influence on the world's political and economic situation. We should carefully study the characteristics, ties, and developmental regularity of different economies, cultures, and political systems in the world so as to correctly reveal and scientifically predict the concrete course and prospects for social historical development under the new historical conditions and to study the concrete strategies and tactics for the contemporary proletariat to destroy the old world and to build the new world. Moreover, as the formation and development of Marxism have never been divorced from the development of the world's civilization, we should also assimilate all positive research achievements in foreign ideologies. As Marxism has always been developed in the course of struggle, we should not dodge any non-Marxist or anti-Marxist ideas and viewpoints; instead we should display the combative and critical style of Marxism in meeting the challenges of these ideas and viewpoints. We should first study them and then criticize them. At the same time, we should also assimilate their reasonable elements, valuable research subjects, and useful explorations in a critical way.

In the course of making breakthroughs and innovation, we should firmly implement the principle of "letting a hundred flowers bloom and a hundred schools of thought contend" so that our opinion environment and policies will encourage people to make bold explorations in theory and practice, because this principle embodies the objective regularity of the development of science and art and reflects the requirements of socialist spiritual civilization development. When implementing this principle and making explorations and innovations, we should also emphasize the guiding role of Marxism. Without the guidance of Marxism, bold explorations may deviate from the correct course and will not really lead to the opening of a new situation. It is a serious misunderstanding to think that Marxism is a straightjacket or a set of shackles which impede our exploratory efforts, and this idea itself represents a dogmatist attitude toward Marxism. Marxism is never a rigid dogma. It is just a guide to our efforts to understand and transform the world. It will never block the way to discover the truth, but will open a broad road for us to discover and develop the truth.

FORUM HELD ON ANALYZING WESTERN LITERATURE

HK170348 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 6 May 86 p 1

[Report from WENYI BAO: "HONGQI Editorial Department Invites Literature and Art Theory Workers in Beijing to a Forun on How To Correctly Analyze and Appraise Western Modernist Literature by Applying a Marxist Stand, Viewpoint, and Method"]

[Text] How to correctly analyze and appraise Western modernist literature by applying a Marxist stand, viewpoint, and method is a very important task facing the literary and art front in our country. Recently, the HONGQI Editorial Department invited some literature and art theory workers to a forum on this question. Among the participants, Cheng Daxi, Chen Shen, Li Zhun, Wu Yuanmai, Shao Dazhen, Ye Tingfang, Lu Tongliu, Yuan Kejia, and others took the floor in turn, while Dong Xuewen made a written speech. During the forum, the participants spoke freely and aired their views, fully exchanging opinions on Western modernist literature and raising many constructive suggestions on how to start discussions on this issue.

The participants pointed out that Western modernism is a very complex phenomenon in literature and has engendered varied schools in various countries in the West from the end of the 19th century until today. It embraces several dozen influential schools and several hundred representative writers. Their political inclinations, philosophical bases, literary and art viewpoints, the contents and styles of their works, and so on are all extremely complicated.

After the 4 May Movement of 1919, Western modernist literature was introduced into our country and has exercised some influence upon literary creation and theory. Generally speaking, however, our understanding of it is still relatively superficial. It is unrealistic to indiscriminately totally repudiate and thoroughly criticize it due to the influence of "leftist" thinking. Over the last 10 years, various schools of literary and art thought surged into China and have played an active role in broadening our mental horizons. Nevertheless, it has also produced some side effects and brought about some negative influences. This state of affairs merits attention.

The participants stressed that as Western modernism is a very complex phenomenon in literature, we should by no means try to reach unanimity of opinion and conclusion through adopting some simplified methods, writing one or two articles, or calling one or two forums. To gain understanding of it, people must proceed from the easy to the difficult and from a one-sided to an all-sided view. Therefore, it is necessary to create an atmosphere of discussing the issue on equal footing in the literary and art circles, advocate letting a hundred schools of thought contend, allow freedom of airing different views whether in newspapers or at discussion meetings, and encourage different opinions to contend freely. We should allow criticism as well as countercriticism and also having reservations. While arousing discussions, we should encourage people to seek truth on a common ground but not proceed from personal feelings or prejudices. People should dare to uphold the right things as well as correct the wrong things.

Editor in chief of the HONGQI journal Xiong Fu and deputy editor in chief Wang Renzhi attended the forum and took the floor. They also expressed gratitude for the support of the participants.

SONG PING ON TACKLING TECHNOLOGICAL PROBLEMS

OW140425 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1246 GMT 13 May 86

[By reporter Zhang Jimin]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 13 May (XINHUA) -- A national meeting on summing up and commending the achievements in tackling scientific and technological problems during the Sixth 5-Year Plan opened today. The meeting's main task is to sum up and review our country's major achievements in tackling scientific and technological problems during the Sixth 5-Year Plan and mobilize scientists and technicians to continue doing a good job during the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

Zhang Shou, vice minister of the State Planning Commission, made a summing-up report at the meeting on behalf of the meeting's preparatory and leading group. He pointed out in the report that during the Sixth 5-Year Plan, we made a great success in diverting a portion of the main strength of our scientific and technological force to working for economic construction.

Song Ping, state councillor and minister of the State Planning Commission, also spoke. He analyzed the following favorable conditions for ensuring success in tackling scientific and technological problems during the Seventh 5-Year Plan: First, we have a huge contingent of scientists and technicians. In addition to having the experience of developing "nuclear bombs and artificial satellites," they have also tempered themselves in the course of tackling problems during the Sixth 5-Year Plan. They have a high degree of sense of reponsibility, commensurate knowledge, and the proven ability to tackle tough problems. Second, we have had a talisman for tackling problems; that is cooperation. Facts during the Sixth 5-Year Plan have told us that divided strength or single-handed work is ineffective, particularly in the case of solving comprehensive scientific and technological problems. We must break the barriers among branches of science and departments, cooperate, and turn individual strengths into the strength of the whole. Third, we have had the experience of managing scientific and technological research. Under certain conditions, management experience is even more important than technology. Lu Dong, minister of the State Economic Commission, also addressed the meeting.

Governor Hu Ping delivered a report entitled: Summing Up Experiences, Advancing Forward, and Striving To Accomplish the Seventh 5-year Plan in an All-Round Way. The report was divided into the following three parts: 1) review of the Sixth 5-Year Plan; 2) the basic tasks and development policies of the Seventh 5-Year Plan; and 3) the key to accomplishing the Seventh 5-Year Plan lies in reform.

JIANGSU GOVERNOR ON OPENING NEW REVENUE SOURCES

OW190038 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 15 May 86

[Text] A provincial meeting to exchange experiences of those counties whose annual revenue has exceeded 100 million yuan concluded today in Nantong County. Summing up their basic experience, Governor Gu Xiulian pointed out that developing the commodity economy is the only way to open new revenue sources and keep our revenue rising.

Last year 11 counties in our province registered revenue exceeding 100 million yuan, 3 more counties than in the preceding year. Of these 11 counties, 4 earned a revenue of more than 200 million yuan. For the first time, a county north of the Chang Jiang, Nantong County in northern Jiangsu has become the first county to exceed 100 million yuan in annual revenue. In the meantime, 19 townships in the province have registered an annual revenue of more than 10 million yuan. These counties and townships have contributed to balancing the state revenue and expenditure and the development of the economy and social undertakings in the province. For this reason, the provincial government has awarded them citations to commend their achievements.

The meeting urged the financial and taxation departments in the province to fulfill their functions in developing production, boosting revenue, and providing funds needed for various purposes while carrying out the Seventh 5-Year Plan. At present, they should concentrate their efforts on helping to promote lateral economic association and improve ecnomic efficiency.

At the meeting representatives from 14 units in Nantong County gave briefings on their experience in developing production, enlivening the economy, and increasing revenue.

NANJING PLA REGIMENT RECTIFIES PARTY STYLE

OW181829 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1500 GMT 18 May 86

[Text] A regiment of the Nanjing Military Region, which was awarded an order of collective merit, first class, for its oustanding military exploit at the Laoshan front, hs taken a correct attitude toward this honor and has insisted on meeting high standards and demands in conducting party rectification. People have praised the cadres and fighters of this regiment with these words: They are heroes in battles and models for party rectification.

Before the commencement of party rectification, some cadres and fighters thought that after undergoing life-and-death tests in the battlefield, they had a pure party spirit and a correct party style, and nothing would have to be rectified. However, the regimental party committee remained sober-minded and was bold in exposing the problems existing in its units. In particular, it was not indulgent to the problems appearing from meritorious units and heroic models. It properly dealt with the problems of violation of discipline by two units and five individuals that had been cited as heroic models. Under its guidance, all companies conducted education in combating arrogance and complancency, rectified their style, and strengthened discipline.

In the rectification of party style, the party committee of this regiment not only paid attention to what the subordinate units were doing but also insisted that it should set an example in its own conduct. The regiment has a small factory, which earned a rather handsome profit last year, thanks to the support and solicitude given by the regimental party committee. The factory leadership gave a 100-yuan subsidy to each Standing Committee member of the regimental party committee. The Standing Committee members seriously criticized the factory leaders concerned for giving this subsidy and sent all the money back to the factory.

The anniversary of the receipt of a citation from the Central Military Commission fell on 15 January this year. Many comrades suggested that celebrations be held on this day, but the regimental party committee decided that there should be neither a meeting nor a party to celebrate the occasion. Instead, it organized all units to earnestly study the Central Military Commission's circular on the award of the citation and urged all commanders and fighters in the regiment to treasure the honor they had recieved and to make fresh contributions.

LIANG BUTING OPENS SHANDONG CULTURAL BUILDING

SK162312 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 15 May 86

[Excerpts] On the morning of 15 May, the new building of the Shandong provincial cultural relics general store opened for business amid an enthusiastic atmosphere. Liang Buting, secretary of the privincial CPC Committee, cut the ribbbon for the opening of the building. He said cheerfully: Shandong is a cultural site; therefore, it should better inherit and carry forward the outstanding cultural traditions. The new business building of the Shandong privincial cultural relics general store was constructed under the concern of the provincial CPC Committee and government and the great support of the Cultural Relics Bureau under the ministry of Culture and the relevant departments of the province and Jinan City.

Liang Buting, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, wrote an inscription for the provincial cultural relics general store, reading: Strengthen management over the scattered cultural relics and serve the building of the two civilizations. After visiting the business hall with a superb collection of beautiful items, Su Yiran, chairman of the provincial Advisory Comission, said excitedly: The provincial cultural relics general store houses a collection of the outstanding ancient and traditional cultural relics of Shandong Province. The opening of the new business building is a new happy event in the cultural lives of the people throughout the province.

Also attending the opening ceremony were other leading comrades, including Jiang Chunyun, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee; (Miao Fenglin), Standing Committee member of the provincial CPC Committee and director of the Propaganda Department; Wang Chengwang, Liu Zhongqian, Li Yu, Standing Committee members of the provincial Advisory Commission; Xu Leijian and Cao Fengwu, vice chairmen of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee; Ma Shizhong, vice governor; Zhu Qimin, adviser to the provincial government; Li Zichao, chairman of the provincial CPPCC Committee; Zhao Lin, member of the Central Advisory Commission; and Wang Zhongyin, member of the Central Discipline Inspection Commission, who are staying in Jinan, as well as Gao Keting, Qin Hezhen, Gao Giyun, Wu Kaizhang, and Chen Lei, veteran comrades of the province.

Also attending the opening ceremony were representatives from the Cultural Relics Bureau under the Ministry of Culture, the China cultural relics general store, and the Beijing municipal cultural relics stores, as well as noted personages from the provincial calligraphic and painting circles and some representatives from the provincial People's Congress and the provincial CPPCC Committee.

ZHEJIANG'S WANG FANG ADDRESSES CPPCC FORUM

OW190631 Hangzhou Zhejiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 15 May 86

[Text] A provincial forum on CPPCC work was held in Hangzhou from 13 to 15 May. Responsible of city and country CPPCC committees and the provincial CPPCC Committee's liaison officers stationed in various prefectures attended the forum. They exchanged their experiences in carrying out various activities to contribute to the four modernizations and the great cause of reunifying the motherland.

Addressing the forum, Comrade Wang Fang, secretary of the Zhejiang Provincial CPC Committee, said: The CPPCC, a patriotic united front organization, is full of vitality and is doing its work more vigorously than ever before. CPPCC organizations have done a lot of work and made tremendous achievements in building a material and spiritual civilization. Comrade Wang Fang called on party committees at various levels to strengthen their leadership over united front and CPPCC work, to pass information to CPPCC organizations in a timely manner, and to regularize and institutionalize political consultation and democratic supervision by these organizations.

Comrade Wang Fang pointed out: CPPCC organizations are now faced with new situations and new tasks. With the reunification of the motherland and the revitalization of China as their general objective, the CPPCC organizations should do their work toward compatriots in Taiwan, Hong Kong, and Macao and Overseas Chinese in various ways and fields, at various levels, and through various channels. They should implement the guidelines laid down by the fourth session of the sixth provincial People's Congress and the fourth session of the fifth provincial CPPCC Committee and make concerted efforts to carry out the province's Seventh 5-Year Plan.

Wang Jiayang, chairman of the provincial CPPCC Committee, presided over and addressed the forum.

[Excerpts] Accompanied by Huang Shu, a bureau director of the International Liaison Department of the CPC Central Committee, Comrade Hoang Van Hoan visited the province from 16 to 18 May. When Comrade Hoang Van Hoan arrived in Xian from Beijing by train on the morning of 16 May, he was greeted at the railway station by Zhou Yaguang, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, and Chen Xingliang, director of the provincial Foreign Affairs Office. Yesterday afternoon, Bai Jinian, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee; Zhang Ze, chairman of the provincial Advisory Commission; and Zhou Yaguang, deputy secretary of th provincial CPC Committee, met with Comrade Hoang Van Hoan at the Shaanxi Guesthouse.

During their cordial conversation, Bai Jinian briefed Comrade Hoang Van Hoan on famous cultural relics and historic sites in Shaanxi. After the meeting, Bai Jinian gave a banquet in honor of Comrade Hoang Van Hoan. The main purpose of Comrade Hoang Van Hoan's trip to Xian was to visit places of historic interest and scenic spots. Over the past few days, he visited the provincial museum, the museum of the Qinshihuang emperor's tomb warrior figures, and the Huaqing pool. He also made a special trip to Fengxiang County to visit the grand tomb No 1 of the Qin Dynasty which is being excavated. He also watched excavation of cultural relics. After visiting the museum of the Qinshihuang emperor's tomb warrior figures, Comrade Hoang Van Hoan wrote in the visitor's book: "This wonder of the world is worthy of its title." Comrade Hoang Van Hoan left Xian on the morning of 19 May.

XINJIANG LEADERS DISCUSS OVERSEAS CHINESE POLICY

OW181408 Beijing International Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 18 May 86

[Text] A work meeting on implementing the policy toward Overseas Chinese in Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region was recently held in Urumqi. Tomur Dawamat, chairman, and Huang Baozhang, vice chairman of the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region, spoke at the meeting. They stressed that the main task in implementing the policy toward Overseas Chinese is to deal with the houses left by those who departed Xinjiang for the Soviet Union in the 1960's. Since they are treated as Overseas Chinese or foreign nationals of Chinese origin, their houses left in Xinjiang must be dealt with in accordance with the policy of private ownership of houses by Overseas Chinese. Furthermore, houses of the Overseas Chinese that were wrongly confiscated during the period of socialist transformation should all be returned to the owners. Leaders of the various prefectures, autonomous prefectures, cities, and counties must put work as regards Overseas Chinese on their agenda and regularly supervise and inspect the work of departments in charge of Overseas Chinese affairs.

CAAC, CAL REACH AGREEMENT ON HANDOVER OF PLANE

OW131348 Beijing XINHUA in English 1338 GMT 19 May 86

[Text] Hong Kong, May 19 (XINHUA) -- The Boeing 747 cargo plane, two crew members and cargo belonging to Taiwan's China Airlines (CAL) will be handed over to CAL in Hong Kong, according to an agreement reached at the third round of discussions between representatives of the Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC) and CAL today.

The plane landed at Guangzhou's Baiyun Airport May 3, and the discussion began on May 17. CAAC held that it was reasonable for the plane, the two crew members and cargo to be handed over in Guangzhou. While agreeing to CAAC's choice of place, the CAL representatives proposed that the hand-over be handled by a third party other than CAL, and that otherwise, it take place in Hong Kong.

Zhang Ruipu, CAAC representative, described the discussion over the past two days as "fruitful" at today's meeting. "We always maintain that there is no problem which cannot be solved between fellow countrymen through friendly and sincere discussions," he said. "We have repeatedly explained why Guangzhou is the best place for the hand-over," he said. "At the same time, we made this clear: we will not play this up."

CAAC agreed to hold the hand-over in Hong Kong in order to express CAAC's sincerity of letting Dong Guangxing and Qiu Minzhi, the two crew members wishing to return to Taiwan, be reuntied with their families eariler, Zhang said, adding that it also took into consideration CAL's difficulties. Nevertheless, Zhang noted, there was the need to reach an agreement on the hand-over in Hong Kong in advance. This includes safety specifications, hand-over formalities and methods and technical details to ensure that the hand-over is completed safely, quickly and smoothly.

The two sides expressed their gratification when agreement was reached on the place of the hand-over, and decided to continue their discussions tomorrow afternoon.

Issued Statement on Transfer

[Report: "The Two Airlines Reach Agreement on Handover of the Plane" -- ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE headline]

[Text] Hong Kong, 19 May (ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE) -- Today, progress tantamount to a breakthough was made in the negotiations between the Civil Aviation Administration of China [CAAC] and China Airlines [CAL] on "where to hand over the CAL cargo plane." With the greatest sincerity, CAAC conceded by agreeing to hand over the plane in Hong Kong. This indicates that the issue has been basically settled.

The two airlines held their third round of talks at 1600 this afternoon. When it was over, they held separate press conferences. At the CAAC press conference, Zhang Ruipu, the chief CAAC representative, made the following statements:

"During the talks in the previous 2 days, we cordially exchanged views and discussed the problem of handing over the CAL Boeing 747 cargo plane which landed in Guangzhou, the two crew members who want to return to Taiwan, the cargo, the question of where to hand them over, and the transfer formailities.

Both sides indicated a common desire for an early handover. All problems except that of the place were solved. We did not want this problem to delay the handover, and this has always been our attitude. We think that all problems between Chinese brothers can be resolved through sincere, cordial talks.

As far as the question of where to hand over the plane is concerned, we have repeatedly suggested that the best plan would be to hand it over in Guangzhou after taking all circumstances into consideration and studying its practical desirability. Since the plane landed in Guangzhou, delivery in Guangzhou is reasonable. By handing it over in Guangzhou, we can most satisfactorily ensure that the plane will be handed over safely, smoothly, and without delay. We still consider Guangzhou to be the best place to hand over the plane because we sincerely desire an early reunion between Mr Tung and Mr Chiu, the two crew members who want to return to Taiwan, and their families. We also sincerely hope that we can return the plane and its cargo load to CAL as soon as possible. We have repeatedly stated that with the exception of this, we have no other problems. We have also indicated that if the handover takes place in Guangzhou, we will guarantee the absolute safety of the people going to Guangzhou to receive the plane, make things convenient for them, and simplify the formalities. We do not intend to create trouble for our counterparts. We did expect our counterparts to fully understand our plan, our desires, and our suggestion. We are highly sincere and our intentions are honest and honorable. Today, we held our third round of talks to discuss the question of where to hand over the plane. Our counterparts said that they would have difficulties if the plane had to be handed over in Guangzhou, and they still did not accept my suggestion that the plane be handed over in Guangzhou.

What must be done then? We must not bring the talks to a deadlock just because of this problem, nor can we allow this problem to stand in the way of an early handover. The compatriots on both sides of the Strait. I think, would not like such an outcome. In order to convey our greatest sincerity and to make an early reunion possible between Mr Tung Kuang-hsing and Mr Chiu Ming-chih and their families, and having taken into consideration the difficulties of our counterparts, we have agreed to hand over the plane in Hong Kong. Both sides have agreed in principle to hand over and receive the plane in Hong Kong. However, we have yet to discuss the date and the necessary formalities.

At another press conference, Chung Tsan-jung, a CAL representative, made the following three-point statement:

1. At 1600 this afternoon, we and the CAAC representatives spent 50 minutes holding our third round of talks in the conference room on the 9th floor of the Jockey Club building.

2. At this round of talks, the CAAC representatives continued to ask us to send people to Guangzhou to go through the handover formalities and rejected our proposal to ask a "third party" to recover the plane in Guangzhou on our behalf. We insisted that CAAC should send its own people to fly the plane, its crew, and its cargo load to Hong Kong to hand them over to us. Finally, the CAAC complied with our demand and agreed to fly the plane, its crew, and its cargo load to Hong Kong's Kai Tak Airport for handover formalities.

3. As for the handover date and other details, we will make detailed arrangements at the next round of talks.

The representatives of the two airlines also answered reporters' questions at the press conferences. They are glad that an agreement has been reached and they have agreed to continue with the talks tomorrow afternoon.

CAAC 'Concession' Not Victory for CAL

["Chung Tsan-jung of CAL Says That Results of the Talks Do Not Mean Either of the Two Sides Has Won" -- ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE headline]

[Text] Hong Kong, 19 May (ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE) -- At 1830 today, Chung Tsan-jung, chief representative of China Airlines [CAL] to the talks, held a press conference after agreement between the Civil Aviation Administration of China [CAAC] and CAL on the delivery of the CAL plane was reached. he said that the CAL required that things related to the delivery had to be satisfactorily done in 2 or 3 days. Some reporters asked whether the results of the talks meant a concession by CAAC and a victory for the CAL. Chung Tsan-jung replied: "This is neither a concession nor a victory. What is ours must be returned to us."

To the question of whether CAL will give up its demand for the return of crew commander Wang Hsi-chueh, Chung Tsan-jung said: "We reserve the right to demand that the other side send him back to us." Chung Tsan-jung also said today that they had not telephoned the two crew members Tund Kuang-hsing and Chiu Ming-chih. He said: "We do not know which number to dial. Moreover, CAAC said that since it had promised to release the crew members and plane, there was no need to make a telephone call."

Negotiation To Conclude 20 May

HK200444 Hong Kong AFP in English 0430 GMT 20 May 86

[Text] Hong Kong, May 20 (AFP) -- Tuesday's talks between Chinese and Taiwan airlines officials are to concern the handing over the China Airlines (CAL) cargo jet and two crew members, but not the plane's pilot, a CAL spokesman said here.

"If the procedure is worked out in the meeting, the talks between Taiwan and China will be rounded up today," CAL assistant manager Lee Chun-yeung told reporters here Tuesday. Mr Lee refused to disclose the venue of this fourth landmark meeting between the two longtime rivals, saying simply that it would begin at 4 p.m. (0800 GMT).

However, a spokesman for the Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC) said this round would be held again at the Hong Kong Jockey club.

China agreed Monday to Taiwan's demand that the CAL jet and two crew members flown to Canton May 3 by a defecting pilot be returned through Hong Kong. The issue of the return of the plane's pilot, captain Wang Hsi-chueh, would definitely not be discussed in Tuesday's meeting, Mr Lee said, but he added that Taiwan reserved the right to ask for Mr Wang's return. Mr Lee he expected the jet would be returned in the next two days but that the handover would not take place Tuesday.

DEFECTING PRC PILOT AWARDED 1.68 MILLION IN GOLD

HK170548 Hong Kong AFP in English 0541 GMT 17 May 86

[Names as received]

[Excerpts] Taipei, May 17 (AFP) -- Former Chinese Air Force pilot Chen Pao-chung became an instant millionaire here Saturday as a reward for his defection, officials said.

Mr. Chen, 26, renounced his membership in the Chinese Communist Party at a ceremony at the Armed Forces activity center witnessed by more than 600 Armed Forces personnel, including other defecting Chinese pilots, the officials said. He was given a certificate for 5,000 taels (6,650 ounces) of gold by General Hau Pei-Tsun, who also commissioned him as a major in Taiwan's Air Force, the officials added. The gold is worth 65.8 million Taiwan dollars (1.68 million U.S. dollars) at the current market price.

Mr. Chen flew a MiG-19 fighter to Seoul on February 21. He was sent to Taiwan on April 30 at his request. Mr. Chen had served in a reconnaissance squadron of China's First Air Division based in Shengyang, northeast China. Like 11 other Chinese Air Force pilots who have defected to Taiwan, he will serve in Taiwan's Air Force but not be allowed to fly.

Major-General Chang Huei-yuan, a Taiwan military spokesman, said Saturday that Taiwan would continue to reward defecting Chinese pilots with gold.

POLICY OF REWARDING PRC DEFECTORS TO CONTINUE

OW171526 Taipei CNA in English 1500 GMT 17 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 17 (CNA) -- The flow of freedom seekers from the Communist Chinese Armed Forces has helped discourage the Peiping regime from launching military attacks against the Republic of China on Taiwan, Defense Ministry Spokesman Gen. Chang Hui-Yuan said Saturday.

As a result, Gen. Chang said, the rash of the communist soldiers' freedom-seeking actions has virtually reduced the country's spending in combat preparedness as well as human casualties and property losses. "The value of such actions are thus incomparable with that of the reward we have given to those freedom fighters," the military spokesman noted.

He said that although nearly all pilot-turned freedom seekers from the mainland stressed they came to free China not for prize, the government still rewarded them for their brave actions in accordance with existing regulations. "And the rules will remain in force in the future," Chang said. He made the above remarks while replying to a press inquiry about the implications of such rewards during the commissioning ceremony for former MiG pilot Chen Pao-chung.

Chang analyzed that the major cause that has prompted one after another communist air force officer to escape to freedom is that they had seen through the evil nature of communism and become fed up with communist tricks.

He continued that communist pilots' dash to freedom often open much publicity in the world press. The incidents would arouse world attention to the low morale in the communist armed forces and the widespread discontent throughout the mainland. The first-hand information provided by these freedom seekers about poverty, backwardness, disaster and power struggles on the mainland would help the free world better understand the real face of the Chinese Communists.

Moreover, the flow of freedom seekers would scare Peiping's power holders and discourage them from invading free China, hence helping enhance security of Taiwan, Penghu, the frontline islands of Kinmen and Matsu, Chang pointed out. In addition, the arrival of freedom seekers in Taiwan would call world attention to the strong and prosperous free China. "The glare of this publicity would in turn contribute much to the development of substantive relations with more foreign countries," Chang said.

He stressed that the freedom seekers have risked their lives to come to the free world. Their determination, bravery, wisdom and courage are highly respectable. "They deserve to be rewarded spiritually and materially for their brave actions," Chang asserted.

TAIWAN STRUCK BY TWO EARTHQUAKES 20 MAY

HK200738 Hong Kong AFP in English 0657 GMT 20 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 20 (AFP) -- Back-to-back earthquakes measuring 5.8 and 5.7 on the Richter scale struck Taiwan Tuesday, the central weather bureau said. No casualties or damages were reported.

The bureau pinpointed the epicenter of the first quake at a depth of 32.9 kilometers (19.8 miles) 10 kilometers (six miles) north of Hualien on the eastern coast.

The first one measured 5.8 on the open-ended scale and shook all of Taiwan at 1:25 p.m. (0525), and the second one measuring 5.7 followed 12 minutes later. A series of minor tremors came in the next 20 minutes.

An earthquake measuring five can cause considerable damage, and those measuring six can cause severe damage.

POLICE ATTEMPT TO BLOCK PROTEST MARCH IN TAIPEI

HK191342 Hong Kong AFP in English 1326 GMT 19 May 86

[Text] Taipei, May 19 (AFP) -- Police formed a human barricade around a temple here Monday to prevent a planned protest march to mark the 37th anniversary of martial law in Taiwan, eyewitnesses said. Some 70 people wearing green sashes and armbands with the words "Protest martial law, honor human rights," gathered inside the Lung Shan (Dragon Mountain) Temple, planning to walk the three kilometers (2 miles) to the presidential building.

But policemen were drafted in to form a human barricade to prevent them leaving or some 200 people who gathered outside from joining them. And some 1,200 police were deployed to guard against demonstrators and keep traffic moving in the city, eyewitnesses said.

The protest, dubbed "May 19 Green Action" had been planned to mark the 37th anniversary of martial law and defy an official ban on marches and demonstrations. The protesters refused to disperse and leave the temple throughout the day, and were still there after nightfall, although 200 opposition supporters gathered outside left at nightfall.

Yen Shih-hsi, director of the Bureau of Criminal Investigation, had earlier visited the temple three times but had failed to disperse the protesters.

The Taiwan opposition is divided in its approach to achieve a greater share in political power with the ruling Kuomintang (KMT). In addition to those advocating protests like the "May 19 Green Action," there is the Tangwai Research Association of Public Policies (TRAPP) which prefers to use more political channels.

The KMT, which has banned the formation of new political parties, on May 10 agreed to allow the TRAPP to open branches in Taiwan cities in a decision which surprised many analysts here. The TRAPP was started two years ago by 53 opposition members in Taiwan's congress and has opened two branches in Taipei since the May 10 decision.

CHING PAO ASSESSES XIANG NAN'S MERITS, FAILINGS

HK200443 Hong Kong CHIN PAO in Chinese No 106, 10 May 86 pp 38-40

[Article by Lu Yi-ta: "How to Assess Xiang Nan's Contributions and Failings?"]

[Excerpts] Xiang Nan was replaced by Chen Guangyi. When he left his job, he said to the people around him: I have worked for 5 years in Fujian and I leave it to posterity to assess my contributions and failings.

Xiang Nan's contributions were that he spared no effort in implementing the CPC's reform and policy of opening up. We cannot deny Xiang Nan's contributions in making Fujian's economic situation increasingly prosperous. But what were Xiang Nan's "failings?" According to this writer's limited information, the Jianjiang "fake medicine case" which created a furor, was his failing.

How Did "A Flower at Chendai" Emerge

However people differ in their views concerning the "fake medicine" case. Those who were against him said: Xiang Nan said that the township and town enterprises in Jinjiang were "a flower," but the fake medicine case has proved that they are a patch of weeds. Those who defended him said that what Xiang Nan called "a flower" was the township and town enterprises as a whole in Jinjiang. The fake medicine case was only one weed among a clump of flowers. Therefore, we should not negate the merit of the whole because of the shortcomings of a part. We should refrain even less from doing what is necessary for fear of a slight risk or vilify our township and town enterprises because of one evil case.

Xiang Nan often said to people that one did not regret reading enough books until one needed to apply that knowledge and that one did not know how difficult it was to do the work until one encountered the difficulties. He vigorously developed township and town enterprises not because he was suddenly seized by a whim or because he willfully wanted to start something new in order to be different. He did so because through actual, on-the-spot investigations, he found that the key to solving the difficult problems of shortage of land for China's huge population, providing jobs for rural surplus labor, and promoting the transition from an agricultural to industrial society was to develop township and town enterprises.

Foundation Laid by 5 Years of Practice

Fujian's township and town enterprises faced the danger of collapse, but amid the adverse situation, it displayed its indominable vitality increasingly prominently. Facts speak louder than words. Xiang Nan found it heartening that in 1985, the township and town enterprises in the whole province increased their total output value sharply to 7 billion yuan, which meant an annual net increase of 3 billion yuan. This realized his previous forecast that during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period the total income would quadruple and the rate of increase in total income would rank the third in the whole country. The township and town enterprises earned over $113 million in foreign exchange for the state in one year, paid taxes and delivered profits totaling 245 million yuan, and thus became one of the main sources for Fujian's foreign exchange and financial and tax revenue.

At the time Xiang Nan left, he still definitely believed that developing township and town enterprises and then enlarging introductions from abroad and cooperation and coordination at home on the basis of small industry groups, and by relying on specialized markets in order to give play to Fujian's role and influence as the door to areas abroad and in the hinterland, is indispensable in promoting rural economic structural reform and reinvigorating Fujian's economy. Furthermore, he believed that rousing millions of the masses to pool funds and set up enterprises was an even more indispensable path that we had to follow. We should never cut this path.

He was filled with enthusiasm when he came and he was still uncorrupt when he left. The 5 years of Xiang Nan's practice has already laid foundations and opened up the path for the development of Fujian's township and town enterprises. This path is still quite bumpy and filled with twists and turns, but the peasants in Fujian who are good at learning from both positive and negative experiences, are quite sure that they will be able to forge ahead.

On 22 March, RENMIN RIBAO OVERSEAS EDITION published an article entitled "Watch a Flower at Jinjiang," which said that Jinjiang's township and town enterprises were indeed a flower which had to be protected in order to enable it to blossom even more beautifully. These words are self-evident.

PRC FOREIGN EXCHANGE RESERVES FIGURES DISTORTED

HK190758 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 19 May 86 BUSINESS NEWS p 1

[By Olivia Sin]

[Text] China's foreign exchange reserve picture is not as good as it appears, banking sources said. They said the reserve figure is distorted by the inclusion of the Bank of China's [BOC] reserves, some of which could also be considered liabilities. The sources said this means China's spending power may be less than the reserves figure indicates and the country may be forced to take more stringent measures to control imports later this year.

China's foreign reserves consist of the Treasury and BOC's net foreign exchange reserves. The sources said BOC's net foreign exchange reserves equal its total domestic and foreign deposits, less loans and investments, which actually could be viewed as its net liabilities. The above method of calculating the foreign reserves was confirmed by a BOC official, Mr Wu Lianlu, in an article published in a recent issue of the authoritative ZHONGGUO JIN RONG (CHINA FINANCE) magazine.

Banking sources said there were indications the BOC had increased its short-term borrowings dramatically last year to prop up the country's reserves which had dwindled as a result of runaway imports. This may explain why BOC's reserves represented the bulk of the country's total foreign exchange reserves in September last year.

In September 1984, China's total foreign exchange reserves hit a peak of U.S. $16.674 billion, of which the Treasury's share was 73 percent ($12.184 billion) and BOC's 27 percent ($4.49 billion). Following last year's import craze, the country's reserves fell to $12.592 billion by September. This time, BOC's share represented more than 70 percent of the country's total reserves ($9.215 billion) and the Treasury's only $3.377 billion. It is obvious the Treasury suffered the biggest drop because of the country's uncontrolled spending on consumerables. [word as published]

Mr Wu Nianlu, general manager of BOC's Institute of International Finance, agreed that the bank's reserves are partly made up of its debt.

"Although BOC's foreign reserves are made up of its liability, it has enjoyed a steady growth in foreign exchange deposits from domestic enterprises and from its overseas network and they (the deposits) are available to us for long-term use," he said in the article. Nevertheless, Mr Wu stressed that China has rich reserves of gold, totalling about 400 tons, to back the country's spending. He said China could live comfortably with a comparatively low level of foreign exchange reserves of about $10 billion. At that level, he said China will have enough money to pay for the country's imports for two to three months, which is in line with Western economists' thinking.

According to banking sources, China counts BOC's liabilities in its foreign exchange reserves because the bank is regarded as an official government agency. Nevertheless, a Chinese official close to the People's Bank of China, the country's central bank, told BUSINESS NEWS, BOC has recently increased its capital base to boost its assets. He said by doing so BOC will be able to reduce the proportion of its liability in its net foreign exchange reserves.

Some Western analysts who maintain close contacts with Chinese officials said the country's foreign reserves are made up of a "mixed basket of currencies," the exact composition of which is not disclosed. They said because of the depreciation of the greenback, China has recently made some "windfall" gains in its foreign reserves.

Meanwhile, at a China Insight seminar organised by the American Chamber of Commerce here last week, a China finance expert, Mr Fong Chi, said there is a serious drawback in China's foreign exchange management system. Mr Fong, managing director of Consortium Leasing Corp, said China does not have a central unit coordinating the country's foreign exchange regulations, policies and strategies.

"The management of foreign exchange reserves has too many hands involved in the approval and allocation process and, many times, the same dollar of foreign exchange was spent several times by different authorities," he told the seminar. "No one knowns how much was approved and allocated, how and when the foreign exchanges are used until the kitty runs dry... Then the problem is recognised."

BUSINESS NEWS learned that the chief of People's Bank, Ms Chen Muhua, was forced to adopt drastic measures in March last year to halt the use of money because the Treasury had almost run out of funds.

Mr Fong said the problems of foreign exchange management stem from China's system of assigning foreign currency quotas to local authorities. But the quotas do not mean the local authorities are actually allocated foreign exchange. In practice they can use renminbi to buy the foreign exchange from BOC under their quota.

"In the meantime, the State Economic Commission may have allocated the same foreign exchange (as allocated to the local authorities) to another project" Mr Fong said.

Mr Fong said China should set up a centrally controlled unit to keep an updated account on the usage of foreign exchange quota by the local authorities. Another method is to change all quotas into cash.

"The moment foreign exchange is allocated to local authorities, they should have the cash under their name in the BOC accounts and others should not touch it," he said.

SHENZHEN TO TAKE STRICT MEASURES TO CURB INFLATION

HK190846 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 19 May 86 p 9

[By Albert Chan, Ophelia Suen, and Julina Chan]

[Text] Strict measures will be taken this year to keep inflation in Shenzhen below 6.5 percent after a year of dramatic price fluctuations. Shenzhen's price reforms last year ended up by unleashing a record 23.2 percent inflation rate and the city has reputedly become the most expensive place in China to live.

But a senior official with the Shenzhen Commodity Price Bureau argued that the inflation last year was "deliberate" and "carefully engineered." "Otherwise, such a high inflation rate would bring chaos to the economy," said the official, who asked not to be named.

In order to control inflation, the Shenzhen city government has decided to freeze electricity and water charges as well as rents for the whole of this year. State-owned enterprises must also ask permission before they raise prices.

"When we receive applications, we will see if it is possible for the enterprise to balance its accounts by items that are profitable," said the Shenzhen official. "We will not approve a price increase for an item merely because it has cost more to produce."

Under the new reforms, instead of unified prices all over the country, three types of markets have been created:

-- The free market where there is no control whatsoever on commodity prices. Ge ti hu, private dealers, are allowed to set their prices freely according to supply and demand.

-- The "floating" market where the Government sets an upper limit on commodities and sellers can vary their prices according to supply and demand as long as the fluctuations do not go above the ceilings.

-- The state-owned market which is owned and run by the Government with prices fixed by government. Here, price fluctuations are kept to a minimum.

Certain commodities such as oil, rice and pork -- which are considered basic daily necessities -- are available in the state-owned market. Prices for such items are kept at a low level determined by the Government to ensure that prices are within the public's reach. Better-quality and fresher food -- including higher-grade rice, oil and pork -- is available in the free market and floating market at a higher price.

The Shenzhen official said the aim of the system is to use the state-owned market to influence prices in the free and floating markets. "The ge ti hu cannot raise their prices too drastically because goods of similar quality or slightly inferior quality are available in state-owned market," the official explained.

All basic commodities used to be centrally controlled both in quantity and price, and the public had to use food tickets distributed by the Government.

The official explained the high inflation rate was partly attributable to the fact that most of the food Shenzhen consumes is "imported" from other parts of the mainland. The only exception is fish and a few other aquatic products from Shenzhen. Prices for these may be lower than in other provinces.

GUANGZHOU SOURCES CITED ON PROPOSED FEC ABOLISHMENT

HK150558 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in English 15-21 May 86 p 4

[By Gan Wei]

[Text] While it is certain that the foreign exchange certificate (FEC) will eventually be abolished, no one can say for sure when the abolishment will take place.

In Guangzhou recently, however, everybody seems to be certain that the time will be around the end of this year. Official sources so far have neither denied nor confirmed such a belief.

What Beijing did say recently, though, is that ample safeguards will be provided for FEC holders when the time comes. It was also disclosed that 'the new measures to be adopted in lieu of the FEC' will cause no inconvenience for its owners.

Introduced six years ago in April 1980, the FEC came under the State Council's scrutiny three years later -- in 1983. This followed criticisms and complaints raised by NPC deputies and economists. It was pointed out that the controversial currency was responsible for black market trading and illicit profiteering especially in the SEZs [special economic zones] and some coastal provinces. The effects of such tradings were felt as far as the remote autonomous regions of Tibet and Xinjiang.

Originally intended as a means to stop the circulation of foreign currencies in China and to encourage overseas remittance, the FEC soon came to be prized by countless Chinese consumers wishing to purchase imported goods.

Available only in FECs, such consumers goods were sold at Friendship Stores found in many Chinese cities at prices considerably lower than the going market rates.

The FEC was also coveted by state enterprises in their quest for foreign exchange.

It was evident from these developments that the FEC had soon outlived its original purpose.

On 3 April this year, Vice-Premier Yao Yilin told Hong Kong reporters covering the recent NPC that the Chinese government had decided to abolish the FEC and that preparations for its withdrawal were already under way. The vice-premier cautioned, however, that it would take some time to finally abolish the FEC.

It was felt that the most difficult aspect of the abolishment was to make sure that it would have no adverse effect on trade, the country's growing tourist industry and other fields of Sino-foreign relations.

As for Guangzhou's guess that the abolishment will take place at the end of this year, it can only be said that nothing is final pending an official announcement by the Bank of China.
